INTRODUCTORY.

From the time of the planting of the first Swedish settlements on the banks of the Delaware river, in the early part of the seventeenth century, to the beginning of the twentieth century, the region known by the distinguished name of Pennsylvania has held a conspicuous and highly important place in what is now the sisterhood of states comprising the great and unbroken Federal Union. For many years it was the central colony between the north and the south; for many years its men of influence molded the political history of the American nation; and for several years its principal city was the seat of government of the United States. Never in this almost two and a half centuries of history has there been a retrograde movement, and never after the adoption of the first Constitution, was there an inclination to terminate its separate and independent existence, although during the days of the Colony, Penn would have surrendered his possessions to the crown and resolved his proprietary into a Royal Province.

In the early history of each of the colonies there were periods of depression and adversity, and, during their continuance, Pennsylvania suffered from causes that oppressed elsewhere, but, like those about her borders, that were in the same manner afflicted, she at length rose supreme above every embarrassment, and took her own proper place among the first and foremost states in the Union, and, in certain respects, enjoying pre-eminence before all others.

The history of the Commonwealth and of many of its political divisions, civil, political and military—has been written by various authors and at various times, each succeeding writer adding a new chapter of annals, or treating his subject from a different view point. The splendid narrative affords an inspiration to those of the present and of the future, and entirely justifies the pregnant words of Martineau: "To have had forefathers renowned for honorable deeds, to belong by nature to those who have bravely borne their part in life and refreshed the world with mighty thoughts and healthy admiration, is a privilege which it were mean and self-willed to despise. It is a security given us of old, which it were falsehearted not to redeem, and in virtues bred of a noble stock, mellowed as they are by reverence, there is often a grace and ripeness wanting to self-made and brand-new excellence. Of like value to a people are heroic national traditions, giving them a determinate character to sustain among the tribes of men, making them familiar with images of great and strenuous life, and kindling them with faith in glorious possibilities."

The old County of Chester, one of the earliest of the Counties organized by Penn, and which then comprised the territory of the present Counties of Chester and Delaware, was the scene of the first and most important of the transactions which marked the formative period of the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Here the foundations of civil and religious liberty were laid deep and strong. The individual was exalted in all his best attributes. Here Penn proclaimed to all comers that they should feel assured, for themselves and for all generations to come after them, of their freedom as men and Christians, "that they may not be brought in bondage but by their own consent, for we put the power in the people." He made it his greatest care to frame a constitution "as near as may be conveniently to the primitive, ancient and fundamental laws of the Kingdom of England," but introducing the democratic method of making all offices elective, and a new principle of perfect religious freedom—"that no man nor numbers of men upon earth hath power or authority to rule over men's consciences in religious matters"—which stood in marked contrast with the theocratical ideas of the Puritans and to the aristocratical reign of Locke in Carolina.

In response to Penn's liberal scheme of government, his declaration of his intention to "try this holy experiment of a free colony for all mankind," the first assembly met at Upland, now the city of Chester, and there expressed their hearty acceptance of his principles of liberty, civil government and religious freedom, and adopted the "Great Law of Pennsylvania"—that merciful and beneficent code, and in which was abolished the death penalty except for murder, in this regard strangely dissimilar from that of East Jersey, which prescribed the death penalty for thirteen separate crimes and offences.

These were a sturdy people—men, and women, too, of brawn and brain and conscience—their hearts fervent in reverence of God and a desire for religious and political liberty, who had separated themselves from their native land in order to enjoy the privileges which had been denied them there. It would be worth much could we be afforded a glimpse of these pioneers. It was an assemblage of plain farmers and humble mechanics, probably without what may be termed a lettered man among them, yet were they men of no ordinary mold. Great as was their strength of character and broad (for the times) as was their mental scope, they were building far better than they knew. Simple and clean in their lives, the homes which they builded were humble, but they were the seat of all the domestic virtues, and the children they reared inherited the athletic frame, rugged constitution and noble principles of their forebears. These, too, in their own day, aided in the establishment of a free national government. Of them were those who fought at Germantown, at Brandywine, and at Monmouth; who endured the awful sufferings of Valley Forge; and descendants of these bore a noble part on one of the most supremely momentous battle fields known to history—that of Gettysburg—a spot further hallowed by the presence of the Great War President, Abraham Lincoln, who there uttered his immortal address which will endure for all time as an inspiration to lovers of liberty in all lands.

In each generation, and at every stage of progress, the people of these historic Counties, Chester and Delaware, have had the service of men of the loftiest character and highest capability, in arms, in the arts of peace, in statemanship, in affairs and in letters. It is to connect the active progressive men of the present generation with their illustrious ancestry that the present volumes have been undertaken, in the conviction that "It is indeed a blessing when the virtues

Of noble races are hereditary,
And do derive themselves from the imitation
Of virtuous ancestors."

In a manner, this work is supplemental to others which have appeared in previous years. The most important historical work relating to this region was the "History of Delaware County;" published in 1802. This monumental contribution to American literature embraced the early history of the entire original County of Chester, and was the result of years of research and industrious labor by that accomplished literateur and sagacious publicist, Dr. George Smith, one of the foremost men of his day. He was equally active in his profession, that of a physician, and in scientific, political and educational affairs. He was one of the founders of the Delaware County Institute of Science, of which he was the first President; and, as a State Senator, he drafted the bill which placed the Public Schools of the Commonwealth upon a broad and intelligent basis.

In 1881 was published "History of Chester County," by J. Smith Futhey and Gilbert Cope, and in 1884 Henry Graham Ashmead's "History of Delaware County" came from the press. In 1898 appeared "Chester County and its People," edited by W. W. Thomson. Each of these works, and notably the two first named, are of more than purely local worth, and hold an important place in the historical literature of the State. In each instance the author was "native here, and to the manner born," and he gave to his arduous labors not only great diligence and conscientious industry, but that glowing enthusiasm which is praiseworthy becoming in him who holds a proper appreciation of a noble people from whom he sprang and amidst whom he was reared, and who possessed the ability of rightly weighing their achievements as the founders of a community at once unique and ideal.

Among those to whom especial thanks are due for assistance in the preparation of this work, a very prominent place must be given to Gilbert Cope, of Chester county, and Henry Graham Ashmead, of Delaware county, both authors of State wide fame. Mr. Cope, out of his abundant store of genealogical material, has written with care and intelligence the genealogical history of various branches of leading families in the two counties, and these sketches will be readily identified by all who are familiar with the methods which he observed in the preparation of his two voluminous works, "Genealogy of the Sharpless Family," and "Genealogy of the Smedley Family." Mr. Ashmead's contributions have been more largely in the line of personal sketches of leading men of affairs in Delaware county, and his facile pen can be readily traced by the great mass of readers in that region who have been familiar with his sprightly and finished writings of more than a quarter-century past. With reference to the biographical matter contained in these pages, it is to be said that in its preparation the publishers have observed the utmost care. With such a mass of material, as a matter of necessity, the work must needs be committed to various writers. If, in some cases, the sketch should be incomplete or faulty, the shortcoming is ascribable to the paucity of data furnished, many families being without exact records in their family line. In all cases the sketches have been submitted to the subject or to his representative, for correction and revision.

For a considerable number of the views of historic spots and buildings which appear in this work, the publishers are indebted to Messrs. Cope and Ashmead, who have afforded the use of selections from an ample array of plates and photographs. A similar valuable service has been rendered by Mr. W. W. Thomson, of West Chester, in providing plates which appeared in the "Centennial Souvenir of West Chester," from the press of the "Daily Local News," and original photographs of the Village Forge Neighborhood.

It is believed that the present work will prove a real addition to the mass of literature concerning the people of the historic region under consideration, and that, without it, much valuable information therein contained would be irretrievably lost, owing to the passing away of many custodians of family records and the disappearance of such matter.

MAIN BUILDING. NORMAL SCHOOL.

CHESTER AND DELAWARE COUNTIES PENNSYLVANIA

WEST CHESTER STATE NORMAL SCHOOL. The West Chester Academy was founded on March 27, 1812, and had a long and successful career, but like so many of the old academies, it seemed to have had its day, and on April 29, 1869, its board of trustees met in the office of Wayne MacVeagh, in West Chester, and there decided to endeavor to supersede the academy with a State Normal School for the first district of Pennsylvania. Those present at this meeting were Joseph J. Lewis, Dr. Wilmer Worthington, John Marshall, Joseph P. Wilson, Joseph Hemphill, J. L. Worthington, Washington Townsend and James Pyle Wickersham, superintendent of public instruction of Pennsylvania.

On August 23, 1869, a public meeting was called in the court house, and a committee of fifteen was appointed to carry into effect the purpose of the trustees of the Academy. This was done, and in 1870 ten acres of land were purchased from Wayne MacVeagh, upon which was erected the central part of the present main school building. School was opened in 1871, with Professor Ezekiel H. Cook, a graduate of Bowdoin College, Maine, as its first principal, and with a strong faculty of teachers. The original board of trustees consisted of Dr. Wilmer Worthington, William S. Kirk, R. T. Cornwell, John G. Robinson, William E. Moore, Marshall B. Hickman, William B. Waddell, Evans Rogers and Josiah Hoopes. William E. Moore was made president and R. T. Cornwell secretary.

The school opened under favorable auspices with an attendance of more than a hundred boarders and thirty day scholars. At the end of the first year Principal Cook and most of the members of the faculty resigned. Dr. William A. Chandler, of Detroit, Michigan, was made principal, and the vacancies in the faculty were efficiently filled. At the beginning of the following spring term Dr. Chandler resigned to resume the practice of medicine, and Professor George L. Maris, who had been superintendent of the schools of the county, and who was now just being admitted to the bar, was elected his successor. Dr. G. M. Philips, the present principal of the school, became professor of higher mathematics near the close of Dr. Chandler's principalship, about the middle of March, 1873. The school had suffered considerable depletion, but after Professor Maris took charge grew again, and the first class consisting of ten members was graduated in 1874. All the members of this class taught many years, and several of them have taught continuously since their graduation.

In 1881 Principal Maris resigned to accept a position in Swarthmore College, and in connection with the Friends' School of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and Dr. G. M. Philips, who in 1878 had resigned his teachership in the school to accept the professorship of mathematics and astronomy at Bucknell University, was appointed to the principalship, which position he still retains.

The school has grown almost without interruption, and is now one of the largest and most prominent normal schools in the whole country. Its attendance in the normal department for the present year reaches more than eight hundred students, and, with the addition of the model school, is considerably more than a thousand.

The original main building, erected in 1870-71, has grown to three or four times its original capacity, and, in addition, a gymnasium, recitation hall, model school building and library have been erected near by, while a principal's house and an infirmary for the care of the sick have also been added. With the exception of the infirmary, which is on land by itself, these buildings are all of green stone, and make a handsome, well planned and well equipped group of school buildings. It is generally admitted that they are the finest State Normal School buildings in the United States, and probably in the world. Mr. MacVeagh's original ten acres have grown to almost fifty acres, the largest addition being Wayne Field, which includes the grounds of the Chester County Agricultural Society, adjoining the original school grounds on the west. This was bought and improved at a cost of more than thirty thousand dollars, making it one of the most complete school athletic grounds and play fields to be found anywhere. An enclosed skating park, safe and convenient, covering two acres, affords both health and pleasure. The whole property has cost nearly six hundred thousand dollars, and is thoroughly equipped for the best school work. The school's faculty has grown until it numbers thirty-three members, and is widely known for its scholarship and efficiency. The school has had more than ten thousand students and about sixteen hundred graduates. The great majority of these have been teachers, and most of them are still teaching, but others are filling important positions as statesmen, lawyers, physicians, clergymen, etc. Three of the other State Normal Schools of Pennsylvania have drawn their principals from the faculty of the West Chester State Normal School. Many of its graduates and former students are college professors and county or borough superintendents. The following are the members of the present board of trustees: Levi G. McCauley, president; Herbert P. Worth, secretary; Joseph H. Baldwin, Thomas W. Baldwin, William Chalfant, R. T. Cornwell, T. L. Eyre, Albert P. Hall, Plummer E. Jefferis, Samuel Marshall, Marshall H. Matlack, John S. Mullin, John J. Pinkerton, Alfred P. Reid, Evans Rogers, J. Preston Thomas, Marshall S. Way and William S. Windle.

The following are the members of the faculty for the present year, 1903-4:

Geo. Morris Philips, A. M., Ph. D., principal.

David M. Sensenig, M. S., higher mathematics.

C. B. Cochran, A. M., physical sciences.

Elvira Y. Speakman, geography and spelling.

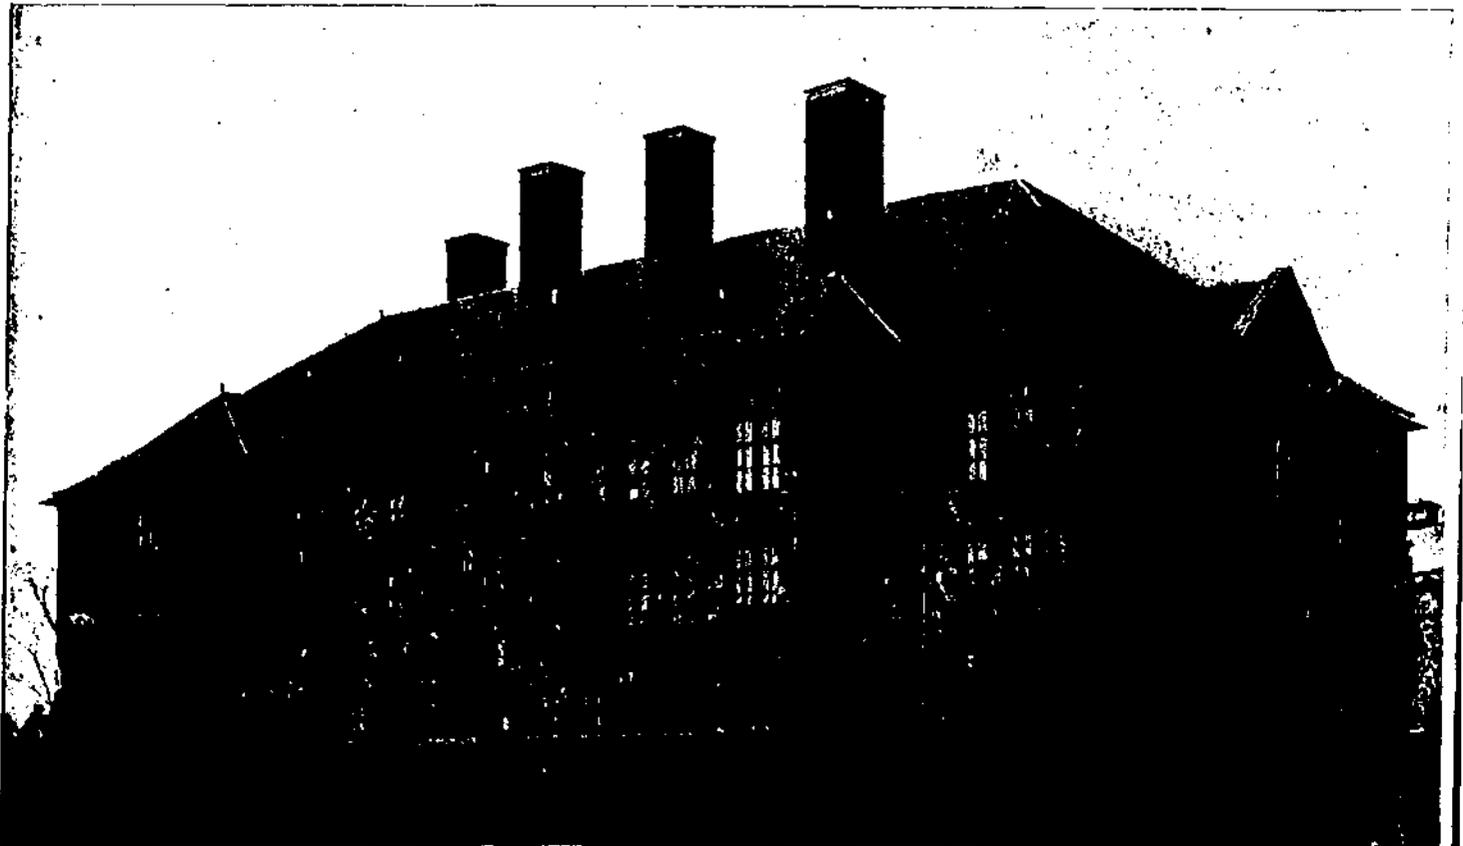

Francis H. Green, A. M., English.

C. E. Ehinger, M. D., director of gymnasium,

Charlotte N. Hardee, Mus. B., music.

Anna E. Mansell, drawing.

S. C. Schmucker, A. M., Ph. D., biological sciences.

 Humphrey M. Carpenter, violin, flute, violoncello.
 Alice Cochran, librarian.

GEORGE MORRIS PHILIPS, A. M., PH. D., principal of the West Chester State Normal School, widely known as an educator of the highest capability, is of Welsh descent. His earliest ancestor of the same name in America was Joseph Philips, born in Pembrokeshire, Wales, in 1716, a weaver and farmer, who emigrated in 1755 and settled near Lionville, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He was a Baptist, and was instrumental in founding Vincent Baptist church, near Chester Springs, in the vicinity of his new home. He brought with him to America his wife Mary who was born in Wales in 1710, and whom he married about 1741. Husband and wife both died in 1792, the former May 18, and the latter December 26, and their remains lie in the Vincent churchyard. Their second son:

John Philips was born in Pembrokeshire, Wales, about 1745, and died at Black Bear Tavern, near Paoli, Pennsylvania, May 22, 1790, and was buried near his parents. He and three of his brothers served in the American army during the Revolutionary war. He was first lieutenant in the Chester County Battalion, was captured, and was one of those who endured dreadful suffering on the British prison ship "Jersey," in New York harbor. He married Margaret Davis. Their eldest son:

George Philips was born at Black Bear Tavern, January 29, 1774, but in early manhood moved to West Fallowfield township, Chester county, where the rest of his life was spent. He was owner of the tavern and a farmer, and was a man of wealth for his time. He was a deacon in the Glen Run Baptist church. He married Elizabeth Morris, who was born July 30, 1782, and died November 25, 1853. Her husband died April 20, 1859, and they were buried side by side at the old Glen Run Baptist church.

John Morris Philips, son of George and Elizabeth (Morris) Phillips, was born on the paternal farm in West Fallowfield township, Chester county, May 8, 1812, and died on his farm adjoining Atglen on the east, July 21, 1879. He was a farmer throughout his life, and accumulated considerable property. His education was modest, but he was a man of intelligence and strong character; he was influential in the community, and was called to various local offices. He was a trustee and deacon in the Baptist church. He married Sarah Jones, who was born July 28, 1819, in East Whiteland township, Chester county, and who died in Christiana, Pennsylvania, July 19, 1902. She was a woman of excellent mind, liberally educated, and of the highest Christian character, a Baptist in religion, and held in affection for her great kindness in words and deeds. Her parents were Judge Thomas and Eliza (Todd) Jones. Her father was a farmer and merchant, and was for two terms associate judge of Chester county. He was a great grandson of Griffith John (Jones), who emigrated from Wales to Chester county, in 1712, and, through a daughter, he was a great-grandson of the Rev. Thomas Jones, who emigrated from Wales in 1729, and who preached for many years in the Tulpehocken Baptist church, in Berks county Pennsylvania. The wife of Judge Jones was Eliza Todd, born December 20, 1793, and died January 14, 1862; she was a great-granddaughter of Robert Todd, (Scotch-Irish) who emigrated from the north of Ireland to Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, about 1737, and was the ancestor of the Todd family of which the wife of President Lincoln was a member.

George Morris Philips, son of John Morris and Sarah (Jones) Philips, was born in Atglen, (then called Penningtonville), Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1851. He began his education in the neighborhood schools and prepared for college at the Atglen High School, an academy conducted by Professor William E. Buck. He entered Lewisburg (now Bucknell) University in 1867, and was graduated in the classical course in 1871; in 1884 he received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the same institution. Immediately after his graduation, Professor Philips was called to the professorship of mathematics in Monongahela College, at Jefferson, Pennsylvania, and occupied that position until early in 1873, when he was appointed professor of higher mathematics in the West Chester Normal School.

In 1878 he resigned to become professor of mathematics and natural philosophy in Bucknell University, and he served as such until 1881, when he succeeded Professor Maris as principal of the State Normal School at West Chester, a position which he has adorned from that time to the present.

The excellent instructional capabilities of Professor Philips and his fine managerial ability are amply attested by the phenomenal success of the institution while under his control. During the little more than a score of years of his principalship, the number of students in the normal school has been increased from two hundred and forty to seven hundred and fourteen in 1903, and its graduates and students who have passed out into honorable stations in life are numbered by thousands, a very large percentage of whom have entered upon the work of teaching in various schools of all grades and throughout the entire country. These have left their alma mater not only with ample educational acquirements, but they have borne in marked degree the impress of the personality of him who superintended their instruction, and who ever made it his effort to develop the individual power of his pupils and not merely to afford them the knowledge acquirable from text-books and oral instruction. That his heart and soul are of a verity devoted to his school has found various and ample attestation in his refusal to be drawn from its service. In the year of his appointment to the principalship, he declined a call to the headship of a sister institution, the Indiana (Pennsylvania) State Normal School. In 1888 he declined the presidency of Bucknell University, and in 1890 he also declined Governor Beaver's proffer of the position of state superintendent of public instruction, while he has also set aside various other tempting calls to schools of assured standing and prominence.

Professor Philips has, however, at all times and in all ways, as he could without neglect of his school, given his zealous effort to advancing general educational interests. In the capacity of institute instructor and platform lecturer, upon educational, literary and scientific topics, Professor Philips has been in frequent request not only in Pennsylvania but in many other states, and his utterances have always commanded close attention and warm approval. He is even more widely known as an author, and his works on Astronomy, Natural Philosophy, Civil Government of Pennsylvania and the Geography of Pennsylvania, (the first two in collaboration with President Isaac Sharpless, of Haverford College) have had a wide distribution. He was president of the State Teachers' Association of Pennsylvania in 1891, and vice-president of the National Educational Association in 1894. He is now a member of the College and University Council of Pennsylvania, a trustee of Bucknell University, a member of the Pennsylvania Baptist Educational Society, and president of the Chester County Historical Society.

Professor Philips has ever borne a full share in local enterprises. He is a member of the board of managers of the Chester County Hospital, second vice-president of the Dime Savings Bank of Chester County, a director of the National Bank of Chester County. The only public office he has ever consented to fill was that of school director. He is a member of the Baptist church, in which he has occupied various official positions. His political affiliations have always been with the Republican party. He is a member of the Order of the Sons of the Revolution, deriving his title through the service of his lineal ancestor Lieutenant John Philips.

Professor Philips was married, December 27, 1877, in Highland township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, to Miss Elizabeth Marshall Pyle, a daughter of William H. and Anna (Taylor) Pyle. Both her parents were Quakers. Her father was a farmer and miller, a descendant of Robert Pyle, who emigrated from England in 1683. Her mother was a descendant of Robert Taylor, also of English birth, and from whom the poet, Bayard Taylor, also descended. Mrs. Philips was educated at Darlington Seminary and at the Millersville State Normal School, and she was teacher of instrumental music in the West Chester State Normal School at the time of her marriage. She is an accomplished woman and a zealous and efficient worker in literary, temperance and social circles in the church and community. Mr. and Mrs. Philips have two children: William Pyle Philips, born at West Chester, June 29, 1882, and Sara Elizabeth Philips, born at West Chester, February 16, 1887.

WALLACE PETER DICK, A. M., professor of Greek and Latin in the West Chester State Normal School, was born in Lowell, Massachusetts, September 9, 1857. On his father's side he is of Scotch descent, while his mother is a native of Vermont. Mr. Dick was prepared for college at Woodstock Academy, Woodstock, Connecticut, and entered Brown University in 1875.

Though he made a specialty of the classical and modern languages, the records of the college show that he was an all-round student, receiving in his junior year the "Howell Premium" of sixty dollars for having "the highest rank in mathematics and natural philosophy" for the three years past. He was graduated in 1879, with the highest honors of his class, having received also, during his course, numerous other high college honors, including an appointment to deliver the Latin oration at the junior exhibition of his class and an election to membership in the Phi Beta Kappa Society in 1878. He received the degree of A. B. at his graduation and that of A. M. three years later.

From 1879 to 1880 he filled the position of principal of schools of Wickford, Rhode Island, and for the next four years that of principal of the High School at Peace Dale, Rhode Island, teaching all the English, Latin, Greek, French and German. After the expiration of this term of service here, an unusual opportunity presented itself to him to enter upon Normal School work in Pennsylvania. He resigned the high school principalship and became professor of English at the California (Pa.) State Normal School. He was then for upwards of six years professor of natural sciences and modern languages and later vice-principal and professor of languages and pedagogics in the Lock Haven (Pa.) State Normal School. In 1891 he was tendered, at an advanced salary, and accepted the position of professor of languages in the West Chester (Pa.) State Normal School. After serving the institution for four years in this capacity he was tendered and urged to accept the presidency of a collegiate institute devoted to the higher education of young women at Carlisle, Pennsylvania. Acting upon the advice of leading educators and personal friends, who were interested in his advancement, Professor Dick finally accepted the position and entered upon his work in July, 1895. The institution at once received new impetus and the first year showed a remarkable increase in attendance, especially in the music department. President Dick's energetic management of affairs here abundantly demonstrated his executive ability. A leading citizen of Carlisle states: "I have known him intimately during a number of years, but especially during the three years of his presidency here. Professor Dick is an accomplished, exact scholar. He insisted upon both thoroughness and definite results in the work of his faculty and from his students. I cannot say too much for this phase of his labors here. In executive ability he excelled. He carefully looked after the details of his work so that everything was finished in its proper time and place."

In June, 1898, Professor Dick was tendered a professorship in the West Chester State Normal School, from which he had resigned three years before. This recall to the school to which he had already become so much attached and to the work in which he was so deeply interested appealed to him with irresistible force and, as he had become convinced that circumstances would not permit him to carry out his plans in the institution which he was managing, he resigned the presidency and accepted the West Chester professorship. He is thus (1903) entering upon his tenth year of service in the State Normal School, instructing and specializing in the department of languages. For a time since 1898 he instructed in Greek and pedagogy, later in Greek, Latin and German and by a re-distribution of the work made necessary by the growth of the department, he is at present giving instruction in the classical languages only, although he is still an enthusiastic advocate of the claims of the modern languages to recognition. A few years ago, while engaged in teaching the modern languages he spent nearly a year in private study with native teachers at three of the leading schools of languages in Philadelphia for the purpose of improving his speaking knowledge of German, French and Spanish, as his knowledge of the grammar was complete and vocabulary ample, and during the summer of 1901, he gave instruction in Spanish at the Summer School of Languages, Portland, Maine, and received further instruction from the best native teachers in German and French.

Mr. Dick, therefore, retains a deep love for the modern languages in which he is unusually well equipped for giving instruction, and continues to be an assiduous student, although the so-called classical languages claim his attention in the class-room. In 1899 he was tendered the vice-principalship of the school, but found it inconvenient to accept it.

In 1889 Professor Dick took a year's course by correspondence in the History of Education and Pedagogy under the late Dr. Jerome Allen of the University of the City of New York. He has lectured before Teachers' Institutes in various parts of the state, his subjects being taken mainly from language, science or pedagogy, which his fund of natural humor enables him to make entertaining as well as instructive.

Early in life he acquired a thorough knowledge of music, having studied the piano and organ under some of the best teachers. His first teacher of the piano urged him, in fact, to make music his profession, but his mind was fully made up to pursue other lines of work and he entered college instead. He has served in the capacity of precentor and for a number of years was a church organist.

He is a member of the Presbyterian church, a Y. M. C. A. director and a Republican in politics.

Professor Dick was married in 1885 to Miss Ida May McConnell, a leading teacher in the public schools of McKeesport, Pennsylvania, and one of the State Normal Schools. Their only child, a son, died in infancy, in 1889.

Professor Dick's experience as a teacher has thus covered a wide field, including nearly all phases of work, graded school, high school, normal school and ladies' seminary. His style of teaching is plain, methodical and thorough. He seeks to grasp the difficulties that lie in the way of individual students and by sympathetic encouragement strives to enable each one to do his best work and attain to the highest possibilities of his being.

DAVID M. SENSENIG, M. S., professor of higher mathematics in the West Chester State Normal School, is a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1840, in East Earl township, Lancaster county, in which county were also born his parents, Michael and Barbara (Martin) Sensenig.

David M. Sensenig was reared upon the home farm and began his education in the neighborhood schools. He taught for three years in the public schools of his county, after which he entered the Millersville State Normal School as a student, from which institution he graduated in the elementary course in 1867 and in the scientific course in 1870. After graduating in the first of these courses, he was appointed as tutor in the institution from which he had graduated, and in two years thereafter he was promoted to the chair of mathematics in the same school, which position he held until 1875. In that year he was called to the State Normal School at Indiana, Pennsylvania, where he filled the chair of mathematics for one year, and was then elected to the principalship, and he served in that capacity with signal success for two years, when ill health obliged him to resign. After one year passed in recuperation, he was called to a tutorship in Swarthmore College, which position he relinquished in 1879 to accept the chair of higher mathematics in the West Chester State Normal School, and which, with an intermission of a year to rest, he has occupied to the present time.

David M. Sensenig is the author of "Sensenig's Elementary Algebra" and "Sensenig's Complete Advanced Algebra," books which are extensively used throughout the schools of this country. He is also joint author with Professor Robert F. Anderson, his co-laborer in the Normal School, of the "Sensenig-Anderson Series of Arithmetics," comprising "An Introductory Arithmetic," "Essentials of Arithmetic," and "The New Complete Arithmetic." This series has just been completed and receives very favorable recognition.

Professor Sensenig has always taken a deep interest in educated affairs, and especially in those pertaining to public education and the profession of teaching. In a paper read before the State Teachers' Association of Pennsylvania, in 1889, at Altoona, entitled "The Present Condition of the Common School Teacher's Vocation, and How to Improve It," he advocated for the first time before that body "a minimum salary for teachers" to be fixed by law. The amount named was fifty dollars a month. This was considered purely ideal and wholly impracticable at the time by most of the speakers who discussed the paper. The passage of a bill by the last legislature of Pennsylvania fixing the minimum salary at thirty-five dollars a month shows the progress of school sentiment in this direction since then. This amount, it is now believed, will soon be raised to fifty dollars a month, the amount advocated in his paper. He formerly did considerable work as an institute lecturer, but his departmental work needing all his time, he has ceased making any engagements in the institute field.

Professor Sensenig was married, in 1870, to Miss Annie M. Gillingham, a daughter of William B. Gillingham, a leading merchant of Bucks county, Pennsylvania. She was educated at the Millersville State Normal School, graduating in the same class with her husband. She is his assistant in mathematics at the present time.

61. Agnes, m. to Ennon Cook, 1800; d. 11 mo., 11, 1840.
62. Jephtha, living in 1789.
- Isaac Garrett (59) was married 4 mo., 24, 1783, at Concord Meeting to Elizabeth Thatcher, born 3 mo., 17, 1758; died 11 mo., 1, 1836; daughter of William and Sarah (Dickinson) Thatcher, of Thornbury. They settled on his father's land in Willistown, of which he inherited one hundred and forty acres. His death occurred 1 mo., 12, 1837. Issue:
63. Edith, b. 1 mo., 17, 1784; d. 5 mo., 19, 1810; m. Imlah Hoopes.
64. Sarah, b. 4 mo., 24, 1785; d. 2 mo., 19, 1854; m. Brinton Darlington.
65. Isaac, b. 4 mo., 3, 1787; d. 10 mo., 21, 1796.
66. William, b. 6 mo., 1, 1789; d. 10 mo., 21, 1796.
67. Mary, b. 3 mo., 12, 1791; m. Caleb Sheward, 6 mo., 14, 1810.
68. Amos, b. 8 mo., 22, 1794; d. 8 mo., 12, 1871, unmarried.
69. Isaac, b. 10 mo., 9, 1797; d. 2 mo., 7, 1870; m. Lydia L. Garrett.
70. William, b. 2 mo., 1, 1800; d. 4 mo., 22, 1854; see below.
- William Garrett, last named, was married 5 mo., 4, 1826, at Goshen Meeting, to Elizabeth Sharpless, born 6 mo., 26, 1807; died 11 mo., 25, 1889; daughter of Jesse and Ann (Harvey) Sharpless, of East Goshen. He inherited a part of his father's land in Willistown, and was a paper-maker. Issue:
71. Edwin T., b. 7 mo., 27, 1828; m. Alice A. Priest.
72. Casper S., b. 11 mo., 15, 1830; d. 5 mo., 23, 1897; m. Elizabeth Williamson.
73. Harvey S., b. 6 mo., 16, 1834; m. Mary D. Worrall.
74. William H., b. 10 mo., 16, 1838; m. Rachel Y. Paxson and Rebecca Massey.
75. Sylvester, b. 4 mo., 15, 1842; m. Elizabeth Nicholson.
- Samuel Garrett (15), born in Darby township, 8 mo., 22, 1708, was married at Darby Meeting, 9 mo., 1731, to Sarah Hibberd, born 3 mo., 19, 1711, daughter of Josiah and Ann (Bonsall) Hibberd, of Darby. They received a certificate from Darby to Goshen Monthly Meeting, dated 12 mo., 2, 1731-2, and signed by seventeen men and ten women. They settled on a farm in Willistown, where Samuel died 1 mo., 29, 1747, and his widow was married again, 12 mo., 28, 1750-1, at Goshen Meeting, to Amos Yarnall, of Willistown, a widower, with children, residing in a house built in 1727, at the time of his first marriage, on the east bank of Ridley Creek, just below the present road from West Chester to Philadelphia. Samuel and Sarah Garrett were both appointed overseers of Goshen Meeting, and in 1750 she was recommended as a minister. Her death occurred 2 mo., 24, 1795. The children of Samuel and Sarah Garrett were four in number:

76. Josiah, b. 1 mo., 25, 1733; d. 1794; m. Mary Yarnall.

77. Jesse, b. 6 mo., 18, 1735; d. 7 mo., 7, 1811; m. Abigail Yarnall.

78. Samuel, born 12 mo., 2, 1742-3; died 5 mo., 8, 1812. See forward.

79. Aaron, b. 12 mo., 27, 1746; d. 3 mo., 18, 1815; m. Rachel Cox.

Samuel Garrett (78), of Willistown, was married 11 mo., 29, 1764, at Newtown Meeting to Susanna Lewis, born 1 mo., 10, 1743; died 6 mo., 5, 1821, daughter of William and Susanna Lewis, of Newtown. They had six children:

80. Gideon, b. 10 mo., 8, 1765; d. 10 mo., 21, 1807; m. Abigail Garrett, daughter of Thomas and Hannah Garrett.

81. Jehu, b. 5 mo., 5, 1769; d. 11 mo., 21, 1842; m. Unity Lewis.

82. Susanna, b. 4 mo., 8, 1774; d. 8 mo., 29, 1774.

83. Samuel, b. 8 mo., 22, 1775; see forward.

84. Lewis, b. 2 mo., 16, 1778; d. 1 mo., 13, 1853; m. Abigail Worrall.

85. Enos, b. 9 mo., 8, 1781; d. 5 mo., 25, 1854; m. Margaret Smith.

Samuel Garrett (83), of Willistown, was married 10 mo., 13, 1803, at Middletown Meeting, to Sarah Worrall, born 6 mo., 15, 1781, died 3 mo., 15, 1861, daughter of John and Hannah (Thatcher) Worrall, of Middletown. They had four children:

86. John W., b. 10 mo., 29, 1805; d. 3 mo., 18, 1807.

87. Oborn W., b. 10 mo., 9, 1808; d. 11 mo., 12, 1818.

88. Milton W., b. 11 mo., 12, 1811; d. 11 mo., 12, 1839, unmarried.

89. Worrall, b. 10 mo., 16, 1818; d. 3 mo., 21, 1879. See forward.

They appear to have removed to Philadelphia in 1817, but returned in 1819, and in 1820 removed to Upper Providence township, where Samuel died.

Worrall Garrett (89) was doubtless born in Philadelphia. When a young man he, with his mother, came from Providence to Willistown and purchased a farm of seventy-five acres in the southwest corner of the township, it being a part of the old Smedley homestead. He was married 3 mo., 6, 1856, to Mary Lewis, daughter of Eli and Hannah (Sharpless) Lewis. Eli Lewis was born in Newtown, 7 mo., 18, 1784, a son of Didymus and Phebe (Matlack) Lewis, and descended from William Lewis, who came from Wales in 1682.

Worrall Garrett settled upon the property above mentioned, and followed farming until 1865, when owing to failing health he sold this and removed to a small place in East Goshen, where he died. He was the father of ten children, five of whom died in infancy or early childhood. Those who survived him were Milton S., Anna M., Lewis M., Penrose W., and William P. Garrett. The widow and daughter now reside in West Chester. The family are members of the Society of Friends.

Milton S. Garrett, son of Worrall and Mary Garrett, was born on the Willistown farm, 5 mo., 8, 1859. He was educated in the common school and spent one year at Swarthmore College, and then learned the milling trade. He was married 3 mo., 27, 1884, to Elizabeth D. Baker, daughter of Enos L. and Mary B. (Shimer) Baker, of Edgmont, and settled on the farm upon which he was born, which again came into possession of the family, and where he has since followed agricultural pursuits. He is a school director, a member of the Society of Friends, and in politics a Republican. He has two children, Enos Lewis, born 12 mo., 27, 1885, and Ralph Penrose, born 7 mo., 16, 1895.

Nathan Garrett (16), son of Samuel and grandson of William and Ann Garrett, was born in Darby, 12 mo., 13, 1711, and died there, 9 mo., 16, 1802; he married in 1739 Ann Knowles, born about 1710, died 4 mo., 2, 1787, in her seventy-seventh year, daughter of John and Ann (Paul) Knowles, of Oxford township, Philadelphia county. In 1764 Nathan Garrett was assessed with two hundred acres of land in Upper Darby. He had five children:

90. Hannah, b. 11 mo., 22, 1740-1; died 10 mo., 18, 1746.

91. Jane, b. 5 mo., 12, 1742; m. David Jones 11 mo., 1765.

92. Nathan, b. 3 mo., 18, 1745; d. 4 mo., 9, 1827; m. Elizabeth Sellers, 6 mo., 9, 1768; a second time, 7 mo., 6, 1780, to Hannah Rhoads, and a third time, 6 mo., 26, 1799, to Elizabeth (Davis) Dunn.

93. Thomas, b. 1 mo., 9, 1749; d. 8 mo., 24, 1839; see forward.

94. Ann, b. 9 mo., 24, 1752; m. Henry Paschall, 5 mo., 24, 1770.

Thomas Garrett (93) was married 11 mo., 18, 1773, at Springfield Meeting, to Margaret Lewis, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Thomson) Lewis, of Springfield. She died 8 mo., 11, 1776, and he married again 4 mo., 15, 1779, at Darby Meeting, Sarah Price, born in Kingsessing, 4 mo., 30, 1759, died in Upper Darby, 5 mo., 30, 1839, daughter of Philip and Hannah (Bonsall) Price, of Kingsessing. By both wives there were thirteen children:

95. Mary, b. 8 mo., 1, 1774; d. 7 mo., 9, 1775.

96. Samuel, b. 7 mo., 19, 1775; married Hannah Davis.

97. Philip, b. 5 mo., 13, 1780; married Rebecca Cresson.

98. Sarah, twin with Philip.

99. Thomas, b. 11 mo., 15, 1782, died young.

100. Charles, b. 4 mo., 4, 1785, married Mary Hibberd, 1811.

101. Margaret H., b. 10 mo., 8, 1787; married George Malin.

102. Thomas, b. 8 mo., 21, 1789; m. Mary Sharpless and Rachel Mendenhall.

103. Benjamin, b. 10 mo., 17, 1791; d. 4 mo., 4, 1884. See forward.

104. John Knowles, b. 12 mo., 4, 1793; m. Henrietta Levis, 1816.

105. Isaac P., b. 1 mo., 18, 1796; d. 1 mo., 24, 1869; m. Phebe Rhoads, 1838.

106. Ann, b. 5 mo., 5, 1798; d. 2 mo., 17, 1892, unmarried.

107. Edward, b. 12 mo., 17, 1800; d. 9 mo., 16, 1863. See forward.

Benjamin Garrett (103), born in Upper Darby, was married to Mary Haines, born 8 mo., 18, 1803, died 11 mo., 12, 1887, daughter of David and Alice (Cullifer) Haines, of West Chester. Prior to this marriage he had purchased and removed to a farm in the state of Delaware, where were born three sons: David Haines, 1 mo., 2, 1843, Isaac Price, 8 mo., 4, 1844, and Thomas Pugh, 6 mo., 30, 1846. The first of these married Sallie Martin, and has one child, Nellie S., born 4 mo., 1, 1880; and the youngest son married Caroline A. Etherington, who died leaving two children, Elsie and Marjorie.

Edward Garrett (107), youngest child of Thomas and Sarah (Price) Garrett, of Upper Darby, was born 12 mo., 17, 1800, and died 9 mo., 16, 1863. He was married at Upper Darby Meeting of Friends, 11 mo., 9, 1837, to Abigail Sellers, born 1809, died 6 mo., 25, 1890, daughter of George and Ann Evans (Ash) Sellers of that township. He was a farmer, and resided at the homestead, which had been in the family for several generations. He was also a highly esteemed member and elder in the Society of Friends. His children were: George S.; Sarah, born 12 mo., 20, 1840, died 11 mo., 26, 1889; Edward, born 2 mo., 11, 1854, died 1855. Sarah became the wife of Thomas Scattergood, of Philadelphia, and they had five children: Anna, Edward G., deceased; Alice, deceased; J. Henry and Alfred G. Of these Anna is the wife of Clarence Gilbert Hoag, of Roxbury, Massachusetts, now living in Philadelphia, and having three children: Mary S., Gilbert T. and Garrett S.

Among the settlers in Darby were Luke Hanck, who took up three hundred and three acres, and Joshua Fearn, who took up two hundred and fifty acres adjoining. William Garrett purchased two hundred and three acres of the Hanck tract in 1688, and conveyed one hundred acres thereof to his son Samuel in 1700. The latter also obtained the remaining one hundred acres of the Hanck land in 1703, and one hundred and fifty acres of the Fearn tract. The one hundred and ninety-three acres now owned by the children of George S. Garrett are principally, if not wholly, a part of the three hundred and fifty acres owned by their ancestor, Samuel Garrett.

CASPER S. GARRETT (72), second child of William and Elizabeth (Sharpless) Garrett, was born in Willistown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, 11 mo., 15, 1830. His educational advantages were obtained in the schools of the neighborhood and at the famous Jonathan Gause Academy in Chester county, and during the latter part of his educational career he entered his father's paper mill, and under his competent tuition learned the art of paper making in all its various details. The senior Mr. Garrett disposed of the products of his establishment through the commission houses of Philadelphia, and in 1850 he established his son, Casper S. Garrett, in that city as the sales agent and to represent his interests in the trade. Upon assuming the duties of this onerous position, Casper S. Garrett became a close observer of the details of the trade, and in the course of a year he began business on his own account on Commerce street, below Seventh street, subsequently removing to South Front street, where his brother, Edwin T. Garrett, became associated with him under the firm name of E. T. & C. S. Garrett.

This partnership continued for eighteen months when Edwin T. Garrett withdrew his interest, and Casper S. Garrett then removed his establishment to more extensive quarters on Litchia street, and successfully conducted the business alone. By his practical management and good judgment the trade steadily increased in volume and importance, and after a short period of time, finding it necessary to increase his facilities, he removed to the spacious building at 12 and 14 Decatur street, now South Marshall street, which the firm has occupied up to the present time (1903). In 1863 Mr. Garrett admitted into partnership his brother, Sylvester Garrett, and they conducted business under the firm name of C. S. Garrett & Brother. Later, in 1865, Mr. Alexander S. Buchanan was taken into the firm.

under the name of C. S. Garrett, Brother & Co. Casper S. Garrett, however, was the individual owner of two mills, one making straw wrapping paper, and the other, the old homestead mill in Willistown township, Chester county, making wall paper.

The firm of C. S. Garrett, Brother & Co. continued in operation until 1873, when Sylvester Garrett withdrew his interest from the concern, and Casper S. continued in individual control of the then extensive trade until 1878, when he admitted into partnership his only son, William Garrett, giving him an interest in the firm, which has since been known as C. S. Garrett & Son. Under the well directed efforts of both father and son, the trade of this well known house has attained considerable magnitude, and the name of the firm has been regarded for many years as synonymous with integrity and straightforward business methods. Upon the death of William Garrett, in 1854, it devolved upon Casper S. Garrett to look after and assume the care of his father's estate, the affairs of which were in a somewhat chaotic state, but under the judicious management of the young manufacturer and merchant they were soon placed in a condition of order and success. Mr. Garrett not only gave of his time and substance to foster the interests of his father's estate, but he really acted the part of a father to his brothers, as well as that of a most dutiful son to his indulgent and loving mother.

In addition to the many and varied interests which constantly demanded his time and attention, Mr. Garrett was a director of the Keystone Mutual Fire Insurance Company, which position he resigned on January 1, 1897, owing to the impaired condition of his health and increasing years. He was the owner of the Keystone Paper Mill in Upper Darby, which was built in 1866, and which had supplanted his original straw making mill, which had been located on the same mill race, about a mile farther down. For twenty or more years prior to his death he also owned the Beaver Dam Mill, in Chester county, where hanging paper was made, and the Marley Mill. The latter mill was originally known as the Marley Mill, but when it became the property of the late George W. Childs he named it the Public Ledger Mill, though the name of Marley never left it. Mr. Childs continued in control until 1887, when Mr. Garrett again became the owner and the old name of Marley Mill was restored in full use.

Mr. Garrett was married at Newtown, Chester county, Pennsylvania, at the home of the bride's parents, 3 mo., 3, 1853, to Elizabeth Williamson, born 5 mo., 16, 1831, a daughter of Adam B. and Sarah (Phillips) Williamson, the former of Delaware county, and the latter of East Whiteland township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Two children were the issue of this marriage: 1. William, born in Philadelphia, 6 mo., 27, 1854; he married, 10 mo., 15, 1889, Mary Menetto Hall, a daughter of Joseph and Martha (Perkins) Hall, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. 2. Laura E., born in Upper Darby, Delaware county, 12 mo., 5, 1856. Casper S. Garrett, the father of this family, died 5 mo., 23, 1897, lamented by a large circle of friends and business acquaintances. His death was a great loss to the community in which he resided, and also to the commercial circles of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

WILLIAM GARRETT, the eldest child and only son of Casper S. and Elizabeth (Williamson) Garrett, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 6 mo., 27, 1854. His early educational training was obtained in the public schools of Delaware county and Philadelphia, which was supplemented by a course in the State Normal School at Millersville, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and in the Philadelphia High School. He next entered the Polytechnic College of Philadelphia, and was entering upon his third year in that institution when impaired health obliged him to relinquish his studies. In 1874 he entered his father's store and office in Philadelphia, and under his able and competent tutelage learned the wholesale paper business, and also the manufacture of the various grades of paper made in their mills. While thus engaged the young merchant and manufacturer not only followed in the footsteps of his father, but sought to improve the various methods and processes in the manufacture of the various grades of paper to suit the requirements of their trade. His aptitude and knowledge of the business was soon recognized by his father, and in 1878 the son was given an interest in the business, under the firm name of C. S. Garrett & Son; this arrangement continued until the death of the father which occurred 5 mo., 23, 1897, and during the nearly twenty years record of the firm the name of C. S. Garrett & Son was everywhere recognized as synonymous with straightforward business methods. Upon the death of the senior Mr. Garrett, the firm name was continued up to June 1, 1903, when the interests of the firm were incorporated under the name of C. S. Garrett, Son & Company, with William Garrett as president and principal owner. In addition to the many onerous duties devolving upon him in the management of the affairs of this institution, William Garrett also occupied the position of vice-president of the Shenandoah Pulp Company, and the Harper's Ferry Paper Company, both located at Harper's Ferry, Virginia.

In the conduct and management of these extensive enterprises, which give employment to many skilled operatives and salesmen, Mr. Garrett has shown good business judgment and keen executive ability, and has proved himself a worthy scion of a most worthy sire. In addition to his commercial interests he takes an active part in the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, of which he is a member.

Mr. Garrett was married 10 mo., 15, 1889, to Mary Menetto Hall, a daughter of Joseph and Martha (Aronson) Hall, of Philadelphia.

SYLVESTER GARRETT (75) was born April 15, 1842, in Willistown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. His parents were William and Elizabeth S. Garrett, the former a descendant of the old Thatcher and Garrett families, and the latter a daughter of Jesse Sharpless, of Goshen township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, names identified with the earliest history of the county. For genealogy, see Garrett Family (William Garrett) on a previous page.

Sylvester Garrett was the youngest of five sons, all of whom in their boyhood days assisted in the paper mill erected by their father in 1840, on Ridley Creek township, above mentioned. His education was obtained at public school during such intervals as he could be spared from work, together with a short term at the West Chester Normal School, when it was in charge of Professor F. A. Allen. At the age of fourteen he was employed in the paper store of his brother Casper, in Philadelphia. In the year 1863 he entered into partnership with him, and the firm became C. S. Garrett & Brother. In 1865 he went to Oregon, where his eldest brother, Edwin Thatcher Garrett, one of the earliest settlers of that state, had been living for ten years. During his sojourn with his brother, he assisted in establishing and equipping the first paper mill erected in that state. Returning to Philadelphia the following autumn, he at once applied himself diligently to the development of the business already well established, and with which he was now thoroughly familiar. Mr. Garrett to-day may well be classed among the veterans of Philadelphia paper trade. He has always been exemplary, original and constant in his business, having patented machines both for fringing and waxing paper, now largely used for wrapping candies, etc. Among the reminiscences to which he refers at times, is the fact that sixty years ago his father, William Garrett, carted the product of his mill in Willistown to the identical store now occupied by the Garrett-Buchanan Company, of which this son is president.

In 1882 Mr. Garrett moved to Swarthmore, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. At that time, aside from the college buildings, there were less than ten houses in sight of his home. In the spring of 1866, after having secured several tracts of the surrounding property, he was mainly instrumental in establishing "The Swarthmore Improvement Company," of which he was the treasurer. At the formation of the borough of Swarthmore, in 1893, he was elected a councilman, and he has since contributed his full share towards the success and attractiveness of this college settlement. He is a member of the religious Society of Friends.

Sylvester Garrett was married, June 13, 1872, to Elizabeth Nicholson, who was born 5 mo., 12, 1849, youngest child of William and Susan G. (Miller) Nicholson, whose ancestors were among the founders of the Fenwick Colony, of Salem, New Jersey. William Nicholson was a staunch advocate of the temperance cause during his day, and was actively interested in other reforms. The children of the marriage of Sylvester and Elizabeth (Nicholson) Garrett are as follows: 1. Fannie, born April 4, 1873; she married, October 12, 1898, R. Spotswood Pollard, of Aylett, Virginia, and has one son, R. Spotswood Pollard, Junior, born April 13, 1900; 2. Susanna S., born November 30, 1875, married, April 26, 1902, Phillip Sellers, of Swarthmore, Pennsylvania; 3. Sylvester S., born August 7, 1877; he married, November 9, 1901, Margaret Maginnis, of Philadelphia; 4. Albert N., born May 20, 1879, married May 20, 1903, Ethel Woods Varrell, of Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

EDWIN THATCHER GARRETT, eldest child of William and Elizabeth (Sharpless) Garrett, was born August 27, 1828, in Willistown. The genealogical record appears on a preceding page in Garrett Family (William Garrett).

Edwin T. Garrett obtained his early education in the public schools and in a Friends' school, and he subsequently attended a boarding school for a short term. He then began working for his father, who was engaged in the manufacture of paper. While thus employed the son mastered the business in all its departments, mechanical and in the office. In 1854 he determined to seek his fortune in the far west, and he was among the early ones who journeyed to Oregon when that region was unreached by railroads and travel was overland by wagon from the Missouri river. In Oregon he secured a tract of three hundred and twenty acres, and applied himself to its cultivation. Without previous experience as a farmer, the undertaking was at once uncongenial and unprofitable, and in 1865 he returned to his old home in Pennsylvania.

Turning again to the business in which he had been brought up, and for which he had developed both taste and aptitude, Mr. Garrett superintended the erection of a paper mill in Newtown, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, and spent some time at the Keystone Mill on Cobb's creek with his brother, Casper Garrett, and later in another mill on Mill creek, in Lower Merion township, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania.

In 1872 Mr. Garrett removed to the locality now known as Lansdowne, and purchased from the Palmer family the mill privilege at its present location. He also bought the old Bonsall flouring mill, which he converted into a plant for the manufacture of manila, tissue and railroad copying paper. The enterprise proved to be the crowning success of his career, and has been for thirty years past one of the important industries of Delaware county. The daily product of the mill amounts to about fifteen hundred pounds, which finds a ready sale in leading markets. The mills have also proven of marked advantage to the neighborhood, providing employment to a large number of operators of a most excellent class of people, to whom Mr. Garrett has proven a kind friend as well as a considerate employer. He has been a life-long member of the Society of Friends. In politics, he has ever been an advocate of Republican principles.

Mr. Garrett was married in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, January 31, 1852, to Miss Alice A. Priest. She was born in Upper Merion, October 8, 1830, a daughter of William and Abigail (Mattson) Priest, of Willistown. Thirteen children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Garrett: 1. John, who married Ella I. Rawlins; 2. William P., who married Mary Keiser, now deceased; 3. Henry, who died in Oregon; 4. Jesse Sharpless, who married Mary R. Lincoln, and to whom were born seven children—Laura A.; Franklin, who died at the age of seven years; Florence A.; Robert P.; George L.; H. Lyndall and Edna; 5. Edwin Thatcher; 6. Casper, who married Lillie Davis; 7. Elmer E., who married Anna Robinson, and their children are—Evaline, Mary and Elmer; 8. Charles H., who married Kate Rinier, and to whom were born seven children—Annie, Elsie, Charles, William, Alice, Casper and Ernest; 9. Ella, deceased; 10. Harvey; 11. Alice A.; 12. Anna Eliza; 13. Benjamin F., deceased. The faithful wife and mother of this family passed away November 9, 1900. She was a most estimable lady of the old school type, was possessed of many excellencies of character, and at the time of her death was mourned by many friends and neighbors.

PHILIP C. GARRETT (97), son of Thomas and Sarah (Price) Garrett, was born in Delaware county, Pennsylvania, 5 mo., 13, 1780. He was reared and educated in Delaware county, and upon attaining to man's estate married Rebecca Cresson, daughter of James and Sarah Cresson, and they became the parents of the following named children: James C., born 10 mo., 13, 1802; Sarah, born 2 mo., 22, 1804; Thomas C., born 3 mo., 30, 1805; Elizabeth C., born 9 mo., 18, 1806; Hannah, born 1 mo., 1, 1808; Margaret, born 2 mo., 11, 1809; Rebecca, born 4 mo., 10, 1810; Martha H., born 6 mo., 25, 1811; Anne, born 7 mo., 5, 1813; James C., born 12 mo., 26, 1814; Susan H., born 6 mo., 15, 1817. Philip Garrett's death was caused by an accident while crossing the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks at Greentree, Chester county, Pennsylvania, 2 mo., 14, 1851.

Thomas C. Garrett, son of Philip and Rebecca (Cresson) Garrett, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 3 mo., 30, 1805. He was reared to manhood in that city and his educational training was acquired in Friends' schools. Subsequently he learned the machinist trade under the supervision of his father, who was engaged in the iron and machine manufacturing business in Philadelphia, in partnership with Andrew M. Eastwick and Joseph Harrison, under the firm name of Garrett, Eastwick & Harrison. Later Messrs. Eastwick and Harrison entered into a contract with the government of Russia to construct railways and the Garretts, father and son, engaged in the watch and jewelry business on Fourth street, below Market street, removing thence to Chestnut street below Fourth street, and later to Chestnut street above Seventh street, where he successfully continued until after the close of the Civil war. He then disposed of his business to predecessors of the now well-known firm of Bailey, Banks & Biddle, of Philadelphia, and retired from mercantile business. Thomas C. Garrett was well known for his probity of character.

Thomas C. Garrett married 10 mo., 18, 1827, Frances Biddle, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Canby) Biddle, and the issue of this union was the following named children: 1. Elizabeth B., born 7 mo., 22, 1828; 2. Rebecca C., born 9 mo., 15, 1830, who became the wife of Jonathan E. Rhoads; 3. Frances, born 10 mo., 31, 1832, unmarried; 4. Philip C., mentioned hereinafter; 5. John B., born 12 mo., 30, 1836, married Hannah R. Haines; 6. Martha H., born 3 mo., 30, 1839, unmarried; 7. Sarah B., born 8 mo., 8, 1841, who died in infancy; 8. Hettie B., born 5 mo., 14, 1848, unmarried. Thomas C. Garrett, father of these children, died in Philadelphia, November 18, 1888, his wife having passed away on 9 mo., 5, 1873; she was a most worthy Christian woman, possessed many excellencies of character, and was generally esteemed and beloved.

Philip C. Garrett, first son and fourth child of Thomas C. and Frances (Biddle) Garrett, was born in the city of Philadelphia, November 1, 1834. His educational advantages were obtained in the schools of his native city and Haverford College, in Delaware county, entering the latter institution at the age of fifteen, and gradua ng therefrom in the year 1851. Shortly after his graduation he entered a mercantile establishment in Philadelphia, where he was employed for a short time, and in 1854 he engaged in a manufacturing career, becoming a member of the firm of Wood, Starr & Garrett, with a cotton mill, dye-works and bleachery at Millville, New Jersey. This enterprise was successful, and important to the growth and development of that thriving New Jersey town. About 1870 Mr. Garrett entered into partnership with his brother, John B. Garrett, in Philadelphia, under the firm name of P. C. & J. B. Garrett, and they engaged in the textile manufacturing business and gave employment to a large number of skilled operatives. This business arrangement of the two brothers continued up to 1873, when Philip C. and David N. Lord, of New York, united in the firm of Philip C. Garrett & Co.

Mr. Garrett is also identified with numerous business corporations, being a member of the board of directors of the Mine Hill & Schuylkill Haven Railroad Company; the Nesquehoning Valley Railroad Company; the Provident Life and Trust Company of Philadelphia, one of that city's largest financial institutions; the Mortgage Trust Company of Pennsylvania; the Germantown Trust Company of Germantown, Philadelphia; the Germantown Savings Fund; the York Haven Paper Company of York Haven, Pennsylvania, and others.

Mr. Garrett has been active in the civic affairs of his native city, and in 1882 was a member of the committee of one hundred who performed such good service in the reform of the city government. He is president of the board of trustees of Bryn Mawr College, and a member of the board of managers of Haverford College, in Delaware county, Pennsylvania; president of the Public Education Association of Philadelphia; president of the Indian Rights Association, and a member of the National Board of Indian Commissioners, having been appointed one of the commissioners by President Harrison; and by President Cleveland, a special commissioner to the Seneca Indians of New York to negotiate for the sale of their lands. In 1900 he was appointed by Governor Roosevelt a member of the committee to investigate the condition of the same tribe. He served as president of the State Lunacy committee; president of the Board of Public Charities of Pennsylvania; president of the National Conference of Charities and Correction and president of the National Conference of Friends of the Indian at Lake Mohonk, New York.

Philip C. Garrett was married, 5 mo., 18, 1865, to Elizabeth W. Cope, a daughter of Alfred and Hannah (Edge) Cope. Their children are: Frances Biddle, born 7 mo., 14, 1866; Alfred Cope, born 11 mo., 3, 1867, who married 6 mo., 18, 1896, Eleanor Evans, daughter of J. Wistar and Eleanor T. Evans, and to this marriage were born the following named children: Eleanor W., born 8 mo., 27, 1898; Thomas C. and Philip C., twins, born 10 mo., 16, 1903.

ISAAC PRICE GARRETT, second of the three sons of Benjamin and Mary (Haines) Garrett, was born in the state of Delaware, August 4, 1844. The ancestral history appears in Garrett Family (Benjamin Garrett, 103), in prior pages of this work.

When five years of age, Isaac P. Garrett was committed to the care of an uncle for whom he was named, at Lansdowne, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, with whom he remained until the decease of the relative who had bestowed upon him an affection that was parental-like. He began his studies in the common schools and took an advanced course in the Friends' Boarding School in Westtown. He then engaged in farming, and was so occupied until 1889. In that year he was appointed to the position of cashier in the custom house in Philadelphia, under the administration of President Harrison, and he discharged the duties of the position to the full satisfaction of his superiors for a period of four years and eight months. He subsequently engaged in the insurance business in Philadelphia, in which he remained until 1897, when (on July 7) he was appointed by President McKinley to the position of postmaster at Lansdowne, and on the expiration of his term of service he was reappointed by President Roosevelt for a second term of four years beginning January 13, 1902.

Mr. Garrett has been otherwise prominent in public affairs during the past quarter of a century. He was twice elected (in 1880 and in 1888) for terms of two years each to represent his district in the state legislature. He was an active working member, and he left the impress of his individuality upon much of the important legislation enacted during his term of service. During his residence in Lansdowne he has served for twenty-three years as a member of the board of education in the township of Upper Darby, and in Lansdowne borough since its organization, and he was president of that body for fifteen years. A devoted friend of education, he has given most zealous and capable effort to the advancement of public instruction, and has aided in large degree in bringing the school system of the village to its present high condition of excellence. Mr. Garrett has at one time or other occupied nearly every town office, and his capability and integrity find eloquent affirmation in the fact that he was never once defeated in candidacy for an office to which he was named. Mr. Garrett is a Republican in politics, and he and his family are in membership with the Society of Friends.

Mr. Garrett was married, November 12, 1868, to Miss Sarah Emlen Bell, who was born July 30, 1846. She was a daughter of Chalkley and Mary (Emlen) Bell, of Bloomington, Illinois, formerly of Chester county, Pennsylvania. Her father, Chalkley Bell, was born April 16, 1821, and died in 1892, a son of Hughes and Sarah (Comfort) Bell. He married, April 14, 1842, Mary Emlen, daughter of James and Sarah (Foulke) Emlen, then of Westtown township. To Chalkley and Mary (Emlen) Bell were born eight children: 1. James Emlen, deceased; 2. Walter Hadwin, who married Sarah Flagg, and to whom were born four children; 3. Sarah E., who became the wife of Isaac P. Garrett; 4. Mifflin Emlen, supervising architect under Presidents Arthur and Cleveland; he married Susan Adelaide Van Hoff, and to them were born five children; 5. Samuel K., deceased; 6. George, who died in infancy; 7. Arthur H., who married Delia Thatcher, and to whom were born three children; 8. Charles Emlen, who married Ellen Wickham, and to whom were born five children.

Three children were born to Isaac P. and Sarah Emlen (Bell) Garrett: Annie Emlen, born March 17, 1870, who is now living; and Charles Taylor and Samuel Emlen, both of whom died in infancy.

GEORGE SELLERS GARRETT was born in Upper Darby township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, December 20, 1838. He was the eldest child of Edward and Abigail (Sellers) Garrett, and the genealogy appears on a preceding page in Garrett Family, 107.

George S. Garrett began his education in a common school, and he afterwards attended a private school. He subsequently took up a course of study in the Friends' Boarding School in Westtown, preparatory to entering college, but he was obliged by ill health to desist and engage in a more active life. Returning home, he was associated with his father in the management of the paternal estate until the death of the parent. The tract of one hundred and ninety-three acres now in the possession of the heirs of George S. Garrett was a part of the original homestead farm which was primarily obtained from one Fern, who took title under a grant made by William Penn, whose deed yet remains in the possession of Mr. Garrett's descendants.

After the death of his father, George S. Garrett was engaged for some years in a mercantile business. He was also interested in banking and had charge of a number of trusts. His marked activity and enterprise in business affairs made him a valued factor in the commercial and financial circles of his part of the state, and his keen sagacity, diligence and close adherence to correct business principles brought him success in every channel into which he directed his energies. His name, too, was a synonym of all that is honorable in business dealings, and no man of the community was more respected than was George S. Garrett. For five years he had been a director of the First National Bank of Darby, and he was re-elected the very day he was seized with that apoplexy from which he died. In 1881 he succeeded Nathan Garrett (deceased) as secretary of the Upper Darby Building and Loan Association, and he served in that position until his death, and he was one of the directors of the Media Title and Trust Company. He was for three or four years supervisor of Upper Darby, and he was at one time elected county auditor, but declined to serve. Sincerely devoted to religion and education, he was for many years a member of the board of managers of the Elwyn Training School for Feeble Minded Children, and he was at one time one of the trustees of Haverford College.

In matters of citizenship he was ever found on the side of progress and improvement, and his active co-operation led to the successful establishment of many enterprises for the general good. He believed in good roads, assisted in securing electric lighting, and he co-operated in all that tended to make the homes of the locality attractive and convenient. He was ever pleased to extend a helping hand to a neighbor or to one less fortunate than himself, and he never allowed the pursuit of wealth to warp his kindly nature in any degree. Many a deed of charity and benevolence did he perform that never became known to the world, for he never boasted of his kindness, but gave his assistance in a quiet and unostentatious way. In his political views he was a Republican, and his religious faith was indicated by his membership with Friends. His greatest interest centered in his home and he was never happier than when in the midst of his family. The ties which bound him to his wife and children were those of the deepest affection and he counted no effort on his part too great if it would promote the welfare of those so dear to him.

Mr. Garrett was married, October 3, 1866, at Chester Meeting, to Miss Mary W. Maris. She was born at Upland, September 1, 1835, a daughter of Jesse J. and Mary (West) Maris, of Chester. Her father was a highly esteemed Friend, and for nineteen years prior to his death was president of the Bank of Delaware county. The children of George S. and Mary (Maris) Garrett were: 1. Mary M., born January 24, 1870; 2. Edward J., born April 24, 1872; 3. Arthur Sellers, born November 24, 1873; and 4. George Spencer, born November 2, 1880. The mother of these children died May 20, 1897, and the father passed away January 16, 1899. His death was sincerely deplored in the community which had so long held him in reverence and with affection for his sterling uprightness of character, his great usefulness and his genial kindness.

JACKSON. Richard and Anthony Jackson, brothers, were born at Eccleston, in Lancashire, England, whence they removed in 1649 to Ireland and settled near Carrickfergus. Richard, the eldest, was born about 1626, and in the year 1650 married Margaret Keete, at Carrickfergus, in the county of Antrim, she having been born at Marlborough, in Wiltshire. Of Anthony's marriage no record has been preserved. They became Quakers in 1654, probably through the ministry of William Edmundson, and joined with him in holding meetings at his house. The next year they removed to the county of Cavan, and in 1659 Richard moved to Mountmellick, in Queens county. Anthony continued in the neighborhood of Cavan and Oldcastle, where in 1670 and at other times he suffered imprisonment for adherence to his religious convictions. The last mention of his name is in 1681.

Richard Jackson was also a sufferer with William Edmundson by distrains and imprisonment for holding meetings. He died 2 mo., 7, 1679, and a memorial by William Edmundson states that he had been a soldier in the army of England and Ireland some years before his conviction. His widow died 4 mo., 20, 1705. They had children, Sarah, John, Thomas and Robert. Of these Thomas was born 9 mo., 30, 1656, died 4 mo., 15, 1716, married, as second wife, Dorothy, daughter of John and Dorothy Mason, of Castledermott, 8 mo., 24, 1683. Among their children was Dorothy, born at Killenure, 8 mo., 22, 1694, who married William Pim, ancestor of the family of that name in Chester county.

Of Anthony Jackson's family we only know that he had a son Isaac, born about 1665, who was married at Oldcastle, 2 mo., 29, 1696, to Ann Evans, daughter of Rowland Evans, of Ballyloing, in the county of Wicklow, as appears by their marriage certificate recorded by Carlow Monthly Meeting. Their children were as follows:

1. Rebecca, born at Oldcastle, 1 mo., 25, 1697; married at Ballytore, 11 mo., 10, 1716, Jeremiah Starr, and the next year came to Pennsylvania and settled in London Grove township.

2. Thomas, born at Oldcastle, 11 mo., 9, 1698; died at Edenderry, Kings county, 7 mo., 21, 1785; married Mary Boardman.

3. Isaac, born 7 mo., 1, 1701; died 12 mo., 15, 1701.

4. Alice, born at Oldcastle, 8 mo., 29, 1703; died about 1787; married Joseph Gibson in Ireland, and came to Pennsylvania in 1728.

5. William, born at Cloenerany, county Wexford, 2 mo., 24, 1705; came to Pennsylvania with his parents.

6. Mary, twin with William, married in Chester county, 4 mo., 14, 1733, Francis Windle, ancestor of that family here.

7. James, born at Ballytore, county Kildare, 2 mo., 10, 1708; married in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, 8 mo., 31, 1745, Hannah Miller, and died 8 mo., 1748, in New Garden, without issue.

8. Isaac, born at Ballytore, 5 mo., 13, 1710; died 8 mo., 13, 1710.

9. John, born at same, 10 mo., 16, 1712; died 5 mo., 31, 1791; married 2 mo., 17, 1740, at New Garden Meeting, Sarah Miller, daughter of James and Rachel Miller, of Kennett.

10. Isaac, born 1 mo., 13, 1715; lived to be thirteen or fourteen years of age.

Having a daughter settled in Pennsylvania, Isaac and Ann Jackson ere long felt an inclination in the same direction, and had the subject under weighty consideration for some years before informing their friends of it. While under this concern and exercise of mind, Isaac had a dream or vision to the import that having landed in America he traveled a considerable distance back into the country till he came to a valley between two hills, through which ran a pretty stream of water. The prospect and situation seemed pleasant, and in his dream he thought his family must settle there, though a wilderness unimproved. At length they embarked on the "Sizargh," at Dublin, and landed at New Castle on the Delaware, September 11, 1725, with their children, William, Mary, James, John and Isaac. Proceeding thence to the house of his son-in-law, Jeremiah Starr, Isaac related his dream and was told that such a place was near at hand. He soon went to see it, and found it to so resemble what he had a foresight of that it was a cause of joy and thankfulness. He soon purchased the land and there ended his days. The farm continued in the line of his descendants for more than one hundred and fifty years, and was the scene of a family reunion in 1875. The name of Harmony Grove was given to the homestead many years ago as appropriately indicating the peace and good order there prevailing.

A fitting counterpart of the story of the dream occurred in 1879, when Joshua Jacob, a Friend and a prosperous merchant, of Limerick, Ireland, came to Pennsylvania to look for a home for his large family, where the laws were less in conflict with his sense of right. By seeming chance he was directed to the neighborhood of Harmony Grove, and learning that it was for sale went to examine the farm. Mutual inquiries and explanations revealed the fact that he was descended from Thomas Jackson, eldest son of the dreamer, who had remained in Ireland. He purchased the place and removed thereto the following year, but his death occurred three years later.

William Jackson (5) was married 9 mo., 9, 1733, at New Garden Meeting, to Katharine Miller, born 1 mo., 30, 1713; died 4 mo., 2, 1781, daughter of James and Katharine (Lightfoot) Miller, formerly of Timahoe, in the county of Kildare, Ireland. They remained at the homestead, where William died 11 mo., 24, 1785, and in their lives presented such an example of industry, frugality and unswerving integrity, together with a warm interest in their religious society and in the community at large, as to merit a special testimony from New Garden Monthly Meeting after their deaths. They had ten children:

11. Isaac, born 7 mo., 2, 1734; died 6 mo., 27, 1807; married 5 mo., 13, 1762, Hannah Jackson, born 7 mo., 27, 1741; died 5 mo., 5, 1806, daughter of Joseph and Susanna Jackson and granddaughter of Ephraim and Rachel Jackson, of Edgemont township. They had children, Joseph, William, Mary, Hannah, Catharine, Catharine 2d, Susanna, Isaac, Phebe, Alice, Rebecca, Samuel. Of these Susanna married Emmor Kimber, and they established the Kimberston Boarding School for Girls, a valuable educational institution. Alice married Enoch Lewis, the noted mathematician, teacher and author. She was a gifted minister in the Society of Friends.

12. James, born 11 mo., 3, 1736; died 4 mo., 11, 1817; married 6 mo., 19, 1760, Mary Jackson, born 3 mo., 27, 1738; died 8 mo., 30, 1812, daughter of Joseph and Susanna Jackson, of London Grove. They had ten children, Lydia, Katharine, Susanna, Mary, Ephraim, Sarah, James, Josiah, Alice and Thomas.

13. Ann, born 5 mo., 19, 1739; died 4 mo., 1804; married 10 mo., 23, 1760, at New Garden Meeting to Caleb Harlan, son of Michael and Hannah Harlan, of London Grove. They resided at Milltown, Delaware, and had nine children.

14. Elizabeth, born 11 mo., 19, 1741; died 2 mo., 1742

15. Thomas, born 6 mo., 8, 1743; died 6 mo., 12, 1745.

16. William born 5 mo., 14, 1746; died 1 mo., 10, 1834; married 1778, Hannah Seaman, daughter of Thomas and Hannah Seaman, of Westbury, Long Island. He traveled much in the ministry and visited England and Ireland on religious service in 1802. Hannah died 12 mo., 25, 1833, aged about eighty-five years. No issue.

17. John, born 11 mo., 9, 1748; died 12 mo., 20, 1821; married 2 mo., 11, 1775, Mary Harlan, born 3 mo., 5, 1753; died 11 mo., 18, 1829, daughter of Joel and Hannah (Wickersham) Harlan, of Newlin township. He succeeded to the homestead, and was a highly intelligent and useful citizen and an active member of his meeting. Among his favorite scientific pursuits botany claimed a large share of his attention and the late Dr. William Darlington, with whom he was personally acquainted, in his "Memorials of Bartram and Marshall," refers to him thus: "John Jackson, of London Grove township, Chester county, was one of the very few contemporaries of Humphrey Marshall who sympathized cordially with his pursuits. He commenced a garden soon after that at Marshallton was established, and made a valuable collection of rare and ornamental plants, which is still preserved (1849) in good condition by his son William Jackson. John Jackson was a very successful cultivator of curious plants, a respectable botanist, and one of the most gentle and amiable of men." He had seven children, Joel, Israel, Isaiah, Hannah J., Lydia, William and Catharine. Of these William continued at the homestead until his death, and was a worthy representative of his ancestry.

18. Katharine, born 4 mo., 10, 1752; died 5 mo., 16, 1754.

19. Katharine, born 10 mo., 2, 1754; died 2 mo., 18, 1826; married 4 mo., 8, 1795, Thomas Pennington, of London Grove, widower. They had two children.

20. Hannah, born 5 mo., 15, 1757; died 9 mo., 25, 1813; married 11 mo., 8, 1781, Isaac Thomas, son of Isaac and Mary Thomas, of Willistown. They had four children.

Children of John (9) and Sarah (Miller) Jackson:

21. Rachel, born 11 mo., 28, 1741; died 2 mo., 24, 1765; married James Pusey, born 5 mo., 3, 1735; died 3 mo., 7, 1766, son of John and Katharine Pusey, of London Grove. They had two children.

22. Isaac born 10 mo., 29, 1742; died in the fall of 1808; married 10 mo., 24, 1765, at New Garden Meeting, Phebe Halliday, daughter of Robert and Mabel (Anderson) Halladay, of New Garden. Second marriage, 2 mo., 16, 1786, to Sarah Jackson, born 5 mo., 26, 1749; daughter of Jonathan and Mary Jackson, of East Marlborough. No issue by the last. By the first he had three children, Sarah, Halliday and Mabel. Halliday spent about two years among the Seneca Indians in New York, endeavoring to instruct them in various industrial pursuits, and afterward published a work entitled "Civilization of the Indian Natives." His son John, an eloquent and impressive minister among Friends, founded the Sharon Female Boarding School, near Darby, and another son, Halliday, was a farmer with decided scientific tastes, compiled a genealogy of the family, and died at West Chester, 8 mo., 6, 1887.

23. Hannah, born 1 mo., 16, 1745; died 1818; married 10 mo., 17, 1770, Moses Rowan, son of William and Elizabeth Rowan, of New Garden. They had seven children.

24. John, born 11 mo., 16, 1746; died in Baltimore, 1 mo., 1, 1795; married 12 mo., 22, 1768, Susanna Jackson, daughter of Joseph and Susanna (Miller) Jackson, of London Grove. They had eight children, Rachel, Sarah, Alice, Susanna, John, Joseph, Samuel and Thomas.

25. Sarah, born 3 mo., 4, 1750; died 10 mo., 14, 1791; married 5 mo., 12, 1773, Samuel Woodward, born 8 mo., 9, 1750; died 2 mo., 29, 1814; son of Thomas and Elizabeth Woodward, of East Marlborough. They had nine children.

26. James, born 8 mo., 1, 1752; died 11 mo., 3, 1808; married Mary Cloud, born about 1758; died 1 mo., 20, 1789, leaving seven children, Joshua, Rachel, Sarah, Ann, Mary, Thomas and Mary 2d. James married a 2d wife, Elizabeth Cloud, sister to his first wife.

27. Ann, born 6 mo., 16, 1755; died 8 mo., 15, 1833; married 5 mo., 13, 1778, Joshua Baily born 4 mo., 20, 1747; died 1 mo., 26, 1826, son of Joel and Betty Baily, of West Marlborough. They had eight children.

28. Thomas, born 11 mo., 4, 1757; married

Margaret Chandler, born 11 mo., 8, 1762; died 4 mo., 22, 1842, daughter of George and Jane Chandler. He died in East Marlborough in 1816. They had three children, Jane, John and George Chandler Jackson.

MARSHALL SQUARE, on the northern side of the borough of West Chester, is one of the most beautiful little parks in eastern Pennsylvania. It was laid out in 1848, and received its present name by action of the borough council, in commemoration of Humphrey Marshall, in the terms of the ordinance: "one of the earliest and most distinguished horticulturists and botanists of our country, having established the second botanic garden in this Republic, and also prepared and published the first treatise on the forest trees and shrubs of the United States, and diffused a taste for botanical science, which entitles his memory to the lasting respect of his countrymen."

The Square contains about five and one-half acres, and is set with trees and ornamental shrubs, and contains numerous animal cages. Upon the grounds is the stately monument erected to the honor of the Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania, a noted Civil war regiment.

MARSHALL SQUARE.

ABRAHAM MARSHALL. This person was born at Gratton, in Derbyshire, England, came to Darby in Chester county, in the year 1700 and in 1707 settled in what is now West Bradford township, on the Brandywine creek. His cousin John Marshall had emigrated from Elton, in Derbyshire, in 1687, and probably settled at first in Blockley township, Philadelphia county, but within the limits of Darby Meeting. Abraham brought a certificate from Friends in England, of which we give a copy:

This is to Certifie All whom it may Concern that our friend Abraham Marshall was ever After he Came Amongst us As far as wee know very honest and walked orderly amongst us And wee Looked upon him to bee what he seemed And had good unity with him in All things Relating to his Life and Conversation; And he also had some times some few words Amongst us in our Meetings which wee Received as from A Babe in the Truth; And had hopes of his growth And Coming on from strength to strength in And by The spirit of the Lord: Wee shal be glad if wee hear of his well doing: And hopes friends in these parts will have A sence of him: And be tender towards him: So in dear Love to All true friends wee tenderly salute you: And Remain your freinds & Brethren In the Blessed Truth.

From our Monthly Meeting Att Monyash ye 9th 2d mo: 1700. Rachel fisher, Sarah Buxton, John Gratton, Thomas Millward, Rebecka Bowman, Edmond James, George Chrichlow, Ann Bowman, Henry Bowman, Thomas Bassett, Margret Chrichlow, Abraham Waine, Cornelius bowman, Ann Gratton, Elihu Hall, Phebe Gratton.

From different essays of a memorial of Abraham Marshall, who died on the 17th of 12th month, 1767, the following is taken:

He was born at Gratton, in Derbyshire, in Old England, and Educated in ye profession of ye Church of England, so called: in his youth he was favoured with a Visitation of Divine Love but not keeping Close thereto when amongst his Companions he suffered Loss by Joyning with them in Vanity until about the 18th year of his age; he living as a Servant with his Kinsman John Buckston, and our worthy friend John Gratton being abroad in Truth's Service was Concerned to have a meeting at a Town Called Auldwork, where John Buckston Lived, who so powerfully declared the Truth near the space of four hours that divers were Convinced at that time, amongst which was this our friend, who being affected with Truth's Testimony and Observing the friend's Conversation & Behaviour agreeable thereto he received ye Truth in the Love of it and Carefully abideing under the Discipline of ye Cross in due time he recived a part of ye Ministry. Some time after he removed to Pensilvania and Lived near Darby in Chester County, and when Married to Mary, the Daughter of James Hunt, they removed into ye forks of Brandywine, then a new settled part of ye Country and the nearest Meeting about 11 miles which he Carefully attended, being exemplary therein, not often missing if favoured with ability of Body. Also was Instrumental in Settling ye meeting Called Bradford Meeting in ye Compass of which he resided ye remainder part of his life, and as he was a Constant attender of Meetings and Humble waiter therein, So he was Concerned for ye Support of Truth's Discipline and an example of plainness and Self denial. He travelled in Truth's Service into ye Jerseys and Southern provinces, where his Service in ye Ministry was acceptable. He was a Loveing Husband, a Tender father, a kind Neighbor & friend, and open hearted to those that wanted Relief, and tho' he began the world with little yet as he was honest & industrious in ye Creation The Lord Blessed his Labours so that he Lived Comfortably and raised a Large family of Children.

It appears by the journal of John Gratton that "he was convinced in the year 1679, at which time he was about 15 or 16 Years of Age, and in his 17th Year began to appear in ye Ministry."

There being some uncertainty as to the age of Abraham Marshall, his son Humphry, in 1771, wrote to England for information on that point. The following reply was received:

Chesterfield, 8th month 28th, 1771.

Friend Marshall:

Thy letter to my father came duly to hand; agreeably wherto I have made some inquiry about thy father's age, and thy relations, as follows: Humphry Marshall, the eldest brother of Abram, was born and registered at Youlgreave, in the year 1667. Abram was the next son, and two years younger, according to thy cousin John's account, but is not to be found in the register. As they were often without a parson the register was neglected. His sister Sarah married one Wilson, and hath a daughter living, called Sarah. I don't hear of any more of the relations, except, John, the writer of the annexed letter, who lives very reputably, and I believe is a sober, religious man (of the Church of England).

One of Humphry's brothers died a Friend, at Aldwark, and was buried at Monyash, in this county. Others were most convinced, but not so as to be joined to Friends. This is what intelligence I have procured, and hope will be satisfactory.

Gratton and Youlgreave are about thirteen miles from this place.

I remain thy friend,

JOSEPH STORRS.

Cousin Humphry:

I not hearing of your family, of a great number of years, expected I should never have heard of you more; nor had not now, but by Mr. Storrs' inquiry after your father's age, and whether any of his family or relations was living. I, John Marshall, am all the nephew your father hath living, and live in a hamlet called Gratton, in the parish of Youlgreave, and in the county of Derbyshire; that is, I live in the same hamlet where my uncle Abram was born, and all his brothers. His brothers' names were Humphry, Samuel and John Marshall. My father, Humphry, died when he was about sixty years of age. * * * was a stone-cutter, or what we call a mason, and I learned the same trade with my father, and still follow it. I am now in the sixty-eighth year of my age, and have eight children now living, five sons and three daughters.

This from your loving cousin,

JOHN MARSHALL.

Gratton, August 14th 1771.

One age has little idea what the next will wish to know. None of these persons supposed we would ask for the name of Abraham's father, while it is probable that his grandfather's name might then have been given. However, the records of the parish of Youlgreave have been searched, beginning with 1558, and, while the Marshalls are numerous therein, it is impossible without further information to determine their relationship to each other except in a few instances. Humphrey appears to have been a common name in the family. One of that name was married in 1574 to Margaret Borowes, and another, the son of Edward, was baptized in 1559. It is evident that Abraham was the son of Humphry and Hannah Marshall, and the following were possibly children of the same parents:

Baptiz: Annah filia Humfredie et Annah Marshall Aprill 16, 1656. Mary ye Daughter of Humphrey (ye younger) & Anna Marshall was Borne June iith & Bapt. June 13, 1658.

Sarah ye daughter of Humphrey & Hannah Marshall was born November vth & baptized Nov. vith, 1660.

John ye son of Homphrey & Anna Marshall baptized March xixo, 1663.

Humphredus filius Humphredi et Hannah Marshall baptiz: April 28, 1667.

Abigail filia Humfredi & Anne Marshall baptiz: July 12 1668.

Baptized Humphridus fil. Humphredi & An Marshall July 24, 1670.

Burials:

1638. Humphrey Marshall, churchwarden.

1663. A son of Humphrey Marshall jun. & Anna his wife unbaptized, buried May xx.

1664. Humphrey Marshall sen. of Gratton, buried July 23.

1667. Humphrey filius Humphrey & Hannah Marshall, of Gratton, buried August 22.

The baptisms above, except of Abigail, are entered as of Gratton, while at the same time children of Humphrey and Anna Marshall of Stanton, were being baptized; all in the same parish.

Humphrey Marshall, of Gratton, in the parish of Youlgreave, county of Derby, husbandman, died intestate, and letters of administration on his estate were granted 26th March, 1684, to Hannah Marshall, the widow, with tuition of minor children, Abigail, Hunt, Abraham and Samuel. A bond of John Twigg, of Gratton Minor, for £100, was filed as surety.

A letter from Samuel Marshall, dated December 18, 1718, to his brother Abraham, has been preserved and shows that their mother was still living.

Abraham Marshall married 1 mo. (March) 17, 1702-3, Mary Hunt, born in Kent, England; died in West Bradford, 3 mo., 4, 1769, in her eighty-seventh year, daughter of James Hunt by his first wife, Eliza, daughter of John Chambers. James Hunt came from the parish of Bearstead, county of Kent, in 1684, and settled in King-essing, Philadelphia.

Children of Abraham and Mary Marshall:

THOMAS W. MARSHALL, of West Chester, Pennsylvania, senior member of the banking firm of T. W. Marshall & Co., is a lineal descendant of Abram Marshall, through the line represented by John W. Marshall, his father.

John W. Marshall, son of Jacob and Elizabeth Marshall, was born April 4, 1804, in West Bradford township, Chester county. On attaining manhood he bought a farm in East Marlborough township, where he made his home and reared his family. He married Edna Webb, and their children were: 1. Mary Elizabeth, born February 10, 1829, died August 18, 1837; 2. Sarah W., born May 5, 1830, who married William Chalfant, April 26, 1854; 3. Charles Carroll, born November 13, 1832, died August 2, 1837; 4. Henry, born March 14, 1835, died August 4, 1837; 5. William S., born June 17, 1839, who is unmarried; 6. John Henry, born January 19, 1841, who married Williamanna, daughter of William R. Chambers; 7. Thomas W., of whom further; 8. Mary Ann, born April 9, 1847, died April 4, 1862. The father of these children died June 17, 1863, and was long survived by his wife, who died August 13, 1884, aged seventy-eight years.

Thomas W. Marshall, youngest son and next to the last child of John W. and Edna (Webb) Marshall, was born in East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, January 26, 1843. He was reared upon the homestead farm, and began his education in the neighborhood schools, and took a course of instruction in the Kennett Square Academy. At the age of eighteen he entered upon a clerkship in a store in Wilmington, Delaware. On attaining his majority, he removed to West Chester, where he obtained employment as a clerk in the First National Bank. He proved himself in every way capable, and was advanced from time to time until he was elected cashier, in 1869, less than five years after he had been employed in the institution. He served most creditably and usefully in that position until 1872, when he resigned and engaged in a private banking business in Philadelphia, in partnership with Smedley Darlington. At the end of about two years this association was terminated, and Mr. Marshall returned to West Chester, where he opened a private bank, which he conducted until 1887, when he took as a partner his nephew, William Chalfant, Jr., forming the firm of T. W. Marshall & Co., in which firm Mr. Marshall is still the active member. Mr. Marshall is also the vice-president of the National Bank of Chester County, the oldest and wealthiest banking institution in the county; he was one of the organizers of the Chester County Trust Company, and has been, since its inception, a member of the board of directors and of the finance committee. His caution and clear conception, together with his unswerving integrity, have made him an excellent adviser and his counsel is sought by many.

Mr. Marshall has for many years been president of the board of trustees of the First Presbyterian church of West Chester, and he is also a trustee of the Oakland Cemetery Association. He is serving the second term by appointment by the governor as trustee of the State Hospital for the Insane for the southeast district of Pennsylvania, at Norristown. He is one of the trustees of the Pennsylvania Epileptic Hospital and Colony Farm at Oakbourne, Pennsylvania. He is a member of the West Chester Golf and Country Club, of which organization he is president, and is also a member of The Union League Club of Philadelphia. He has always been a Republican in politics.

Mr. Marshall was married, May 11, 1869, to Miss Kate D. Worthington, a daughter of Dr. Wilmer Worthington.

BUTLER. The records of the Society of Friends in England, show that Noble, alias Nobell, Butler, son of John and Bersheba Butler, of Bedminster, was born on the 4th of 3d month, 1704. It would not be unreasonable to suppose this person to be the subject of the following document:

"From our Monthly Meeting held at Philadelphia the 24th 12 mo., 1726-7.

"To ffrds at their Monthly Meeting at Kennet in ye County of Chester.

"Dear ffrds We Salute you in Brothrly Love and hereby Let you know that Noble Butler, son of Jno Butler of this Citty applyd to us for a Certificate, and upon Enquiry we find that he has been Removed hence to yr parts for some years. But while he lived here wth his father he behaved Soberly & Orderly in his Conversation & frequented Meetings; and noting appears but that he is Clear of any Engagmts towards Marriage among us. Desireing his Welfare and prosperitie we Remain Yor ffrds & Brethren &c.

Signed in & on behalf of our

Said Meeting by
John Jones	Jno: Goodson
Wm. Lawrence.	Wm. Carter
Ellis Jones.	Isaac Norris
Peter Strech	Sam: Preston
Joseph Elgar	John Warder
Richd Townsend	Evan Owen."

This certificate was received by Newark or

Kennet Monthly Meeting on 1 mo., 4, 1726-7, and on 7 mo., 2, 1727, he received one thence to Goshen Monthly Meeting in order to accomplish his marriage with Rachel Jones, of Goshen. The marriage took place at Kennet Meeting, 8 mo., 18, 1727, but no Butler appears to have signed the marriage certificate as a witness. It is suggested that Rachel Jones was the daughter of John Evans, deceased, of Goshen, whose children, according to the Welsh custom, took their father's first name (or its equivalent) for their family name.

Noble Butler was assessed in Kennet 1725-1730; in East Caln 1734-5, and after 1736 in Uwchlan township. He took a certificate from Kennet to New Garden Monthly Meeting, dated 5 mo., 3, 1731, and thence to Goshen Monthly Meeting. Rachel Butler was appointed an overseer of Uwchlan 12 mo., 19, 1738-9, and Noble 1 mo., 10, 1739-40, but he was succeeded by Cadwallader Jones 4 mo., 20, 1743. Rachel was reappointed in 1744, and in 1748 was appointed with others to visit families.

In 1758 Noble Butler was complained of for discounting notes or bonds at a higher rate of interest than was thought proper. A committee being appointed at the instance of Thomas Owen, they made report that the latter had a bad bargain but it was of his own seeking, yet they advised Noble to make up with him or refer the matter to arbitrators. At length Noble made some slight concession, but declared he would do the like again if opportunity presented. He was therefore disowned 9 mo., 16, 1759, and though he appealed to the Quarterly and Yearly Meetings he failed to get a reversal of judgment. In 1764 he was assessed with one hundred and ninety acres of land, four cows, and six sheep, young stock being probably omitted. At the same time some of his sons were settled on farms which were doubtless purchased by him. He probably died in the year 1799, as letters of administration on his estate were granted Benjamin Butler on December 17, of that year. A will dated 5 mo., 6, 1793, was probated May 29, 1801. Children of Noble and Rachel Butler:

1. John, married 6 mo., 5, 1760, Elizabeth Samuel, of Radnor, and a second wife, Margaret. He died in 1808, leaving the most of his estate to the children of his brothers and sisters, although he had grandchildren by a son John.

2. Enoch, married 5 mo., 29, 1755, Deborah Swayne, daughter of Francis Swayne, of West Caln. They had children, Abigail, Rachel, Esther, Elijah, Elisha, Joshua, Noble, Sarah, John, Swayne, and perhaps others.

3. Bathsheba, doubtless named for her grandmother, married about 1759 to John McCowan, and about 1765 they removed to Sherman's Valley, Cumberland county, Pennsylvania.

4. William, born 4 mo., 12, 1738; died 3 mo., 13, 1821; married 4 mo., 20, 1762, at Uwchlan Meeting, Jane Woodward, born 8 mo., 3, 1739, died 7 mo., 1, 1814, daughter of James and Ann (Pyle) Woodward, of West Bradford. They owned and resided on a farm of one hundred and thirty-five acres in Uwchlan, but about 1790 removed to Newlin township, where he bought two or three farms and was a member of Londongrove Monthly Meeting. Leaving some of his sons here he located in Birmingham, Delaware county, where he also purchased a farm.

5. Noble, married about 1763 Susanna Beale, and in 1777 they removed to Georgia, and perhaps at a later date to Kentucky.

6. Benjamin, married about 1770, Mary, and had children, Benjamin, Noble, Jonathan, Abner, Isaac, Eunice, and perhaps others. His father devised to him the homestead of one hundred and eighty acres during life, after which it was to go to Benjamin's son Noble if he lived to be of age. To Benjamin Butler, Jr., his grandfather also devised a farm of one hundred and fifty acres after the death of his uncle, John Butler.

Children of William and Jane Butler: Samuel, born 2 mo., 24, 1766; died 3 mo., 28, 1840. His father devised to him a farm in Newlin township; James, born 7 mo., 5, 1767, died 6 mo., 27, 1837, married 11 mo., 19, 1812, at Uwchlan Meeting, Mary Phipps, daughter of Jonathan and Mary (Keeley) Phipps, of Uwchlan; he settled at and inherited the homestead of his father in Uwchlan. Amos, born 5 mo., 8, 1769, died 6 mo., 29, 1837; he settled on a farm of one hundred and ten acres in Newlin township, and which his father devised to him. Ann, born 10 mo., 6, 1771, married 1 mo., 16, 1793, at Londongrove Meeting, Isaac Taylor, of East Marlborough; Rachel, born 11 mo., 23, 1773; died 1 mo., 20, 1853; Sarah, born 11 mo., 18, 1776; died 9 mo., 5, 1842. William, born 1 mo., 6, 1780; died 7 mo., 27, 1848.

Children of James and Mary (Phipps) Butler: Jonathan P., born 3 mo., 11, 1815, died 4 mo., 14, 1886, unmarried. Joseph, born 7 mo., 27, 1819, died 8 mo., 22, 1898, married Martha Downing. William, born 12 mo., 2, 1822, married Letitia Miner Thomas (retired judge and father of Judge William Butler, Jr.). Samuel, born 2 mo., 1, 1825; died 2 mo., 1, 1891; married Margaretta Woodward, (state treasurer and father of Thomas S. Butler, M. C.) James, born 12 mo., 10, 1827.

THOMAS S. BUTLER, an eminent lawyer, statesman and citizen of West Chester, Pennsylvania, who for many years has been an important factor in municipal affairs, was born in Uwchlan, Chester county, Pennsylvania, November 4, 1855, and traces his ancestry to Noble Butler, son of John Butler, of Philadelphia, who settled in

Thomas G. Butler

Uwchlan township, Chester county, and was a member and overseer of the Uwchlan Meeting. Noble Butler married, August 18, 1727, Rachel Jones, of Goshen, and their children so far as known were—John, Enoch, Bathsheba, William, Benjamin, and Noble.

William Butler, third son of Noble and Rachel (Jones) Butler, was born April 12, 1738, married April 20, 1762, Jane Woodward, born August 3, 1739, daughter of James and Ann (Pyle) Woodward, of West Bradford, Pennsylvania. Their children were—Samuel, James, Amos, Ann, Rachel, Sarah and William. The father of these children died March 13, 1821, and the mother passed away July 1, 1814.

James Butler, second son of William and Jane (Woodward) Butler, was born July 5, 1767, married, November 19, 1812, Mary Phipps, a daughter of Jonathan and Mary Phipps, of Uwchlan, Chester county, and the following named children were the issue of this union—Jonathan P., Joseph, William, Samuel, and James. James Butler, the father of these children, died June 27, 1837.

Samuel Butler, fourth son of James and Mary (Phipps) Butler, was born February 1, 1825, spent the early years of his life on a farm and was educated at the public schools and the Unionville Academy, the latter named institution being under the care of the celebrated educator, Jonathan Gause. He subsequently taught school in Chester, Berks and Butler counties, serving in this capacity for a period of eight years, and then resumed agricultural pursuits. His farm was a portion of the old Phipps homestead and purchase, which is now the property of his son, Thomas S. Butler, and which has been in the possession of the family since the deed was granted in 1683 to Joseph Phipps by William Penn. In 1876 Samuel Butler was elected to the lower house of the legislature, re-elected in 1878, the following year was unanimously nominated by the State Republican convention for state treasurer, and at the October election received a majority of fifty-eight thousand votes, the largest given to any candidate of his party on the state ticket since the Civil war. Mr. Butler married, in 1849, Margaretta P. Woodward, and the issue of this union was three children—Anna, Thomas S., and Henry J. Butler.

Thomas S. Butler, eldest son of Samuel and Margaretta P. (Woodward) Butler, received a common school and academic education, and subsequently took up the study of law at West Chester, with J. F. Perdue and the late Judge Futhey. After passing a creditable examination he was admitted to the Chester county bar in January, 1877, and to the supreme court in 1879. For a short period of time Mr. Butler practiced his profession alone in the borough of West Chester, later formed a co-partnership with Judge William Butler, Jr., who was formerly a student in his law office, and this connection continued up to the year 1898, when Mr. Butler was elected to the bench, which office he is filling at the present time (1903). In the meantime the firm admitted Mr. W. S. Windle, and a prosperous business was conducted for many years under the style of Butler & Windle. Mr. Butler was elected to serve as an additional law judge of Chester county for the term of 1888 and 1889, and was also chosen from the Sixth district, consisting of the counties of Delaware and Chester, to the Fifty-fifth, Fifty-sixth, Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses. During his incumbency of the latter named office he was an important figure in Congress, and served on the committee on naval affairs and claims. He has also been active and prominent in county politics, and was one of the prime factors in the organization of the Young Men's Republican Club of West Chester. He is an honored member of the Junior Order of American Mechanics and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Butler was united in marriage to Maud Darlington, daughter of the late Hon. Smedley Darlington. Their children are—Smedley D., captain in the United States Marine Corps, a volunteer in the Spanish-American war, and a leader in naval and military circles; Samuel, a student in the University of Pennsylvania, and a member of the Mechanical Engineering Corps; and Horace, who resides at home with his parents. The family occupy a handsome and commodious residence located at 228 West Minor street, West Chester, Pennsylvania.

TOWNSEND. Richard Townsend, born 9 mo. (November) 30, 1645, has been supposed to be the son of Richard Townsend, who, as a Friend, suffered persecution by imprisonment at Cirencester, in Gloucestershire, England, in 1660, 1662 and 1675. It is also stated that the son became a Friend and "received the Truth in the love thereof," 3 mo. 1st, 1672; went to London in the 3 mo., 1676, and was married to Ann Hutchins 3 mo., (May) 25, 1677. He came to Pennsylvania in company with William Penn, on the "Welcome," 1682, and settled at first near Chester, where he was concerned in setting up the first mill near that place, for which the timbers were brought ready framed from England. About the close of 1683 he removed to the neighborhood of Germantown, Philadelphia county, where he erected another mill. In Proud's "History of Pennsylvania" will be found some account of his experiences as written by himself. He became a minister among Friends and paid a religious visit to England in 1706-8. In 1713 he removed to Philadelphia. He died at the residence of his nephew, Joseph Townsend, in East Bradford, Chester county, 1 mo., 28, 1732, and was buried on the 30th at Philadelphia. Ann Townsend, his widow, died 1 mo., 13, 1733, at the residence of her son-in-law, Isaac Cook, at Germantown, and was buried at Philadelphia.

The children of Richard and Ann Townsend were Joseph, born in the parish of St. Martin le Grand, London, 10 mo., 2, 1678; died in childhood; Hannah, born 8 mo., 13, 1680, married Isaac Cook, of Germantown, 9 mo., 14, 1706, and died 2 mo., 18, 1763; "James Townshend, son of Rich'd & Ann Townshend was Born on board ye Ship Called ye Welcome in Delaware River ye 2d of ye 9 mo., 1682," married Elizabeth Tomlinson in 1703, and was perhaps the father of Stephen Townsend, who settled in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, 1737; Mary, born 3 mo., 22, 1685, married John Bartlett, 1706; "Joseph Townshend, Rich'd & Ann Townshend's Son, of Bucklebury Mill, was born ye 16th of ye 5 mo., 1687," married 9 mo., 11, 1712, Elizabeth Harmer; and left a daughter Ann, born February 20, 1713, who married Thomas Sugar, December 15, 1735; Sarah, married in 1711 James Bartlett.

The fact that he gave the name of Bucklebury to his mill, points to Bucklebury in Berkshire as the place of Richard Townsend's birth or early home. One Richard Townsend, of Bucklebury, weaver, was buried there 5 mo., 19, 1697, aged 95, who may have been father to the emigrant.

William Townsend, of Bucklebury, carpenter, brother to the emigrant, was married 11 mo., 28, 1679, to Jane Smith, but she did not long survive, and he was married again, 2 mo., 1, 1683, at Faringdon Magna, Berks, to Mary Lawrence, of Little Coxwell, by whom he had Joseph, William, Mary, born 5 mo., 4, 1689, and Joan, born 4 mo., 27, 1690. He was buried at Bucklebury, 5 mo., 19, 1692 (if the date has been correctly copied).

Joseph Townsend, born 11 mo., 18, 1684, was young when his father died, and for some time made his home with Oliver Sansom, a highly valued Friend. He was bound apprentice September 29, 1699, to Jonathan Sargood, a weaver, for seven years; was married 9 mo., 27, 1710, to Martha Wooderson, born 9 mo., 18, 1683, daughter of Julian and Esther Wooderson. They, with his sister, Joan, received a certificate from a monthly meeting at Newbury in Berkshire, dated 11 mo., 15, 1711, which was presented to Abington Monthly Meeting, Pennsylvania, of which his uncle Richard was then a member.

Joseph and wife brought a certificate from Abington to Concord, 2 mo., 11, 1715; thence to Chester, 6 mo., 1, 1720, and he and wife were both overseers of Chester Meeting for some time; but on 7 mo., 26, 1725, they received a certificate to Concord. Articles of agreement were signed

October 21, 1725, between John Wanton, of Newport, Rhode Island, and Joseph Townsend, of Bristol township, Philadelphia county, weaver, for the conveyance to the latter of eight hundred acres of land in East Bradford township, Chester county. The price was £40 per hundred acres, to be paid in three installments—£100 immediately, £100 on October 21, 1726, and the remainder October 21, 1727. The deeds of lease and release were executed September 6 and 7, 1727. He appears to have removed at once to the land, as his certificate from Chester (which appears to have been requested previously to Abington), was produced to Concord Monthly Meeting 11 mo., 3, 1725, after which he and his wife were active members of Birmingham Meeting. Their residence was on the land now belonging to Samuel R. Shipley. Joseph Townsend died 4 mo., 9, 1766, and his widow 3 mo., 2, 1767; both buried at Birmingham Meeting. Their children were:

1. William, born 5 mo., 26, 1711; d. 11 mo., 13, 1792, unmarried.

2. Mary, born 8 mo., 16, 1713; d. 10 mo., 8, 1781; m. Henry Woodward.

3. Joseph, born 4 mo., 8, 1715; died 10 mo., 3, 1749; married 3 mo., 17, 1739, at Chichester Meeting, to Lydia Reynolds, born 2 mo., 24, 1716; daughter of Francis and Elizabeth (Acton) Reynolds, of Chichester. His father gave him one hundred and seventy acres of land on which he erected a dwelling very near the present winter residence of Herman Hoopes. This house was torn down between forty and fifty years ago.

4. John, born 12 mo., 2, 1716; died 8 mo., 18, 1803; married 10 mo., 31, 1741, at East Nottingham Meeting, Joanna England, born at Burton on Trent, in Staffordshire, England, 7 mo., 29, 1721; died 5 mo., 30, 1786; daughter of Joseph and Margaret (Orbell) England, of Nottingham. He obtained one hundred and eighty acres of land from his father by deed, and one hundred and twenty-one acres more by will. He erected a new house on the first, which is still standing, and owned by Samuel R. Shipley.

5. Hannah, born 6 mo., 9, 1718; died 12 mo., 31, 1790; m. Nathan Sharpless. They settled in what is now West Chester.

6. Martha, born 1 mo., 26, 1721; died 4 mo., 3, 1748, unmarried.

7. Richard, born 5 mo., 23, 1727; died 5 mo., 4, 1738.

8. Esther, born 5 mo., 23, 1727; died 11 mo., 1, 1728-9.

Children of Joseph, Jr., and Lydia Townsend:

9. Francis, born 4 mo., 15, 1740; married 7 mo., 8, 1762, Rachel Talbot, born 9 mo., 27, 1745; died 9 mo., 22, 1784; daughter of Joseph and Hannah Talbot, of Middletown. They had children, Joseph, Samuel, David, Lydia, John,

Benjamin, Hannah, Jacob, Isaac, Talbot and Rachel. These all went to the western part of the state, but Samuel returned to Chester county, married Priscilla Yarnall, and was the father of David Townsend, for thirty-two years cashier of the Bank of Chester County and a botanist for whom the genus Townsendia was named. David was the father of Washington Townsend, of West Chester, member of Congress, 1868 to 1876.

10. Benjamin, born 10 mo., 1742; married, first Edith Evans, by whom he had Jesse, Esther, Thomas, Benjamin, Abigail, Sarah, Lydia, Mary. The mother died 5 mo., 8, 1783, and a year later he married Jeninia Booth, daughter of Robert Booth, of Bethel, (now) Delaware county, by whom he had Martha, Robert, Hannah and Eli. His third wife was Elizabeth Naylor, of Baltimore. Benjamin was an approved minister among Friends, and removed to the western part of the state with his brother Francis, in 1786.

11. Esther, born 11 mo., 1, 1744-5; married David Hoopes, of Goshen. They removed to New Brighton, Beaver county, Pennsylvania, about 1802, and he was drowned in Beaver river in 1811.

12. Joseph, born 4 mo., 7, 1747; married 10 mo., 25, 1770, Hannah Ferris, of Wilmington, Delaware, and removed to western Pennsylvania.

13. Elizabeth, married in 1767 to Isaac Taylor, of Thornbury. Their children also removed to the Beaver.

Children of (4) John and Joanna Townsend:

14. Margaret, born 7 mo., 27, 1742; married Samuel Jefferis.

15. Sarah, born 12 mo., 10, 1743; married Amos House.

16. Lydia, born 2 mo., 11, 1746; married Reuben John.

17. William, born 7 mo. 19, 1748; died 11 mo., 6, 1819; married Grace Loller, who died 1 mo., 15, 1848. His parents conveyed to him one hundred and fifty-five acres of land in 1784, including the original log dwelling of the settler, and near by William erected a substantial brick house, which is now the property but not the residence of Samuel R. Shipley.

18. Martha, born 12 mo., 6, 1751; married Robert Lamborn.

19. Mary, born 9 mo., 6, 1753; married Jesse Jones.

20. Joseph, born 2 mo., 26, 1756; died 9 mo., 30, 1841; married 6 mo., 6, 1782, Hannah Painter, and the next year settled in Baltimore, where he was a teacher for some years and later a merchant, but devoted much of his attention to matters of public interest. He married a second wife, Mary Matthews, 1787, and a third, Esther Hallett, in 1803, and had in all twenty-three children, most of whom died young. He inherited the homestead of his father with about one hundred and fifty-six acres of land, which for nearly forty years was occupied by renters, until sold by his executors. Joseph Townsend's recollections of the early history of West Chester and of the battle of Brandywine have been very valuable contributions to our knowledge of those times.

21. John, born 7 mo., 14, 1758; died in childhood.

22. Hannah, born 12 mo., 17, 1760; married Edward Darlington.

23. Joanna, born 3 mo., 15, 1763; married Jesse Sharpless.

Many of the descendants of John and Joanna Townsend, of other names, have been persons of strong character and intellectual ability.

Children of (17) William and Grace Townsend:

24. Eusebius, born about 1786; died 4 mo., 18, 1863; married Elizabeth Pratt, 1829, and continued to reside on the homestead in East Bradford. They had nine children, Anna Frost, George Brinton, Thomas Ellwood, Lacey Darlington, Sarah Emily, Joseph, Elizabeth, William Henry and Robert Dobbin.

25. John W., born 3 mo., 22, 1789; died 3 mo., 2, 1874; married 10 mo., 22, 1812, Sibbilla K. Price, born 2 mo., 19, 1790; died 8 mo., 6, 1853; daughter of those worthy Friends, Philip and Rachel (Kirk) Price, of East Bradford, and sister to Eli K. Price, the well known real estate lawyer and legislator of Philadelphia. They resided in West Chester, where he was a merchant for many years.

26. Joseph, married 9 mo., 5, 1813, Sarah Hickman, daughter of Moses and Hannah Hickman, of East Bradford. He was a saddler in West Chester, where he died in 1859. His children were Eliza, who died young; Eusebius, born 1817, died 1889, married Jane D. Haines; Hannah, married James Murtagh and W. Elliott; Joseph B., married Mary Price and Ada Barton, and was a prominent real estate lawyer in Philadelphia; William D., who died unmarried.

Children of (25) John W. and Sibbilla Townsend:

William P., born 8 mo., 5, 1813; married Anna M. Kirk in 1855; was for several years a merchant in West Chester, where he still resides.

Anna M., born 10 mo., 23, 1815; married in 1841 Dr. George Thomas, of West Whiteland, where she resides.

Rachel P., born 11 mo., 2, 1817; married in 1848 J. Lacey Darlington, of West Chester.

Charles M., born 8 mo., 11, 1819; died 6 mo., 18, 1823.

Henry C., born 2 mo., 22, 1822; died 4 mo., 24, 1899; married Georgiana L. Talman, 1847, and was a lawyer in Philadelphia.

Edward Y., born 10 mo., 4, 1824; died 11

The Darlington family are possessors of many interesting relics of the olden times. Among them is what is known as the Lafayette bedstead, and came down to Miss Esther C. Darlington. This is of mahogany, and is beautifully carved. It was made by Amos Darlington, a cabinet maker (who was the father of Mrs. Oliver Strode and Miss Esther C. Darlington), about 1822, in a shop conducted by him on the west side of High street, West Chester, three doors south of Miner street. The bedstead was occupied by General Lafayette, on the night of August 26, 1825, when he was visiting this country, and remained over night at the home of Ziba Pyle, at the northeast corner of Gay and Church streets.

mo., 5, 1891; married Henrietta M. Troth, 1850. He was president of the Cambria Iron Company.

Philip P., born 5 mo., 24, 1828; died 3 mo., 17, 1888; married Rachel Brady but left no children.

DARLINGTON. From a careful search among the public records in England it appears that in the latter half of the sixteenth century there lived in the parish of Whitegate, Cheshire, six brothers Darlington,—Edmund, Thomas, Robert, John, Richard and Randle, whose father is conjectured to have been Richard Darlington, of Brookhouses, now called Brook House, a farm house not far from Whitegate church. Of these Edmund, the eldest, was probably born not long prior to 1550, and his death occurred at Brookhouses in 1580, when he left a widow Marjorie, sister of John Billington, and some minor daughters.

Thomas Darlington, the next of the brothers, was married May 24, 1572, according to the Whitegate register, to Ellen Walker, who survived until 1632. He succeeded to Brookhouses in 1602, on the death of Marjorie Darlington, widow of his brother Edmund, and died in 1617, leaving issue, Marjorie, John, Margaret, Ralph, Catharine, William, Richard and Elizabeth.

John Darlington had a son Rafe or Ralph, and seven other children, as appears by the will of his brother Randle.

1. Richard Darlington lived in Whitegate parish, but the exact place is not known. As his sons Job and Hugh lived at Darnhall, he probably lived there too. In 1589 he married Catharine Threlfall. He was church warden of Whitegate in 1614, and was probably alive in 1641, as his nephew Richard, of Brookhouses, is in that year described as Richard Darlington, Junior.

Randle Darlington married September 23, 1594, Margaret Darlington, doubtless a relative, by whom he had five children—Randle, Margaret, Edmund, Richard and Elizabeth. These all appear to have been deceased before he made his will in 1611, when he devised his estate to the children of his brother Richard and other collateral relatives.

Children of (1) Richard and Catharine Darlington:

2. Alice, baptized 1590, in the parish of Over, as were all the others.

3. Richard, bap. 1593, married Annie Jackson in 1621.

4. Anne, bap. 1596, married in 1619, Richard Darlington, son of her uncle Thomas, of Brookhouses.

5. Job, bap. 1597, married in 1616, at the age of nineteen, his cousin Elizabeth Darlington, youngest child of Thomas Darlington, of Brookhouses, aged about sixteen years. He was church warden of Whitegate in 1624-5, and probably lived in Darnhall.

Among the names of persons belonging to Over who signed a certain Remonstrance, or Declaration of the Inhabitants of the County of Chester, in the year 1641, are those of Job Darlington, Richard Darlington and Richard Darlington, Jr. The remonstrance is in manuscript, and the original signatures are appended to it, which gives it special interest. In 1641 England was on the eve of the armed struggle between the King and Parliament, the first battle of the Civil war being fought at Edgehill in 1642. Job Darlington and the other members of the family who signed this petition evidently belonged to the peaceful and moderate party, who occupied a middle position between the extreme Royalists on the one side and unbending Roundheads on the other. The signatories to this remonstrance or declaration "declare that (according to our Allegeaunce and our sollemne protestation, our vowes being in Heaven), wee are resolved to spend our lives and fortunes in ye service and defence of both. In maintenance of his Majesties Royall and sacred person, honour & prerogative, and in preservacon of the Parliament, and just priviledges thereof, of our true and undoubted Religion, lawes, proprieties and liberties, which are deposited for our use and availe in that great and wise Councell," &c. &c. Harl. MS. No. 2107.

6. Hugh, bap. 1599, died 1664, at Darnhall, leaving issue, John and Dorothy.

7. Abraham, bap. 1606, lived in the parish of Whitegate and left issue, Hugh, Anne, Uifera, and perhaps others.

Children of (5) Job and Elizabeth Darlington:

8. George, bap. at Whitegate November 28, 1616, probably lived at Darnhall, and by his wife Mary, whose maiden name has not been ascertained, had seven children.

9. John, bap. 1620.

10. Thomas, bap. 1623.

11. Abraham, bap. 1628.

Children of (8) George and Mary Darlington:

12. Matthew lived in Little Budworth about 1668-1674, and later at a place called Somerford Booths, near Congleton, where he died, but he was buried at Over in 1702.

13. John, bap. 1652. No further record.

14. Ann, bap. 1654, married first — Shaw, and a second husband, Randle Amson, of Bostock, who died in 1717. She was living in January 1736-7, and some of her letters to her nephew, Abraham Darlington, are still preserved.

15. Job, bap. November, 1655, at Whitegate, married by license, December 6, 1680, Mary Nield, of Budworth Parva, at Witton Parish Church, Nantwich. She died December 18, 1728, and was buried at Over. In the records of this church it is entered that "Job Darlington, of Darnhall, in ye Parish of Whitegate, yeoman, was interred Augt ye 11th 1731." His will, dated December 20, 1730, was proved at Chester June 2, 1733.

16. Isaac, baptized 1660, died 1691.

17. Abraham, baptized 1664. No further record.

18. Benjamin, baptized 1666, died the same year.

Children of (15) Job and Mary Darlington:

19. Matthew, bap. May 3, 1683, married about January 1718-9, and for some years was a miller at Stableford Mill.

20. Abraham, bap. March 13, 1689-90, at Whitegate. See forward.

21. Daniel, bap. December 3, 1692, at Whitegate, probably died young.

22. Joseph, bap. December 3, 1694, at Whitegate; married in 1722 Hannah, daughter of Samuel Tomlinson, of Darnhall. He was a farmer and resided at the homestead, to which he made addition by purchase. In 1733 he had seven children, of whom he names Joseph, John, Elizabeth, Mary and Elinor, in his will, dated 1763.

23. Mary, married to a blacksmith, of Haslington, is supposed to have had no children.

24. Jane remained unmarried, and lived with her brother Joseph, in Darnhall.

25. John came to Pennsylvania with or not long after his brother Abraham, married, and perhaps went to Maryland; but little is known of him though he is supposed to have been the father of a John Darlington and of Mary, who married John Slack. The baptisms of Mary Jane and John Darlington are not found in the Whitegate register.

Abraham Darlington (20) was placed apprentice, at the early age of twelve, to Jonathan Youde, of Waverham, in Cheshire, for the term of seven years, to learn the art, trade or mystery of a saddler. His indenture, dated 10th of January, 1701, is the oldest document handed down to his descendants. For this his father was to pay the sum of ten pounds, ten shillings. Tradition says that Abraham did not serve the full term of his apprenticeship, but that he and his brother John came to Pennsylvania under some inducements from their mother's brother, John Nield, which were not realized after their arrival. John Nield, of Benton, in the county of Chester, England, was a purchaser of two hundred and fifty acres of land from William Penn, by deeds of 21st and 22d of March, 1681-2; but in order to obtain the benefit of Penn's offer of fifty acres of land to such as came as servants, he agreed to serve Thomas Janney for the term of five years after his arrival, in consideration of his passage and an additional fifty acres from his master. They arrived in the Delaware on the 29th of September, 1683, and John Nield subsequently settled in Aston township, where his purchase from William Penn had been surveyed in 1682. In 1694 he married Mary, widow of John Dutton, also from Cheshire, but it is supposed that she was his second wife. If he had any children by this or a former marriage, they died young, and it is quite probable that the Darlington boys may have come over with the expectation of becoming his heirs; but he married again, and died about 1724, leaving four children.

Abraham Darlington had arrived in Pennsylvania long enough prior to the close of the year 1711 to conduct a successful courtship with Deborah Carter, daughter of Joseph Carter, who came from Cheshire in 1698. They were married prior to the 31st of March, 1712, having declared their intentions before Chester Monthly Meeting, the second time, on the 25th of the previous month. A letter from Job and Mary Darlington, or Darnhall, dated March ye 28th, 1813, to their sons Abraham and John, states that they had written two letters previously and had also received two, of which the first was dated 24th of 12th month, 1711. The letter from the parents expressed regret that their sons were living so far apart, and was directed to "Abraham Darlington, Sadlor In Chester In Pensilvane."

In 1715 Abraham Darlington was living in Aston township, and had lost his wife, who does not appear to have left issue. He was married again in the 10th month, 1716, at a meeting at the house of Stephen Twining, in Newtown, Bucks county, to Elizabeth Hillborn, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Hillborn.

Abraham Darlington may have been influenced by his aunt, Mary Nield, to unite with the Society of Friends, or perhaps by his first wife, but at all events he continued to be an active member for the remainder of his life. At first he was a member of Chester Monthly Meeting, but in 1721 he transferred his membership to Chichester, without a change of residence. In the spring of 1724 he removed to a farm of two hundred acres on the Brandywine, in Birmingham, which he purchased from James Miller and wife for eighty pounds. In 1729 he was commissioned coroner for Chester county, and at later dates was appointed an overseer and elder of Birmingham Meeting.

The late Dr. William Darlington remarks: "Whether our first American progenitor carried on his trade of a saddler after he came to his Brandywine farm, I am unable to say; but it is well known that his agricultural pursuits did not prevent him from becoming an extensive and popular practitioner of physic and surgery in the region round about him. In those days medical schools had not been established in this hemisphere, and educated physicians in rural districts were 'few and far between.' It is therefore certain that Abraham Darlington never had an opportunity to be indoctrinated by learned professors in the institutes of the healing art. Like many of his medical contemporaries he took the profession in the natural way, and was resorted to from necessity. But tradition assures us that he learnt to prescribe with a good degree of skill and judgment, and was somewhat celebrated for his chirurgical dexterity among broken bones and dislocated joints.

"His aptitude for these humane offices seemed to some extent to become hereditary in the family, for a son and daughter, Thomas and Rachel, were quite expert and much employed in the same capacity; and some also of the third generation were considerably addicted to venaesection and tooth-drawing among their afflicted neighbors. It was deemed by sage observers of the vicinage to be a grave mistake or oversight that one of his grandchildren—being a seventh son—was not expressly dedicated to the Esculapian profession; and I may add that when I commenced my medical career I was sometime consulted by aged persons who recollected my descent, in the avowed hope and trust that some portion of the old family gift might peradventure be inherited."

The death of Elizabeth Darlington occurred on the 28th of 1st month, 1771, and that of Abraham Darlington on the 9th of 2d month, 1776. Both were buried at Birmingham Meeting.

Children of (20) Abraham and Elizabeth Darlington:

26. Mary, born 1 mo., 14, 1717, married Moses Pyle, 2 mo., 29, 1736.

27. Deborah, born 7 mo., 13, 1719, married Samuel Taylor, 10 mo., 16, 1741.

28. Elizabeth, born 1721, married Isaac Pyle, 9 mo., 21, 1750.

29. Abraham, born about 1723, married Mary Nicklin, January 18, 1769, and Lettice Ryan, November 22, 1786. He inherited the homestead.

30. Thomas, born in Birmingham about 1725, married 4 mo., 25, 1754, at Birmingham Meeting, Hannah Brinton, daughter of Edward and Hannah (Peirce) Brinton, of Birmingham. They settled on one hundred acres of land in East Bradford township, belonging to his father, and for which he received a deed in 1760. He also purchased adjoining land in Goshen, and some in what is now Pocopson. He was an active citizen, and he and wife were overseers of Birmingham Meeting. His death occurred 12 mo., 17, 1808, and that of his widow, 10 mo., 12, 1811.

31. John, born about 1727, married Esther Dicks, 3 mo., 17, 1751, daughter of Peter and Sarah Dicks, of Providence.

32. Hannah, married 4 mo., 30, 1752, William Jeffers, of East Bradford township.

33. Rachel, married 4 mo., 25, 1765, to William Seal, and again, 7 mo., 3, 1777, to Isaac Miller.

34. Job, died young.

35. Rebecca, married 12 mo., 28, 1763, to John Brinton.

Children of (30) Thomas and Hannah Darlington.

36. Edward, born 6 mo., 13, 1755, married Hannah Townsend, 3 mo., 8, 1781, and settled in Birmingham. He was the father of Dr. William Darlington, the botanist and member of Congress.

37. Abraham, born 8 mo., 28, 1757, married 3 mo., 22, 1781 Susanna Chandler, and settled in Thornbury township. He was the father of Judge Isaac Darlington.

38. Thomas, born 1 mo., 21, 1760, died of yellow fever, 2 mo., 22, 1793, unmarried.

39. Jesse, born 2 mo., 16, 1762; died 4 mo., 26, 1842; married 10 mo., 4, 1787, at Middletown Meeting, Amy Sharpless, born 11 mo., 17, 1758; died 1 mo., 3, 1831; daughter of Benjamin and Martha (Mendenhall) Sharpless, of Middletown. He learned the trade of a weaver, but after marriage settled for a short time on his father's land near Birmingham Meeting; in 1789 he removed to Westtown township, and in 1797 purchased the Sharpless homestead in Middletown, containing two hundred acres, for £2,200. In 1802 he built an addition to the house, which is now owned by his grandson of the same name. He and his wife were active members of Middletown Meeting.

40. Amos, born 3 mo., 15, 1764; died in West Goshen township, 8 mo., 9, 1828; married 3 mo., 12, 1789, Elizabeth Powel, daughter of Benjamin and Hannah Powel, of East Bradford. He was the grandfather of the late William M. Darlington, of Pittsburgh, and of Joseph G. Darlington, the prominent merchant of Philadelphia.

41. George, born 8 mo., 22, 1766; died in Pensbury (now Pocopson) township, 5 mo., 31, 1826; married 5 mo., 28, 1795, Lydia Barnard, daughter of Richard and Lettice Barnard, of Newlin township. He was the grandfather of the late Smedley Darlington, member of Congress.

42. Stephen, born 10 mo., 25, 1768; died in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, 11 mo., 13, 1857; married, 11 mo., 10, 1802, Rachel Cattell, and settled near Brownsville, Pennsylvania.

43. Hannah, born 1 mo., 27, 1771; died 1799; married 12 mo., 11, 1794, Isaac Glover Gilpin, of Birmingham township.

44. Elizabeth, born 2 mo., 7, 1773; died 2 mo., 24, 1857; married Isaac Taylor, of Pensbury township.

45. Emanuel, born 6 mo., 28, 1775; died 3 mo., 16, 1837; married 6 mo., 12, 1806, Martha House, daughter of Amos and Sarah House, of Pensbury. He settled on and inherited the southern part of his father's land in East Bradford.

46. Brinton, born 12 mo., 23, 1781; died 8 mo., 28, 1860; married 11 mo., 12, 1807, Sarah Garrett, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth Garrett, of Willistown. He inherited the homestead, in East Bradford, with about seventy-five acres of the land.

Children of (39) Jesse and Amy Darlington:

47. Martha, born 7 mo., 9, 1788; married 6 mo., 9, 1814, Eli D. Peirce.

48. Rhoda, born 5 mo., 9, 1790; married 11 mo., 4, 1819, Isaac Hewes.

49. Mark, born 1 mo., 8, 1794; died 10 mo., 4, 1794.

50. Edward, born 9 mo., 17, 1795 died at Media, 11 mo., 21, 1884; married 4 mo., 26, 1827, Ann P. Eyre, daughter of Preston and Arabella Eyre, of Chester, Pennsylvania. He was a lawyer and represented his district in Congress from 1832 till 1839.

51. Samuel S., born 9 mo., 17, 1795; died 12 mo., 22, 1859; married 9 mo., 3, 1829, Susanna Dennison.

52. Benjamin, born 8 mo., 23, 1797; died 8 mo., 29, 1797.

53. Joshua, born same date, died same date as the last.

54. Thomas, born same date, being one of triplets; died in Miamisburg, Ohio, 7 mo., 17, 1877; married 2 mo., 28, 1822, Hannah P. Dilworth, and removed to Ohio in 1837.

55. Jared, born in Middletown, 8 mo., 15, 1799; died there 12 mo., 7, 1862; married 4 mo., 7, 1831, at Chichester Meeting, Mary Dutton, born in Aston, 4 mo., 5, 1808; died in West Chester, 12 mo., 27, 1891, daughter of Thomas Dutton, the centenarian, and Sarah (Jones) his wife, of Aston. He became the owner of and resided at the old homestead in Middletown, and as a dairy farmer established a high reputation. A railroad station named Darlington and a post office called Darling are close by the old home. A few years after his death, his widow and unmarried daughters removed to East Washington street, West Chester. The family burial ground is at Cumberland cemetery, close by Middletown Meeting.

56. Amy, born 9 mo., 11, 1805; died 11 mo., 4, 1847; married 8 mo., 31, 1842, Jesse Palmer of Concord.

Children of (55) Jared and Mary Darlington:

57. Edward, born 1 mo., 22, 1832; died 10 mo., 7, 1876; married 3 mo., 12, 1856, Mary F. Palmer, daughter of Charles and Deborah Palmer, of Concord township. He settled on and became the owner of one of his father's farms adjoining the homestead, and had children: Frances, Deborah P., Charles P., Mary, Jared, Anna S., Beulah W., Edward and Lewis.

58. Sarah J., born 8 mo., 31, 1833; died in West Chester, unmarried.

59. Albert, born 5 mo., 12, 1835; married in 1838, Charlotte N. Kitts. He is a dairy farmer near the homestead. No children.

60. Amy, born 2 mo., 20, 1837; married 3 mo., 16, 1859, Henry B. Pratt. He is a dairy farmer in Concord township.

61. Frances, born 2 mo., 13, 1839; died 8 mo., 31, 1877, in West Chester, unmarried.

62. Jesse Darlington, son of Jared and Mary (Dutton) Darlington, was born July 8, 1841, in Delaware county, Pennsylvania, at what is now known as Darlington Station.

He obtained a thorough and practical education in the private and public schools of his native county, and in 1863 entered into partnership with his brother Jared in the management of the old homestead farm. This connection continued until 1890, when Jared withdrew his interest from the business. For some years after this separation Jesse Darlington continued the business alone but now has associated with himself his three sons. He is recognized as one of the leading representative dairymen in the state. When the enterprise was established, Jared was eighteen years of age and Jesse was twenty-one, and their property consisted of two hundred acres of land and twenty cows, but the trade increased so rapidly that from time to time they added to their property, and at the present time (1904) it consists of eleven hundred acres of land and a large number of fine grade cows, the product of which is shipped to New York city where it is disposed of to the best class of trade. Although Mr. Darlington is interested in other business pursuits, yet he devotes the greater part of his time and attention to his dairy farm, of which he is exceedingly proud. He is a member of the Society of Friends, and in politics is inclined to favor the principles advocated by the Independent party.

Mr. Darlington was married, 10 mo., 25, 1866, to Hannah W. Pratt, who was born 9 mo., 9, 1841, a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Worrell) Pratt, of Middletown, and her death occurred 5 mo., 19, 1894. Their children were:

1. Horace, born 9 mo., 14, 1867, married, 4 mo., 27, 1892, Bertha L. Cornogg, and they are the parents of two children—Hannah W., born June 1, 1894, and Dorothy, born March 18, 1898.

2. Mary Ella, born 10 mo., 21, 1870, who became the wife of J. Monroe Buckley, of Concord, Delaware county, and their children are: Jesse Darlington, born 8 mo., 18, 1894; Harold Monroe, born 9 mo., 4, 1896; Malcom Kee, born 3 mo., 23, 1898; Hilda Dutton, born 7 mo., 11, 1901; Frances Worrell, born 4 mo., 4, 1903.

3. Jared Worrell, born 12 mo., 24, 1875; married 6 mo., 14, 1899, H. May Sharpless, and their children are: Ella Catherine, born 6 mo., 19,

Amulley Saulington

1900, died 7 mo., 24, 1901; Jesse, born 12 mo., 27, 1901; David S., born 6 mo., 14, 1903.

4. Paul, born 7 mo., 27, 1879.

On February 10, 1897, Mr. Darlington was married to Eva R. Pratt, widow of T. Minshall Pratt, of Middletown, and daughter of Elisha and Amy Woodward, of East Bradford. No children have been born of this union.

63. Thomas, born 7 mo., 16, 1843; died 7 mo., 20, 1843.

64. Jared, born 8 mo., 6, 1844; married 12 mo., 19, 1871, Anne Needles, daughter of Edward and Mary (Wilson) Needles, of West Chester. Their children are Sarah Wilson, Frances, Anne J., Jessie and Henry Saulnier. Jared entered into partnership with his brother Jesse until 1890, when he engaged in banking and afterward became president of the Charter National Bank of Media, and director in other monetary institutions, beside filling many other positions of usefulness in the community. His last residence was at Glen Mills, where his death occurred, from apoplexy, 8 mo., 4, 1902.

65. Mary, born 8 mo., 15, 1846; living in West Chester, Pennsylvania, unmarried.

66. Ruth Anna, born 12 mo., 8, 1848; living with her sister Mary, unmarried. All the children of Jared and Mary Darlington have been members of the Society of Friends.

Children of (37) Abraham and Susanna Darlington:

67. Isaac, born in Westtown township. 12 mo., 13, 1781; died in West Chester, 4 mo., 27, 1839; married first to Mary Peters, daughter of William Peters, and niece of Judge Richard Peters, of Philadelphia, who died 8 mo., 31, 1823; second marriage, 9 mo., 3, 1827, in West Chester, to Rebecca Fairlamb, daughter of John and Susanna (Ashbridge) Fairlamb, who survived him. By the first marriage he had two daughters but there are no living descendants. He was elected to the state legislature in the years 1807 and 1808, served in the war of 1812-14, was elected to Congress in 1816, and served as president judge of the district composed of Chester and Delaware counties from May, 1821, until his death.

68. Hannah, b. 5 mo., 16, 1783; d. in Clark Co., Ohio; m. Jonathan Peirce.

69. Thomas, b. 11 mo., 14, 1784; d. 11 mo., 8, 1860; m. Mary Brinton.

70. Benedict, b. 9 mo., 22, 1786; d. 7 mo., 17, 1864; m. Rachel Otley.

71. Abraham, b. 7 mo., 17, 1789; d. 7 mo., 31, 1879; m. Susan Hoopes.

72. Clement, b. 7 mo., 4, 1791; d. 8 mo., 19, 1791.

73. Esther, b. 5 mo., 5, 1793; d. 1 mo., 7, 1877; m. James B. Roberts.

74. Susanna, b. 11 mo., 11, 1795; d. 9 mo., 15, 1803.

75. Eliza, b. 5 mo., 26, 1797; d. 3 mo., 17, 1878; m. Thomas Hoopes. They were the parents of William and Thomas Hoopes, of the West Chester Wheel Works.

76. Sidney, b. 2 mo., 19, 1799; d. 7 mo., 7, 1868, unmarried.

77. Chandler, b. 11 mo., 4, 1800; d. 3 mo., 29, 1879; m. Hannah Monaghan. No children.

78. William, b. 10 mo., 19, 1804; d. 12 mo., 6, 1879; m. Catharine Paxson.

Chandler Darlington (77) resided in Kennett township, about a mile east of Kennett Square. Though a plain farmer by occupation he was well informed and deeply interested in the social questions of the day; fearless in the advocacy of right and justice, and undeterred by the unpopularity of his views. He took an active part in the meetings at Longwood, where all questions affecting the welfare of humanity were freely discussed. The slave, fleeing from oppression, was assisted on his way to freedom, and those in need of counsel and advice were certain to find a friend in him. At family gatherings he was among the most interested, and generally contributed some verses appropriate to the occasion and replete with good sense. After his death his widow removed to West Chester. She conveyed to the borough a valuable lot of ground for the use of a public library, and upon which a building was soon after erected by private contributions. She died 1 mo., 11, 1883.

SMEDLEY DARLINGTON was born in Pocopson township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, December 24, 1827. He was of sturdy Quaker ancestry, both the Darlington family and the Smedley family, to which his mother belonged, and their connections, having been identified with the Society of Friends in Chester county for more than a century. He was educated in the common schools, and at the Friends' Central School in Philadelphia, and began teaching at twenty in the latter school. While teaching, he studied stenography at night, and reported sermons, lectures and speeches for the morning dailies of Philadelphia. In 1851 he established a school for boys in Ercildown, which he conducted for three years; he then changed the school for girls and presided over it successfully for six years. In 1861 he quit the educational field and moved to Philadelphia. The oil excitement came and he engaged largely in organizing oil companies and in boring oil wells. In 1865 he moved to West Chester and opened a broker's office, conducting an extensive business, and dealing largely in government bonds and western securities. He made a study of Kansas, its needs, possibilities and resources, negotiated the bonds of its needy municipalities and counties in large blocks, and later loaned largely on real estate securities.

From boyhood he took an active interest in politics; they were the recreation of a busy life. When a school boy, he organized his playfellows into Whigs and Democrats in their games on the school play grounds. He was a great admirer of Horace Greeley, and in 1872 espoused his cause and took an active part in his campaign. Ever after, he was a staunch Republican, threw himself with force and vigor into county politics, and was the first to organize the Republican party in Chester county, in complete touch with the state organization, and became a conspicuous leader of it. In 1886 he was elected a member of the Fifty-sixth Congress, after having been twice defeated, in a memorable campaign, his nomination having been secured by a majority of a single vote in the county convention. He was re-elected without opposition to the Fifty-first Congress, and made an active and good representative; his work was of the practical kind, proof of which is seen in the handsome public building in Chester, the chief city in his district. In the national convention which nominated McKinley for President, he was Chester county's delegate.

Smedley Darlington was a man of an interesting personality and of a marked individuality which left its impress on all he touched. His energy and ability were unquestioned. In business or politics he was clear to foresee, bold to plan and forceful to execute. He carried details easily in his head, as few men can, and could place each vote or tell a customer when a mortgage would expire at a casual meeting on the street, with unerring accuracy. His leading characteristics were honesty, sagacity, sobriety and energy.

His keen sense of humor, his sympathetic understanding of men and things, his familiarity with public men and events, his excellent memory and his original and happy manner of expression, made him always a welcome guest or speaker in public or private. He had a genial and buoyant disposition, and a generous and kindly heart,—too large to think or see evil in his neighbor,—which neither prosperity nor adversity could change nor embitter. His sympathetic interest in all men, and particularly in those in the humbler walks of life, attached them to him and gave him a unique position in his native county and made him a leader of men to a degree, not before known in that county.

His domestic life was a model of simplicity and purity, and devotedly constant. He died on the 24th day of June, 1899.

THE WILLS FAMILY. Michael Wills, with his wife and family, came from Rathdrum, in the county of Wicklow, Ireland, in the spring of 1728, and in the year 1729 his name appears among the taxables of Whiteland township, Chester county. After this he disappears from the county and had probably removed to Philadelphia county. At the time of making his will, November 28, 1748, he was living in Lower Merion township, Philadelphia (now Montgomery) county. To his sons Michael Wills and Stephen Wills, daughter Rebecca Elliott and son-in-law Owen Thomas, he gave one shilling each; to son Thomas Wills £40 and a black mare; to daughter Mary Franklin five shillings; to daughter Enomon Simpson his bed and £10; to four daughters, Joanna Wills, Sarah Wills, Mary Wills and Sophia Wills, £40 each; to granddaughter Joanna Caldwell five shillings. Cousin John Cuthbert, of Whiteland township and son of Michael Wills to be the executors.

Before coming to this country he was doubtless a member of the Episcopal church at Rathdrum. After his death a document was placed on record in one of the deed-books of Chester county, of which the following is a part:

"Whereas I the rev'd Thomas Bulkeley, Clk., vicar of Rathdrum in the County of Wicklow and Kingdom of Ireland, hath Received Information that some malicious person or Persons in Pensilvania in America have given out and publicly declared that I had assigned to him or them a Bond or Penal Bill or some other writing which was Executed to me by Michael Wills, late of Pensilvania aforesaid, and formerly of Rathdrum afores'd, shoemaker, dec'd, for securing the payment of thirty pounds or therabouts: Now I the said Thomas Bulkeley doth hereby acknowledge and Declare that the said Michael Wills paid and satisfied me all demands, Debts, dues & accompts of what nature or kind soever before his departure from Ireland, and do declare that I then or at any time since had not nor have not any demand on the said Michael Wills, his Heirs, Exec'rs, Adm'rs or Assigns."

Tradition and such evidence as is obtainable indicate that the Wills family, like the Hunters, Waynes and others who came from Wicklow, were English, and that they removed to Ireland during the Revolution of 1688, in or after the English army.

Owen Thomas and Catherine Wills were married at Christ church, Philadelphia, August 25, 1730. This was doubtless the daughter of Michael Wills. One Thomas Wills appears in the tax lists for Middletown township (now) Delaware county, 1729, and later, and it is a question whether he was the son of Michael or a younger brother. He married, March 22, 1730-1, Ann Penrose, widow, daughter of Peter Hunter, and died June 20, 1772, aged seventy-seven years. He was ancestor to the Hemphill family of Chester county.

Michael Wills, Jr., born about 1709, married Jane Mather, daughter of Thomas Mather, who is said to have come over in the same vessel with the Wills family, she being ten years younger than her husband. Her brother James married Joanna Wills, sister of Michael, and they settled in Harford county, Maryland.

Several letters from relatives in Ireland to Michael Wills have been preserved, and show that his residence must have been at different places, as they are directed to Tredyffrin, Merion, Radnor and Newtown. One of these, written by William Peters, an uncle, dated August 22, 1743, reads: "Your grandfather and grandmother send their blessing to your father, including all your brothers and sisters." These grandparents may have been the parents of William Peters, for in another letter, dated May 26, 1749, he speaks of his father as being nearly six-score, or one hundred and twenty years old at that date. The tax lists show that Michael Wills, Jr., was living in Tredyffrin in 1749-1754, and in Coventry, 1756-1764, and perhaps later. In 1764 he was assessed with one hundred and thirty acres of land, six horses, nine cattle, twenty sheep and a servant. He afterward lived in Plymouth, Montgomery county. A tombstone in the churchyard of St. David's or Radnor church, contains this inscription:

"Here Lies interr'd in full assurance of a joyful Resurrection the Body of Michael Wills who after he had liv'd through a long Course of years a patern of virtue Patience & Piety Exchanged this Earthly for a Heavenly habitation on the 8th Day of October 1794 In the 86th year of his Age To whose Memory this Monument was Erected by his disconsolate widow." (Some other lines follow.)

His widow survived him ten years, just the difference in their ages, and was buried at the same place. Their grandson, the late Allen Wood Wills, of Downingtown, to whom we are indebted for much of the family history, says:

"My grandfather was reputed a careful business man. His wife Jane managed things very energetically, and I remember to have heard my father say that if his father had been equally shifty they might have owned a half a township of land. My grandfather had three sons, Jeremiah, Michael and John; also three daughters, Rebecca, Mary and Elizabeth. The first of the sisters married Michael Mather, the second Jacob Whiteman, and the third John Mather. This may not be the order of their ages, and there may have been more of them, but I think these are all that left children."

Michael Wills, 3d, born in Chester county, about 1755, died January 15, 1829; married Ann, daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth Keyser Wood, of Roxborough, Philadelphia, both of German descent. She died April 29, 1832. They had fourteen children, nine of whom lived to maturity as follows:

1. Elizabeth, married Levi Evans and had five sons and one daughter.
2. Andrew, born June 18, 1798. See forward.
3. Jane, married John B. Hahn and had eight children.
4. William, of Plymouth, died 1877, married Elizabeth Marple and had children: Allen, m. Hannah Supplee; Andrew, m. Eleanora Wilhaur; Clarence, m. Harriet Hogan; William, m. Sarah Roberts; Annie m. William E. Cochran; Lewis.
5. Mary, twin with William, married first John Hunter, secondly Francis Parke, but had no children.
6. Ann, married John Gorgas and left one daughter, Susan Gorgas, living in West Chester.
7. Allen Wood, born Feb. 23, 1810, died Oct. 28, 1873. See forward.
8. Rebecca died in her minority.
9. Sarah, died unmarried.

The other five children were buried at Radnor churchyard.

Andrew Wills, M. D., born in Plymouth township, Montgomery county, died at Lionville, Chester county, July 7, 1871; married in Philadelphia, November 12, 1826, Sarah Hannum, born May 2, 1807, died in Norristown, April 1, 1883, daughter of James Hannum and Sarah Edge Reese, of Downingtown. He studied medicine and was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1825, and practiced medicine in Chester county for forty-six years. He and his wife were buried at St. John's church, Norristown. They had fourteen children, as follows:

1. Sarah Ann, born Feb. 28, 1828; died at Downingtown, Jan. 10, 1843.
2. Mary, born May 21, 1829; married Washington T. Koplun and lives at Norristown, Pa.
3. Ellen, born Sept. 6, 1830, is living in West Chester, Pa., unmarried.
4. Morgan Reese, born in West Whiteland township October 21, 1831, married Mary Hitner Dager and secondly Elizabeth Willits Marple. He is editor and proprietor of the Norristown Herald since 1864, issued daily after 1869. He has two daughters.

5. Edward Smith, born Jan. 21, 1833; married Fanny Humiston and secondly Marion Anna Isbell. He has been superintendent of the Atchison (Kansas) Water Company since 1884 and has had ten children.

6. Clara, born August 31, 1834; married Hunter Evans Van Leer. They live in Philadelphia and have had eight children.

7. Rebecca, born March 8, 1836; married in 1876, D. Smith Talbot, attorney-at-law, of West Chester, Pennsylvania. No issue.

8. Andrew, born April 25, 1837, was wounded during the Civil war in the battle at Fort Donelson, and died February 18, 1862, unmarried.

9. Horace, born Nov. 11, 1838; died Aug. 20, 1854.

10. Frances Jane, born Sept. 2, 1840; died Oct. 24, 1842.

11. Elizabeth, born Nov. 13, 1842; died June 14, 1898; married D. Webster Evans of Uwchlan township, and left one son.

12. Ann, born March 13, 1844; married T. Lewis Vickers, of Lionville, now of New York city. They have one daughter.

13. Susan, born Sept. 8, 1846; died same date.

14. Florence, born Dec. 25, 1848; married George R. Hoopes, of West Chester, wholesale grain dealer, sometime sheriff of Chester county. They have two daughters, both married.

Allen Wood Wills married Elizabeth H. Evans, and resided at Downingtown. After his death there was found among his papers a manuscript containing interesting facts relative to the family history, which were subsequently put into print by a nephew for private circulation. He had six children:

1. Rebecca, married Dr. Samuel Ringwalt, of Lancaster county, and had one son, John Luther Ringwalt, now of Philadelphia.

2. Anna, married Daniel Baugh and resides in Philadelphia.

3. George E., born September 16, 1842; died Dec. 31, 1884; married Thomazin T. Zook, now wife of Charles Downing, of Downingtown. He left one child, Elizabeth Hunter Wills.

4. J. Hunter, a merchant in Downingtown, has two sons.

5. Abner E., residing in Philadelphia; has one son, William Mintzer Wills.

6. Allen Wood, died at Downingtown, unmarried.

THOMAS. Richard ap Thomas, of Whiteford Garne, in the county of Flint, in Wales, Gent., was a purchaser of 5,000 acres of land from William Penn, by deeds of lease and release, dated July 24 and 25, 1681, for the sum of £100. Tradition says that while he inclined towards or joined with Friends, his wife adhered to the Established church, and for this reason was unwilling to accompany him to Pennsylvania. It appears that after they had gone on board the "Morning Star," Thomas Hayes, commander, at Mossion, in Wales, she returned ashore, while Richard and his son Richard continued the voyage and arrived at Philadelphia in the year 1683. He was probably taken sick soon after his arrival, as his will is dated 9 mo., 18, 1683, by which he devised his lands here to his son and appointed his friend Dr. Thomas Wynne as executor and guardian. To his wife and daughter he devised the personal estate left with the former in Wales. Although his death occurred soon after this date the will was not registered until January 15, 1695-6, by which time the son became of age. Dr. Wynne resided for a time in Philadelphia, and afterward at Lewes, in the county of Sussex (now Delaware), where Richard Thomas, the son, was living in 1693. In this year a controversy arose in regard to some estate in Wales, belonging to the latter, and the widow and daughter of Dr. Wynne deposed as to the son's present residence, and that he was the son of Richard Thomas, formerly of a place called Crossforth, in Flintshire. Colonel Richard Thomas, writing of his ancestors, says:

The family of Ap Thomas appears to have been many generations landholders in Whitford Garden, having a freehold of £300 a year, and of course being within the grade of gentlemen and the game act. Whether his surname was uniformly Thomas, or changed occasionally according to Welsh practice, cannot be ascertained, though by recurrence to books of heraldry it appears that a family of Thomases in that country was ancient. Richard ap Thomas being in years, and grown tired with the dissipation of his compeers, embraced the tenets of the Quakers and joined in Penn's first migration to Pennsylvania, bringing his only son, Richard, a boy about ten years of age and a number of dependents. These, after his death, made use of the stock of provisions and perishable articles of their late master, under pretext of supporting the orphan, until all was exhausted, and then turned him off to find his sustenance from his landed estate. Thus left forlorn he selected Dr. Lloyd, lieutenant governor, and some other legal guardians (the guardian and trustee under his father's will being deceased), and was by sales of some rights of land provided for and educated, studying physic with the Doctor, his guardian. Arriving at legal age he procured letters of administration in his own name and located his remaining lands about the year 1695. The lapse of near a dozen years of minority lost him the advantage of locating in the vicinity of the seat of commerce, and he had the necessity of going into the wilderness (as then thought) for good land.

About the year 1699 he visited his native land,

Wales, where he found his only sister reduced to indigence, his mother having intermarried with a man who dissipated all their joint property (willed them by Richard ap Thomas), and his mother then deceased. He brought over his sister, or she followed soon after, who was married to Llewellyn Parry, and became the mother of a family, some of whose descendants are still living in Chester county, viz., Nancy Hunter, the wife of Thomas Bull, Esq., and several other sisters, all of whom have issue. Returning again to Pennsylvania, he married Grace Atherton, and settled in the valley at a place called by the Indians (settled on it) Cata-moon-shink, meaning "hazlenut grove," now West Whiteland township, a name probably derived from Whiteford, the seat of the family in Wales.

We have seen that Richard was living in 1693 at Lewes, in Sussex county. In 1704 he was styled of Merion, in the county of Philadelphia, Carpenter, and in March, 1711, was of Blockley. Of his five thousand acres of land he sold one thousand seven hundred and eighty-six acres to various persons, unpatented. July 12, 1703, he obtained a patent for two tracts, one of one thousand and sixty-five acres, of which the southwest corner is in the center of West Chester, and another of six hundred acres in Newtown, which was afterwards given up because it interfered with other surveys. May 17, 1704, he received another patent for one thousand five hundred and forty-eight (by resurvey, 1869) acres in Whiteland, making with the city lots his full complement of five thousand acres.

He was married at his own house, in Whiteland township, 11 mo., 15, 1712-13, by Friends' ceremony, to Grace Atherton, late of Liverpool, daughter of Henry and Jennet Atherton, who had not then come over to Pennsylvania. It does not appear that he was then, or later, considered to be in membership with Friends. He died in Whiteland in 1744, being survived by Grace, his wife, and both were buried in what has been known as Malin's graveyard, in East Whiteland. They had six children:

1. Richard, b. 2 mo., 22, 1713; d. 9 mo., 22, 1754. See below.
2. Hannah, b. 3 mo., 16, 1715; died in infancy.
3. Hannah, b. 11 mo., 14, 1716-7; m. James Mendenhall.
4. Mary, b. 5 mo., 14, 1719; m. John Harrison.
5. Grace, b. 7 mo., 9, 1722; m. Thomas Stalker, son of Hugh.
6. Elizabeth, m. 4 mo., 28, 1750, Jonathan Howell and went to N. C.

Richard Thomas (1) was married 2 mo., 10, 1739, at Goshen Meeting, to Phebe Ashbridge, born 8 mo., 26, 1717, died 6 mo., 14, 1784, daughter of George and Mary (Malin) Ashbridge, of Goshen. He inherited the homestead in Whiteland and had issue:

7. Lydia, b. 12 mo., 4, 1740-1; m. John Trimble.
8. Grace, b. 11 mo., 3, 1742; d. 9 mo., 14, 1781; m. William Trimble.
9. Richard, b. 10 mo., 30, 1744; d. 1 mo., 19, 1732; m. Thomazine Downing.
10. George, b. 12 mo., 21, 1746-7; d. 8 mo., 17, 1793; see below.
11. Hannah, b. 5 mo., 5, 1749; d. 5 mo., 2, 1829; m. Joseph Trimble.

COL. RICHARD THOMAS.

Richard Thomas (9), although a Friend by birthright, was among the first to take up the cause of the colonies against the mother country. He became a colonel in the war of the Revolution, was elected to the assembly in the years 1786 to 1789, inclusive, and to the state senate in 1790. In the years 1794, 1796 and 1798 he was elected a member of the fourth, fifth and sixth congresses, being the first representative from his native county under the Constitution of the United States.

George Thomas (10) was married 5 mo., 26, 1774, at Merion Meeting, to Sarah Roberts, born 1 mo., 11, 1750; died 2 mo., 20, 1840; daughter of John and Jane (Downing) Roberts, of Merion. He inherited a moiety of his father's land in West Whiteland, or about six hundred acres, and was a highly esteemed and public-spirited citizen. He is supposed to have contracted the yellow fever, having been in the city of Philadelphia a few days before his death, attending to some business for the Philadelphia and Lancaster turnpike, then (1793) being built. His residence was used for a meeting house for about six months, in 1778, while that at Uwchlan was occupied as a hospital for Revolutionary soldiers. He had nine children:

12. Jane, b. 2 mo., 18, 1775; m. Dr. Jonas Preston 8 mo., 19, 1812.

13. Phebe, b. 10 mo., 11, 1776.

14. Hannah, b. 2 mo., 7, 1778; d. 2 mo., 28, 1778.

15. Lydia, b. 9 mo., 26, 1779; d. 1 mo., 22, 1870, unmarried.

16. John Roberts, b. 8 mo., 29, 1781; d. 4 mo., 7, 1856; see below.

17. Elizabeth, b. 9 mo., 24, 1783; died unmarried.

18. George, b. 8 mo., 1, 1785; d. 12 mo., 31, 1785.

19. Sarah, b. 12 mo., 31, 1786; d. 9 mo., 27, 1826; m. Richard Thomas.

20. Anna, b. 1 mo., 20, 1789.

John R. Thomas (16) was married 11 mo., 19, 1806, at Downingtown Meeting, to Elizabeth Downing, born 10 mo., 20, 1783; died 10 mo., 18, 1810, daughter of Richard and Elizabeth (Reece) Downing, of Downingtown. They had one son. (21) George, b. 9 mo., 9, 1808; d. 9 mo., 26, 1887.

John R. Thomas married a second wife, Martha Newbold, of Burlington county, New Jersey, who left no issue. By inheritance and purchase he became possessed of the homestead and three hundred and seventeen acres of the land of his father. He was elected a director of the Bank of Chester county in 1839, in which position he was succeeded by his son about 1852.

The marble from which the bank building was erected was from his quarries. Being in liberal circumstances he was enabled to seek his happiness in good works and acts of public beneficence, and while seeking neither applause nor positions of notoriety he neglected no political duty which the patriotic citizen owes his country. He was a friend of education, public improvements and of the general welfare of the great family of man.

George Thomas (21), born in West White-land, died there, and was buried, as was his father, at Downingtown Meeting; married in Philadelphia, 10 mo., 21, 1841, to Anna M. Townsend, born 10 mo., 22, 1815, daughter of John W. Townsend and Sibbilla K. (Price), his wife, of West Chester. At the age of nearly eighty-eight years she still survives. He left three children, two having died. Those living are:

Dr. George Thomas was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania about 1830, after which he studied a few years in Paris, yet he never practiced medicine, devoting his time and attention to farming, and the cultivation of rare trees and flowers. He inherited the homestead of his father and grandfather, on the Lancaster pike, and succeeded his father as director of the Bank of Chester County, from which position he resigned in 1870, and was in turn succeeded by his eldest son. While not a politician, he took an active interest in public affairs and in relieving the poor and distressed in the surrounding neighborhood, but the quiet, unostentatious manner in which he did his deeds of charity showed that he was prompted by nobler aspirations than the praises of his fellow men. His home was surrounded by magnificent old trees, and rare exotics filled his greenhouses or adorned his lawns, while his library was stocked with a rare collection of valuable scientific and classical works. He left three children:

22. Jonas Preston, born 8 mo., 7, 1842; married 12 mo., 13, 1866, at Fallowfield Meeting, to Hannah J. Gibbons, born at Coatesville, 1 mo., 3, 1846, daughter of Abram and Martha P. (Lukens) Gibbons, of that place. They reside close by the old homestead and own a part of the land of his father. He has been a director of the poor of Chester county since 1886, a director of the Bank of Chester County since 1870, and for two years its president. He has children, Martha Gibbons, b. 2 mo., 13, 1869; George (3d), b. 4 mo., 13, 1871, an iron manufacturer; Anna Mary, b. 6 mo., 30, 1875.

23. George, born 8 mo., 5, 1845; married 10 mo., 17, 1883, at Downingtown, Elizabeth E. Baugh, born at Thorndale, 3 mo., 8, 1854, daughter of David R. and Georgiana (Eicholtz) Baugh. They occupy the homestead and part of the lands of his father. Children: Grace Atherton, b. 10 mo., 4, 1884; Georgiana R., b. 5 mo., 4, 1888, died 11 mo., 18, 1892; Elizabeth E., b. 2 mo., 26, 1891; Sarah R., b. 2 mo., 11, 1894.

24. Charles T., born 10 mo., 27, 1847; married 5 mo., 16, 1878, at Fallowfield Meeting, to Isabel L. Gibbons, born at Coatesville, 10 mo., 29, 1854; daughter of Abram and Martha P. (Lukens) Gibbons, of that place. They have a beautiful residence on the slope of the North Valley hill, it being on the northern part of the original homestead, where he carries on farming and dairying. They have had children: Elizabeth D., b. 2 mo., 23, 1879, d. 10 mo., 31, 1879; John R., b. 6 mo., 10, 1882; Marian G., b. 1 mo., 17, 1885; Laura G., b. 9 mo., 24, 1889; Jane G., b. 6 mo., 12, 1894.

WHITFORD LODGE, WEST WHITE-LAND. The old mansion of Colonel Richard Thomas, which stood by the present residence of his grandson, Richard Ashbridge, was accidentally burned in 1895. About 1782 he erected a new house on the Lancaster road, of dark red brick. But little change has been made to the outside, while the interior has undergone considerable alteration, and under the name of Whitford Lodge it is used as a summer vacation for women and girls from Philadelphia. It contains about twenty-two desirable rooms.

EVANS ROGERS. Joseph Rogers was an early settler in Vincent, Chester county, Pennsylvania, but as to the date there is some conflict of opinion. There is a pretty general agreement that it was when his son Joseph was two years old. One theory represents that the father came over from England about 1686 unmarried, but after a residence in Philadelphia for some years returned to England, married, and came again to settle on French Creek in 1710. This places the son's birth in 1708. Another idea is that the father first came as a servant or employe of Matthias Vincent for whom the township was eventually named. Another omits the early immigration, but fixes the settlement in 1712. One claims that he was the first settler on and was agent for the land of Sir Matthias Vincent, and that he claimed to be descended from John Rogers, the Martyr, of Smithfield, February 14, 1555.

While it is certain that a large survey was made soon after Penn's arrival, for Matthias Vincent, Adrian Vrouzen, Benjamin Furloy and Dr. Daniel Coxe, it does not appear that the title to any except Coxe was made good. On April 20, 1686, William Penn conveyed 10,000 acres of land to Dr. Daniel Coxe and a like amount to Major Robert Thompson, of Newington Green, in Middlesex. All titles in the Vincents must trace back to these men. A document dated November 22, 1686, states that several families were then seated on a part of the land, but the early settlers were only lessees and did not receive deeds for the land they occupied.

Jonathan Thomas, born 1766, a great-grandson of the settler, stated in 1833 that the latter located there in 1712 and lived in a cave for several years on the spot where the barn of Charles and Joseph Rogers stood one hundred and eighteen years later. A similar story was obtained in 1845 by Frederick Sheeder, who collected historical facts within the township by interviewing the older residents. He states that the Rogers were the first white family in the locality; that a number of wigwams stood close by, and that James, a son of the settler, was a stout young man and used to wrestle with the Indian boys.

The will of Joseph Rogers, of Vincent, is dated February 9, 1750, and was proved February 19, 1754. By this he gave to his son Joseph and daughter Mary one shilling each; to his daughter Hannah fifteen pounds, and to Mary his wife, the residue of the estate. This must have been a second wife.

If the records of Uwchlan Monthly Meeting have been correctly copied, they show that Joseph Rogers, son of Joseph and Rebecca Rogers, of Vincent, was born 6 mo., 25, 1719; married 11 mo., 1741; at New Providence Meeting, Hannah Watson, born 6 mo., 23, 1717; died 12 mo., 6, 1778; daughter of William and Hannah Watson, of New Providence, Philadelphia (now Montgomery) county. He was a farmer at the homestead, where he was assessed in 1764 with two hundred and fifty acres of land. He died

6 mo., 13, 1778, nearly six months before his wife. Their children were eight in number: Rebekah, b. 12 mo., 23, 1742; d. 11 mo., 21, 1807; m. Reuben Thomas; James, b. 2 mo., 27, 1744; d. 8 mo., 18, 1793; m. Priscilla Griffith; John, b. 8 mo., 4, 1746; is said to have married and had children; Mary, b. 12 mo., 26, 1747; probably died unmarried; William, b. 9 mo., 1, 1749; died young; William, b. 6 mo., 3, 1752; d. 8 mo., 5, 1806; see forward; Jonathan, b. 2 mo., 15, 1755; m. Ann Jones, 5 mo., 11, 1780; Hannah, b. 1 mo., 12, 1757, m. Enoch Malin; d. 1833.

William Rogers, son of Joseph and Hannah, was married January 26, 1779, to Mary Evans, born June 2, 1762; died February 12, 1809; daughter of Colonel William Evans (d. February 23, 1783), and his wife, Sarah Smith (d. March 6, 1773). She had a sister Sarah Evans, born October 17, 1770, who married Colonel George North, of Virginia, and died in October, 1793; also a brother of John Evans, born August 14, 1767; died in July, 1803.

By deed of April 23, 1787, William Rogers, of Vincent, yeoman, purchased from Josiah Haines and wife a farm of one hundred and ninety-three acres in Goshen township, near the present West Chester water works, and late the property of Benjamin Hoopes and his heirs. After William's death his sons Charles and John built for their mother the present mansion house in 1807. The children of William and Mary Rogers were these: Sarah, b. Aug. 23, 1779; d. Sept. 2, 1797; Charles, b. Jan. 16, 1781; drowned in the Delaware river, 1825; John, b. June 4, 1784; d. May 17, 1838; see forward; George, b. Jan. 14, 1786; d. Aug. 21, 1797; William, b. July 27, 1788; d. Sept. 2, 1797; Isaac, b. April 9, 1790; d. November 12, 1866; m. Martha McClellan, Hannah Sharpless and Jane Nisbett; Evans, b. June 14, 1792; d. Oct. 6, 1870; m. Caroline Fairman; Mary, b. Oct. 15, 1793; d. Sept. 16, 1797; Hannah, b. July 26, 1795; d. Aug. 10, 1795; Hannah, b. Dec. 3, 1796; d. Dec. 31, 1856; m. Archibald F. Dick; George, b. Sept. 1, 1798; d. Charles Rogers and his brother John went to Philadelphia when young and engaged in the hardware business, in which they were very successful. John was elected to the presidency of the Mechanics' Bank, and under his able management it passed from a weak condition and became financially a strong institution. He married Rebecca Hilliard, daughter of John and Frances (Haines) Hilliard, of Rancocas, New Jersey, she being of a Quaker family. In 1814 he and his cousin Joshua Malin purchased a rolling and slitting mill at Valley Forge with the view of manufacturing hardware, which was then principally imported. Rogers soon after became sole owner, but continued to reside in Philadelphia for a few years and then located his residence near the works on the Montgomery county side of Valley creek, at what is now a hotel. About the year 1836 he purchased a farm and removed to Sadsbury township, at what is now the property of Joseph Paxson. He had five children:

Mary Frances, b. March 10, 1814; m. John Parks, April 24, 1855; Charles, b. July 16, 1816; m. Eliza Mellon, Dec. 24, 1844; Sarah, b. Aug. 3, 1821; d. Dec. 27, 1891; m. Geo. Montgomery Boyd; Evans, b. Jan. 26, 1826; see below; Rebecca A., b. Oct. 18, 1828; d. Aug. 24, 1898; m. George W. Parks.

Evans Rogers and his sister Rebecca were born at Valley Forge, and the older ones at Philadelphia. At the age of eighteen years he went to Harford county, Maryland, to learn the manufacture of pig-iron at the works of his uncle Isaac Rogers, and about three years later removed to Baltimore and engaged in the iron business as an importer, in which he was successful. He was first married May 18, 1853, to Gertrude Scribner, daughter of Samuel and Julia Scribner, of Baltimore, and cousin to the founder of Scribner's Magazine. She died August 16, 1856, leaving one child, Julia, born July 24, 1854. He was again married, December 5, 1860, to Sarah Marshall, daughter of John Marshall, one time president of the old Bank of Chester County, and of Malinda Worthington, his wife. She died childless February 23, 1882.

On account of failing health, Evans Rogers relinquished the iron business in 1865 and retired to West Chester, Pennsylvania, which has since been his home. For fifteen years he was president of the Chester County Agricultural Society, and he has been a trustee of the West Chester State Normal School since its establishment in 1872, with the exception of an interum of four years, during which he withdrew by resignation on account of a factional difference in the board. In addition to this, he has been the confidential friend and agent for a large number of persons who have entrusted him with the management of their finances. It may be added that he has long been a sufferer from rheumatic afflictions which render him unable to walk, yet fail to crush his cheerful disposition or check the generous impulses of his heart.

DOWNING. Thomas Downing was born December 14, 1691, at Bradninch, in Devonshire, England, and died at Downingtown, Chester county, Pennsylvania, 1 mo., 15, 1772, aged eighty-one years. The name of his first wife is said to have been Ellen, and of the second, Thomazine, who was perhaps the mother of all his children, two of whom were born in England. He was a taxable in Concord township from 1718 to 1732. At Concord Monthly Meeting, 6 mo., 3, 1730, "Thomas Dowling & his wife made application to its meeting to com under the care of friends; they having produced papers from under severall friends hands of their sober and orderly conversations where they have Lived, this meeting receiveth them."

"The 3d of ye 10th Mo., 1723: Reed of James Underwood for Richard Buffington Junr: Sixteen bushels & halfe of Wheat for ye use of Nathant Newlin. Reed by Mee Thomas Downing. Weight 60 pounds per bushel." Nathaniel Newlin was the owner of a mill in Concord which was probably operated by Thomas Downing.

In 1733 Thomas Downing removed to Sadsbury township, but two years later he was settled in East Caln township at the place since known as Downingtown, and which was named for him, where he purchased from John Taylor five hundred and sixty-one acres of land by deeds of 3d and 4th of July, 1739. This was part of nine hundred and seventy-five acres, of which the remainder was purchased, 11th and 12th, November, 1747, by Jonathan Parke, Amos Boake and Thomas Downing. Here they were members of Uwchlan Meeting and of Goshen Monthly Meeting, to which Thomas produced a certificate from New Garden, dated 11 mo., 31, 1736, which represented that they were "circumspect in Life and Conversation, Diligent in attending our meetings and in good unity with us, so we recommend them with their children," etc. This was signed by twenty-one men and twelve women.

Thomazine Downing was living in 1750, but Thomas was again married, 12 mo., 1756, at Uwchlan Meeting, to Jane Albin, widow of James Albin and daughter of John and Mary Edge. She was a minister among Friends, and died 1 mo., 23, 1779. Children of Thomas and Thomazine Downing:

1. Thomazine, born 10 mo., 6, 1715, died young.

2. Thomas, born 3 mo., 27, 1717; died 11 mo., 19, 1736-7.

3. Richard, born 2 mo., 27, 1719; died 7 mo., 8, 1803; married 3 mo., 21, 1741, at Uwchlan Meeting, Mary Edge, born in Upper Providence, 7 mo., 2, 1721; died in East Caln, 12 mo., 13, 1795; daughter of John and Mary (Smedley) Edge. In 1764 Richard Downing was assessed in East Caln with one hundred and ninety acres of land and buildings, worth £35 per annum; one hundred and sixty acres uncultivated; a grist mill and saw mill, worth £70 per annum, seventy-six acres in West Bradford and one hundred acres in Uwchlan, four horses, nine cattle and nine sheep. His tax was £6:3:3, being the largest in the township, and his brother John was next below him. Richard was appointed overseer of Uwchlan Meeting, 7 mo., 6, 1763, in place of Evan Jones.

4. John, born 10 mo., 18, 1720; died 1796; married, March 5, 1747, before Thomas Cummings, Esq., Elizabeth Hunt, born August 13, 1730, daughter of Roger and Esther (Aston) Hunt, of East Caln. John Downing continued to reside at Downingtown, where in 1764 he was assessed with two hundred and forty acres of land and buildings, tavern, etc., worth £100 per annum, sixty acres of uncultivated land, five horses, six cattle, thirteen sheep and one servant. He was a tavern-keeper from 1761 to 1771, at the eastern tavern on the Lancaster Road, then or subsequently called the "King in Arms," and later the Washington Inn.

5. William, born 3 mo., 24, 1722; married 10 mo., 10, 1741, at Uwchlan Meeting, Ellen John, born 2 mo., 26, 1718, daughter of Samuel and Margaret John, of Uwchlan. They received a certificate from Goshen, 4 mo., 20, 1748, to Sadsbury Monthly Meeting, and settled in Bart township, Lancaster county. He married again, 12 mo., 19, 1765, Margaret Miller, widow of Samuel Miller, of New Garden. By the first he had John, Samuel, Sarah, Mary, Jane, Hannah, Ruth, Thomas and William. Some of this family removed to Center county, Pennsylvania.

6. Jane, born 10 mo., 6, 1723; died 10 mo., 29, 1795; married John Roberts, of Merion.

7. Sarah, born 8 mo., 13, 1725; died 7 mo., 16, 1745; married Joshua Baldwin, of East Caln.

8. Thomazine, born 8 mo., 15, 1727; married Samuel Bond and they settled in West Whiteland.

9. Samuel, born 6 mo., 11, 1729; died young.

10. Joseph, born 10 mo., 12, 1731; died young.

11. Joseph, born 4 mo., 30, 1734; died 10 mo., 7, 1804; married 10 mo., 9, 1755, at Bradford Meeting, Mary Trimble, born 8 mo., 8, 1736; died 7 mo., 4, 1807; daughter of James and Mary Palmer Trimble, of West Bradford township. Joseph was born in Sadsbury, Lancaster county, and upon his marriage settled in the Valley, east of Downingtown. In 1764 he was assessed with three hundred and ninety acres of land with buildings, one hundred and seventy-two acres of uncultivated land, six horses, eight cattle, twenty-five sheep and one servant.

Children of (3) Richard and Mary (Edge) Downing:

12. Hannah, born 1 mo., 19, 1741-2; died 4 mo., 5, 1752.

13. Thomas, born 10 mo., 13, 1743; died 4 mo., 12, 1752.

14. Jane, born 11 mo., 1, 1747; died 4 mo., 20, 1752.

15. John, born 12 mo., 17, 1747-8; died 5 mo., 20, 1748.

16. Richard, born 5 mo., 14, 1750; died 1 mo., 15, 1820; married 5 mo., 29, 1771, at Newtown Meeting, Elizabeth Reece, born 3 mo., 2, 1753; died at Pughtown, 10 mo., 5, 1840; daughter of David Reece and Mary Garrett, of Newtown. They settled for a few years in Falls township, Bucks county, but returned to Downingtown in 1778. In 1787, Richard was assessed in East Caln with one hundred acres of valley land, seventy acres of hill land, seven horses, nine cattle and a merchant mill. At the same time his father was assessed with one hundred and thirty acres of hill land, a grist mill, two sawmills, fulling mill and a malt house. Richard and Elizabeth had seven children, Thomas, David, Mary, Richard, William, Elizabeth and Phebe.

17. Mary, born 7 mo., 31, 1752, died 1 mo., 29, 1779; married Daniel Trimble.

18. Thomazine, born 8 mo., 26, 1754; died 5 mo., 4, 1817; married Richard Thomas, colonel in the Revolution and member of Congress.

19. Jacob, born in Downingtown, 10 mo., 25, 1756; died 10 mo., 2, 1823; married 5 mo., 15, 1787, Sarah Sandwith Drinker, born 10 mo., 23, 1761; died 9 mo., 25, 1807; daughter of Henry Drinker and Elizabeth Sandwith, of Philadelphia. Her mother was the author of the "Diary of Elizabeth Drinker," written during the Revolution, and published in recent times. Jacob had issue, Henry, Elizabeth, Mary, Henry 2d, Sarah and Sandwith, all of whom married except the first. Jacob Downing lived the greater part of his life in Philadelphia. He was engaged in the iron business, at Atsion, New Jersey, where he owned a forge and rolling mills.

20. William, born 1 mo., 29, 1759; died 12 mo., 24, 1759.

21. George, born 11 mo., 8, 1760; drowned in mill race, 8 mo., 10, 1765.

22. Samuel R., born 2 mo., 4, 1763; died 1819; married 10 mo., 28, 1790, at Uwchlan Meeting, Jane Ashbridge, born 10 mo., 11, 1764, who survived him; daughter of George and Rebecca Ashbridge, of Goshen. He left one son, George A., who died unmarried.

23. Joseph R., born 6 mo., 19, 1765; died at Downingtown, 1 mo., 17, 1855; married 5 mo., 4, 1791, at Chester Meeting, Ann Worrall, born 11 mo., 17, 1771; died 11 mo., 7, 1836; daughter William Worrall and Phebe Grubb, of Ridley township. He inherited considerable land, with mills, at Downingtown, and is styled a fuller in the old records. His children were William W., Samuel J. and Charles, of whom the last was the father of Joseph R. Downing, president of the Bank of Downingtown.

Children of (4) John and Elizabeth (Hunt) Downing:

24. Esther, born 12 mo., 22, 1748; died young.

25. Mary, born 11 mo., 17, 1750; married Israel Whelen.

26. Thomas, born 1 mo., 4, 1753; married Sarah Jacobs.

27. Esther, born 6 mo., 30, 1755; died young or unmarried.

28. Hunt, born 1 mo., 12, 1757; died 2 mo., 15, 1834; married Deborah Miller, born 2 mo., 28, 1760; died 12 mo., 27, 1833; daughter of Joseph and Mary (Williams) Miller. He began tavern-keeping at the Washington Tavern, in Downingtown, 1786, and continued in that occupation for many years; he was the first postmaster at Downingtown, and at the time of the Whiskey Insurrection was quartermaster to some of the troops encamped near the tavern. He had children, Joseph M., Isaac and Israel W.

29. John, died 10 mo., 1822, unmarried.

30. Samuel, married Elizabeth Templin.

31. Elizabeth, married Richard Templin.

Children of (11) Joseph and Mary (Trimble) Downing:

32. Thomas, born 10 mo., 14, 1758; died 10 mo., 31, 1829; married in 1784, Sarah Smith, born 11 mo., 29, 1765; died 11 mo., 19, 1835; daughter of George Smith and Elizabeth White. They continued to live near Downingtown and had children, George, Joseph, Elizabeth D., Mary Ann, Thomazine, William S., Thomas and Sarah.

33. Jane, born 7 mo., 27, 1761; died 6 mo., 20, 1813; married John Gordon, of Uwchlan.

34. Mary, born 10 mo., 14, 1763; died 6 mo., 20, 1813; married Dennis Whelen.

35. Thomazine, born 3 mo., 31, 1765; married 1794, Samuel Kennedy.

36. Joseph, born 4 mo., 9, 1769; died 12 mo., 28, 1841; married 4 mo., 25, 1799, Elizabeth Webster, born 4 mo., 15, 1777; died 4 mo., 1, 1840; daughter of Richard Webster and Phebe Smith, of Harford county, Maryland. He continued on the homestead in East Caln, and had children, Wesley R., Mary S., Phebe, Richard I., Sarah W. and Thomazine J. Of these, Richard I. Downing succeeded his father at the homestead, and died in 1890.

37. James, born 4 mo., 11, 1771; died 7 mo., 31, 1831, unmarried.

38. Sarah, born 8 mo., 1, 1773; died 1857; married Samuel Webster, a Methodist minister, of Harford county, Maryland.

39. Richard, born 6 mo., 26, 1775; died 7 mo., 2, 1807, unmarried.

40. Ann, born 3 mo., 1, 1778; died 8 mo., 1811; married Dr. William A. Todd.

SAMUEL RHOADS DOWNING (6) was born in East Fallowfield township, Chester county, 9 mo., 3, 1833, only child of Sandwith (5) and Lydia (Smedley) Downing.

Sandwith Downing was born in Philadelphia, 10 mo., 24, 1799, and died 4 mo., 4, 1847, near Starucca, Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania, where he was buried. He married, 12 mo., 22, 1829, Lydia, born in Uwchlan, 11 mo., 22, 1797, and died 6 mo., 29, 1835, daughter of Peter and Phebe (Sharpless) Smedley. At the time of his marriage he was superintendent of McMunn's mill, on Valley Creek, in East Bradford, but soon afterward occupied the house adjoining the Richard Thomas mill, West Whiteland, whence they removed to a farm in East Fallowfield. His wife's health failed and she returned to the home of her childhood, where she died and was buried at Uwchlan Meeting. Her husband removed to the Drinker lands, in Susquehanna county, in which he had an interest, and there died.

SCHOOL HOUSE WHERE FIRST FRIENDS' MEETING AT DOWNINGTOWN WAS HELD.

His mother dying shortly after his birth, Samuel Rhoads Downing was placed with his nurse, Lydia Swiegers, at what is now known as Tal-cose, West Bradford township. After her death he was cared for by his aunt, Eliza (Downing) Sharpless, at the Jacob Downing homestead, in Downingtown, and his aunt, Jane (Smedley) Evans, at Uwchlan. He was educated in Anthony Bollman's private school in West Chester, and after leaving school was for four years in the employ of his guardian, Thomas Williamson, a real estate conveyancer in Philadelphia. He subsequently became the editor and proprietor of the Chester County Times. An uncompromising opponent of human slavery, he made his journal an ardent advocate of the free-soil principles enunciated by the newly-formed Republican party, and he aided to his utmost the election of Abraham Lincoln to the presidency, and, when the Rebellion broke out, gave his zealous support to the administration in its efforts to preserve the Union.

In 1863 Mr. Downing sold his newspaper and took up his residence upon the farm where he has since lived, adjoining that of his father-in-law, Thomas Goodwin, in East Goshen township. He now has the management of two highly cultivated farms of two hundred and fifty acres, and a portion of the property descended to his wife, having been originally purchased by her great-grandfather, Thomas Goodwin, in 1749.

Mr. Downing has been during all his life active and intelligent in promoting all efforts for the material advancement of the neighborhood and county. He has served for more than fifteen years as a member-at-large of the State Board of Agriculture, having been appointed successively by Governors Beaver, Pattison, Hastings (twice), and Stone; he was for twelve years a trustee of the Pennsylvania State College, and has been for many years a trustee and a member of the advisory committee of the United States Experimental Station connected with the college, and was for two terms lecturer for the Pennsylvania State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry. In all these positions he rendered highly efficient service in promoting agricultural interests by the introduction and encouragement of improved methods of farming and of breeding and caring for domestic animals. He was appointed by Governor Beaver as a member of the State Board of Road Commissioners, which body, formed in 1890, was charged with the formulation of plans for a system of macadamized roads in the state. With reference to this appointment a prominent writer remarked: "Mr. Downing has been a pioneer in the advocacy of permanent roads, both through the public press and from the platform, and not only in his native county, but throughout the state. As a member of the board he assumed his full share of the duties thereof, with the zeal of one whose heart was in the cause, esteeming that good roads would in their measure bring comfort, health, and profit in dollars and cents to the people, young or old, weak or strong, rich or poor. As a result in part of his earnest advocacy, his resident township of East Goshen has built and is now constructing smooth, solid highways and permanent waterways." Mr. Downing has always been deeply interested in educational affairs, and for fifteen years served with great usefulness as a member of the board of school directors. He was for a number of years a director of the Twelfth street market in Philadelphia, and he has long been a director of the Farmers' National Bank of West Chester. With his family he is a member of the Society of Friends.

Mr. Downing was married, April 25, 1861, to Miss Mary Miller Goodwin, a daughter of Thomas and Phebe (Miller) Goodwin. Of this marriage were born three sons, all of whom came to maturity and now occupy useful and honorable stations in life. They are:

1. Henry Miller Downing, born in West Chester, March 11, 1862. He was educated at Swarthmore College, studied medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. T. D. Dunn, of West Chester, and was graduated in 1886 from the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania. He subsequently took special courses in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, at the Philadelphia Polyclinic Hospital, from which he was graduated in 1887. He is now a successful practitioner in East Goshen township.

2. Charles T. Goodwin Downing, born in East Goshen township, May 2, 1865, received his education in the Pennsylvania State College in Centre county. He is engaged in farming on the family homestead.

3. George Miller Downing, born in East Goshen township, April 1, 1868, was graduated when twenty years of age from the Pennsylvania State College, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. He spent one year with the Van De-poele Electric Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, and another year in post-graduate studies in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. From 1890 to 1892 he was instructor in physics and electrical engineering in the Pennsylvania State College. In 1892 he resumed studies in the Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn, and in the following year received a diploma as an Electrical Engineer. In 1893 he was appointed professor of physics and electrical engineering in the University of New Brunswick, at Fredericton. In 1899 he was appointed principal of the Abington Friends' School. He is a member of the Association for the Advancement of Science, and he has written a number of technical articles of much merit for standard magazines and journals. He was married to Miss Ida May Cornog Righter, who was born in Radnor township, May 3, 1871, a daughter of George W. and Elizabeth Righter, of "Idabrae," Radnor. She was educated at the Friends' Central School in Philadelphia, and is a communicant of the Episcopal church. Born of this marriage was a son, Harold Sandwith, March 7, 1898.

Mrs. Downing, wife of Samuel Rhodes Downing, is a descendant of Thomas Goodwin, a native of Wales, who emigrated to America during the early settlement of Pennsylvania, and locating at Edgemont, in what is now Delaware county, became the founder of the family of his name in that region. He had been a minister of the Church of England, but became a Friend. His son Thomas married Ann Jones, also of Welsh descent, a daughter of Richard Jones, of Goshen township. Their son Thomas married Phoebe Miller, and to them was born a daughter, Mary Miller Goodwin, who became the wife of Samuel Rhoads Downing. She was born in East Goshen township, January 8, 1839.

JOSIAH HOOPES, one of the most prominent business men of West Chester, Pennsylvania, is a descendant of Joshua and Isabel Hoopes, who emigrated with their children from Cleveland, Yorkshire, England, in 1683, and settled in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, whence about 1696 their son, Daniel, came to Westtown township and settled on property now owned by Elwood Hoopes. He married Jane, daughter of Thomas and Jane Worrihow, of Edgmont, by whom he had a numerous family. One of his sons, Nathan, married Margaret Williamson, and they were the parents of Thomas, and the grandparents of Abner.

Peirce Hoopes, eldest child of Abner and Hannah (Peirce) Hoopes, was educated at Westtown Boarding School, and after engaging for a time in teaching entered the mercantile establishment of John W. Townsend, where he served for a few years in a clerical capacity. He then formed a partnership with William A. Sharpless, and engaged in business under the firm name of Hoopes & Sharpless. In 1834 this partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Hoopes removed to Philadelphia, and entered into partnership with his brothers-in-law, James and Joseph B. Andrews, in the lumber business. Their transactions were very extensive, the business being the largest of its kind at that period in Pennsylvania. In 1850 they retired, and Mr. Hoopes returned to the county and purchased a farm of his father, Abner Hoopes, in West Goshen township, Chester county, adjoining the borough limits of West Chester, where he passed the remainder of his days. Mr. Hoopes was a man much respected by his neighbors, a striking proof of the confidence which they reposed in him being furnished by the fact that he was frequently called upon to perform the duty of settling estates. He was a consistent member of the Society of Friends.

Mr. Hoopes married, in December, 1831, Sarah, daughter of James and Martha (Bunting) Andrews, of Darby, Delaware county. Mrs. Hoopes, who was born in 1798, was educated at the Friends' Boarding School at Westtown, and before her marriage was a prominent teacher. She was for many years a leading minister of the Josiah Hoopes.

Society of Friends, sat at the head of the Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, visited Meetings in all parts of the United States, and in 1874 made a trip to the British Isles. Mr. and Mrs. Hoopes were the parents of three children: Josiah, mentioned at length hereinafter; Abner; and James Andrews, who died in infancy. Mrs. Hoopes died in 1887, and her husband passed away in 1888.

Josiah Hoopes, oldest son and child of Peirce and Sarah (Andrews) Hoopes, was born November 9, 1832, in West Chester, Pennsylvania, and was educated in the public schools of Philadelphia, and the Friends' Central School of that city. He took great delight in the study of botany, which he pursued with enthusiasm, and in 1853 built a small greenhouse which he filled with specimens of the flora of the world. In 1857 his brother Abner became associated with him, and in 1866 Mr. George B. Thomas was received into the firm, which has since been known as that of Hoopes, Brother & Thomas. Their place of business, known as the Maple Avenue Nurseries, covers an area of six hundred acres, and is devoted to the production of every variety of flower or fruit that will succeed in this climate. Their sales extend to every state and territory, and also into Canada, and Europe. They furnish trees and plants to most of the government national cemeteries, and also supply large quantities of ornamental trees, etc., to the United States government for planting in the parks and streets of Washington. Other leading cities of the country, such as Boston, Massachusetts, Brooklyn, New York, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, are among their large customers. The business carried on by them is one of the largest of the kind in the United States. Mr. Hoopes has written much on horticulture, botany, and kindred subjects, being for many years a regular contributor to the horticultural department of the New York "Tribune," and other publications. He has travelled extensively in Europe, visiting nearly all the famous flower gardens, parterres, and botanical collections of the old world, and making himself familiar with the flora of all lands. In 1868 he published his valuable "Book of Evergreens," a practical treatise on the conifera, or cone-bearing plants of the world, which has since been recognized as authority on this class of trees in America. He is an active member of the board of trade of West Chester. He has always taken a deep interest in the question of popular education, and was one of the original board of managers of the West Chester State Normal School, a position which he held for fifteen years.

Mr. Hoopes was one of the founders of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, in which for ten years he held the office of president. Since 1865 he has been a member of the Academy of Natural Science, of which organization he has been for many years special correspondent, and in connection with which he has edited several horticultural publications. He is a member of the Society of Friends.

Mr. Hoopes married, March 17, 1898, Ellen Agnes Morgan, and they are the parents of one son: Josiah M., born April 14, 1899.

Since the writing of the foregoing sketch, and while it was in the hands of the printer, occurred the death of Mr. Hoopes, on January 16, 1904, after an illness of about two weeks; his ailment was pneumonia. The West Chester "Daily Local News" refers to this event as a sad and irreparable loss to the community.

MATTHEW HALL, according to reliable tradition, came from Birmingham, England, or its vicinity, and settled in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, where he married, about 1731, Sarah Haworth, widow of George Haworth, of Buckingham township, who died in 1725. She was the daughter of John and Mary Scarborough, of Solebury, and granddaughter of John Scarborough, coachman, who came from London with his son John in 1682. Sarah Scarborough was born 2 mo., 4, 1694, and was first married 9 mo., 28, 1710, to George Haworth. Her second husband was not a Friend, and on 8 mo., 3, 1732, complaint was made at Buckingham Monthly Meeting that Sarah Hall, formerly Haworth, had gone out in her marriage, notwithstanding she had been pre cautioned. A testimony of disownment was produced against her at the next meeting, but left for further consideration, and a month later she offered an acknowledgment, which was accepted. It is further on minute that Matthew Hall had requested to be received into membership, some time prior to 4 mo., 4, 1734, but it was not until 4 mo., 2, 1735, that his request was granted. They continued to reside in Buckingham, where she died 3 mo., 4, 1748, and on 7 mo., 13, 1750, Matthew Hall was married at Springfield Meeting, Chester (now Delaware) county, to Rebecca Massey, widow of Mordecai Massey, of Marple, and daughter of Joseph and Abigail Rhoads. She went to live with him at Buckingham, but on 8 mo., 3, 1752, they received a certificate from Buckingham to Haverford, with three of his children settling in Blockley township; and thence to Chester Monthly Meeting in 1756. From Abel Janney he purchased one hundred and ninety-four acres of land in Marple and resided thereon till his death, in 9th mo., 1766. His second wife, by whom he had no children, died before him. He served as an overseer for Springfield Meeting from 3 mo., 28, 1757, to 3 mo., 23, 1759.

Children of Matthew and Sarah Hall:

1. David, born 7 mo., 7, 1732; died in Marple,

1802; married 12 mo., 21, 1758, at Springfield Meeting, Deborah Fell, daughter of Edward Fell, of Springfield. He inherited the homestead in Marple, and had children—Beulah, married William Bromwell; David, married Hannah Pennell; Sarah, married Joseph Levis; Edward and Joseph, both of whom married.

2. Mahlon, see forward.

3. Margery, born 1 mo., 23, 1734-5; married 11 mo., 10, 1753, at Merion Meeting, Arnold Warner, son of Isaac and Veronica Warner, of Blockley, Philadelphia county. They had four daughters, one of whom, Gulielma, married William Widdifield, and was for many years an accepted minister in the Society of Friends in Philadelphia.

4. Sarah, born 11 mo., 24, 1736-7; married 5 mo., 12, 1756, at Buckingham Meeting, John Pearson. It is supposed that they removed to Virginia.

2. Mahlon Hall took a certificate from Buckingham Monthly Meeting, 8 mo., 3, 1752, to Falls Monthly Meeting, and produced one thence to Chester, 8 mo., 30, 1756. He was married 4 mo., 21, 1757, at Bristol Meeting, Bucks county, to Jane Higgs, born 8 mo., 17, 1728; died 5 mo., 10, 1812; daughter of James and Elizabeth Higgs, of Bristol. He took a certificate from Chester to Philadelphia Monthly Meeting, dated 12 mo., 26, 1757, and settled in Blockley, probably on land which his father had purchased from Veronica Warner, and which his father devised to him. Perhaps he also purchased additional land, and it is said that much of his property is now within the limits of the park, adjoining Belmont, the former residence of Judge Peters, and also Lansdowne, the residence of Governor John Penn, who purchased some of the land from Mahlon to make up his place. In addition to farming, he carried on the blacksmithing business, and his account book shows that Governor John Penn, the last of the colonial governors, was one of his best patrons. Mahlon Hall was born 11 mo., (Jan.) 12, 1733-4, and died 7 mo., 26, 1819. He and his wife were buried at Merion Meeting. He used to tell his granddaughter, Matilda Heston, that during the Revolutionary war a party of British soldiers came to his house, the officer in command being in advance. They had some conversation, in the course of which the latter stated that he was from Birmingham, England, and upon Mahlon's saying that his father came from near there, the officer forbade any of his party from pillaging the house, as was their usual custom.

Children of Mahlon and Jane (Higgs) Hall:

5. John, born in Blockley, 6 mo., 16, 1758; died there, 1 mo., 17, 1842; married 11 mo., 21, 1783, at Marion Meeting, Anna Morris, daughter of Edward Morris, late of Montgomery township, (now Montgomery county). She died 6 mo., 17, 1845, aged ninety-one years. They had children, Martha, James, George, John, Morris, Hannah, Sarah and Charles. The first of these married Nathan Dickinson, and was the mother of the late Mahlon Hall Dickinson, an estimable citizen of Philadelphia, some time president of the State Board of Charities.

6. Mahlon, born 11 mo., 29, 1759; died 4 mo., 7, 1805; married 5 mo., 15, 1791, at the Second Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, Mary Heston, born 3 mo., 26, 1775; died 12 mo., 12, 1858; daughter of Edward Warner Heston, of Hestonville, in Blockley, and his first wife, Mary Griffith. About 1793 Mahlon Hall erected a stone house on what is now Elm avenue, near Fiftieth street, West Philadelphia, close by Fairmount Park. After his death his widow married William Sanders and had one child, Jacob Sanders, born 5 mo., 22, 1810.

7. Sarah, born 4 mo., 16, 1763; died 8 mo., 15, 1856; married November 18, 1784, Edward Warner Heston, of Hestonville, born March 16, 1745; died February 1, 1824, son of Jacob and Mary (Warner) Heston, of Bucks county, Pennsylvania. He was the founder of Hestonville, now a part of Philadelphia, took an active part in the Revolution, and was subsequently one of the judges of the court of common pleas, of Philadelphia county. By his first wife, Mary Griffith, he had children, Abraham, Isaac, Bathsheba, Mary, Jacob F., and Thomas W.; and by the last Jane, Rachel, Hannah, Matilda, Isaac, Sarah, William Penn and Louisa.

Children of Mahlon (6) and Mary (Heston) Hall:

8. Edward H., born at Hestonville, 4 mo., 30, 1792; died 4 mo., 10, 1831; married at West Chester, Pennsylvania, 2 mo., 5, 1816, Jane Paxson, b. 5 mo., 31, 1796, daughter of Benjamin Paxson and Jane Ely, of Solebury, Bucks county, Pennsylvania. They removed to Columbiana county, Ohio, about 1820, and after his death his widow married Abraham Heston.

9. Mahlon, born 3 mo., 11, 1793; died 11 mo., 3, 1872; married Hannah Hampton and Isabella Robinson. By the first he had five children, and twelve by the last.

10. Thomas W., born 3 mo., 4, 1795; died 4 mo., 7, 1896; married Mary Heston, daughter of Abraham, and had nine children. He died in Cain township, Chester county.

11. Isaac, born 4 mo., 29, 1796; died 4 mo., 21, 1810.

12. John, born 8 mo., 17, 1797; died 2 mo., 3, 1897; married 10 mo., 23, 1862, Sarah (Thatcher) Yarnall, widow. No issue. He followed farming for many years at or near Hestonville, but about 1872 removed to West Chester, where his widow resides.

13. Jane, born 11 mo., 24, 1798; died in West Chester, 10 mo., 4, 1876, unmarried.

14. William H., born 1 mo., 21, 1801; died in West Chester, 5 mo., 20, 1886; married Ann Paxson. No issue.

15. Sarah, born 12 mo., 28, 1802; died in West Chester, 2 mo., 3, 1900; married Edward Dickinson and had one daughter, who died young. She lived for thirty-seven years of her widowhood with her nephew, Edward H. Hall.

16. Ann, born 3 mo., 28, 1804; died 12 mo., 23, 1813.

This family were remarkable for industry, thrift and longevity. Omitting two who died in youth, the average age of seven was nearly eighty-three years; of six, a little over ninety, while Thomas, the oldest, was a little over 101 years of age.

Children of (8) Edward H. and Jane (Paxson) Hall:

17. Sarah P., born 11 mo., 17, 1817; died in Steuben county, Ohio, 11 mo., 9, 1891; married Dr. James B. Taylor.

18. Cyrus, died in infancy.

19. William W., born 8 mo., 13, 1819; died 10 mo., 23, 1900; married Sarah Robinson and had four children.

20. Mary H., born 1 mo., 17, 1821; married Levi Hambleton.

21. Rachel, born 6 mo., 2, 1822; died 8 mo., 30, 1866, unmarried.

22. Mahlon, born 9 mo., 21, 1823; married Asenath Arnold and Jane Dilley, and had two children.

23. Thomas H., born 9 mo., 11, 1825; died at Swarthmore, Pennsylvania, 8 mo., 25, 1897; married Lydia H. Cox, of Willistown township, and resided for many years in West Chester, he being treasurer of the West Chester and Philadelphia Railroad; had five children.

24. John, died in infancy.

25. George E., born 4 mo., 21, 1828; died 7 mo., 15, 1879; married Mary B. Heston and Hannah Heston, and had five children.

26. Albert P., born 10 mo., 17, 1829; married Hannah Hall, daughter of Mahlon and Isabella, and has two children. He is a dry goods merchant in West Chester.

27. Edward H., born 7 mo., 9, 1831; married Sarah E. Cranston and has two children. He is a coal merchant in West Chester.

Street and Lothbury. My Mother was Frances Malin of a village called Paulus Perry (Alias Potters Perry), Northamptonshire, By whom he had ten children, five sons and five daughters, whose names being worked on a sampler were

"Thomas and Anna, Thomas and Mary,

Frances, Susannah and Sarah,

Joseph and Thomas and little Benjamin,

Thomas and Frances had these children ten.

"I was born the 5th day of the 8th month called October in the year of our Lord 1703, Old Style. My Mother departed this life on the 10th day of the 7th Mo. (called September), in the year 1714, old style, in the 52d year of her age and was buried in the grave yard belonging to the Parish church of Olive Old Jewry. My Father lived in widowhood until sometime in the Month called January 1717-18. My sister Mary kept his house during his widowhood. He departed this Life in the month aforesaid in the 63d year of his age and was buried in the same grave with my mother. My sister Mary being left whole and sole Executrix of his last will and Testament, she put me out apprentice to John Hosey of Channel Row, Westminster, citizen and gunmaker of London, with whom I staid until the month called July 1722. Then I left him and went on board the Britania, snow, John Head master, bound for Maderia and Philadelphia. We had a long passage and suffered much for want of Provisions and water. We were becalmed some weeks and several died for want. I think it was reckoned when we made the land of Virginia we had not eight pounds of Bread and Beef on board for sixty persons. Our captain went with some hands ashore to seek water and provisions but could get no water to bring off, but shot four hogs, a sheep and hawk, the hawk I had for my share. We buried four at sea, one upon Cape May, another at Philadelphia who died coming up the river. William Passmore and Tertulian Johnson were two of the Passengers that I had some knowledge of. I stayed on board till the vessel was loaded and went out, and then myself and two or three more of the servants whose time were not disposed of were put on board another ship belonging to the same owners, where we staid till she was loaded and went out, which was some time in January 1722-3. Myself and another, which was all that was left of the servants, was sent down to George Ashbridge's in Goshen, for him to dispose of our time. There I had a severe fit of sickness and kept my bed for two weeks. Mary Ashbridge was as good to me as if I had been her own son. Some time in the 12th month (called February) it pleased the Lord to Restore me to my health again and about the latter end of the first month (called March) 1723, I came to live with John HAWLEY FAMILY. Benjamin Hawley, the ancestor of the Chester county family, was wiser than most in his day and generation, for he wrote down some account of his parentage and coming to this country, for the benefit of posterity. He says:

"My Father's Name was Thomas Hawley, Citizen and Gunmaker, London, in the Parish of Olive Old Jewry at the corner next Coleman Willis the younger, in Thornbury Township, where I staid till my 5 years servitude was expired, which was the 12th of the 9th Mo. (called November) 1727."

Benjamin Hawley was married on the 5th of March, 1730, to Dinah Gabiter, daughter of John Gabiter, of the parish of Giles-in-the-Fields, London. In September, 1735, he made a voyage to his native land and spent the winter there, and on his return rented a plantation in the forks of Brandywine (West Bradford), till 1743, when he removed to East Bradford and followed farming till 1757. He next taught school two years in Birmingham, and then went again to England to look after an estate left him by his sister Susanna Arrowsmith. Returning to America near the close of 1759, he made his home with his son Benjamin at times, and taught school at Birmingham in the intervals. His wife died 11 mo., 26, 1761, in her sixty-third year, and on the 20th of 4th month, 1763, he was married at Birmingham Meeting to Catharine Hillborn. He continued to teach school until 1769, when he made a third voyage to the place of his birth. A few of the last years of his life were spent in the home of his son Joseph, in West Bradford, where he died 7 mo., 29, 1782, and was buried at Birmingham Meeting. His widow died 5 mo., 13, 1789, aged ninety-three years and three months.

It may be explained that his first leaving home was without the knowledge or consent of his master, and that to obtain his passage he sold his services for five years after his arrival in Pennsylvania. It is even said that he changed his name to avoid detection. By his first wife he had six children:

1. Benjamin, b. Nov. 18, 1730; d. 10 mo., 26, 1815; see below.
2. Mary, b. Oct. 5, 1732; m. Hugh Kirgan.
3. Joseph, b. March 21, 1735; d. 11 mo., 21, 1817; m. Elizabeth Spackman.
4. William, b. Sept. 17, 1737; d. 6 mo., 2, 1826; m. Hannah Taylor, Elizabeth Evenson and Phebe Hoopes.
5. Susanna, b. March 28, 1740; d. 7 mo., 21, 1770; m. Christopher Nupher.
6. John, b. March 11, 1743; probably died young.

The births of the above children were entered in a Bible, printed 1599, which was given to the father by his sister Mary Hawley, February 13, 1735-6. Benjamin Hawley was admitted to membership with Friends at Birmingham, 3 mo., 10, 1763. Benjamin Hawley, Jr., was admitted into membership at Bradford Meeting, 1 mo., 15, 1756, and was married there, 4 mo., 22, 1756, to Mary Johnson, daughter of Robert Johnson, of East Bradford, said to have been from England, and Katherine (Knott) his wife. They settled on his farm in East Bradford, just across the Brandywine from his brother Joseph. They had fourteen children:

7. Caleb, b. 4 mo., 23, 1757; m. Hannah Battin, 5 mo., 30, 1782.
8. Thomas, b. 12 mo., 6, 1758; d. 4 mo., 17, 1781; unmarried.
9. Joseph, b. 6 mo., 6, 1760; d. 10 mo., 5, 1856; see forward.
10. Robert, b. 3 mo., 28, 1762; m. Patience Yearsley, 11 mo., 21, 1787.
11. Rachel, b. 8 mo., 3, 1763; m. Arthur McCann.
12. Hannah, b. 4 mo. 7, 1766; unmarried in 1807.
13. Mary, b. 9 mo., 2, 1767; m. John Ingram.
14. Lydia, b. 2 mo., 28, 1769; d. 12 mo., 28, 1770.
15. Susanna, b. 9 mo., 11, 1770; m. Elisha Davis, 12 mo., 12, 1793.
16. Tamer, b. 5 mo., 2, 1772; m. Joshua Hicklin, 12 mo., 17, 1801.
17. Rebecca, b. 1 mo. 9, 1774; d. 3 mo., 18, 1859, unmarried.
18. Dinah, b. 1 mo., 18, 1776; m. John Hicklin, 5 mo., 21, 1801.
19. Benjamin, b. 5 mo., 18, 1777; d. 8 mo., 17, 1857; m. Deborah Hoopes.
20. Phebe, b. 1 mo., 14, 1779; d. 2 mo., 11, 1782.

The mother of these children died 4 mo., 27, 1822, in her eighty-ninth year.

Joseph Hawley (9) was married 5 mo., 23, 1798, at Nantmeal Meeting to Rebecca Meredith, born 8 mo., 10, 1766, died 6 mo., 12, 1851; daughter of Simon and Dinah (Pugh) Meredith, of Coventry. They settled in Uwchlan township, and Joseph died at Lionville in his ninety-seventh year, having been blind for several years. They had six children:

21. Mary, b. 3 mo., 2, 1799; d. 8 mo., 27, 1821, unmarried.
22. Simon, b. 4 mo., 6, 1801; d. 7 mo., 26, 1863; m. Mary Lewis.
23. Benjamin, b. 4 mo., 13, 1803; d. 7 mo., 27, 1850; m. Mary Beitler.
24. Joel, b. 10 mo., 7, 1804; d. 4 mo., 8, 1883; see below.
25. Jesse, b. 2 mo., 14, 1806; d. 10 mo., 6, 1887; m. Esther Meredith.
26. Dinah, b. 10 mo., 30, 1808; m. Charles Moore, 2 mo., 17, 1830.

Of the above children Jesse was the father of the late Jesse G. Hawley, proprietor of the Reading "Eagle." Henry J. Moore, son of Dinah, was engineer of the city of Pittsburg at the time of his death, in 1872.

Joel Hawley (24) was married 12 mo., 11, 1833, to Catharine B. Williamson, and followed stereotyping at Lionville, in Uwchlan township. In 1871 he was elected an associate judge of the courts of Chester county for a term of five years, and was the last person to hold that position, the office being abolished by the new constitution. He and his wife retired to West Chester, where their death occurred but a few hours apart, she dying at 9:30 p. m., 4 mo., 7, 1883, and he at 3:30 p. m. the next day. They were buried in one grave at Oaklands cemetery. They had three children, Hannah Mary, wife of Levi C. Griffith, of Oxford; Joseph W., who is further written of in a separate sketch; and Samuel W., married to Ellen Lewis and living in Media.

HOOPEES. There is reason to suppose that Joshua Hoopes, the ancestor of the family in Pennsylvania, was the son of John and Isabel Hoopes, of Moorsom, near Guisbrough, in Yorkshire, England. They had a son Robert, born 18th of 8th month, 1639, who removed to Ireland, and tradition says that he and Tobias Hoope (or Hoopes) were brothers to Joshua.

Joshua Hoopes, of Skelton, in Cleveland, Yorkshire, yeoman, and Isabel his wife, with their children, Daniel, Margaret and Christian, came over in the ship "Providence," of Scarborough, Robert Hopper, master, and arrived in the River Delaware on the 10th day of the 9th month, 1683. They settled in Makefield, Bucks county, Pennsylvania, and became members of Falls Monthly Meeting of Friends, which was frequently held at their house.

From Besse's Sufferings of the Quakers we learn that in 1677 "Tobias Hoopes, of Skelton, was fined £20 for suffering a Meeting at his House, and 10s for himself and Wife being there; for which Fines a Warrant of Distress was granted by Edward Trotter, Justice, by which his Goods were taken away to the Value of £23, but sold by the Officers for £16:9s. For being at the same meeting, Joshua Hoopes, for himself and Wife, was fined 10s, but he being no Quaker paid down the Money. Philip Scarth for preaching at the same Meeting was fined £20, and had the same levied on his Goods. Also Robert Robinson, for preaching at the same Meeting was fined £20, which was levied on others present, viz: £10 thereof on Cuthbert Broderick of Rowsby, £5 on John Bennitt of Guisbrough, and £5 on William Jowey of Skugdale."

Joshua Hoopes brought a certificate from Friends at Rowsby, dated 4th of 3d month, 1683, which states that he was born at Skelton and "there descended of honest Parents and honestly demeaned himselfe from his childhood, his ffather, brothers & relations being honest & creditable inhabitants and people of account in and about ye towne of Skelton aforesaid," and has "of late years frequented ye meetings of ye people called Quakers neare ye said towne," etc.

Christian Hoopes, daughter of Joshua, died 15th of 2d mo., 1684, and her mother on the 20th of 3d mo., 1691. Joshua married again, 20th of 10th mo., 1693, Eleanor Pownall, widow of George Pownall, and died about the year 1723. He was elected to the assembly in the years 1686, 1688, 1692, 1695, 1696, 1697, 1700, 1701, 1703, 1705, 1708, 1709, 1711. His daughter Margaret married Abraham Beakes, of Bucks county, who died in Chester county, in 1703, and a second husband, John Todhunter, who died in Westtown township in 1715, and she in 1723. There were no children of Joshua Hoopes by his second marriage.

Daniel Hoopes, said to have been born about 1670, married 10th of 10th mo., 1696, at a meeting held at John Bowater's in Middletown, Chester (now Delaware) county, Jane Worrilaw, daughter of Thomas and Grace Worrilaw, of Edgmont township. In 1697 he purchased three hundred acres of land in Westtown, Chester county, and one hundred and seventy-five acres more in 1698, upon which he settled. He was elected to the assembly in 1708 and 1709. He was living in 1746, but the time of his death is unknown. In 1728 he purchased six hundred and thirty acres of land, including all of the northwest quarter of the present town of West Chester, and settled three of his sons thereon. The children of Daniel and Jane Hoopes were seventeen in number, as follows:

Grace, b. 7, 17, 1697; d. 5, 3, 1721; m. William Paschall.

Ann, b. 10, 23, 1698; d. 3, 13, 1704, in infancy.

Mary, b. 9, 22, 1700; d. 1765; m. Philip Yarnall.

Hannah, b. 5, 25, 1702; d. 1750, unmarried.

Joshua, b. 4, 25, 1704; d. 10, 9, 1769; m. Hannah Ashbridge.

Jane, b. 5, 14, 1706; d. 1, 31, 1789; m. George Ashbridge.

Ann, b. 12, 3, 1707; d. 7, 14, 1728, unmarried.

Daniel, b. 8, 17, 1711; d. 6, 5, 1790; m. Alice Taylor.

John, b. 8, 17, 1711; d. 3, 1, 1795; m. Christian Reynolds.

Abraham, b. 4, 12, 1713; d. 9, 15, 1795; m. Mary Williamson.

Thomas, b. 10, 22, 1714; d. 5, 21, 1803; m. Susanna Davies.

Elizabeth, b. 1, 13, 1716; d. 12, 9, 1803; m. William Webb.

Stephen, b. 1, 13, 1716; d. 1762; m. Martha Evans.

Nathan, b. 1, 16, 1718; d. 2, 19, 1803; m. Margaret Williamson.

Walter, b. 1, 11, 1719; d. 12, 9, 1719-20, in infancy.

Sarah, b. 5, 25, 1720; d. 7, 23, 1794; m. George Hall.

Christian, b. 8, 30, 1723; d. 12, 31, 1815; m. Daniel Webb.

In addition to the large size of this family, it may be noted that three of them were born in the seventeenth century and four of them lived for some time in the nineteenth century; from the birth of the first to the death of the youngest was over one hundred and eighteen years, and the average age of the thirteen who married was seventy-four years.

Joshua Hoopes, eldest son of Daniel, resided in Westtown township, and was an active member of Goshen Friends' Meeting. He had children, Jane, George, Joshua, Mary, Phebe, Joseph, Israel and Ezra. Of these, Joshua was the father of Joshua Hoopes, for several years proprietor of Hoopes' Boarding School in West Chester, and a botanist of considerable reputation. Ezra, the youngest, was the father of the late Curtis Hoopes, of West Chester, and grandfather of Dr. Isaac Thomas, late of the same place.

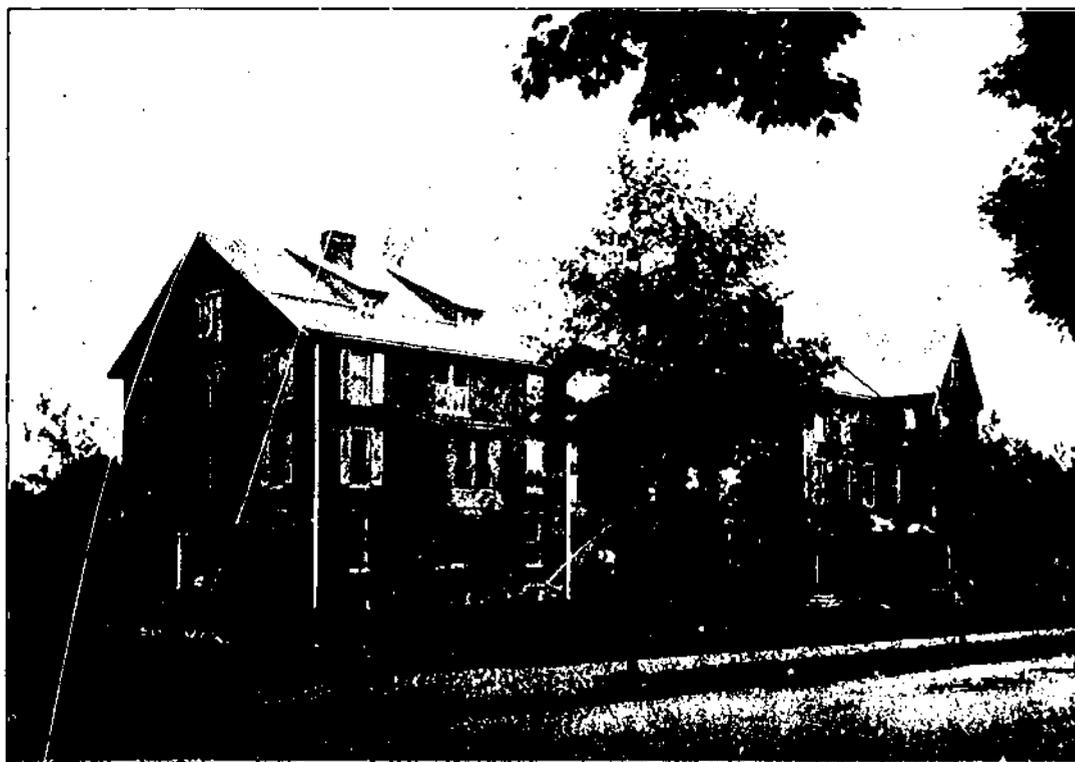

Daniel Hoopes, Jr., resided on a farm in what is now West Chester, and was the father of eight children, Abiah, Joshua, Deborah, Ann, Alice, Samuel, Sarah and Benjamin. Of these, Joshua was the great-grandfather of E. Malin and Ralston R. Hoopes, now of West Chester; of Dr. Levi Hoopes of the same place, and of John H. Darlington, of East Bradford.

John Hoopes, son of Daniel and Jane, built and resided at the homestead now of Joseph J. Taylor, just north of West Chester. He had nine children: John, Henry, Elizabeth, James, Francis, Jane, Lydia, Christian and Mary. From the first and fifth of these the Hoopes of Downingtown and of London Grove are descended, with many of other names.

Abraham Hoopes, son of Daniel and Jane, was a farmer in Edgemont township, Delaware county. His children were John, Sarah, Abraham, Jane, Abigail, Isaac, Benjamin, Jacob and George. Of these, Isaac was the grandfather of the late Walker Y. Hoopes, of Media.

Thomas Hoopes, son of Daniel and Jane, settled on a farm next west of his brother John, and erected the house now owned by William G. Embree, about 1738. He had two children, David and Jesse, of whom the first was ancestor to the Hoopes of New Brighton, Pennsylvania. Jesse remained at the homestead, married Rachel Yarnall, and (secondly) Amy Cope, and was the father of Elizabeth, Albina, Jane, David, Susanna, FRIENDS' BOARDING HOME, WEST CHESTER; CHARTERED 1892, UNDER CARE OF CONCORD QUARTERLY MEETING.

Thomas, Benjamin and Amy C.—four by each wife. David was the grandfather of Herman Hoopes, of East Bradford, while Thomas, who resided at the homestead, was the father of William and Thomas Hoopes, the founders of the large wheel works in West Chester.

Stephen Hoopes, son of Daniel, settled in Westtown township and had seven children, Elizabeth, Grace, Stephen, Margaret, Hannah, Isaiah and Ezekiel. The family name has but little representation in this branch.

Nathan Hoopes, son of Daniel, settled in East Bradford, adjoining the present western line of West Chester, but in 1788 sold his farm and removed to London Grove township. His children were Daniel, Thomas, Nathan, Aaron, Ann, Jonathan, William, Margaret, James and Susanna. Of these Daniel went to York county, and Jonathan founded a large branch of the family in New Garden township. Thomas was the father of Abner, whose son Pierce Hoopes was the father of Josiah and Abner Hoopes, of the Hoopes Brother & Thomas Nurseries, of West Chester.

TALBOT. John Talbot first appears as a witness to a deed from Thomas Woodward to Joseph Baker, dated September 21, 1710, for ninety-eight acres of land in Middletown township. On the 30th of October, 1718, John Turner bought two hundred and sixty-eight acres of land in that township from Joshua Hastings, and on November 22, 1718, conveyed one-half thereof, or one hundred and thirty-four acres, to John Talbot, who "built a messuage and made a plantation thereon" soon after.

The will of John Talbot was dated June 12, 1721, and was proven on the 22d of July following, wherein he names his children, Mary, Joseph, Benjamin, John, Elizabeth, Sarah, Rachel, and one unborn. What is somewhat puzzling is the fact that he first names his wife Mary, but afterward calls her Elizabeth, and appoints her and his beloved friend Jonathan Haycock executors of his will. Letters of administration were granted to his wife, Mary, and Jonathan Haycock. The estate was to be enjoyed by her during her widowhood, and afterward to be divided equally among the children, except that the sons were to have £10 each more than the daughters.

Although up to this time the family do not appear to have been Quakers, yet on the 30th of 4th mo., 1724, complaint was made by Middletown Meeting that Elizabeth Talbot, late widow of John Talbot, was married to one Hugh Bowen, out of the unity of Friends, by a priest. For this she was disowned by the monthly meetings, 6 mo., 31, 1724. Hugh Bowen was a taxable in Middletown from this time to 1730, and then disappears. John Turner made a will dated January 12, 1730, as stated in later writings, but it is not to be found, and letters of administration were granted to Sarah Turner, his widow, March 6, 1732-3. He devised the land, one hundred and thirty-four acres, to Benjamin Talbot, and his clothing to John Chapman, which is all that is known of the will. Joseph Talbot, as "heir-at-law," gave a release to his brother Benjamin for the land, April 26, 1734, and Sarah Turner, the widow, also signed a release, April 2, 1737. Again, Sarah Turner, in her will, dated 1 mo., 29, 1737, gave to the children of John Talbot, deceased—Joseph, Benjamin, John, Elizabeth, Sarah and Hannah—one shilling each, and the same to John Chapman.

The fact that Joseph Talbot was the heir-at-law of John Turner, can scarcely be explained except by supposing that his mother was the sister to the latter. Jonathan Heacock brought a certificate from Friends at Wolverhampton, in Staffordshire, dated 12 mo., 13, 1710, and settled in Marple township. It may be suspected that the friendship between him and John Talbot began in their native land.

Joseph Talbot, the eldest son, having taken the land of his father, obtained releases from the other children as they became of age, or soon after. The names and dates are as follows: Mary Talbot, July 15, 1731; Benjamin Talbot, April 26, 1734; Elizabeth Talbot, May 12, 1737; Sarah Talbot, March 2, 1738; John Talbot, December 22, 1739; Hannah Talbot, October 4, 1742. Joseph also purchased from his brother Benjamin the eastern half of the original Turner tract, in 1741, and upon this erected a grist mill, on what is known as Rock Run, formerly called Martin's Run. The mill was built prior to December 20, 1744, but the first building was of wood. In 1792 the present stone building was erected by James Emlen, but is now going to decay.

"This is to Certifie whom it may Concern That Benjamin Talbot of Darby in ye County of Chester & Province of Pennsylvania, Fuller & Eliz: Ball of Darby in ye County & Province afd were Lawfully married together on ye Eleventh Day of November In ye year of our Lord, 1734, according to ye Cannons & Ecclesiastical Constitution of ye Church of England, by me, Richd Backhouse. As witness my hand this Fourth Day of August, 1735.

RICHARD BACKHOUSE,
"Missionary of Chester."

Elizabeth Ball was the daughter of Roger and Mary (Scothorn) Ball, of Darby, and was born 8 mo., 16, 1715. Being a member of Darby Friends' Meeting she made an acknowledgment, 6 mo., 6, 1735. "Condemning her going out in marriage contrary to the Established Rules amongst ffriends, which is accepted." She had a sister, Hannah, born in 1719, who is supposed to have married John Talbot, the brother of Benjamin.

Benjamin Talbot resided in Upper Darby a few years, but was in Middletown in 1737 and 1740, and in Upper Providence in 1747. Elizabeth, his wife, received a certificate from Darby to Chester Monthly Meeting, 10 mo., 2, 1737. In 1754 Benjamin Talbot was assessed in West Nantmeal township, and in 1759 his wife sent a request to Chester Monthly Meeting for a transfer of her membership to Bradford Monthly Meeting, of which West Caln Meeting was a branch and the nearest to her residence. This certificate was granted 4 mo., 30, 1759, and mentioned her children, John, Joseph, Mary, Elizabeth, Benjamin and William, whose membership appears not to have been fully recognized, as John and Joseph made request at Bradford, 8 mo., 16, 1759, for full membership; and while the matter was under consideration, early in the next year, John accomplished his marriage, "by priest," and Joseph attended the marriage, so their request was dismissed.

The family had removed across the line into Caernarvon township, Berks county, where in 1767 Benjamin Talbot was assessed with fifty acres of land. Here they were rather nearer to Exeter Monthly Meeting, Berks county, and a certificate for Elizabeth was sent to that meeting in 1770, but not accepted because she did not appear to them to be a member. A committee of Bradford reported, 8 mo., 16, 1771, that they had spoken to Elizabeth and Benjamin Talbot, and learned that their daughter Mary "was Married to a man Professing with the Church of England, so Called, which they all seem'd to Chuse to Join with, therefore this Meeting Doth not Look upon them to have any right of Membership amongst us."

It appears that Mary Talbot, who had married a person by the name of Bull, subsequently made an acknowledgment, in 1781, and was then living in North Carolina. Her sister, Elizabeth, under the name of Phillips, was disowned in 1781 on account of her marriage. Benjamin Talbot, Jr., was complained of, 4 mo., 13, 1781, for being concerned in military service and marriage to one not a member, for which he was disowned by Bradford Monthly Meeting, 7 mo., 13, 1781. In 1799 he was assessed in Honeybrook (formerly West Nantmeal) with one hundred acres of land, which he appears to have purchased from Ezekiel Thomas by deed of March 29, 1798. His wife, Mary, was the daughter of William and Mary Gilkey, of Honeybrook, and their children were William, Ruth Ann, Mary, Caleb P., Ann and Eliza.

DR. JESSE COPE GREEN, of West Chester, Pennsylvania, widely known by his scientific and antiquarian attainments, is the oldest living representative of a large family of Friends whose ancestors were among the earliest of that Society in Pennsylvania, and most of whose descendants yet adhere to the faith of the fathers.

Thomas Green (1), the ancestor of the family in America, came from England and settled in Concord township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, in May, 1686, and died about 1691. He married Margaret (maiden name unknown), who died in October, 1708. Their son,

Thomas (2) was born in England, and died in Concord township about 1713. He married Sarah (maiden name unknown). Their son, Robert (3), a farmer, located in Birmingham, where he built a house. He married, November 18, 1724, at Concord Meeting, Rachel Vernon, daughter of John and Sarah (Pyle) Vernon. She was born September 27, 1704, and died February 17, 1751. Her husband died March 20, 1779, at eighty-five. Their son, Robert (4) was born in Birmingham, December 19, 1731, and died in 1790. He was a farmer, and he set up a saw mill upon his farm. He was a leader in public affairs, and gave material assistance in the upbuilding of the community. In politics he was a Federalist. He married, at Bradford Meeting, June 10, 1756, Hannah Clayton, daughter of Edward and Ann (Whitaker) Clayton, and she died in 1803. Their son,

Jesse (5) was born April 23, 1757, in Birmingham township, and died March 12, 1844. He was a man of very large stature and strong traits of character, and became one of the leading men in the neighborhood. He conducted his farm and also operated the saw mill which had been set up by his father. He was a Federalist and afterwards a Whig. He was married at Concord Meeting, January 14, 1789, to Edith Thatcher, born August 4, 1765, and died December 20, 1791, a daughter of William and Sarah (Dickinson) Thatcher. Their son, William (6) was born December 18, 1791. He received a common school education. He lived for some years in Birmingham, where he conducted the farm and saw mill, afterwards removing to West Chester, where he died April 19, 1881. He was a man of marked individuality and progressiveness, and aided in educational and other community affairs, and was called to various township offices in Birmingham. He was married at Concord Meeting, March 5, 1817, to Phebe Hatton, born June 25, 1797, in Birmingham township, a daughter of Peter and Phebe (Malin) Hatton. The last named was a daughter of Gideon and Phebe (Bowman) Malin. Peter Hatton was a son of Peter and Hannah Yearsley (Hatton) and he came from Chester, England. The children of William and Phebe (Hatton) Green were (1) Jesse Cope, to be written of hereinafter; (2) Edith Hatton, born March 10, 1822, and (3) Annie, born December 10, 1835, who became the wife of M. W. Foster, D. D. S., M. D., of Baltimore, and to whom were born three children—Matthew; Dr. William G., who married Emma Hopper; and Isabel.

Jesse Cope Green (7), eldest child and only son of William (6) and Phebe (Hatton) Green, was born December 13, 1817, in Birmingham township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. He began his education in the common neighborhood schools, and subsequently attended the boarding schools of Joshua Hoopes, in West Chester, and of Samuel Smith, of Wilmington, Delaware. Immediately after leaving school he became a teacher, and he was among the first teachers under the common school law of Pennsylvania. He taught in Concord, Delaware county, from 1836 to 1841, and afterwards for several months in the Friends' School in West Chester. While instructing others, he was also acquiring instruction himself. An indefatigable student, he devoted every spare hour to the acquisition of knowledge, and this became the prevailing habit of his life.

In 1842 he began the study of dentistry, and he subsequently received the doctorate degree from the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery of Philadelphia. He began practice in 1843, in West Chester, and has energetically devoted himself to his profession without retirement. He early developed a remarkable aptitude for the arts of dentistry and his fine mechanical skill, enabled him from time to time to construct various original instruments and appliances previously unknown to the profession. His quick insight and superior handicraft gained for him an acknowledged pre-eminence. It has been his constant endeavor to advance dentistry along scientific and ethical lines, and he has been in the front rank in movements to these ends. In 1855 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania Association of Dental Surgeons; he took an active part in the organization of the Pennsylvania State Dental Society, in 1868, and he was treasurer of the body in 1880 and president in 1883. He signed the call that resulted in the formation of the first National Convention of Dentists, in Philadelphia, in 1855. He also signed the call out of which grew the American Dental Association in 1859. In 1876, immediately after the passage of the law establishing the Pennsylvania State Dental Examining Board, he was made one of its members and its secretary, and he served in that position continuously for more than twenty-three years, without compensation, solely in the interests of the profession and of the public whom it served.

An ardent student of meteorology, Dr. Green has been a volunteer observer for the Smithsonian Institution and the United States Weather Bureau since 1855, and for the Pennsylvania State Weather Service Bureau from its organization. His rare mechanical acquirement has been of great advantage to him in these important and uncompensated tasks, and he produced from his own laboratory a fine electrical registering anemometer, the first of its kind ever made and an excellent mercurial barometer. He also constructed a number of microscopes of various patterns, which were highly praised by the famous Zentmayer; and experts have pronounced his slide mounts as singularly beautiful in finish. He was one of the founders of the West Chester Microscopical Society, of which he was at times president and treasurer.

In various ways Dr. Green has been an inspiration in educational concerns. He was for many years a member of the West Chester School Board, and he gave most intelligent and zealous aid to the improvement of the school system. In 1857 he originated a movement for the establishment of district school libraries, to supply wants for which the state made no provision. To this cause he devoted enthusiastic effort, and for three years he expended a liberal portion of his compensation as district school treasurer for the purchase of books for the school library. His literary tastes are evidenced by his library covering a broad field of science, philosophy, history and general literature. Among his volumes are many large-paper and de luxe editions, and a curious collection of almanacs, some of them of such remote date as the beginning of the sixteenth century. Dr. Green's antiquarian spirit is exhibited in what is presumably the largest and most varied collection of colonial, continental, confederate, and governmental and other rare paper money in Chester county, as well as in a collection of walking sticks, nearly two hundred in number, some made out of historic timber, others from rare woods from all lands, and some of various woods exquisitely fitted together and finely finished, of his own masterly handiwork.

Dr. Green has been a lifelong member of the Society of Friends, and since 1884 has served as overseer and since 1896 as elder of the meeting, and as treasurer since 1864. He has long been president of the Trust and Relief Society of West Chester, has been a manager of the Oakland Cemetery Company since its organization in 1852 and he has been many years its president. For over fifty years he has been an active member and treasurer of the First West Chester Fire Company. He was originally a Whig in politics. His abhorrence of human bondage led him to take an active part in the anti-slavery movement beginning in 1841, and he was an original member of the Republican party at the time of its organization in 1856.

The foregoing epitomization of a rarely useful life is of special value at the present time, when commercialism claims an exaggerated importance and lofty sentiment is depreciated. Such a character and career as that of Dr. Green serve to call attention to those things which are most enduring; services in the interest of education and morality which leave an indelible impression, and set in motion influences which reach into succeeding generations.

Dr. Green was married September 30, 1845, to Alice W., daughter of Edward and Tabitha Shields of West Chester, Pennsylvania. She died May 25, 1900. They have had four children, Clara, Mary, Edith and William Hatton. Edith died in her fourth year, February 8, 1859. Mary died in her thirty-fourth year, October 1, 1886. The other two are still living. Clara, the eldest, was married October 28, 1875, to Patterson DuBois, of Philadelphia. They have had four children, the youngest of whom, Constance, alone survives.

DAVID T. BISHOP. At a meeting of William Penn's Commissioners of Property, September 20, 1716, "Isaac Taylor, of the County of Chester, Surveyor, produces Certificates under the hands of Caleb Pusey and Henry Worley setting forth that Wm. Beckingham and John Beckingham came Servants into this Province in or about the year 1682 and served their Time with Joseph Richards, and that Samuel Bishop came in about the same and served James Sandilands; also a Certificate under the Hand of Nich. Pyle, certifying that James Hayward came also about the aforesaid Time and served Edward Bezer. The said Is. Taylor having purchased the severall Rights of the said Servants to their headland desires a Warrant to lay out the same, which is granted, signed and dated 20, 7ber, 1716."

The grant by William Penn of fifty acres of land to such as came into the province as servants, as also fifty acres to the employer, doubtless played an important part in the colonization of Pennsylvania. It was not entirely a free gift, as the grantee was to pay an annual rent of one penny per acre per annum, and it does not appear to have applied to those who came after William Penn's return to England, in 1684. Judging from the subsequent social standing of some of the servants it may be surmised that their coming in that capacity was a clever scheme for profit and not a matter of necessity.

Samuel Bishop married, but it may be presumed that his wife did not come to this country as a servant. James Sandilands resided at Chester, and was one of the founders of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal church at that place, which dates from 1703. It seems but natural to find that Samuel Bishop was one of the organizers of the parish and one of the first vestrymen, holding this office during the years 1704 and 1705. Two of his children, Joseph and Rachel, were baptized September 10, 1704, and other two, Hannah and Sarah, on December 16th of the same year. He purchased a lot of ground in Chester, from James Sandilands, March 1, 1700-1, but appears to have served as constable for Edgmont township for the year 1701, he having purchased ninety-eight acres of land in that place by deed of February 21, 1700. Just north of this, in Willistown, he bought one hundred and fifty-two acres about 1707, and in 1713 added thirty-five acres adjoining, in Edgmont. He was taxed in Willistown from 1715 till 1722, when he sold his land there and the thirty-five acres in Edgmont to William Morris, and removed to West Caln township, where he died about the month of December, 1741. His will, of which he appointed his wife, Alice, executrix, was dated November 28, 1741. He had at least thirteen children:

1. Joseph, of whom hereafter.
2. Rachel, who is not mentioned in her father's will.
3. Susanna, married to Abraham Davis, of East Bradford (now Birmingham) and his widow was murdered January 3 or 4, 1782.
4. Hannah, living in 1741 and probably married.
5. Sarah, married March 13, 1726-7, to Jason Cloud of Caln.
6. Alice, married John Peirsol, and died December 29, 1789, aged eighty-four years.
7. Lydia, living in 1741 and probably married.
8. Mary, married January 5, 1729-30, to Andrew Cox.
9. Samuel, married Esther Tranter, April 24, 1739, and died in 1741.
10. John, married and settled in West Nantmeal.
11. Priscilla.
12. Charles, married Patience Miller about 1748, and died in 1753, after which she married his nephew, James Davis, and they went to North Carolina.
13. Rose, perhaps, married a Vernon.

Joseph Bishop (1) married, but the name of his wife has not been discovered. He settled in Edgmont township, where he purchased one hundred and ten acres of land from Joseph Carter and wife Sarah, February 11, 1722-3. After his father's death he purchased, December 24, 1742, from John Davison, sixty-three acres in West Caln; another tract of two hundred acres, from John and Elizabeth Taylor, April 5, 1743, and on February 20, 1767, obtained a patent for seventy-nine acres and allowance which he took up in the same township. By his will, dated April 9, 1777, proved April 16, 1781, he directed that his lands in Edgmont and West Caln should be sold and appointed his sons, Thomas and George, to be his executors. They conveyed all the real estate, May 7, 1781, to Thomas Pritchett, of Edgmont, for £1,000; and the latter, on the day following, conveyed the Edgmont property to George Bishop, and divided the West Caln lands between Thomas and another brother, Samuel Bishop, each paying one-third of the £1,000. Joseph Bishop also had a son Joseph, who married Ann Kerlin, and died before his father; a daughter Sarah, who married Thomas (?) Babb, a daughter Mary, who married Henry Fleming, 1760, and another daughter, who married Joseph Cookson.

Thomas Bishop, eldest son of Joseph, married about 1749, Margaret Williamson, daughter of Daniel and Hannah (Malin) Williamson, of Upper Providence, and settled in that township, where he became the owner of what have long been known as Bishop's Mills. Margaret was a member of Friends' meeting, but Thomas was not. He died intestate in 1784, leaving real estate in Upper Providence, Edgmont and West Caln, valued at about £2,364.

The children of Thomas and Margaret Bishop, so far as known, were ten in number: Sarah, married Joseph Griffith, 1767; Margaret, married Peter Salkeld; Jane, married Jacob Dutton; Susanna, married Jacob Malin, 1773; Alice, married George (?) Dunn; Thomas, married Priscilla Pratt; Mary, married John Kirk; Joseph; Betty; Margaret. The last was probably named after the marriage of Margaret Salkeld.

Joseph Bishop, son of Thomas and Margaret, was admitted into membership with Friends at Concord Meeting, 11 mo., 8, 1786; was married 4 mo., 4, 1792, at East Caln Meeting, to Sarah Pratt, born 5 mo., 13, 1748; died 7 mo., 17, 1809; daughter of Joseph and Jane (Davies) Pratt, of Edgmont. They settled in Upper Providence, where he died 4 mo., 24, 1840, aged just seventy-three years; buried at Middletown Meeting.

The children of Joseph and Sarah Bishop were, Thomas Pratt, born 12 mo., 21, 1792; Randall, born 4 mo., 18, 1795; Tamar, born 12 mo., 3, 1796, married Samuel Pancoast, 4 mo., 10, 1817; Emily, born 6 mo., 23, 1799, a very large woman; Joel, born 2 mo., 26, 1801; Orpha, born 12 mo., 10, 1803; Jeremiah, born 10 mo., 6, 1805.

Thomas Pratt Bishop, eldest son of Joseph and Sarah, married Jane Townsend, born 7 mo., 19, 1800; died 10 mo., 16, 1875, in West Chester; daughter of Samuel and Priscilla (Yarnall) Townsend, of Coventry township, Chester county. He removed to Coventry about 1823, and was a farmer in the southern part of the township, where he died, 6 mo., 1842.

The children of Thomas P. and Jane Bishop were six in number: Priscilla T., born 12 mo., 17, 1827; died 10 mo., 10, 1845; David Townsend, born 8 mo., 2, 1830; Townsend, born 4 mo., 5, 1832; died 9 mo., 8, 1832; Sarah P., born 1 mo., 17, 1834; died 3 mo., 19, 1842; Franklin T., born 5 mo., 31, 1836; Emily J., born 1 mo., 19, 1839; died 10 mo., 7, 1845.

Franklin T. Bishop married Annie Marshall, born in Rushville, Indiana, 7 mo., 25, 1835; daughter of Abraham and Ann (Roberts) Marshall. He died in West Chester, 1 mo., 3, 1899, leaving no children. He was in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for thirty years.

David T. Bishop, son of Thomas P. and Jane (Townsend) Bishop, attended the common schools of the neighborhood, where he acquired a practical education which qualified him for an active business life. For many years he was successfully engaged in various mercantile pursuits, but during the last fifteen years he has devoted his time and attention to improving and beautifying his boyhood home for which nature had done so much. A portion of this property, consisting of one hundred and six acres, is in the hands of Mr. Bishop for settlement. It is an ideal spot for a country home, being on very high ground, with broad sweeping lawns, which during the summer months look as though covered with a beautiful soft green carpet and is a perfect delight for the eye to dwell upon. A grand old chestnut tree which is situated at the rear of the barn marks a spot which recalls many youthful recollections to Mr. Bishop, and also offers a cool and inviting shade from the fierce rays of the sun. This particular spot is the highest elevation of the estate, overlooks the city of Philadelphia, and is known for miles around as the "Highlands." Mr. Bishop casts his vote with the Republican party, to whose principles he gives his firm and constant allegiance. His religious faith and sympathies bring him into cordial relations with the Society of Friends, whose meetings he regularly attends, and to the support of which he liberally contributes.

THOMAS L. MONTGOMERY. Roger de Montgomerie, of Normandy, according to William, the Monk of Junieges, the ancient historian, was "Count of Montgomerie before the coming of Rollo," in 912. This would place his birth about the middle of the ninth century, a time when France was rent and torn by the ambition of Charlemagne's descendants, each struggling against the other for the possession of the great empire their ancestor had left to his children. Roger was succeeded by his son.

2. Roger de Montgomerie, Count of Montgomerie, the second of the name, whose son,

3. Roger de Montgomerie, Count of Montgomerie, the third of the name, was father of William and Hugh, who were described as "turbulent among the turbulent during Duke William's minority." Of these,

4. William de Montgomerie, Count of Montgomerie, succeeded his father in his possessions. He is accused by the historian, Ordericus Vitalis, of being the murderer of Osberne de Crepon, High Steward of Normandy. For this he received speedy vengeance. Baron de Glos, Osberne's steward, surrounded William in his castle and, setting it on fire, destroyed him and all his accomplices. William's son,

5. Hugh de Montgomerie, Count of Montgomerie, married Osborne's cousin, Josseline, the daughter of Tourode, Sire de Pont Audemer, whose wife, Weva Duceline de Crepon, was sister of Duchess Connor, wife of Richard sans Peur, the great-grandmother of William the Conqueror. He was succeeded by his eldest son,

6. Roger de Montgomerie, Count of Montgomerie, and Viscount d'Exmes in Normandy, and subsequently Earl of Shrewsbury, Arundel, and Chichester, in England, one of the most powerful and influential nobles at William's court. He is described as being "a very prudent and moderate man, pious, a great lover of equity, and of discreet and modest persons. His first wife, Mabel, whom he married in 1048, was a member of a turbulent family, and, unlike her husband, manifested hatred toward the religious orders. His second wife "made herself remarkable for her wisdom and piety, and always upheld her husband in loving the monks and defending the helpless."

Roger and his cousin William Fitzosborne, both encouraged Duke William in his attack upon England and accompanied him in his great expedition. The account of the Battle of Hastings, October 14, 1066, shows how the Duke called upon Roger and William to lead in the charge on the same side, and relates an incident of Roger's boldness and skill. An English knight of noble carriage, wielding a northern hatchet, with a blade a full foot long, supported by his company of one hundred men, by his impetuous charge struck dismay upon the Norman ranks, but Roger de Montgomerie came galloping up with his lance set, and heeding not the long-handled axe which the Englishman wielded aloft, struck him down and left him stretched upon the ground. Then he cried out, "Frenchmen, strike! the day is ours!"

In the division of the English territories which William made among his followers, Roger de Montgomerie was munificently rewarded with the Earldom of Chichester and Arundel, and soon afterwards with that of Shrewsbury. In his advanced age he entered into holy orders, was shorn a monk of the Abbey of SS. Peter and Paul, which he founded, and there died July 27, 1094. By his wife Mabel, daughter and heiress of William de Talvas, he had several children. The family espoused the cause of Robert, Duke of Normandy, as the rightful heir to the English throne, and, Henry being the successful contestant, they were deprived of all the English estates.

7. Arnulph de Montgomerie, fifth son of Roger, being banished from England, crossed into Ireland in the year 1100, where he married Lacroth, daughter of Murtagh O'Brien, King of Munster. The Irish becoming suspicious of the Normans, resolved to murder them, but Arnulph discovered the plot and made his escape to Normandy, where he spent the remainder of his life until about the year 1119, when he returned to Ireland and was reconciled to his father-in-law, but on the morrow fell asleep after a banquet from which he never awoke. He had an only son,

8. Philip de Montgomerie, born about the year 1101, at Pembroke, Wales, who while yet a youth came over from Normandy with the Earl of Huntingdon, afterward David I of Scotland, on his return from a visit to the monastery of Tiron. Here he was called the Welshman, or Cymbricus, an evidence of his birthplace having been in Wales. He obtained a fair inheritance in Renfrewshire, and married Lady Margaret Dunbar, daughter of Cospatric, second Earl of Dunbar and March. As the manor and castle of Thorntoun came into the possession of the family at this period, it came in all probability as Lady Margaret's dower. It is situated about three and a half miles from Dunbar, and immediately opposite Innerwick Castle, divided from it only by a ravine. He was succeeded by his son,

9. Robert de Montgomerie, or Mundegumbrie, as it was sometimes written, who in addition to his father's lands of Thornton, obtained from Walter Stewart the estate of Eaglesham, forming the parish of that name in Renfrew, being about six miles from east to west and seven miles from north to south. This estate, which was the first of any extent, and for two centuries the chief possession of the Scottish family of Montgomery, remained their property undiminished for the long period of seven hundred years. Whom he married is unknown, but he was succeeded by his son,

10. Sir John Montgomerie, who married Helen, one of the daughters of Robert de Kent, with whom he obtained a part of the estate of her father.

11. Sir Alan de Montgomerie succeeded his father, Sir John, but, dying before 1234, was succeeded by his son Robert, who died before 1261, without issue.

12. Sir John de Montgomerie, of Eaglesham and of Eastwood, succeeded his brother Robert in 1261, and was doubtless in the army raised by Alexander III, to meet the Norwegians under their King, Haco, whom he defeated on their landing in the Bay of Ayr, at the famous battle of Largs, in August, 1263. Sir John died about 1285, leaving four sons and a daughter.

13. Sir John de Montgomerie of Eaglesham and Eastwood, son of the above, was one of the Great Barons of Scotland summoned to appear at Berwick in 1291, and was afterwards, with many of his countrymen, it is said, obliged to swear fealty to Edward I, though his name does not appear on the Ragman's Roll as do those of two of his brothers. As soon as Bruce asserted his claim to the Scottish throne, Sir John joined his standard. He married Janet, daughter of John Erskine, also one of the barons who swore fealty to Edward in 1296, and left two sons and a daughter.

14. Sir Alexander de Montgomerie, of Eaglesham and Eastwood, succeeded his father. In the year 1358 he was one of the barons despatched to England to treat for the release of their captive sovereign, and on the 24th of October in that year he had letters of permission to pass through England on his way abroad, accompanied by a retinue of sixty horse and foot. He married a daughter of William, first Earl of Douglas, by his second wife, Margaret, daughter of the Earl of Dunbar and March, by whom he had a son who succeeded him prior to the year 1388.

15. Sir John de Montgomerie, son of the last, married, in 1361, Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Sir Hugh Eglinton, of Eglinton, and by her obtained the large possessions of that family on the death of her father, together with Ardrossan, the heiress of which estate one of her ancestors had married. Sir John greatly distinguished himself at the Battle of Otterburne, in August, 1388, when his eldest son, Hugh, was slain. His second son,

16. Sir John de Montgomerie, "Dominus Ejusdem, or of that ilk," succeeded his father before 1398. In 1402 he formed one of the chiefs of the Scotch army which invaded England, and was taken prisoner at the disastrous battle of Halidon Hill. He was not long a captive, however, for two years after he was in Scotland and introduced the reputed Richard II of England to Robert III. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Maxwell, of Caerlaverock (ancestor of the Earls of Nithsdale), and dying previous to November, 1429, left by her three sons and three daughters.

17. Alexander de Montgomerie, the first Lord Montgomerie, succeeded his father before November 22, 1429. He was distinguished for his loyalty to James I and his successors, and was a member of the Privy Council under both. He was also employed in the negotiations of various important matters with England. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Boyd, of Kilmarnock, by whom he had four sons and four daughters. He died prior to October 14, 1465.

18. Alexander de Montgomerie, son of the last, died in 1452, before his father. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Adam Hepburn, of Hailes, and by her left three sons.

19. Alexander, second Lord Montgomerie, succeeded his grandfather in his estates and honors. He married Catherine, daughter of Gilbert, first Lord Kennedy, and died prior to 1484. His son, 20. Hugh, third Lord Montgomerie, and subsequently the first Earl of Eglinton, having been so created by James IV in 1508, was under age at the time of his father's death, as on October 11, 1484, he executed a revocation of all grants made during his minority. He was concerned in the revolt of the barons against James III in 1487, which resulted in the death of that King, as he fled from the battle of Sauchie, but he was in great favor with James IV, who created him Earl of Eglinton and granted him the constabulary of Rothesay. He married Lady Helen, daughter of Colin, first Earl of Argyll, by whom he had six sons and eight daughters. He died at an advanced age in November, 1545, and was succeeded by his grandson, his two elder sons predeceasing him.

21. Sir Neil Montgomerie, of Lainshaw, third son of the first Earl, married Margaret, daughter and heiress of Quintin Mure, Laird of Skeldon, by whom he got the lands of Skeldon, Hollow Chapel, Laganfie, Charlewrack, etc. He also had a charter from Queen Mary of the lands of Uretonn (Overton), in the barony of Torbolton, given at Linlithgow, October 4, 1545. In the month preceding this grant he had sat and acted as procuratory in Parliament for his nephew, the second Earl of Eglinton, and in the year following, on the death of the second Earl, during the minority of his son, he assumed the chiefship of the clan. The year succeeding this he lost his life in a fight with Lord Boyd's son and his adherents, in the streets of Irvine, June, 1547.

22. Sir Neil Montgomerie of Lainshaw, son of the last, succeeded his father and married Jean, daughter and eventually heiress (on the death of her brother James, Master of Lyle, in 1556) of John, fourth and last Lord Lyle. By this marriage the Lyle estates came into possession of the Montgomeries, but the title was not assumed by Sir Neil. By a charter in 1558 it appears that he possessed very considerable property, chiefly holding from the Earl of Eglinton. His son,

23. Sir Neil Montgomerie of Lainshaw, who as heir-male to the title and honors of the fifth Earl of Eglinton, who died without issue, should have succeeded to them on that nobleman's death in 1613, but by a new grant of 1611 they went to a cousin. Sir Neil was, however, the lineal male representative of the family. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Cuninghame, of Aiket, and died before the year 1613, leaving several children. He was succeeded by his son Neil, he by a son of the same name, and the latter in turn by a son John, who died without issue.

24. William Montgomerie, of Brigend, second son of Sir Neil and Elizabeth Cunningham, married Jean Montgomerie, the heiress of Brigend, in the year 1602. She was a daughter of John Montgomerie, the son and heir of the late James Montgomerie, of Brigend, whose relationship to the other Montgomeries has not been discovered. Brigend, or Bridgend, as formerly spelt, is in the parish of Maybole, Ayrshire, and situated immediately on the banks of the river Doon, about one-fourth of a mile below and on the opposite side of Alloway Kirk-yard. It was known as Nether Auchundraine prior to the building (in the year 1466) of the "Auld Brig of Doon," so celebrated in "Tam O'Shanter." William Montgomerie, of Brigend, was living as late as 1652, but died prior to 1658. He had four sons, John, William, James and Hugh.

25. John Montgomerie, of Brigend, eldest son of William, married in 1626, Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Baxter, of Shrinston, and died prior to 1647, during the life of his father, leaving two sons, Hugh and James.

26. Hugh Montgomerie, of Brigend, succeeded his grandfather subsequently to the year 1652, and on the death of John Montgomery, of Lainslaw, within two or three years of that date, as his heir male, became the chief of the family, which honor is now borne by his descendants.

In the year 1653 he married Katharine, second daughter of Sir William Scott, of Clerkington, by whom he had two sons and three daughters. He died May 6, 1710, over eighty years of age, having resided the last twelve years of his life in Glasgow, under the roof and on the charity of his younger son James.

27. William Montgomerie, of Brigend, eldest son of Hugh, married January 8, 1784, in Edinburgh, Isabel, daughter of Robert Burnett, of Lethintie, Aberdeenshire, of the family of Leys Burnetts, of which was Gilbert Burnett, Bishop of Salisbury. Their marriage settlement is in complete preservation and measures six feet in length. Robert Burnett was extensively concerned in the Quaker settlement of East Jersey, and became one of the proprietors of that province, and it appears that his daughter went with him to America, but was sent back to complete her education in Scotland, where she married.

At the time of William Montgomerie's marriage his father, Hugh, appears to have had a considerable estate, some of which he settled on his son, but financial reverses not now understood led them to dispose of the estate of Brigend in 1692 to their cousin John Montgomerie, of Beoch. In 1701-2 William crossed the ocean with his young family, and settled on Doctor's creek, in Monmouth county, East Jersey, where by deed of May 20, 1706, he purchased five hundred acres of land from his father-in-law, Robert Burnett, of Freehold. Eglinton, the name of this estate, is situated about two miles from Allentown. In their new home the family appear to have united with the Friends and become members of the meeting at Crosswicks, Burlington county. William was living in 1721, but the date of his death is unknown. He had children: Robert, Anna, Elizabeth, William, James, Alexander and Jane.

28. Robert Montgomerie, of Eglinton, was born, probably at Brigend, in the year 1687, and was married at Burlington, February 8, 1709-10, to Sarah Stacy, of that place. She is believed to have been the daughter of Henry Stacy, of the hamlet of Spitalfields, parish of Stepney, Middlesex, whose will, dated at that place, March 28, 1684, was admitted to probate in Burlington county, on March 15, 1702. She died March 9, 1743-4, and was buried at Crosswicks. Her husband made his will August 28, 1762, which was probated October 1, 1766. They resided at Eglinton and had children, Mary, Elizabeth, William, Sarah, William 2d, Anna, James and John.

29. James Montgomerie, eldest son of Robert, was born at Eglinton, February 26, 1720, and married May 15, 1746, Esther Wood, daughter of John and Susan Wood, and granddaughter of William Wood, of Leicester, who came to America in the "Flie-boat Martha," in the autumn of 1677. James died in 1759-60, and was doubtless buried at Crosswicks. He had children, Rebecca, Robert, John, William, Sarah, James and Joseph.

30. John Montgomery, son of the last, was born at Eglinton, July 7, 1750. Before he was twenty years of age he parted with his share of his grandfather's estate and removed to Philadelphia, where he and his brother William subsequently united themselves together in mercantile pursuits. In the Revolutionary war he took part in military matters and was a member of the First City Troop of Cavalry from 1777 to 1787, but the hardships of a soldier's life undermined his health and eventually ended his life, March 16, 1794, when he left behind him the reputation of great integrity as a merchant.

He married, November 3, 1785, Mary, daughter of Jonathan Crathorne, of Philadelphia, formerly of the West Indies, and by birth an Englishman, who married, August 16, 1760, Mary Keen, descended from Joran Kyn or Keen, an early Swedish settler on the Delaware. Mrs. Montgomery was born August 4, 1765, and died October 15, 1848. She had three children, Austin, James and John Crathorne.

31. John C. Montgomery, the youngest son, was born in Philadelphia, November 1, 1792, where he resided many years, having also lived some years on his estate of Eglinton, on the North river, and after 1855 in New York city. He married, November 25, 1817, Elizabeth Henrietta, only daughter of Henry Philips, of Philadelphia. She died July 11, 1850, leaving a large family. Her husband married secondly, Caroline, only daughter of Nehemiah Rogers, of New York, November 27, 1855. By his first wife he had children, John P., Henry E., Oswald Crathorne, Austin James, James E., Charles Howard, Benjamin Chew, Hardman Philips and Mary Crathorne.

32. Oswald C. Montgomery, born August 24, 1822, married October 3, 1849, Catharine Gertrude, daughter of George W. Lynch, of New York, and resided in Philadelphia. Issue:

Charles Howard, born July 16, 1850.

George Lynch, born October 28, 1851; died February 22, 1852.

Henry Eglinton, born December 25, 1852, died February 10, 1877.

Mary Ann, born April 1, 1854; died May 30, 1857.

33. Thomas Lynch, born March 4, 1862.

SAMUEL MARSHALL. 1. John Marshall, from Elton, in Derbyshire, England, settled in Darby township in 1687, but it is thought his arrival was at an earlier date, and that he had lived some time in Blockley township, Philadelphia county. He was married 10 mo., 19, 1688, at Darby Meeting, to Sarah Smith, their marriage being the first solemnized in the meeting house there. She was a sister to Thomas Smith, also a settler in Darby, who came from Croxton, in the county of Leicester, England. John Marshall obtained sixty-four acres of land on Cobb's Creek, in Upper Darby, in 1689, and one hundred and fifty acres adjoining to the southward in 1692. He took an active part in the affairs of the meeting, of which he was an overseer, and served in the various township offices. In his will he speaks of Abraham Marshall, of Bradford, as his cousin. To his wife he devised one hundred and ten acres of land in Blockley. His death occurred 9 mo., 13, 1729, and that of his widow 5 mo., 16, 1749. They had three children:

2. John, b. 6 mo., 16, 1690; d. 8 mo., 14, 1749; m. Joanna Paschall, and Elinor Shenton, a widow.

3. William, b. 2 mo., 11, 1692; d. 1727; m. Mary Sellers.

4. Thomas, b. 12 mo., 10, 1694; d. about 1740-1. See below.

Thomas Marshall, last named, on attaining his majority removed to Concord township and settled on a farm just south of the present Concordville. He was married 2 mo., 24, 1708, at Concord Meeting, to Hannah Mendenhall, born 6 mo., 11, 1696, died about 1770, daughter of Benjamin and Ann (Pennell) Mendenhall, of Concord. In 1727 they erected a house on their farm, which has been occupied continuously by their descendants. Hannah Marshall married a second husband, Peter Grubb, ironmaster, and survived him several years. Thomas Marshall had nine children:

5. Ann, b. 9 mo., 18, 1719; m. Francis Hickman.

6. Sarah, b. 11 mo., 4, 1721; died young.

7. Benjamin, b. 11 mo., 31, 1722; m. Hannah Underwood.

8. Moses, b. 1 mo., 22, 1725; died young.

9. Thomas, b. 7 mo., 26, 1727; d. about 1759-60; see below.

10. Martha, b. 10 mo., 28, 1729; d. 10 mo., 13, 1804; m. William Levis.

11. Hannah, b. 2 mo., 23, 1733; m. John Way, of Kennet.

12. John, b. 11 mo., 22, 1734-5; d. about 1815; see forward.

13. Mary, b. 6 mo., 4, 1738; married Caleb James.

Thomas Marshall (9) was married 8 mo., 19, 1752, at Concord Meeting, to Edith Newlin, daughter of Nathaniel and Esther (Metcalfe) Newlin, of Concord. He inherited one-half of his father's lands and settled thereon, but died while still a young man, after which his widow was married, 10 mo., 8, 1762, to Samuel Schofield, of Bucks county, Pennsylvania, who took her and her children to that place. The latter were four in number.

14. Esther, who married Thomas Allibone.

15. Hannah, who died young.

16. Thomas, b. 12 mo., 8, 1756; d. 8 mo., 13, 1844; see below.

17. Phebe, m. Stephen Smith, 1775, and Joseph Heston, 1780.

Thomas Marshall (16) in 1773 went from Bucks county to the vicinity of Uwchlan, Chester county, as an apprentice to the tanning business, and when of age settled at the paternal home, where he established a tanyard. He was married 4 mo., 21, 1779, at Concord Meeting, to Mary Grubb, born 3 mo., 25, 1756, died 11 mo., 24, 1791, daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Hewes) Grubb, of Pennsbury. He was married a second time, 8 mo., 12, 1795, to Margaret Swayne, daughter of William and Ann Swayne, of East Marlborough, but had no children by this marriage. By the first there were five:

18. Edith, b. 1 mo., 16, 1780; m. 5 mo., 6, 1802, Isaacher Schofield.

19. Samuel, b. 2 mo., 2, 1782; buried 11 mo., 19, 1786.

20. Thomas, b. 6 mo., 1, 1784; m. 11 mo., 20, 1805. Sidney Hatton.

21. Rebecca, b. 7 mo., 16, 1786; d. 7 mo., 3, 1828; m. Jesse Chandler.

22. Samuel, b. 3 mo., 24, 1789; d. 8 mo., 27, 1832.

Samuel Marshall (22) was married 11 mo., 25, 1812, at Londongrove Meeting, to Philena Pusey, born 5 mo., 24, 1794, died 12 mo., 30, 1842, daughter of Ellis and Abigail (Brinton) Pusey, of Londongrove. She was married a second time, 4 mo., 5, 1837, to Samuel Wollaston, of Wilmington, Delaware. Samuel Marshall carried on the tanning business at the homestead in Concord until his death. His children were nine in number:

23. Margaret, b. 7 mo., 29, 1813; d. 6 mo., 10, 1896; m. Morris Palmer.

24. Ellis P., b. 10 mo., 22, 1815; d. 7 mo., 20, 1892; m. Anna Bartram, and Mary Scarlett.

25. Thomas, b. 8 mo., 26, 1818; d. 8 mo., 22, 1880; m. Emily Paxson.

26. Samuel, b. 11 mo., 24, 1820; m. Elizabeth Grubb and Emma Hager.

27. Nathan, b. 2 mo., 20, 1823; d. 9 mo., 6, 1825.

28. William, b. 12 mo., 15, 1825; d. 1 mo., 19, 1826.

29. William Pusey, b. 12 mo., 21, 1826; d. 10 mo., 17, 1901; see below.

30. Henry, b. 2 mo., 28, 1829; d. 12 mo., 1854, unmarried.

31. Edward Stabler, b. 10 mo., 5, 1832, married Sarah Thompson Johnson.

Ellis Pusey Marshall (24) resided on the old homestead farm in Concord, which contained about two hundred and forty acres, and which is said to have been in possession of the family since 1698. He was a farmer all his life and an influential citizen of his county and township, as also a useful member of Concord Friends' Meeting. His home was for many years looked upon as a sort of headquarters for Friends in and visiting that neighborhood. In politics he was for many years a Prohibitionist, and in 1886 was their candidate for congress.

Samuel Marshall (26) went to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in 1847, and engaged in banking in a modest way, being joined in partnership two years later by Charles F. Ilsley. In 1887 the private banking house of Marshall & Ilsley was changed to a State bank under the same name. On July 15, 1901, on account of age and failing health, he resigned from the offices of president and director of the oldest bank in continuous existence in the state, and he the oldest banker in point of active management. He also established and was for many years the president of the State Bank at Madison, Wisconsin, where he resided for a time after his second marriage. He retains his membership with Friends of Philadelphia, and regularly attends their annual gatherings in that city.

William P. Marshall (29) was less than six years old at his father's death and lost his mother while still a boy. He entered the Friends' Boarding School at Westtown, in 1839, and spent about three years at that institution. Then he began teaching, first at the old octagon school house by Birmingham Meeting, next at the Friends' school at Darby, 1843 to 1849, and for two years at Benjamin Swayne's school in Londongrove. He was married 4 mo., 3, 1851, at her father's house, to Frances Lloyd Andrews, born 1 mo., 8, 1826; daughter of James and Hannah (Lloyd) Andrews, of Darby, her father being an associate judge of the courts of Delaware county. They settled on a farm in West Goshen township, near West Chester, which he had already purchased, but he did not entirely abandon the avocation of a teacher, for after this date he taught the public school north of Oaklands cemetery one winter, and for two winters was in charge of the Friends' school on North High street, West Chester. He now turned his attention more closely to farming and the milk business, which he followed successfully until 1871, at which time he sold off his dairy and rented a large part of the farm to Hoopes Brothers & Thomas for nursery purposes, and entered the office of the late Walter Hibbard, with whom he was associated in conveyancing and money loaning until the death of the latter, in 1879. He continued in the same office, on North High street, until the time of his death, although for some years the business was almost wholly managed by his son, Samuel.

He was appointed one of the directors of the National Bank of Chester County on November 11, 1884, to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Robert Neely, and was elected annually thereafter. On January 13, 1893, he was elected by the other members of the board to the position of vice-president, a newly created office, and on March 27, 1894, he succeeded Washington Townsend, deceased, as president, the latter having in turn succeeded Walter Hibbard. From this time till his death William P. Marshall gave his almost undivided attention to the bank. When the Dime Savings Bank of Chester County was organized and chartered in 1890, William P. Marshall was elected its first vice-president and by annual election continued in that office. He was a member of the board of trustees of the West Chester State Normal School from 1872 to 1885, and secretary of the board from 1876 to 1882. For twenty-four years he was a member of the board of prison inspectors and was in office at the time of his death. As a member of the Society of Friends he was a constant attender of the meetings on High street and one of the trustees of the property.

Beginning to farm while yet a teacher, he pursued this occupation for twenty years. He knew from actual experience all the trials, the disappointments and the joys of those who draw their support from the soil. While occupied in the school room and on the farm, he earned the exalted position among his fellow men, which during the more public career of his later years he habits, but rather because he felt it a duty to himself and to others to be cheerful. He loved the sunlight and hailed it daily as God's first gift to the world. He loved the country, the trees, the flowers, the flocks and herds in the fields, and every changing aspect of the landscape. He had a firm belief in the goodness of his Maker, and honored him by a constant attendance at his so fully enjoyed. His position in life and his success did not descend to him from his ancestors, but he earned them both by his own labors.

He was one of God's noblemen, a man of inflexible honesty. It was because of this trait and his sound business judgment that widows and orphans intrusted him with their all for investment and the aged sought his advice and skill in the final disposal of their property. Being human, he might make mistakes, but no man would question the purity of his motives. As he was rigidly honest, so he was entirely without fear to do the right. He was persistently industrious. With the exception of a very short vacation every working day in the year found him at his post.

His daily life was pure, temperate, cheerful and religious; cheerful not from constitutional chosen place of worship. But in his religious life no narrowness nor uncharitableness appeared. He saw and valued the good in all men and in all religious creeds. He honored sincere men, but he had a supreme contempt for all sham, hypocrisy and for all which was in any way insincere. He possessed a tender heart and the sorrows and trials of the unfortunate called forth from him words and acts of sympathy. No worthy sufferer appealed to him in vain. In his family relations he was tender, sympathetic, loving; a true husband and parent, teaching both by precept and example. He had seven children:

32. Elizabeth Pusey, b. 7 mo., 15, 1852; unmarried.

33. Hannah Andrews, b. same date; unmarried.

34. Sarah Hoopes, b. 11 mo. 26, 1854; m. 11 mo., 3, 1880, John H. Darlington, farmer, of East Bradford. They have one child, William Marshall Darlington.

35. Margaret Palmer, born 2 mo., 24, 1856; married 4 mo., 14, 1880, Dr. George G. Groff, of Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, for twenty-five years a professor in Bucknell University, member of the State Board of Health thirteen years and of the Board of Agriculture ten years; sergeant major Spanish-American war, some time superintendent of public instruction in Puerto Rico, and director of vaccination there, author and lecturer, etc. They have five children: William Marshall, John Charles, Margaret Beaver, James Andrews and Frances Lloyd.

36. Frances Andrews, b. 1 mo., 10, 1859; m. 9 mo., 16, 1896, Franklin R. Strayer, of Reading, Pennsylvania, now professor of physics in New York city high school.

37. Philena, b. 5 mo., 11, 1862; d. 8 mo., 1901, unmarried.

38. Samuel, b. 12 mo., 21, 1863; unmarried.

Samuel Marshall, the only son and youngest child of William P. and Frances L. Marshall, was educated at the Friends' school, the West Chester State Normal School and the academy of Professor J. Hunter Worrall. He resides with his mother and sisters at the homestead, and is occupied with surveying, conveyancing and farming, and retains his father's office in West Chester. He was elected a member of the board of directors of the National Bank of Chester County, and of the trustees of the Dime Savings Bank to fill the vacancy caused by his father's death; he is a member of the board of trustees of the West Chester State Normal School, of the managers of the Chester County Hospital, and director of the Edison Electric Illuminating Company; a member of the Council of Pennsylvania Forestry Association; a life member of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, of the Chester County Historical Society, of the Pennsylvania Society, and of the Sons of the Revolution; a member of the Genealogical Society of Pennsylvania, and of the Colonial Society of same. He is also a member of High Street Friends' Meeting, and of some social organizations.

John Marshall (12), born in Concord, 11 mo., 22, 1734-5, died 11 mo., 30, 1815, son of Thomas and Hannah Marshall, was married 11 mo., 27, 1760, at Goshen Meeting, to Hannah James, daughter of Joseph and Hannah (Hickman) James, of Westtown. He resided in Birmingham before and after this marriage until after the death of his first wife, but removed to Kennett township about 1765. He was married again, 4 mo., 27, 1768, at Kennett Meeting, to Susanna Lamborn, born 4 mo., 7, 1749; died 3 mo., 3, 1839; daughter of Robert and Ann (Bourne) Lamborn, of Kennett. In this township he became possessed of considerable land, beside grist and saw mills. He was a member of Hockessin Meeting and of Kennett Monthly Meeting, in the affairs of which he took an active part. By his first marriage he had two children and by the last seven:

39. Mary, b. 10 mo., 11, 1761; m. 6 mo., 2, 1790, William Philips.

40. Martha, b. 5 mo., 5, 1764; died young or unmarried.

41. Thomas, b. 4 mo., 22, 1769; d. 2 mo., 2, 1851; m. Sarah Gregg.

42. Robert, b. 9 mo., 15, 1771; d. 8 mo., 13, 1859; see below.

43. William, b. 5 mo., 26, 1773; died young.

44. Hannah, b. 1 mo., 7, 1775; m. John Yeatman; d. 1 mo., 21, 1859.

45. Ann, b. 8 mo., 22, 1778; d. 5 mo., 26, 1862; m. John Scarlett.

46. Martha, b. 8 mo., 20, 1780; d. 1 mo., 3, 1811, unmarried.

47. William, b. 7 mo., 30, 1784; d. 1859; m. Margaret McCammon.

Robert Marshall (42) was married 11 mo., 22, 1804, at Hockessin Meeting, to Mary Hoopes, born 3 mo., 16, 1781; died 7 mo., 30, 1847, daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Bane) Hoopes, of Goshen. He inherited the homestead, but after his father's death removed to Mill Creek Hundred, where he and his wife died and were buried at Hockessin Meeting. They have five children:

48. Caleb H., b. 9 mo., 11, 1806; d. 12 mo., 16, 1888; m. Jane P. Thompson.

49. John, b. 10 mo., 7, 1808; d. 5 mo., 23, 1885; m. Sarah Philips and Mary Harlan.

50. Martha, b. 8 mo., 1, 1810; m. 1 mo., 14, 1847, Thomas Hannum.

52. Thomas S., b. 3 mo. 8., 1818; d. 3 mo., 6, 1887.

Thomas S. Marshall (52) was married 10 mo., 14, 1846, at her mother's home, to Mary Way, born 11 mo., 9, 1821, daughter of Moses, deceased, and Susanna (Wilkinson) Way, of Pennsbury. They resided near Hockessin Meeting, and had three children:

53. Israel W., b. 12 mo., 29, 1850; see below.

54. Mary, b. 3 mo., 1, 1853; m. 2 mo., 26, 1879, Dr. Taylor Mitchell.

55. Thomas E., b. 9 mo., 20, 1855.

Israel W. Marshall (53) was married 10 mo., 17, 1877, to Elizabeth Mitchell, born 12 mo., 2, 1854, daughter of Joseph and Hannah M. (Cloud) Mitchell, the latter being the daughter of William and Elizabeth (Yeatman) Cloud, and granddaughter of John and Hannah (Marshall) Yeatman.

THE CARR FAMILY. Joseph Carr, deceased, during a long and active life a highly esteemed resident of Delaware, was a native of England, born in the parish of Alledale, in the county of Northumberland, December 20, 1799. He emigrated to America in 1818, landing in Philadelphia, July 10th. Soon after coming to the country, he settled on a farm at Carcroft, a suburb of Wilmington, Delaware. He was a man of ordinary education, but of strong character. He devoted himself assiduously to the cultivation and improvement of his property, and his industry, frugality and sound judgment enabled him to accumulate a comfortable estate.

At New Castle, Delaware, April 16, 1828, he married Barbara Sheperdson, who was born February 16, 1807, in the parish of Lowthrop, in the county of York, England, and who landed in America, June 12, 1819. She was a daughter of Richard and Mary (Thompson) Shepherdson, who were married February 15, 1796. Richard Shepherdson died September 19, 1826, and his widow survived him many years, dying at the home of her son-in-law, at Clover Hill, Delaware, August 18, 1854.

Mr. Carr died October 28, 1851, at a quarter of eight in the morning, and was buried on the 31st day of the same month, in the cemetery of the Union Meeting House at Brandywine Hundred, Delaware. His widow survived him twenty-eight years, dying April 2, 1879, at twenty minutes to four in the morning, at Sumyside, near Claymont, in the seventy-second year of her age. They were the parents of the following children:

1. Joseph Carr, Jr., born at Hare's Corner, New Castle county, Delaware, March 4, 1829. He was married in October, 1855, to Ellen Grubb, of Brandywine Hundred, Delaware, at St. Stephen's church, on Tenth street, near Chestnut, Philadelphia.

2. Mary Sheperdson Carr, born at Brandywine Hundred, New Castle county, Delaware, November 13, 1831; she was married May 1, 1855, to William P. Lodge, of the village named.

3. Margaret Ann Carr, born at Brandywine Hundred, January 30, 1835. She was married at Calvary Chapel, June 22, 1868, to George Ord McMullin, of San Francisco, California.

4. Elizabeth Virginia Carr, born at Brandywine Hundred, February 9, 1838. She was married April 27, 1865, to James G. Shaw, Jr., of Chester, Pennsylvania; he was the only son of James G. and E. Virginia Shaw, and was born March 8, 1869. Of this marriage was born a daughter, Mary Eyre Shaw, December 26, 1872. The mother died at 247 South Seventeenth street, Philadelphia, at ten o'clock on Sunday morning, April 18, 1890.

5. Ravanna Barbara Carr, born in Brandywine Hundred, November 22, 1840, who became the wife of Frank Graff.

6. Lucy Gould Carr, born at Brandywine Hundred, June 5, 1845. She was married to George Washington Rexasmer, at eight o'clock in the evening, of May 15, 1893, at No. 247 South Seventeenth street, Philadelphia, by the Rev. Leverett Bradley, Rector of St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal church. Mr. Rexasmer died at his home, No. 329 South Sixteenth street, Philadelphia, at 3:27 a. m., Saturday, November 4, 1899, and was buried at Woodland cemetery, in the family lot on Tuesday, November 7, 1899, at 2 p. m.

7. Ida Harvey Carr, born at Brandywine Hundred, October 19, 1850. She was married to Joseph Barnard Wilson, June 19, 1870, at the Church of the Savior, Thirty-eighth street, near Chestnut, West Philadelphia. Their children were: 1. Margaret Hall Wilson, born December 28, 1873, at No. 3713 Walnut street, West Philadelphia. 2. John Frederick Wilson, born March 21, 1876, at No. 3513 Hamilton street, West Philadelphia, and died November 14, 1880. 3. Rosalie Edwarada Wilson, born April 12, 1884, on Filbert street, above Broad, Philadelphia.

Barbara Ravanna Carr, fifth child and fourth daughter of Joseph and Barbara (Shepherdson) Carr, was afforded a liberal education in the city of Wilmington, Delaware, being a pupil at the academy conducted under the personal and efficient supervision of Miss Grifushaw. She was married March 10, 1863, at Trinity church, Wilmington, Delaware, to Frank Graff, of Claymont, Delaware.

Frank Graff was born in Philadelphia on September 11th, a son of Charles Graff, Jr., and Fannie C. Hulme. His father was a descendant in the fourth generation from Jacob Graff, Sr., born in 1727, in Hildersheim, Germany. Jacob Graff came to America in 1741, at the age of fourteen years, and died in 1780. He was married in 1750. Jacob Graff, Jr., one of his ten children, was born in 1751, and died in 1793; in 1774 he married Mary Shimckle, and they were the parents of two children—Frederick, born in 1775, and Charles, Sr., born in 1779, died in 1846. Charles Graff, Sr., was a supercargo to Canton, China. He was a man of scholarly and artistic tastes, and was owner of one of the finest private collections of paintings in Philadelphia. In 1808 he married Ann Maurer, who bore him eight daughters and four sons. Charles Graff, Jr., of the last named family, was for the greater part of his life connected with the Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore Railroad, as private secretary to President Felton. He married Fannie C. Hulme, a daughter of John Hulme, who came from Bolton, England. Of this marriage were born one daughter and three sons, and of the latter was

Frank Graff. The following named children were born to Frank and Barbara Ravanna (Carr) Graff:

1. Barbara Carr Graff, born in Middletown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, February 4, 1864. She was married to Lieutenant Harrison A. Bispham, at the church of the Ascension, Claymont, Delaware, at noon, June 30, 1893, by the Rev. W. H. Graff and Mr. Hayden. She died leaving two children, Barbara Carr and Edward Koons Bispham, and her remains were cremated and buried in Newark Union Cemetery.

2. Frances Hulme Graff, born in Middletown, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, November 11, 1865. She was married September 23, 1886, to H. W. Sinclair, of Kennett Square, and to them were born four children: Lucy Carr Sinclair, born June 7, 1887, in Birmingham township, Pennsylvania; 2. Ethelwyn Sinclair, born April 25, 1889, at Sycamore Bank, Kennett Square, Pennsylvania; 3-4. Horace Graff Sinclair and Frank Graff Sinclair, born October 20, 1891, in Birmingham township, Pennsylvania.

3. Joseph Carr Graff.

4. Frank Wilson Graff, who married Ella Brown, of Claymont, Delaware, but now deceased.

5. Sarah Hiester Graff, born September 2, 1883, in Birmingham township, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Graff, mother of the family named, is a woman of clear intellect and refined sensibilities, and her life as wife and mother has been a model of affection and fidelity.

RICHARD R. DARLINGTON. Joseph Darlington appears among the taxables of Aston township in 1715 as a single man. How much earlier he may have been there is uncertain, as the previous tax lists are lost. Being in the same township with Abraham Darlington it would seem probable that they were related, yet the absence of any allusion to Joseph in the letters received by Abraham indicates that the relationship was not very close. The next list of taxables preserved is for 1718, when Joseph is found in Goshen township and also in Willistown, which may imply that he had property in both. In 1719 he was still in Goshen and unmarried, but in 1721 his name is among the married householders of Caln township, where he continued till his death. In 1737 he was also taxed in Nantmeal, from which it is inferred that he owned property in that township. The memorandum book of John Taylor, surveyor and conveyancer, shows that about 1731 Joseph Darlington and Mary, his wife, conveyed two hundred acres of land to Thomas Smedley. This was probably in Willistown township, but the deed not being recorded the location is uncertain.

The lands of Joseph Darlington in Caln township comprised two hundred and fifty acres on the western branch of Brandywine. By subsequent division of townships it became a part of East Caln, then of Brandywine, and later of West Brandywine. A Farm Map, 1883, shows the land in possession of Shepherd H. Hunt, William Buchanan, Albin H. Reid and Isaac Swinehart.

The maiden name of Joseph's wife has not been discovered; perhaps she was related to the Irwin family. He died intestate and letters of administration were granted to Mary Darlington, his widow, February 28, 1748-9. Her sureties were Samuel McCree and Robert Irwin. To what religious denomination the family belonged is uncertain, though their associations seem to have been with the Presbyterians, and they were not far from the Brandywine Manor church.

Children of Joseph and Mary Darlington:

Grace, born about 1723; died December 19, 1783; married William Irwin.

Robert, of whom hereafter.

Mary, married to Samuel White, of East Caln. Elizabeth, a legatee mentioned in the will of John Irwin, of Caln township, 1728, died young or without issue.

Robert Darlington married, but the name of his wife is unknown. In 1764 he was assessed in East Caln with one hundred and thirty acres and buildings, seventy acres of woodland, four horses, five cattle and six sheep. In 1774 he had the same land, four horses, three cattle, six sheep. He thus appears to have been in possession of the lands of his father. Letters of administration on his estate were granted June 6, 1777, to his eldest son, Joseph Darlington, as he wrote his name. Robert appears to have leased some property in Northumberland county prior to his death. In 1788 his sister Mary White petitioned the Orphans' Court for a division of her father's estate, and it was awarded that Grace Irwin's heirs should have one-fourth, those of Robert Darlington two-fourths, and Samuel and Mary White the other fourth part. Robert Darlington left six children:

Joseph, living in Frederick county, Virginia, in 1787.

William, living in Brandywine township in 1795.

John, of whom see below.

Abraham, born about 1764; living and unmarried in 1795.

Mary, married George Ardery; both living in 1795.

Jane, born about 1768, married William Major, of West Caln.

John Darlington, born about 1756, died in Brandywine township, January 29, 1833; married Elizabeth Irwin, daughter of Theophilus and Rosanna Irwin of that place. She died March 14, 1845, in her ninety-fifth year, and both were buried at Brandywine Manor church. He became the owner of the homestead of his father and grandfather by purchase from the other heirs or their assigns. He had ten children:

Joseph, died February 4, 1810, in his twenty-sixth year; married Margaret Moore.

John, born February 17, 1786; died October 1, 1865; married Sarah Williams.

Theophilus, living in 1811, but died unmarried.

Robert, supposed to have died at New Orleans, unmarried.

Jane, married Elisha Butler and went westward.

Elizabeth, married James Curry and had several children.

Mary, married John Curry, and had a son James.

Abraham, see below.

Margaret, married Robert Dougherty, and had six children.

Rebecca, died January 9, 1826, aged twenty-six years, unmarried.

Abraham Darlington, born in Brandywine township July 26, 1795; died in East Goshen November 2, 1860; buried at Malvern cemetery; married at West Chester, July 31, 1831, Hannah Southward, born in East Goshen, October 22, 1808; died at Avondale, August 5, 1897; daughter of Amos and Sarah (Willits) Southward, of East Goshen. They had two children:

Benjamin W., born in West Goshen, May 14, 1846; married Lidie W. Palmer and they live at Chadds Ford Junction, he being in the railroad service.

Richard R. Darlington was born near Hershey's Mill, East Goshen, October 3, 1832. In May, 1852, he commenced work on the old State Road, now the Pennsylvania Railroad, as a trackman, under the supervision of Colonel J. B. Baker, superintendent of the road at that time. By reason of faithful and intelligent service he was promoted to foreman of construction and took charge of the sub-division from Whitford to Frazer. In 1858 he resigned and accepted the superintendency of the Barclay Railroad, in the coal region, but returned in 1868 and was appointed roadmaster of the West Chester and Philadelphia Railroad in August of that year. In 1870 he received the same appointment on the Baltimore Central road, and in 1880 on both of these roads. A little later he was made supervisor of these divisions, and so continued until October 31, 1902, when having reached the age limit of service in the Pennsylvania Railroad, he was retired, although still hale and hearty.

During his service of half a century he was under the following presidents, whose names are and will continue to be familiar to the people of this county: First under the Board of State Canal Commissioners; then in consecutive order under J. Edgar Thomson, Thomas A. Scott, George B. Roberts, Frank Thomson and A. J. Cassatt. These represent the Pennsylvania system, while Marshall B. Hickman, Edward Hoopes and Henry Wood represented the West Chester & Philadelphia, and the Baltimore Central before their purchase by the Pennsylvania, and now known as the Central division of the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad. The final extent of Mr. Darlington's supervision was from Market street, Philadelphia to Octoraro Junction; from Lamokin to Wawa and thence to West Chester, and from Fernwood to Newtown Square. In these long years he has witnessed a remarkable development in the road bed, stations and equipment, and in the industries which have contributed to the business of these lines; and to the wise management of his warm friend Henry Wood he feels that much of the prosperity of what is called the Baltimore Central is due. In the daily performance of his duties Mr. Darlington has been the most familiar figure on the line, and his genial nature gained him hosts of friends, who, together with his fellow officials felt regrets at his retirement. On this occasion the twenty-five assistant supervisors under him presented him with a handsome "Grandfather's Clock."

He was married in Philadelphia, December 4, 1867, to Tamson R. Windle born in East Brandywine, September 28, 1841; died near Avondale, May 31, 1890; buried at Malvern cemetery; daughter of Jesse and Amy Ann (Gibson) Windle, last of Highland township. They settled on a farm in West Brandywine, moving thence to a farm in West Goshen, 1869; to West Grove village in 1871; to Avondale in 1873, and to Avon View Farm, nearby, in 1886. Here he is engaged in the management of his eighty acre farm, with a dairy of fine stock. In religion he is a Presbyterian and in politics a Democrat. He has one child, John Edgar Darlington, born April 7, 1869, married Lillian J. Dowlall, daughter of Joseph and Jane D. (Chalfant) Dowlall, of New Garden township. They have had four children, Joseph Windle, John E., Lillian J. and Richard R. Darlington.

JOSHUA LONGSTRETH GARRETT, now living a retired life in the borough of West Chester, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he has gained the respect and esteem of his neighbors and friends by his exemplary life and character, traces his ancestry to John and Mary Garrett, parents of the following named children, whose births and baptisms are taken from a Bible printed in 1634. "John garat was borne the 10 day Januari 1631 and baptized forteenth. garat was borne the 30th day of April 1640 baptized the third of May. Mari garat was baptized the fifteenth of May 1642. William garat borne 21 of August and baptized the third of September 1643. Catren garat baptized May 26 in the year of our lord god 1646. Thomas Garrat the sonne of John Garratt and Mary his wife was baptized in May the 17, 1649." Of these children, William married Ann Kerke, 2 mo., 19, 1668, probably at a Friends' Meeting, and resided at Harby, Leicester county, until 1684, when he came to Pennsylvania and settled in Darby.

Before leaving his native country, England, William Garrett, in conjunction with Samuel Levis purchased one thousand acres of land in Pennsylvania, by deeds of August 9, and 10, 1684. The land was later located in Willistown township, and here he resided up to a few years prior to his death, when he removed to Philadelphia. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Garrett: Ann, born at Hoose, December 4, 1668, died September 10, 1672; Mary, born at Hoose, September, 1670, married Abel Noble, 1692; Samuel, born at Harby, May 8, 1672, died January 4, 1743 or 1744; Hannah, born at Harby, April 23, 1674, married George Emlen, 1694; Sarah, born April 23, 1676, married Randal Croxson, February 8, 1702; Alice, born April 24, 1678, married Joseph Pennell, February 8, 1702; William, born February 4, 1679, died January 5, 1726 or 1727; Thomas, born February, 1681, died in December, 1716 or 1717, and John, born January 22, 1685 or 1686, died August 21, 1713.

Samuel Garrett, eldest son of William and Ann Garrett, married, in 1698, Jane Pennell, daughter of Robert and Hannah Pennell, of Middletown, and nine children were born to them. William Garrett, Jr., second son of William and Ann Garrett, married Mary Smith in 1709, and the following named children were born to them: John, Elizabeth, Isaac, Martha, Joshua, Mary, Hannah and William.

Isaac Garrett, grandfather of Joshua L. Garrett, was born in Willistown, Chester county, Pennsylvania, January 11, 1755. He was a farmer by occupation, owning one hundred and forty acres of choice land in his native township, where he resided all his life. In politics he was a Whig, and in religion a member of the Society of Friends. He married Elizabeth Thatcher, of South Carolina, who was born March 17, 1758. Their children were: Isaac, William, these two children were burned to death; Mary, Sarah, Edith, Amos, Isaac (2d) and William (2d). Mr. Garrett died January 12, 1837, and his wife passed away November 1, 1836.

Isaac Garrett, father of Joshua L. Garrett, was born on the old homestead in Willistown township, October 9, 1797, and his education was acquired at a private school in the neighborhood. He followed the occupation of his forefathers, that of farming, and his entire business career was devoted to the cultivation of a farm of one hundred and twenty acres of productive land. Politically he was formerly an old line Whig, but upon the formation of the Republican party joined that body. He served in the capacity of supervisor of the township, and took an active interest in all measures that had for their object the advancement and welfare of his locality. He adhered to the religious belief of his father, and was overseer of the Society of Friends for many years. On November 14, 1824, Mr. Garrett married Lydia L. Garrett, who was born December 6, 1801, a daughter of Abner and Rebecca (Maris) Garrett, the former named being born March 19, 1776, in Willistown township, son of Thomas Garrett, who was born in the same township, April 12, 1736. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Garrett: Joshua L., mentioned at length hereinafter; Elizabeth, born July 29, 1827, married Thomas G. Smedley, November 29, 1849, and died April 11, 1892; Wilmer, born August 19, 1831, died August 13, 1832; and Amos, born May 21, 1833, married Anna M. Chandler, April 25, 1861, and died December 30, 1902.

The father of these children died February 7, 1870, survived by his widow, who passed away April 14, 1879.

Joshua L. Garrett, eldest son of Isaac and Lydia Garrett, was born at the Garrett homestead on Ridley creek, Willistown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, August 19, 1825, and his educational advantages were derived at the district school, a boarding school situated near Morristown, New Jersey, which was conducted under the personal supervision of Professor Griskem, and at Professor Price's school, near West Chester, Pennsylvania. Being accustomed to the varied and exacting duties of farm life, he decided to adopt that occupation as his life work upon attaining young manhood. He remained on the homestead until 1850, then purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres near Sugartown, where he remained until March, 1893, being remarkably successful in the management of his broad acres. He then located in the borough of West Chester, and at the present time (1903) is enjoying the comforts and luxuries that are the appropriate reward of a long and useful life devoted to business pursuits. He is a man of rare ability of character, and this fact was recognized by his fellow townsmen, who chose him to serve in various local offices of trust. He has always been a loyal adherent of the policy of the Republican party, and served as supervisor one year, auditor of his township for four years, collector of state and county taxes, and has frequently been elected judge and inspector of elections.

On September 18, 1856, occurred the marriage of Mr. Garrett and Caroline Hoopes, who was born in Westtown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, October 15, 1826, the daughter of Ezra and Rebecca Hoopes. Ezra Hoopes, father of Mrs. Garrett, was born April 15, 1788, married Rebecca Atherton, who was born September 3, 1801, and four children were born of this marriage, namely: Edward Atherton, born March 1, 1824; Nathan, who died in infancy; Caroline, born October 15, 1826, wife of Joshua L. Garrett, and William Hoopes, born December 8, 1828, died December 9, 1894.

RALSTON ROSBROUGH HOOPES.

Among the representative citizens of West Chester, Pennsylvania, is to be mentioned the name of Ralston R. Hoopes, a prominent business man of many years experience, and a descendant of English Quaker stock, the progenitor of the American branch of the family being Joshua Hoopes, who about the year 1683, left his native town in Yorkshire, England, and settled in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, accompanied by his wife Isabel and three children, Daniel, Margaret and Christian Hoopes.

Abiah Hoopes, grandfather of Ralston R. Hoopes, was born on a farm in East Bradford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, March 13, 1758, and he acquired the limited education afforded by the district schools of that day. He was a farmer all his life, and was highly esteemed in the neighborhood for the firmness of his friendships and the interest he manifested in all matters pertaining to the improvement and upbuilding of that section of the state. He married Abigail Griffith, who was born December 21, 1755, a daughter of Nathan and Rachel (Williamson) Griffith, and their children were: Deborah, born February 21, 1782, died February 6, 1846; Joshua, born September 14, 1787, and Mary, born May 14, 1790, died September 21, 1859. Mr. Hoopes died July 10, 1819, and his widow passed away September 5, 1836.

Joshua Hoopes, father of Ralston R. Hoopes, was born on the old homestead in East Bradford township, September 14, 1787, and he attended the common schools of the neighborhood, where he acquired a practical education. Being reared upon a farm he possessed a thorough knowledge of all the details of agricultural life, and upon reaching man's estate devoted his entire time and attention to that occupation. He led an upright and exemplary life in all respects, was never a witness or had a case of his own in court, and fully merited the confidence and esteem of the community. In politics he was formerly an old line Whig, and subsequently an adherent of the Republican party, and in religious matters was a member of the Society of Friends. Mr. Hoopes was united in marriage to Lydia Woodrow, September 17, 1812, and the following named children were born to them: Joseph and Levi (twins), born May 27, 1813; Simcon, born July 14, 1816; Abbie Ann, born March 6, 1819; Ruth Anna, born December 27, 1821, and Joshua, born December 16, 1826. The mother of these children died April 26, 1827. Mr. Hoopes then chose for his second wife Ann Malin, who was born November 9, 1806, a daughter of Elijah and Catherine Malin. Their children were: Lydia Ann, born January 15, 1829; Elijah Malin, born February 15, 1831; Abiah Griffith, born July 26, 1833; Wilmer, born September 9, 1836; Ralston R., born September 27, 1838. Mr. Hoopes' death occurred September 26, 1873, and his wife died December 8, 1850.

Ralston R. Hoopes, youngest son of Joshua and Ann (Malin) Hoopes, was born on the ancestral estate in East Bradford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, September 27, 1838. His elementary education was obtained in the public schools of the township, and this was supplemented by a course of study at the Friends' Boarding School at Westtown, Chester county. He began his business career by establishing a general store in West Chester, which he conducted for about three years, after which he disposed of it very advantageously to himself, and in 1874 embarked in the coal business, which he has conducted up to the present time (1903). In political sentiment Mr. Hoopes is a Republican, and in religious views he is a member of the Orthodox Society of Friends.

On March 14, 1867, Mr. Hoopes married Mary Yearsley, who was born in West Caln township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, May 25, 1838, a daughter of Isaac and Rachel (Ash) Yearsley. Their children are: Edward Isaac, born in West Chester, April 27, 1869, educated in a select school and the Friends' Boarding School at Westtown, Pennsylvania, and resides with his parents; and William Ralston, born in West Chester, December 12, 1876, also acquired his education in a select school and the Friends' Boarding School at Westtown, resides with his parents, and is now assisting his father in the management of his coal business at West Chester, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Hoopes departed this life December 23, 1900.

COLONEL PAUL SCULL REEVES.
In the early days of the seventeenth century, even before the coming of William Penn, in 1660, the Reeves family emigrated from England and settled in New Jersey, a few miles south of Philadelphia, and Mark Reeves was among the first of that name to make the new world his home. His descendants have become very numerous, and among them have been many men and women of fine character and widespread influence.

The parents of Paul S. Reeves were Biddle and Sarah (Scull) Reeves, of near Woodbury, New Jersey, where Colonel Reeves was born, September 10, 1837. Receiving instructions at home until his ninth year, he was then sent to the famous Friends' School at Westtown, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he remained six years. Returning then to the parental home, he remained there three years. Then, November 11, 1854, he entered the employ of Reeves, Buck & Company, large iron manufacturers of Phoenixville and Philadelphia, continuing with the Phoenix Iron Company when the change of firm was made. By close attention to details he so thoroughly mastered all the various processes of iron manufacture that he was promoted to a superintendency of various departments of the works.

In 1867 Colonel Reeves entered into partnership with N. A. Pennypacker and D. Evans in the hardware business, in which he continued for two years. The sphere of action here, however, was too limited to afford him sufficient employment for his energies, and in 1869 he entered the brass foundry and smelting business at Broad and Catherine streets, Philadelphia. After his graduation from college, Alfred Scull Reeves, eldest son of Colonel Reeves, became a member of the firm now known as Paul S. Reeves & Son. This son died in 1900, and subsequently his brother, Samuel Kraemer Reeves, took his place in the business. It is timely to say here that the business has developed immensely under this firm's management, and is now one of the foremost of its kind in the country.

Colonel Reeves is a member of the Union League Club, the Art Club, the Trades League, and the Maritime Exchange of Philadelphia. He is also a trustee of the Phoenixville Hospital, in the building and management of which he has had the ardent and untiring assistance of Mrs. Reeves. In politics Colonel Reeves is a Republican. His military title is derived from his appointment by Governor Pennypacker as lieutenant-colonel and aide-de-camp on his staff, February 18, 1903.

Colonel Reeves was married, October 19, 1859, to Miss Katurah Kraemer. Two children remain, a son and daughter, both of whom are married.

J. PRESTON THOMAS, one of the most active and useful citizens of West Chester, is a representative in the seventh generation of a family which has been prominently identified with the history of Pennsylvania from the earliest colonial times.

The founder of the American branch of the family, Richard ap Thomas, was a native of Whitford Garne, in North Wales, where his family had been landholders for several generations, possessing a freehold of three hundred pounds, which large amount of property entitled them to recognition as gentlemen, and having privileges under the game act. A man of strong character, he became weary of the life of pleasure and frivolity to which those of his station in life gave themselves, and united with the Society of Friends, whose principles and conduct awoke his admiration, and he became one of their most consistent and exemplary members. His love for religious and political freedom and his far-sighted appreciation of the opportunities open in America to him and his associates, determined him to there make his permanent home, and so determined and confident was he that he became a landlord in the new land before he had viewed it. He purchased five thousand acres of land from William Penn, paying therefor the sum of one hundred pounds, and obtaining deeds of lease and release dates July 24-25, 1681. His wife and daughter could not be reconciled to his venturesome project, and remained at home, while he, with his son Richard and a number of dependants sailed for Philadelphia in 1683, but soon after their arrival, the father sickened and died.

Richard ap Thomas was only ten years old when he was thus deprived of his parent. Those whom his father had befriended, affording them passage to America and establishing them in homes, treated the helpless boy with contumely, made poor provision for him, and, when his ready means were exhausted, cast him off. The lad, however, displayed true manly qualities. He procured Lloyd, the lieutenant-governor of the province, to become his guardian, and was enabled, through the sale of some of his land, to obtain a literary and medical education, and he was for many years a busy and useful practitioner. On coming of age, he located his father's land patent in larger part in the Chester Valley, and one thousand and sixty-five acres in the immediate vicinity of West Chester. Setting off for himself a six-hundred-acre tract, which is, in part, the present site of the city of West Chester, he sold the remainder in small farms to a few who he would have for neighbors, building his own home near the wigwams of the Indians, whose dogs would not allow the approach of the wild beasts with which the region was infested. In

Richard (3), only son of Dr. Richard and Grace (Atherton) Thomas, was born February 22, 1713, and died September 22, 1754. He was married, February 10, 1739, at Goshen Meeting, to Phebe, born August 26, 1717, daughter of George and Mary Ashbridge. She bore five children—Mrs. Lydia Trimble, Mrs. Grace Trimble, Richard, Jr., George and Mrs. Hannah Trimble. After the death of her first husband she married William Trimble, in 1754, and died June 14, 1784.

George (4), second son, was born December 21, 1746, and died August 17, 1793. His wife was Sarah, daughter of John and Jane Roberts; she was born January 1, 1750, and died February 20, 1840, having attained the venerable age of ninety years. She was the mother of nine children—Mrs. Jane Preston, Phebe, Hannah, Lydia, John R., Elizabeth, George, Mrs. Sarah Thomas and Anna.

John R. Thomas (5), eldest son of George (4) and Sarah (Roberts) Thomas, was born August 29, 1781, and died on April 7, 1856, aged seventy-five years. He married, at Downingtown Meeting, November 19, 1806, Elizabeth, daughter of Richard and Elizabeth Downing, of East Caln; she was born October 10, 1783, and died October 18, 1810, leaving one child, George. After her death, Mr. Thomas married Martha Newbold, who died November 30, 1816.

George (6), only child of John R. (5) and Elizabeth (Downing) Thomas, was born September 9, 1808. He was reared upon the paternal farm, and was afforded an excellent education. He pursued his literary studies at Strode's Boarding School and the Germantown Academy. He then made a preparatory study of medicine, and completed his course in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which he was graduated in 1829, the year of attaining his majority. He then visited Europe, primarily to gain further professional knowledge in the leading colleges and hospitals. On his return home he engaged in the practice of his profession, but his strong predilection for horticulture led him into the latter field in preference to his profession. Aside from this favorite pursuit, his fine literary taste, scholarly abilities and pleasing address made him an ornament to the most cultured circles of the day. He possessed ample property, and was a director in the Bank of Chester County, in succession to his father. He was an exemplary member of the Society of Friends. In politics, he was a Whig until the dissolution of that party, and he was numbered among the original members of the Republican party, to which he was drawn by his abhorrence of slavery and his strong love for the Union of the States. He died September 26, 1887, in the eightieth year of his age, and his remains were entombed in the Friends' burying-ground at Downingtown. He was married, October 20, 1841, to Anna Mary, born October 23, 1815, daughter of John W. and Sibilla K. (Price) Townsend. Of this union were born five children—J. Preston; George, born August 5, 1845; Charles, born October 27, 1848; John R., who died when two years old, and Elizabeth D., who died at the age of four years.

J. Preston Thomas (7), eldest child of Dr. George and Anna Mary (Townsend) Thomas, was born August 7, 1842, upon the farm where he now resides, and to which his title is most remarkable, a portion of the property having descended to him from Richard ap Thomas, through six generations, without a single transfer by deed. He received an academical education in a private classical school taught by a graduate of Dickinson College, and completed his literary studies at Haverford College. He engaged in farming on a portion of the original tract, comprising one hundred and eighty-three acres of exceedingly fertile land, which he has brought to an excellent condition, and a portion of which he devotes to the raising of the best strains of domestic animals. Mr. Thomas is also actively interested in the National Bank of Chester County, in which he has been a director since 1870, and various other business interests engage a share of his attention.

Mr. Thomas has from time to time performed public duties of great usefulness. During the Civil war he enrolled himself among the military forces of the state, and performed duty at various times, particularly at the time of the invasion by the rebel army under General Lee. He has given earnest and intelligent attention to educational affairs, and has been for many years a member of the school board and a portion of the time secretary of that body. He is a trustee of the West Chester State Normal School, and a member of the board of managers of Haverford College. He is a member of the board of managers of the Preston Retreat, at Philadelphia, and for the past sixteen years has been a director of the poor of Chester county, and connected with various other monetary and charitable institutions of Philadelphia and Chester county. In religion he is a birthright member of the Society of Friends, and his political affiliations are with the Republican party.

HICKMAN FOUNTAIN.

HICKMAN FOUNTAIN. The Hickman Fountain, on the sidewalk opposite the Court House, is a massive piece of marble, six feet in height. It was built under the direction and at the expense of Mrs. John Hickman, whose husband was a distinguished member of Congress from this district. It was erected in 1869.

Mr. Thomas was married, December 13, 1866, to Miss Hannah J. Gibbons, a daughter of Abraham and Martha P. Gibbons, of Coatesville, and to them were born three children—Martha G., George (3d) and Anna M. Thomas. George Thomas (3d) married, October 3, 1903, Miss Ethel Gause, daughter of Horace Gause, of Wilmington, Delaware.

EDWARD DARLINGTON, an esteemed resident and business man of Pennsbury township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, was born in Middletown township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, 12 mo., 2, 1871, third son of Edward and Mary F. (Palmer) Darlington, and is a worthy representative of one of the oldest families in Chester county, the ancestral history of which appears at length elsewhere in these pages.

He was educated at Swarthmore College and was graduated from that noted institution in the class of 1890 with the degree of Bachelor of Science in Engineering. He then entered the employ of the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company, was engaged on the engineering corps during the construction of the Ohio extension, his work being located in Wayne county, West Virginia, and after six months' service he resigned and accepted a similar position in the office of the superintendent of the central division of the Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore Railroad Company, at Media, Pennsylvania. In 1894 he purchased the interest of his deceased brother, Charles P. Darlington, in the creamery at Chadds Ford, and with his brother, Jared Darlington, has since successfully conducted the same, achieving a large degree of success by their careful and trustworthy methods of conducting affairs. This enterprise, which has an average weekly output of four thousand pounds of butter, which finds a ready sale in the Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York and other markets, was established by the late Charles P. Darlington and one of the present owners, Jared Darlington. Mr. Darlington is a member of the Society of Friends, an adherent of the Republican party, and a member of Birmingham Grange, No. 1231, Patrons of Husbandry. He is a man of culture, has traveled very extensively, and owns a beautiful and attractive home in the vicinity of Chadds Ford station.

Mr. Darlington was united in marriage, 2 mo., 23, 1899, to Philena C. Arment, who was born 3 mo., 11, 1875, a daughter of the late John Arment and Elizabeth J. (Crossgrove) Arment, who resides at Chadds Ford, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. Their children are: Richard A., born 1 mo., 19, 1900, and Clifford P., born 4 mo., 14, 1902.

MATLACK. William Matlack, born about 1648, a carpenter in the employ of Daniel Wills, came with his master to the site of Burlington, New Jersey, October, 1677, being passengers on the "Kent," Gregory Marlowe, master. He was from Cropwell Bishop, a small village in Nottinghamshire, and in 1682 married Mary Hancock, from Brayles, in Warwickshire, aged about sixteen. They had children, John, George, Mary, William, Richard, Joseph, Timothy, Jane and Sarah. Of these, Timothy married Mary Haines, (1720) and was father of Colonel Timothy Matlack, sometime secretary of the Continental Congress and a prominent citizen of Philadelphia, one of the organizers of the "Free Quakers," who thought it right to take up arms to achieve independence.

Joseph Matlack, son of William, was married 6 mo., 1722, at Haddonfield Meeting, to Rebecca Haines, born 2 mo., 10, 1705; daughter of John and Esther (Borton) Haines. They brought a certificate from Haddonfield to Goshen Monthly Meeting, dated 5 mo., 14, 1729, which says they were "born & Educated with friends here from their youth upward & was married amongst us here & we do not find nor understand but that their conversation & behaviour has been orderly while with us." This was signed by seventeen men and twenty-two women. Rebecca's father had devised some land to her in Goshen township, and her brother Isaac Haines had been living here for some years, which was the inducement to settle in that place. Joseph died 11 mo., 1771. He had ten children: 1. Jemima, born 4 mo., 20, 1723; married James Pennell, 8 mo., 15, 1741; 2. Isaiah, born 2 mo., 25, 1725; died 1794; see below; 3. Nathan, born 3 mo., 16, 1727, married Mary Mercer, 12 mo., 14, 1749-50; 4. Ruth, born 12 mo., 23, 1729; married Thomas Sheward, 9 mo., 10, 1748; 5. Esther, born 6 mo., 23, 1733; married George Brinton, 11 mo., 27, 1753; 6. Jesse, born 10 mo., 2, 1735; died young or unmarried; 7. Jonathan, born 3 mo., 16, 1737; married Hannah Wain, 4 mo., 24, 1773; 8. Joseph, born 7 mo., 25, 1740; died young; 9. Amos, born 9 mo., 22, 1744; married Hannah Trego, 10 mo., 14, 1771; 10. Caleb, born 2 mo., 14, 1750; died young.

Isaiah Matlack (2) was married at the old Swedes church, Wilmington, to Mary, daughter of Jonathan and Margery Hunter, of Edgemont, for which marriage to one not a member he made acknowledgment to Goshen Monthly Meeting. By deed of 6 mo., 20, 1746, he purchased one hundred acres of land from John Burroughs and wife Phebe (sister to Rebecca Matlack), to which his parents added fifty acres by deed of 5 mo., 6, 1762, and these, with four acres and one hundred and forty perches purchased from his brother Jonathan, November 15, 1781, he and wife conveyed to their son George, February 23, 1785, for love and affection. Isaiah Matlack also purchased at sheriff's sale, by deed of February 22, 1768, a farm of one hundred and fifty acres which formed the northeast quarter of the future borough of West Chester. When the county seat was established at this place in 1786, he built the Green Tree tavern at the southwest corner of the farm. He and wife, by deed of 5 mo., 22, 1793, conveyed to their son Jesse, then or Christian Hundred, Delaware, 117½ acres of this land, together with the tavern. By will dated 4 mo., 28, 1794, he devised the homestead on which he then lived, containing one hundred and seventeen acres, to his son Jonathan; also twenty-one acres in West Chester. So far as known to the writer, his children were these: Benjamin, married to Ruth Bowen (grandparents of Benjamin M. Everhart and sisters); George, married to Anne Smedley; Hannah, married to Nathan Scholfield; Jesse, married to Sarah Phillips; Ann, married to Richard Fawkes; Jonathan, married to Sarah Smedley, and Mary, married to Jesse Smedley.

George Matlack, born 4 mo., 16, 1758; died 10 mo., 3, 1826; married in 1788, Anne Smedley, born 10 mo., 11, 1768; died 1 mo., 26, 1847; daughter of George and Patience (Mercer) Smedley, of Willistown. They settled on the land given him by his parents, adjoining the southeast corner of the borough of West Chester. They had ten children: 11. Sarah, born 3 mo., 7, 1789; died 7 mo., 7, 1856; married John Brinton; 12. Phebe, born 12 mo., 29, 1790; died 4 mo., 4, 1876; married Cyrus Hickman; 13. George S., born 2 mo., 5, 1793; died 4 mo., 15, 1797; 14. John S., born 1 mo., 23, 1795; died 1834; married Sarah Entriken; 15. Mary Ann, born 11 mo., 1, 1796; married Jacob Ehrenzeller; 16. Hannah, born 1 mo., 23, 1799; died 2 mo., 1802; 17. Priscilla G., born 6 mo., 12, 1801; died 4 mo., 26, 1882; married William Babb and Francis Hickman; 18. Joel, born 8 mo., 6, 1803; died 2 mo., 27, 1842; married Eliza Reed and Mary Hickman; 19. Thomas, born 2 mo., 25, 1806; died 7 mo., 27, 1882; married Eliza McFarlan; 20. George B., born 3 mo., 27, 1809; died 1 mo., 20, 1890.

George Brinton Matlack (20), born in West Goshen township, was married 9 mo., 20, 1832, in Philadelphia, by the Rev. John Chambers, to Susan Hickman, born 2 mo., 25, 1813; died 3 mo., 2, 1863; daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Battin) Hickman, of West Bradford, now Pocopson township. Second marriage, 6 mo., 23, 1870, to Susan M. Hickman, born 11 mo., 15, 1815; died 2 mo., 16; 1897; widow of James M. Hickman and daughter of Martin Wise, of Willistown.

He was educated at the neighborhood schools and at Jonathan Gause's Boarding School, and when married settled at the homestead, where he followed farming until 1869, when he retired to the borough of West Chester. While on the farm he served as school director and township auditor, and was a director of the poor of Chester county. In religion he affiliated most with the Society of Friends, though not in actual membership. His last years were spent in the home of his daughter, for a time in West Chester, and lastly on a farm in West Goshen. In politics he was at first a Whig and then a Republican. By his first wife he had four children: 21. Thomas Hickman, born 12 mo., 30, 1833; died 2 mo., 29, 1836; buried at Goshen Meeting; 22. George Thomas, born 4 mo., 23, 1836; died 11 mo., 14, 1877; married Sarah Anna Huey and left two children, Charles R., since deceased, and Lorena B. Matlack; 23. Mary Louisa, born 1 mo., 1, 1843; married 12 mo., 2, 1868, Abram Major Garrett, of West Chester, but since 1884 in West Goshen. They have had children, Horace, born 10 mo., 10, 1869; died 10 mo., 11, 1869; Helen M., born 7 mo., 21, 1873; George M., born 12 mo., 9, 1875; Howard Marshall, born 9 mo., 25, 1878; 24. Marshall Hickman, born 11 mo., 23, 1846; married 12 mo., 2, 1868, Sallie Henderson Matlack, born 1 mo., 8, 1848; daughter of George Smedley and Letitia A. (Henderson) Matlack, and granddaughter of Jonathan and Sarah (Smedley) Matlack. They have one child, Mabel Smedley, born 7 mo., 25, 1871; living with her parents.

Marshall H. Matlack was educated in the public schools, Friends' School, William F. Wyers' Scientific Institute, at West Chester, and at John Lock's Tremont Seminary, Norristown, Pennsylvania. At the age of nineteen he went to the Argentine Republic and engaged in the sheep-raising industry, but returned in 1868 and began farming at the homestead, which he continued for two and a half years and then located in West Chester, where he was engaged for four years in the grocery and agricultural supply trade. Since then he has been engaged, extensively in the agricultural implement trade. He is a director of the First National Bank of West Chester, and secretary of the board; is a trustee of the West Chester State Normal School; a director in the Penn Mutual Fire Insurance Company, at West Chester; a trustee of the Dime Savings bank of Chester County; a director of the West Chester Street Railway; the treasurer of the Chester County Agricultural Society, and has a large farm in Willistown township, which he supervises. He is a member of Thompson Lodge, No. 340, F. A. M., of which he is past master; a member of R. A. Howell Chapter, No. 202, R. A. M., of which he is past high priest; a member of St. Albans Commandery, No. 47,

Marshall S. May

Knights Templar. In politics he is a Republican. He has filled the position of deputy prothonotary of Chester county, and is regarded as a careful business man.

MARSHALL SCARLET WAY, who has been during a long and active career prominently identified with commercial and financial affairs in West Chester and vicinity, is a representative of old and highly respected New England ancestry.

The first emigrant of the name in his line was Henry Way, a native of England, born in 1583, who came in 1630 to Massachusetts, where he died, at Dorchester, in 1667. In lineal descent from him was Jacob Way, who settled in Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1737. His son, John, was born in New Garden township, February 11, 1772, and died August 17, 1848, aged seventy-six years. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and a farmer by occupation. He accumulated considerable property and was recognized as a man of sterling character. January 22, 1795, he married Hannah, a daughter of Jacob and Mary Heald.

Samuel Way, son of the parents last named, was born October 5, 1803, in Kennett township. He was reared on the paternal farm, but on attaining manhood he became a carpenter and builder, and was among the first in Philadelphia to use machinery in the manufacture of brick. He furnished material and constructed some of the most substantial edifices in the city, including the Catholic convent. In middle life he took up his residence in West Chester, and made it his home during the remainder of his life, and aided largely in the development of its material interests. For more than thirty years he was a director and surveyor of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Chester county. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and his political affiliations were with the Republican party. He married Mary Scarlett, born October 26, 1804, in Kennett Square; and they died respectively, December 6, 1871, aged nearly seventy years, and May 13, 1883, aged seventy-eight years.

Marshall S. Way, son of Samuel and Mary (Scarlett) Way, was born February 12, 1845, in the house which has always been his residence, on West Miner street, in West Chester. He was educated in the public schools and Wyer's Academy. He began the earning of his own livelihood as a clerk in the grocery and hardware store of Wood & Fairlamb. Five years later, with his savings and a borrowed sum, he bought the business which he conducted in partnership with T. Elwood Townsend for one year, when he sold his interest to Richard Thatcher. October 1, 1867, he formed a partnership with E. S. Mendenhall, and they purchased from Shoemaker & Robison a coal and lumber business, which at a later day passed into the ownership of Way brothers, Mr. Way having associated with himself his brother Samuel. Mr. Way was interested in this business for seven years, and during the same period, in association with four others, he erected a row of dwelling houses on Barnard street and another on South Darlington street, besides several fine buildings on West Miner street and a number of residences in other localities, to the betterment of their own fortunes and the great improvement of the city. In 1877 Mr. Way engaged in a real estate and loan business, which under his masterly management soon increased to large proportions, and eventually necessitated his removal to the commodious and well appointed rooms in the Everhart Building, on Market street, opposite the court house. In addition to his large local business in money loaning, dealing in city and farm realty, including building operations, rentals and fire insurance, Mr. Way makes a specialty of farm mortgages, and has invested safely and profitably considerable sums in the agricultural regions in the west. In all these operations, covering the widest possible field, he has invariably exhibited an intimate knowledge of conditions, excellent judgment and unswerving fidelity to the interests of his customers.

It is within the truth to say that Mr. Way has for years stood foremost in the advancement of the material interests of the community. He has afforded to his patrons unusual opportunities for safe and profitable investment of their surplus means. He has at the same time been constantly industrious and sagacious in the furtherance of municipal interests and enterprises of a semi-public nature. He was the originator of the electric street railway, and he was a leader in providing for the erection of the Assembly Building. He also has filled for many years the positions of vice-president of the First National Bank of West Chester, director of the Chester County Trust Company, director and member of the adjusting committee of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Chester County, trustee of the State Normal School of West Chester, director of the Assembly Association of West Chester, and a director of the Denney Tag Company of West Chester.

In 1877 Mr. Way was urgently solicited to become a member of the city council, but he declined. In 1885, after the abolition of the town meeting, he accepted an election as councilman from the South ward. In the following year he was elected chief burgess, and he was annually re-elected until 1897, when, by act of the legislature, the term of office was extended to three years, with the provision that the incumbent was ineligible for re-election. During all this long period of fifteen years the borough had no more popular or capable official. In his party no candidate was presented against him, and his official conduct received the unmeasured commendation of the people at large. As was said of him by an intimate friend, no man labored more industriously and constantly. From early to late he gave his attention to his public duties, always upholding the dignity and stability of the city government, and strictly enforcing the ordinances to the letter, yet without severity or magnifying his office. He has been frequently solicited to become a candidate for the legislature, but, ever averse to political distinction, has steadfastly declined, preferring to devote his entire effort to the advancement of the interests of his home city, and he has found a pleasing reward in the warm regard in which he is held by the cultured people whom he had served so long and well.

Mr. Way was married, on Christmas Day, 1867, to Miss Anna E. Smedley, a daughter of Bartholomew and Margaret (Hoopes) Smedley, of East Goshen township. The children born of this marriage were M. Warren and Channing Way.

BENJAMIN SHARPLESS, a well known and honored citizen of Birmingham township, Chester county, is a lineal descendant of the immigrant John Sharples (in which form the family name originally appears), who was a native of Cheshire county, England, and came to Pennsylvania, dying near Chester, 4 mo., 11, 1685. He married, 2 mo., 27, 1662, Jane Moor, perhaps a sister to Daniel Moor, of Hankelow, born 1638, and died near Chester, Pennsylvania, 9 mo., 1, 1722. All their eight children were born in England, namely: 1. Phebe, born at Mearemore, 10 mo., 20, 1663, died near Chester, Pennsylvania, 4 mo., 2, 1685, unmarried; 2. John, born at Blakenhall, 11 mo., 16, 1666, married Hannah Pennell; 3. Thomas, born at Hatherton, 11 mo., 2, 1668, died at sea 5 mo., 17, 1682; 4. James, born at Hatherton, 1 mo., 5, 1670-1, married Mary Edge and Mary Lewis; 5. Caleb, born at Hatherton, 2 mo., 22, 1673, died near Chester, Pennsylvania, 7 mo., 17, 1686, from the bite of a snake; 6. Jane, born at Hatherton, 6 mo., 13, 1676, died near Chester, Pennsylvania, 3 mo., 28, 28, 1685; 7. Joseph, born at Hatherton, 9 mo., 28, 1678, married Lydia Lewis.

John Sharples was an early convert to the doctrines of the Society of Friends, of which he became an active member, and on that account was, with others, persecuted and fined by the officers of the crown. He and his family, to escape further mistreatment, came to America, presumably in the ship "Lion," in 1682, and one of the children (Thomas) died on the voyage. Upon arriving in America, he took up his abode on the bank of Ridley creek, leaving his patent from William Penn (covering lands in Nether Providence, Delaware county, and some lots in the city of Philadelphia) unlocated for the time. He brought with him from England a small Roman vase which was dug up in London, fourteen feet below the present street surface. David Simpson, of Blairsville, Pennsylvania, says of this: "Just how he became owner of it I don't know, but he hid it beneath that famous Rock full of money in gold and there it staid for twenty years, and his youngest son Joseph took that money and built that house for his mother which is called this day the first Sharpless House in America. The vase descended to Phæbe Sharpless, the mother of my mother, and on her death was given to my mother, being the youngest child, with many other things belonging to the family, which were all lost at the death of my mother."

Joseph (2), youngest of the children of John (1) and Jane (Moor) Sharples, was born at Hatherton, Cheshire county, England, 9 mo., 28, 1678, and died in Middletown, Chester (now Delaware) county, Pennsylvania, in the spring of 1757. He was married, 3 mo., 31, 1704, at Haverford Meeting, to Lydia Lewis, a native of Wales, born 3 mo., 8, 1683, died 1763; she was a sister to the wife of his brother James. Their children were: 1. Susanna, born 12 mo., 18, 1705; married Joseph Chamberlain; 2. Joseph, born 7 mo., 8, 1707; died 1 mo., 4, 1769; married Mary Pyle; 3. Benjamin, born 11 mo., 26, 1708-9; died 3 mo., 16, 1785; married Edith Broom and Martha Mendenhall; 4. Samuel, born 12 mo., 7, 1710-11; died 11 mo., 24, 1790; married Jane Newlin; 5. Lydia, born 3 mo., 7, 1713; died 1741; married John Martin; 6. Nathan, born 9 mo., 2, 1715; died 1755; married Hannah Townsend; 7. Jane, born 12 mo., 4, 1718; died 1775; married Jacob Pyle; 8. Abraham, born 5 mo., 7, 1720; died 1784; married Ann Young; 9. Jacob, born 10 mo., 14, 1722; died 7 mo., 19, 1775; married Ann Blakey; 10. William, born 3 mo., 31, 1725; died 5 mo., 4, 1751; married Abigail Sharp.

John Sharples bought, June 9, 1696, three hundred acres of land in Middletown, and he acquired much more property at subsequent dates. It is held on good authority that he built (about 1700) the old house on the original tract, which stood until 1868. It is inferred that he was appointed an overseer of Middletown Meeting in 1715, and he was appointed an elder, 7 mo., 25, 1732. He subsequently moved his residence and was an active member of the West Caln Meeting. His later days were passed at Middletown, where his wife was an overseer of the Meeting there.

Benjamin (3), third child and second son of Joseph and Lydia (Lewis) Sharples, was born in Nether Providence, 11 mo., 26, 1709, and died in Middletown, 3 mo., 16, 1785. He married, 2 mo., 27, 1737, at Concord Meeting, Edith Broome, who died 6 mo., 13, 1744, aged twenty-six, leaving three children—Joseph, born 12 mo., 19, 1737-8, died 9 mo., 1, 1763, unmarried; Benjamin, born 10 mo., 26, 1740, married Hannah Hollingshead, and died 6 mo. 18, 1780; Edith, born 10 mo., 30, 1742, married Ziba Ferris, and died 2 mo., 8, 1815. Benjamin Sharples married (second) 3 mo., 21, 1746, at Concord, Martha Mendenhall, born 12 mo., 8, 1724, died 10 mo., 20, 1812, daughter of Benjamin and Lydia Mendenhall, of Concord. She was of an English Quaker family, and her father was a minister and visited Friends in Virginia and North Carolina. Benjamin and Lydia (Mendenhall) Sharples were the parents of thirteen children: 1. Joshua, born 12 mo., 28, 1746-7; died 9 mo., 21, 1826; married Edith Yarnall; 2. Isaac, born 5 mo., 16, 1748; died 1 mo., 23, 1780; married Elizabeth Talbot; 3. Rebecca, born 10 mo., 29, 1749; died 2 mo., 9, 1780; unmarried; 4. Martha, born 10 mo., 28, 1751; died 9 mo., 7, 1763; 5. Ann, born 7 mo., 1, 1754; died 9 mo., 4, 1763; 6. Aaron, born 8 mo., 26, 1756; died 8 mo., 25, 1798; married Mary Ellwood; 7. Amy, born 11 mo., 17, 1758; died 1 mo., 3, 1831; married Jesse Darlington; 8.

Enoch, born 9 mo., 15, 1760; died 9 mo., 15, 1763; 9. Infant son, born 2 mo., 1763; died 4 mo., 3, 1763; 10. Hannah, born 4 mo., 1765; died 4 mo., 11, 1795; married Peter Yarnall; 11. Esther, born 5 mo., 21, 1767; died 7 mo., 24, 1865; married Jehu Garrett; 12. Sarah, born 9 mo., 25, 1769; died 9 mo., 13, 1823; married William Poole; 13. Samuel, born 11 mo., 25, 1770; died 9 mo., 8, 1796, at William Poole's in Wilmington, Delaware, unmarried; buried at Middletown the 10th.

Joshua (4), eldest child of Benjamin (3) and Martha (Mendenhall) Sharples, was born in Middletown, 12 mo., 28, 1746-7, and died in East Bradford, 9 mo., 21, 1826. He was twice married. He was first married at Middletown Meeting, 12 mo., 15, 1768, to Edith Yarnall, born 3 mo., 13, 1743, daughter of Nathan and Rachel Yarnall, of Edgmont. Eight children were born to them: 1. Benjamin, of whom further; 2. Rachel, born 5 mo., 3, 1771, died 8 mo., 10, 1807, married Benjamin Cope; 3. Nathan, born 12 mo., 18, 1772, died 4 mo., 11, 1863, married Lydia Painter; 4. Martha, born 4 mo., 27, 1775, died 4 mo., 30, 1854, married Cheyney Jefferis; 5. Edith, born 6 mo., 15, 1777, died 1 mo., 24, 1861, married Thomas Kite; 6. Joshua, born 8 mo., 12, 1779, died 12 mo., 21, 1860, married Philadelphia Drinker; 7. Isaac, born 9 mo., 28, 1781, died 11 mo., 12, 1822, married (first) Sarah Garrett and (second) Mary Ellis; 8. Eli, born 12 mo., 30, 1783, died 9 mo., 12, 1784. The mother of these children died 1 mo., 18, 1787, and Joshua Sharples married at Concord Meeting, 5 mo., 20, 1789. Ann Trimble, born 1 mo., 19, 1752, died 8 mo., 30, 1837, at Concord, where she was buried. She bore two children—William, born 1 mo., 15, 1791, died 3 mo., 5, 1793; Phebe, born 3 mo., 22, 1793, married Nathan Middleton, and died 4 mo., 30, 1850.

Joshua Sharples was one of the most useful men of his day, and each of his wives was a devoted Christian and minister. In 1769 he bought one hundred and thirty acres of land in Kennett mo., 3, 1784. In the same year, 4 mo., 19, he bought a farm of two hundred acres in East Bradford and twenty-three acres in Westtown, for £1,550. He removed to Birmingham Meeting, and was appointed elder 2 mo., 8, 1786. On the occasion of the death of his wife, he wrote upon his marriage certificate that "She was interred at Birmingham, her corpse being accompanied by a great number of friends, on which occasion a large and solemn meeting was held, which the Lord graciously owned. She was in the prime of life, a minister distinguishly gifted, and beloved as far as known. Her removal was a close stroke to many, and a great loss to the church, having left few equals behind her. Aged forty-three years and seven months, a minister for twelve years and upwards." The second wife township. He and his wife (Edith Yarnall) became active members of New Garden Monthly Meeting. She was appointed an overseer 10 mo., 5, 1771, an elder 8 mo., 7, 1773, and was recommended as a minister 12 mo., 7, 1775, in which capacity she visited other meetings. Joshua was appointed an overseer 4 mo., 1, 1775, and was active in efforts to abolish slaveholding among Friends. He and his wife were, 6 mo., 5, 1779, certified to Concord Meeting as "serviceable members," and she a minister well approved, and he was appointed an overseer 11 of Joshua Sharples (Ann Trimble) was appointed an overseer 4 mo., 6, 1796, and an elder 2 mo., 8, 1797. She and her husband both frequently visited meetings and families, as companions to ministers and otherwise. In 1798 Joshua Sharples, with several Friends, visited the Indians under Chief Cornplanter, in western New York. He wrote an account of the same, which was printed in "The Friend," and an institution was founded at Tunesassa, where his son-in-law and daughter Rachel were engaged until the death of the latter. Joshua and Ann Sharples, 4 mo., 1800, became superintendents of the Friends' Boarding School in Westtown, which had been open for about a year, and remained in charge for nearly twelve years, retiring to their farm 10 mo., 17, 1811. Joshua Sharples was one of the founders of the Birmingham Library, in 1795.

Benjamin (5), eldest child of Joshua (4) and Edith (Yarnall) Sharples, was the last in his line to use the family name in its original form of Sharples. He was born in Kennett, 8 mo., 24, 1769, and died in East Bradford, 2 mo., 1, 1852. He inherited and settled on the southern part of his father's land, about one mile north of Birmingham Meeting. He was prominent in the Society of Friends, and active in community affairs, and was for twenty-seven years a director of what is now the National Bank of Chester County. He married 3 mo., 27, 1794, at Bradford Meeting, Abigail Cope, born 9 mo., 6, 1767, died 3 mo., 22, 1823, daughter of Nathan and Amy Cope, of East Bradford. His second marriage was at Birmingham Meeting, 2 mo., 6, 1834, with Sidney Hoopes, born 11 mo., 13, 1792, died 2 mo., 24, 1877, daughter of Benjamin and Rebecca (Eavenson) Jones, and widow of Abraham Hoopes. Of this marriage was born one child, Benjamin.

Benjamin (6), only child of Benjamin and Sidney Sharples, was born October 29, 1835, on the family homestead, which he inherited and upon which he has continued to reside, a splendid tract of one hundred and thirty acres, in part highly improved farm land, and in part woodland. He has been a various times called to the principal township offices, and has served as supervisor, auditor, school director and treasurer of the school board. His sentiments of justice and humanity made him a vigorous opponent of human slavery, and as a young man he was in hearty sympathy with the Whig party. He came of age in the year of the founding of the Republican party (1856), and his first presidential vote was cast for its first candidate, John C. Fremont, under the party banner, "Free Speech; Free Soil; Free Men." He was active in support of the party during the Civil war period, and has continued to be identified with it, at the same time maintaining such a personal independence as to admit of his lending his aid to such movements in state, county and community as approved themselves to his conscience. He has held throughout his life to the principles of the religious society in which he was reared, and has constantly exercised a healthful influence in the community, and contributed to its advancement along religious and educational lines.

Mr. Sharpless was married, June 5, 1873, to Annie T. Hannum, who was born December 1, 1851, in Delaware county, daughter of Norris

M. and Susan Y. (Walter) Hannum. To Mr. and Mrs. Sharpless were born five children: 1. Mary H., born 3 mo., 3, 1874; 2. Benjamin, born 3 mo., 24, 1876, died 8 mo., 12, 1877; 3. Margaret, born 1 mo., 25, 1879; 4. Anna Elizabeth, born 5 mo., 14, 1883; 5. Sidney, born 9 mo., 23, 1886, died in infancy. Those surviving reside with their parents.

CHARLES REES PALMER, M. D., of West Chester, Pennsylvania, widely known as a successful practitioner, is a representative in the seventh generation of an English family which was planted in Pennsylvania in early colonial times, and within a half dozen years after the landing of William Penn.

The original emigrant, John Palmer (1), came to America and settled in Concord, Chester (now Delaware county), prior to or about 1688. He purchased land there, and married Mary Sudbery (Southery), a daughter of Robert Southery, who was a fuller by trade, and came from Westbury, county of Wiltshire, England. John Palmer and his wife were originally members of the Society of Friends, but afterward became Baptists. He probably died in July or August, 1742, as his will was proven in the fall of that year, and his wife died in 1745. John (2), son of John (1) and Mary (Southery) Palmer, was born about 1690. He was a farmer, and died May 5, 1771. He married (September 4, 1714) Martha Yearsley, who survived him some years.

Moses (3), son of John (2) and Martha (Yearsley) Palmer, was born May 26, 1721, and was a farmer; he died June 20, 1783. April 17, 1745, he married Abigail Newlin, who lived but a few years and left one child. He then married (November 22, 1752) Abigail Sharpless, whose maiden name was Sharp.

Joseph (4), son of Moses (3) and Abigail (Sharpless) Palmer, was born April 21, 1759. He was a shoemaker by trade, but followed farming in Concord township, Delaware county. He married (May 18, 1785) Hannah Peters, a daughter of Rees and Catherine (Wilson) Peters. He died July 30, 1838.

Wilson (5), son of Joseph (4) and Hannah (Peters) Palmer, was born in Concord township, February 4, 1798, and died in September, 1851. He married Ann J. Jaquette, in 1825.

Rees (6), son of Wilson (5) and Ann J. J. (Jaquette) Palmer, was born in Concord township, March 5, 1834. He was educated in the public school. He first learned the trade of a weaver at the Concord Mills, in which he labored until his eighteenth year, after which he located in West Chester, where he learned finsmithing and plumbing under John Lent, with whom he remained for some years. About 1857 he and his brother Eli bought the business and conducted it successfully until the death of Rees Palmer, in 1901, when his son, George Jaquette Palmer, succeeded to it. Rees Palmer was a man of excellent ability and sterling character. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church at West Chester, served it as trustee for many years, and was long the superintendent of its Sunday school. In politics he was an independent Republican, and never a seeker for public distinction. He married, February 14, 1861, Mary Smedley Nields, born in West Chester, in May, 1838, a daughter of Daniel and Eliza (Smedley) Nields. The children born of this marriage, all in West Chester, were: 1. George Jaquette, born June 25, 1862, who is engaged in the plumbing business in West Chester; he married Margaret Johnson. 2. Anna Maria, born December 16, 1864, died July 31, 1866; 3. Mary Nields, born December 12, 1867, who married J. B. Fairland and they reside in Syracuse, New York; 4. Charles Rees; 5. Eliza D., born March 28, 1872; 6. Henry Ralph, died in March, 1902. The widowed mother of these children resides in West Chester.

Dr. Charles Rees Palmer (7), fourth child and second son of Rees (6) and Mary Smedley (Nields) Palmer, was born in West Chester, July 10, 1870. He received his elementary education in the public schools, and pursued advanced studies in the State Normal School in West Chester, and in the University of Pennsylvania. He studied for his profession in the Hahnemann Medical College in Philadelphia, from which he was graduated in 1893, and at once entered upon practice in his native city. Amply equipped for his professional duties, he has drawn to himself a large and excellent patronage, and his career has been in every way successful and creditable. He is a member of the staff of the Chester County Hospital, and is a highly recognized member of various professional bodies—the Chester County Medical Society, the Medical Society of Chester, Delaware and Montgomery Counties, the Philadelphia County Society of Medicine, and the State Medical Society. He is a member of the First Presbyterian church of West Chester, and is a Republican in politics. He is affiliated with various Masonic bodies—West Chester Lodge, No. 322, F. & A. M., of which he is worshipful master; Howell Chapter, No. 202, R. A. M., of West Chester; and St. John Commandery, No. 4, Knights Templar, of Philadelphia; and he is a member of West Chester Lodge, No. 853, B. P. O. E.

Dr. Palmer was married, February 14, 1894, to Miss Elizabeth R. Wood, a daughter of Dr. Henry Clay and Hannah (Haines) Wood. She was born in Avondale, Pennsylvania, May 12, 1872; she received a high school education, and her fine musical gifts were trained by capable instructors in Philadelphia. The children born of her marriage, all in West Chester, were: Elizabeth Hoopes, born November 1, 1895; Charles Rees Palmer, Jr., born September 11, 1898; Marie, born April 12, 1900, and died April 25, following.

MAJOR LEVI GHEEN McCauley, of West Chester, Pennsylvania, who made a brilliant record as a soldier during the war of the Rebellion, and has since rendered valuable service to the state in various important public positions, is of Irish ancestry, descended from Hugh and Margaret (Means) McCauley. Hugh McCauley was born in the county of Armagh, Ireland, and married after his coming to this country.

John McCauley, son of the parents before named, was born July 29, 1804, in Concord, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, where he attended the public schools. He was a farmer for a time in Chester county, but in 1843 went to Harrisburg and became manager of iron works in the counties of Dauphin and Luzerne. He was a man of fine business qualifications and excellent character, a member of Grove church (Methodist) at West Whiteland, and of the Masonic order. Originally a Democrat, he became a Republican at the outbreak of the rebellion. In 1834 he married Lydia Gheen, who was born in East Goshen, August 31, 1815, a daughter of Levi Gheen, of East Goshen, Chester county. Of this marriage were born the following named children: 1-2. Elizabeth and Margaret, twins, born April 13, 1835; the last named died in infancy. 3. Levi Gheen, to be written of hereinafter. 4. William Cooper, born May 6, 1839, and died January 3, 1902. 5. Mary Gheen, born in 1840, and died in 1854. 6. John Roberts, who resides at Susquehanna, Pennsylvania. 7. James Niel, born February 18, 1845, and died May 9, 1881. 8-9. Freeman H. and A. C. Bayard, twins, born in 1847, both deceased. 10. Charles H., died in infancy. The father of these children died in West Chester, September 11, 1889, and the mother died April 4, 1850.

Levi Gheen McCauley, third child and eldest son of John and Lydia (Gheen) McCauley, was born in West Whiteland township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, September 2, 1837. He began his education in the public schools, and he subsequently attended for brief periods, in turn, Abington Seminary, Berwick Academy and Wyoming Seminary. At the age of eighteen he entered the Vulcan Iron Works, which he left three years later with an intimate practical knowledge of mechanical engineering. For a year he was in the employ of the New York &

Squire Aubrey

Erie Railway Company, at Susquehanna. Early in 1859 he went to Alabama, and was successfully engaged in the development of the iron interests in that state until early in 1861, when signs of impending war impelled him to sacrifice his immediate interests and hasten home.

With splendid patriotism, the elder McCauley recruited a battalion of two hundred men in Susquehanna county, within a few days after the firing upon Fort Sumter, and Levi with two of his brothers entered its ranks. Mr. McCauley was unable to obtain a commission, on account of his age, and Levi left the battalion and enlisted as a private in a Wilkesbarre company recruited by Colonel E. B. Harvey, and which was mustered into the service as Company F, Seventh Regiment, Pennsylvania Reserves, at Camp Wayne, Chester county.

From the outset, young McCauley gave evidence of all the qualities which mark the thorough soldier. He displayed the personal courage characteristic of his blood, and possessed those traits of leadership which inspired confidence in his fellows and won the repeated commendation of his superiors, and his promotion was rapid. Soon after entering the service he was made orderly sergeant; November 20, 1861, he was commissioned first lieutenant of Company C, and he was promoted to the captaincy, July 20, 1863. He was barred from further lineal advancement on account of want of vacancies in the higher grades, but at the conclusion of the war he was brevetted major of United States Volunteers, "for gallant and meritorious services during the war," his commission bearing the presidential signature. But he had paid a dear price for the honors accorded him, leaving his right arm on the bloody field of Charles City Cross Roads, on the sixth day of the desperate "Seven Days Battle." The story was told with thrilling power by his personal friend and commanding officer (Colonel E. B. Harvey) in the following communication to the "American Republican," shortly after the war:

"Levi McCauley was one of the best and most trustworthy and valuable men in my regiment. His devotion and fidelity to the cause and to duty secured him an early promotion from private to a captaincy. At Drainsville he was specially noted for his firmness and determination and success as a commanding officer, performing duties many others shrank from. At Mechanicsville, the battle of the seven days fighting around Richmond, Captain McCauley and Captain King were specially directed to guard a fordway across the Chickahominy, and at the extreme left of the battle line. Twice they repelled a rebel effort to cross the stream. So successfully and well done were the acts, that General McCall personally desired to thank McCauley and King for saving the battle that day to our forces at that point.

"At Gaines Hill battle, on the next day, while Captain McCauley's company was decimated, he kept his men in order and steadily at work.

"At Charles City Cross Roads, after the conflict became confused and disorder and disorganization seemed to prevail, I ordered Captain McCauley to support a battery, while other companies gave attention to a flanking party. The rebels charged on the battery. McCauley rallied his men, and, with others ordered to his aid, he retook the guns after a hand-to-hand fight over them, and slaughtered the foe. McCauley was shot in the arm.

"The victory was his. The guns and ammunition were removed from the field. McCauley had his right arm amputated, and was taken prisoner that night by the rebels."

Major McCauley was conveyed to Libby Prison, where he lay in miserable plight for want of adequate surgical treatment and nourishing food for a period of seventy days. Only his iron constitution, excellent habits and indomitable resolution preserved his life during this distressing time. He was paroled August 13, 1862, and transferred to David Island Hospital, and afterwards invalided home. He was subsequently on recruiting duty in Harrisburg until January, 1863, when he was regularly exchanged. Incapacitated for field service, he was assigned to duty in the department of Washington and was retained until June, 1866, more than a year after the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged.

Returning to West Chester, Major McCauley busied himself in financial and commercial affairs, and his excellent business qualifications enabled him to afford most useful aid in the establishment and development of various enterprises conducive to the interests of the community at large. He has been particularly identified with the West Chester Gas Company, of which he became general manager in 1873; the West Chester State Normal School, of which he has been a trustee for fifteen years; and is now president of the board; the Farmers National Bank of West Chester and the Coatesville Gas Company, in each of which he has long been a director; and the Good Will Fire Company, of which he was president for five years.

Major McCauley has been for many years prominent and useful in the civil and political affairs of the county and state. A Republican from his early manhood, his first vote was cast for Galusha A. Grow for Congress, in 1858. From those days he has been an earnest and aggressive advocate of the principles of his party, which has called him to various high positions of honor and trust. In 1867-68 he was assistant serjeant-at-arms of the state senate. In 1869 he was elected register of wills of Chester county. In 1897 he was elected auditor general of Pennsylvania, and he displayed conspicuous ability in that high office. He was chairman of the Chester county Republican committee from 1886 to 1890, when he declined re-election. He has frequently been a delegate to county, congressional district and state conventions.

Major McCauley was one of the early members of McCall Post, No. 31, Grand Army of the Republic, in which he is a past commander, and one of the trustees. In 1902 he was elected commander of the department of Pennsylvania, and during his term of office has traveled more than twelve thousand miles in his visitations to the various posts. Warmly devoted to the highest interests of the order and the cause which it seeks to aid, he has exerted himself most zealously in behalf of the Soldiers' Orphans' Commission, of which body he is vice-president.

Major McCauley was married, October 6, 1870, to Isabella Darlington, born May 7, 1844, in West Chester, a daughter of Hon. William and Catharine (Paxson) Darlington. Major and Mrs. McCauley have a beautiful residence at 22 West Chestnut street, West Chester, Pennsylvania.

WILMER WORTHINGTON THOMSON, editor of the "Daily Local News," West Chester, Pennsylvania, was born March 26, 1842, in Willistown township. His parents, Aaron B. and Harriet (Evans) Thomson, were also born in the same township, and his paternal grandparents, David Thomson and Phebe Thomas were natives of the county.

Aaron B. Thomson was educated in the common schools, but he was taught so thoroughly and added so largely to his knowledge through private studies, that he became a well equipped teacher and gave his long life most usefully to school work in Chester county, and almost to the time of his death at the age of eighty-two years. To him were born four children, of whom three were also teachers for longer or shorter periods.

1. Joseph Addison Thomson, who after teaching school for some years entered the consular service in Washington. In 1870 he became editor of the Chester "News." He subsequently returned to accept appointment as postmaster at Media, and died while occupying that position. He married Rebecca L. Owen, and they became the parents of three daughters, and one son. The son and one of the daughters are living.

2. Mary Emma was also a teacher prior to her marriage to John O. K. Roberts of Phoenix-ville, editor of the "Messenger." Three children were born of their marriage, of whom one is living.

3. Milton Wilson Thomson, deceased, was a teacher for many years, and afterward a machinist in the Phoenixville Iron Works. He married Emaline Wersler, and they became the parents of six children.

4. Wilmer Worthington Thomson was educated in the public schools, and labored for a number of years in the iron works in Phoenixville. Circumstances, however, soon led him to the profession in which he found his life work. While yet a workman in the iron works he wrote local correspondence for county papers, and he also published an advertising sheet, "Everybody's Business," having the printing done in Philadelphia and distributing the paper himself in Phoenixville and Pottstown. This paper was discontinued after a year, and Mr. Thomson then began the publication of the "Weekly Legal Tender," at Phoenixville, a local sheet, which was continued for one year. Somewhat later he took up correspondence for the West Chester Jeffersonian, and six months afterward (in August, 1871), became local editor of the paper, a position which he relinquished in the following year, to assist in founding the journal with which he has since been uninterruptedly connected.

The germ of the Daily Local News was the publication by Mr. Thomson of the Daily Institute News, during the five days' session of the Teachers' County Institute in the early fall of 1872. This was a small four-page sheet issued each morning, containing the program for the day, and several columns of local news, with some advertisements. The little journal, which was distributed free, met with such favor in the eyes of the business community as well as of the teachers, and its discontinuance, when the occasion for its publication had ended, evoked such expressions of regret, that Mr. Thomson was encouraged to essay the introduction of the Daily Local News, in association with Mr. William H. Hodgson, its publisher. The first issue, on November 19, 1872, was a diminutive four column folio, with a page size of 12½ by 8¾ inches. The enterprise was entered upon without solicitation of a subscription or an advertisement, and the first two issues were distributed gratuitously. It is not the province of the writer of these pages to present a history of the journal which had so modest a beginning. Suffice it to say that the Daily Local News steadily grew in favor, soon acquiring a large patronage and making repeated enlargements, until it has long been known as one of the most important journals in the state outside the great financial and commercial centres. It has steadfastly adhered to the principles which actuated its coming into existence—that of being fair and liberal to all parties, sects and creeds. This policy has found appreciation by such generous patronage that the paper was long since obliged to install a plant of metropolitan pattern and extent, with perfecting presses, linotype machines and a complete stereotyping outfit. It is of interest to note, in this connection, that this was the first inland newspaper office in the United States to call to its service a perfecting press. Through all these years, from its initial number to the present time, Messrs. Hodgson and Thomson have been the sole conductors of the Netes, the former named in the capacity of proprietor and the latter named in that of editor.

A facile and forceful writer, Mr. Thomson has not confined his labors to his own newspaper, but has been an industrious contributor to various other journals. For a long time he was local correspondent for the New York Herald, and he was for twenty-two years correspondent for the Philadelphia Times, and for eleven years for the Philadelphia Ledger. For the past several years he has been the local correspondent for the Philadelphia Press, and he has been the West Chester representative of the Associated Press and The Philadelphia Evening Telegraph for several years past. He gave evidence of artistic taste in his early youth, and later in life became a pupil of Carl Weber. Painting in oil and water colors is his favorite pursuit in his leisure hours, and his works have long been in demand for presentation purposes.

Mr. Thomson enlisted in the Civil war May 20, 1861, as a musician, a member of the Phoenix Military Band of Phoenixville, and served throughout the three months' service period. In 1862 he became chief clerk to Capt. John F. Hazleton, A. Q. M., Second Brigade, Third Division, Third Army Corps (later of the Sixth (Corps), and for several months was chief clerk to Capt. McKee, C. S., of same brigade, division and corps. In 1864 he was given the position of roll clerk to Capt. J. C. Mann, A. Q. M., of Post at Winchester, Virginia, and remained in that position until May 24, 1865, when the clerical corps was disbanded at Camp Stoneman, near Washington. Immediately following the discharge at Camp Stoneman, he was appointed chief clerk to Major Forsythe, on General Kirkpatrick's staff, then preparing to go to Texas, but sickness interfered and he was released from the obligation.

Mr. Thomson was married to Miss Frances O. Wilson, daughter of Alexander Wilson, of Newark, New Jersey, who was a merchant, at one time a member of the legislature, and at the time of his death was connected with the New York City postoffice. Mrs. Thomson was educated in the public and select schools in Newark, and in the Somerville, New Jersey, Seminary. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Thomson were: 1. Nellie G., who became the wife of Charles H. Morgan, of West Chester, and to whom were born two children; 2. Elizabeth Wilson; 3. William Hodgson; 4. Rachel P. Thomson.

ADDISON L. JONES. Among those who have wielded a definite influence along educational lines in the state of Pennsylvania is Addison L. Jones, superintendent of the public schools in the borough of West Chester, a widely known educator, who has won an enviable reputation in his chosen calling. He is a native of the state, born in the vicinity of Norristown, Montgomery county, January 20, 1856, a descendant of an old and honored German lineage.

The progenitor of this branch of the Jones family was Peter Jones (great-grandfather) who was a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, from whence he emigrated to the United States and settled in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. He was a preacher in the Mennonite church, which first derived its name from Simon Menno, a Reformer, who was born in Witmarsum, Friesland, in 1505. His numerous followers first styled themselves Mennonites in 1536. Members of the sect migrated to America and settled in Pennsylvania as early as 1683; in 1708 established a church and school in Germantown, Pennsylvania, and now they are found in nearly every section of the Union and in Canada. Peter Jones married and reared a family of children.

Samuel Jones (grandfather) was a son of Peter Jones, and his birth occurred in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, where he was reared, educated and spent his entire life, which was devoted principally to agricultural pursuits. He was a man of intelligence and exerted an influence for good in the community. He married Anna Kolb, and they became the parents of six children—John, deceased; Henry, deceased; Nathan; Samuel, deceased; Joseph; and Maria, who married Abraham Poole, a prominent resident of Schwenksville, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania.

Samuel Jones (father) was born in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, March 23, 1828. After acquiring a common school education he spent an apprenticeship at the trade of cabinet maker, then for a number of years was employed as a journeyman, but subsequently pursued farming interests. By careful management, industry and thrift his estate yielded him a goodly profit, and he was enabled to retire from active business and enjoy a life of ease and comfort at his home near Norristown. He attended the services of the Mennonite church, in which he held membership, and his political affiliations were with the Republican party. December 2, 1854, he was united in marriage to Mary Landes, born March 20, 1830, in the northern portion of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. Their children are—Addison L., mentioned at length in the following paragraph; and Samuel L., who married Emma J. Gaumer, and is now a resident of Easton, Pennsylvania, and is the proprietor of a flourishing business college.

Addison L. Jones was a student in the public schools of Montgomery county and Norristown High School. Being attentive and ambitious, besides being possessed of an apt and receptive mind, he advanced in his studies so that at the age of fifteen years he began teaching, and during a period of seven years' service in this capacity he diligently pursued his studies in various advanced branches. He then entered the State Normal School at West Chester, and after pursuing a two years' course was graduated from that institution in the class of 1881. He was then thoroughly qualified to accept the principalship of the Unionville High School, in Chester county, which position he retained for five consecutive years and during this period of time he became well known as an efficient educator. The following few months he was engaged as the principal teacher in the Soldiers' Orphans' School at Chester Springs, but public school work being preferable to his tastes and inclinations he resigned from his position. In the autumn of 1886 he accepted the position tendered him as assistant teacher in the English branches at the West Chester State Normal School, where he remained two years. He then assumed the charge of the Conshohocken public schools for one year, and was then elected superintendent of the public schools of West Chester in the year 1889. In this important position Mr. Jones has the able support of the board of directors and the teachers, and that their united efforts have been successful is attested by the splendid roll of graduates from the high school, and of other boys and girls who took portions of the course.

Superintendent Jones is a man of keen judgment, a fine sense of practicability and skill in adaptation, and he has the faculty to secure and maintain to a large degree that harmony between principal, teachers, pupils and patrons which is such a potent factor in the success of any school. The work in English has been broadened and more carefully planned, so that it ranks with the best in the state. Superintendent Jones has arranged courses in drawing, color work and basketry, in such manner that the schools have a state-wide reputation in these departments. In manual training the course has been extended to four years and made to include turning, wood carving and mechanical drawing; vocal music is taught as a regular branch in all the schools, having been introduced in 1890; pupils are taught to read and relish good literature by a critical course of reading from books found in the school library and in the public library; sewing is a feature in the Gay Street, High Street and Model Schools, having been introduced in 1899; a boys' debating club and a girls' literary society have been organized and regular meetings conducted; the high school library has been strengthened and enlarged, so that it now contains fifteen hundred volumes which are in constant use; the Alumni Association was formed in 1891; a school savings bank was established, in which the pupils have deposited more than $26,000. The average attendance in the high school has increased from forty-eight to two hundred. The graduating class in 1889 numbered five; in 1903, there were thirty-six, of whom twenty-nine continued their education. The alumni are found doing well in the State Normal School and in the colleges at Swarthmore, Haverford, University of Pennsylvania, Lehigh University, Cornell, Yale, Lafayette and the Woman's College of Baltimore.

For several years Mr. Jones served as president of the Chester County Teachers' Association, and also of the Second District Association of Chester county, which had its headquarters at West Chester, and many excellent meetings have been held in the High School. He was one of the originators of the Principals' Club of Chester County and its first president. He has for five years been chairman of the executive committee of Teachers' Professional Society of Chester County. For fifteen years he has been secretary of the Chester County Teachers' Institute. In 1898 he was president of the Department of Superintendents of Pennsylvania, which held its meeting in Philadelphia. For four years he has been a member of the executive committee of the State Teachers' Association, and in 1903 the president of the annual meeting held in Wilkesbarre. In 1899 Superintendent Jones was appointed principal of the model department of the State Normal School, the duties of which he assumed with those of his superintendency. He was made state director of education for Pennsylvania at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. He has received honorary degrees from Bucknell University and Lafayette College. He is a trustee in the Dime Savings Bank of Chester County, an elder in the Westminster Presbyterian church, and a Republican in politics.

On December 22, 1888, Mr. Jones was married to Clara Pyle Loller, daughter of C. Wilson Loller, of Unionville, Pennsylvania. Three children have been born to them—Margaret Landes Jones, Elizabeth Mary Jones and Edmund Wilson Jones.

JOHN GWYN MOSES, business manager of the West Chester Local News, is of German ancestry and his family has for several generations been identified with the city and county in which he resides. The original emigrant was Adam Moses, who came to America in the latter part of the eighteenth century with his wife and two children. His other children were born in this country.

John Moses, grandson of Adam Moses, was born in West Pikeland township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. When a young man he learned the trade of stone mason, which he followed but a short time when he engaged in farming in his native township and followed that vocation until his death. He was a Democrat in politics, and served as a soldier in the war of 1812. He was a man of reserved disposition and attended strictly to his own business, which he conducted prudently and honorably. He married Susanna Shoffner, who lived to be over ninety-three years of age. Her husband died at the age of seventy-three years.

Samuel Moses, son of John and Susanna (Shoffner) Moses, was born in West Pikeland township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, February 23, 1808. He was educated in the district schools of his native township, and at the age of sixteen became clerk in a store in East Coventry, in Chester county. After being so employed for about four years, he went into business for himself as a general merchant in Howellville, Chester county (now Chester Valley), where where he remained for about five years. After this he conducted a store at Kimberton, East Pikeland township, and in 1836 he moved to Phoenixville, Chester county, where he built a store and conducted a general mercantile business until 1880. He was a man of character and excellent business qualifications, and was prominent in various local enterprises. He was director of the National Bank of Phoenixville and its president for a short time; treasurer of the Phoenixville Bridge Company, and one of the directors for many years; and receiver for the Chester County Mutual Fire Insurance Company. He was the first treasurer of the borough of Phoenixville and held that position for nearly thirty years, and he also held other borough offices. In politics he was a Democrat. He married, in February, 1834, Sarah Ann Brown, born in 1811, daughter of the Rev. Thomas and Mary K. (Lewis) Brown. Their children were: 1. Mary Susanna, born in November, 1834, and now deceased; she married Englebert F. Vanaderslicc. 2. John Gwyn, born February 8, 1836. 3. Margaret Ann, born in 1838; she married Albert Chalfant. 4. Eusebia Neville, born in 1845, now deceased; she married George W. Worden. The father of this family died in 1885, and the mother died in 1880.

John Gwyn Moses, second child and only son of Samuel and Sarah Ann (Brown) Moses, was born at Kimberton, East Pikeland township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, February 8, 1836. His education was received in the public schools and at Freeland Seminary, Montgomery county. When a lad he was employed in his father's store, where he remained until 1875. In that year he was elected treasurer of Chester county, serving with credit for a term of three years, and in January, 1876, he took up his residence in West Chester. In March, 1879, he returned to Phoenixville, and purchased the store of his father which he conducted for something more than a year. He then (in 1881) disposed of his business interests in Phoenixville and returned to West Chester, where he entered the office of "The Local News" as business manager, a position which he has occupied continually to the present time, and for which he has demonstrated genuine aptitude. In politics he has always been a Republican. He is a member of Phoenix Lodge, No. 212, I. O. O. F., at Phoenixville, and of General Marion Encampment, No. 91, I. O. O. F., West Chester. He was for about twenty years the leader of the Phoenix Military Band, of Phoenixville. This band responded to the first call of President Lincoln, in 1861, and was mustered into the service of the United States at York, Pennsylvania, in June of that year, as the Military Band of the Second Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, Colonial Stumbaugh commanding, and was mustered out at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, on the expiration of its term of service in August, 1861.

Mr. Moses was married, in 1867, to Miss Emily Atkinson Coffman, daughter of Dr. Isaac Z. Coffman, of Phoenixville. She died in 1871. Mr. Moses was married, in 1874, to Miss Mary Margaret John, daughter of the Rev. Allen and Mary Ann (Bomberger) John. Of this marriage was born a daughter, Maude Virginia, in West Chester, July 20, 1876. She was educated in the public schools and the State Normal School at West Chester, of which she is a graduate. She resides with her parents.

EDWARD HESTON HALL, business man and manufacturer, of West Chester, Chester county, while by the accident of birth a native of Ohio, was reared and pursued an active career in Pennsylvania, with which state his family have been identified for many generations.

Matthew Hall, his early ancestor, came (presumably) from England, and settled in Bucks county, Pennsylvania. He was received into the Society of Friends on his marriage with Sarah Haworth, who was a widow, about 1731. Their son Mahlon settled in Blockley, where he became a large land owner, and was a farmer and blacksmith. He married Jane, a daughter of James and Elizabeth Higgs, of Bristol. Their son Mahlon, about 1793, built a stone house on what is now Elm avenue, near Fiftieth street, West Philadelphia, near Fairmount Park. He married Mary, a daughter of Edward Warner and Mary (Griffith) Heston. Their son, Edward H., born in Philadelphia, was reared in Chester county. When he was thirteen years old his father died, and as the eldest son he took charge of the farm. In 1821 he removed to Ohio, taking with him his mother, his wife and three children. Locating in Columbiana county he bought a farm, known as the Beaver Farm, upon which he lived until his death, in the spring of 1831. He was an exemplary member of the Society of Friends, and a leader in meeting. He was married at West Chester, Pennsylvania, February 5, 1816, to Jane Paxson, born May 31, 1796, a daughter of Benjamin and Jane (Ely) Paxson, of Solebury, Bucks county. Their children were Sarah P., Cyrus, William W., Mary H., Rachel, Mahlon, Thomas H., John, George E., Albert P. and Edward H. All of these eleven children but two (Cyrus and John) came to years of maturity.

Edward Heston Hall, youngest child of Edward H. and Jane (Paxson) Hall, was born in New Garden, Columbiana county, Ohio, 7 mo., 9 day, 1831, a few months after the death of his father. After the marriage of his mother to Abraham Heston, he and his brother Albert came to Philadelphia, where they were cared for by their paternal grandmother. Edward received his education in public and private schools in Philadelphia county and in the Friends' Boarding School at Westtown. He worked upon the paternal farm until 1856, when he engaged in a coal and brick business with S. Emlen Sharpless, of West Chester, with whom he was associated in various businesses for nearly forty years, and when they entered the lumber business they had William P. Sharpless as a partner. They soon gave their attention more particularly to manufacturing, their activities extending into various fields, and proving of great advantage in adding to and developing the commercial importance of the county. They first engaged in brick manufacturing, and the product of their yards for many years was used in the building of some of the most substantial business houses and dwellings of West Chester and vicinity. They were also for a long period manufacturers of farming implements and made their establishment one of the leading industries of the place, supplying the farming community for miles in all directions, and affording employment to a considerable number of mechanics and other workmen. Mr. Hall continued in this business until the incoming of large firms, when he retired and engaged in a coal business in which he is yet interested, with his son-in-law, Roland Smedley.

With reference to Mr. Hall's career as a manufacturer, it is to be said that during its continuance he was one of the most industrious and useful men of his day. It was before the era of labor-saving machinery, and the product of his shops was in larger part hand-made, and his watchful eye kept a constant oversight of every department. The implements were famed for their honest material and conscientious workmanship, and some of his handiwork is in use to the present day. To his workmen he was a kind friend as well as employer, and more than one owed a firm establishment in life to the aid which he afforded them. He has also ever been a leader in aiding the interests of the community by furthering public improvements and encouraging educational institutions and movements conducing to the moral welfare of the people.

Mr. Hall is a birthright member of the Society of Friends. A pronounced opponent of human slavery, his political affiliations were with the Whig party until its dissolution, when he became a Republican at the organization of the party, and has cast his vote for each of its presidential candidates from John C. Fremont to William McKinley.

Mr. Hall was married to Sarah E. Cranston, of Delaware, a daughter of William and Mary Cranston. Two children were born of their marriage—Mary, who is the wife of Roland Smedley, and Sarah D. Hill. For forty years Mr. Hall has resided in his home at the corner of Washington and Matlack streets, in West Chester.

THOMAS WARRINGTON. The Warrington family of West Chester, Pennsylvania, of which Thomas Warrington, now deceased, for more than twenty years prominently connected with its commercial and agricultural interests, was a representative member, are descended from old English Quaker stock. The first ancestor of the family to come to America was Henry Warrington, who was born in England about the year 1687, the son of John and Hannah Warrington. In 1700, accompanied by his mother, who had been left a widow, Henry Warrington sailed for this country, settled in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, but subsequently removed to New Jersey, where he thoroughly learned all the details of farming. In May, 1719, he purchased a tract of four hundred acres of land in Chester township, Burlington county, New Jersey, which he cultivated and improved, and on which he resided up to the time of his decease. Mr. Warrington was twice married, his first wife, Elizabeth (Austin) Warrington, being the mother of four children—Ruth, John, Mary and Thomas; her death occurred in 1728. By his second marriage to Elizabeth Bishop, a family of eight children were born to him.

Thomas Warrington, father of Thomas Warrington, was born and reared in the state of New Jersey, and after obtaining a practical education in the common schools turned his attention to agricultural pursuits which he followed for his entire business career. He married Hannah Lippincott, a daughter of Josiah Lippincott, a prominent resident of Westfield, New Jersey, and four children were born to them. His death occurred at his home in Moorestown, Burlington county, New Jersey, September 21, 1857, at an advanced age.

Thomas Warrington, son of Thomas and Hannah (Lippincott) Warrington, was born at Westfield, New Jersey, August 6, 1824, and his educational advantages were obtained at the public schools of his native town and at the Friends' Boarding School at Westtown, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Upon the completion of his studies he began his business career as a farmer, later engaged in teaching, and then served in the capacity of clerk in a large establishment in Philadelphia, where he remained until 1849, when he again turned his attention to farming in Burlington county, New Jersey. In 1854 he embarked in the dry goods business in West Chester, Pennsylvania, was also interested in the grocery trade, but disposed of the latter named business after a short period of time, and also successfully operated his farm lands which were located outside of the borough of West Chester. Mr. Warrington prospered in his business, commanded a large trade, and enjoyed the respect and confidence of his patrons by his strict integrity, prompt attention to their wants, and genial, kindly manner. After a few years of mercantile life his health began to fail and he was compelled to dispose of his business, which had become both profitable and extensive, and for a number of years prior to his decease devoted his entire attention to agricultural pursuits and other investments. In politics he was a Republican, and earnestly supported the principles of that political organization, while in religious belief he was a Quaker, and regular in his attendance at their meetings. He was largely instrumental in the upbuilding and improvement of the borough of West Chester, and taking a keen and active interest in society in general.

On April 12, 1849, Mr. Warrington married Anna M. Hoopes, who was born in West Goshen township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, January 1, 1829, a daughter of Curtis and Sarah (Roberts) Hoopes, the former named being descended from Joshua Hoopes, a native of Yorkshire, England, who came to America in 1682, accompanied by his son Daniel, then a boy, and settled in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, where they resided for many years. Later Daniel settled in Westtown township, Chester county, where he settled on a farm; he married and reared a family of seventeen children.

The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Warrington: Curtis Hoopes, born at Westfield, New Jersey, October 23, 1851 (now deceased), who married Helen A. Smith, and to them was born three daughters, Caroline R., Ellen S. and Hannah M.; Alfred Francis, born at West Chester, Pennsylvania, June 18, 1854, died in infancy; Thomas Francis, born at West Chester, October 11, 1856, married September 18, 1879, Josephine L. Smith, daughter of William and Ellen Smith; her death occurred April 13, 1881, and four years later he was united in marriage to Ellen Star Parvin, and two children have been born to them, Anna L. and Deborah P. Warrington; Caroline R., born at West Chester, November 25, 1861, died in infancy. Mr. Warrington died February 6, 1875, and bequeathed to his family an untarnished name and a record for fidelity that would be hard to surpass.

PROFESSOR FRANK PAXSON BYE, a well known educator of West Chester, Pennsylvania, belongs to a family which has been for several generations represented in Bucks county, of which his grandfather, Thomas, and his father, John Hart Bye, were natives. The latter was reared on a farm in his native county, where he resided until 1869, when he removed to Kent county, Delaware, where he passed the remainder of his life. He married Helen, daughter of Samuel Johnson Paxson, and died in 1899.

Frank Paxson Bye, son of John Hart and Helen (Paxson) Bye, was born February 23, 1868, in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, and was an infant at the time of the removal of the family to Kent county, Delaware. He received his early education in public and private schools in that state, and later attended the State Normal School in West Chester, Pennsylvania, from which he graduated in 1893. He also attended the Universities of New York and Pennsylvania. After completing his education he accepted a position as principal of the high school and supervising principal of the schools of Kennett Square, which position he held for three years, and afterward for the same length of time was superintendent of the public schools of Chester county. In 1899 he became associated with the Darlington Seminary for one year, at the end of which time an organization was formed with Professor Bye as president of the Seminary, a position which he still holds. He is a member of the Kennett Square Lodge, A. F. & A. M. and the Patrons of Husbandry. Politically he is a Republican.

Professor Bye married, in 1893, Miss Christine Faas, a native of Philadelphia, and they are the parents of one son: Frank P., Jr. Mrs. Bye, who is a member of the Holy Trinity church, was a daughter of Anthony and Christiana (Schuyler) Faas. The former named was born in Baden, Germany, and came to this country when a young man, settling in Philadelphia, where he passed his life. He was the representative of a family, many members of which were celebrated ministers and educators. His wife was also a native of Germany, and was brought to this country when a child.

JOHN ALEXANDER RUPERT, who has become prominently associated with various enterprises in West Chester, Pennsylvania, is a grandson of William and Elizabeth Rupert, the former named being supposed to have been born in Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania. William Rupert acquired a liberal education which qualified him for the vocation of teaching, which he pursued for a number of years in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Uriah Rupert, father of John A. Rupert, was born near Frankfort, Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania, June 22, 1799. He received a practical education in the common schools of his native township, now a part of the city of Philadelphia, and after laying aside his text books learned the trade of shoemaker and devoted his energies to that line of industry in Philadelphia up to the year 1825. He then located in Upper Oxford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and three years later purchased a tract of land which he cultivated and improved to a high state of perfection, and on which he resided for the remainder of his life. In his political views he was a firm adherent of the Democratic party until 1856, when he changed his affiliation to the Republican party, voting for John C. Fremont, and henceforth his support was given to that organization. He was a member and served in the capacity of deacon of the Baptist church located at Upper Oxford, Pennsylvania.

On May 10, 1827, Uriah Rupert was united in marriage to Eliza Leslie, who was born in Martie township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, March 1, 1802, a daughter of John and Sarah (McNeil) Leslie, the former named being an active participant of the war of 1812, and his death occurred from the effects of camp fever. Alexander McNeil, grandfather of Mrs. Rupert, served in the capacity of private during the Revolutionary war. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Rupert: Sarah Leslie, born March 2, 1828, died July 30, 1895; Elizabeth, born December 2, 1830, resides at Russellville, Upper Oxford township; William, born January 7, 1837, died in infancy; John Alexander, born September 15, 1839, and Rachel Amanda, born December 24, 1842, died in 1868. Mr. Rupert died August 5, 1875, survived by his widow whose death occurred July 30, 1892.

John A. Rupert, youngest son of Uriah and Eliza Rupert, was born in Upper Oxford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, September 15, 1839. His preliminary education was obtained at the public schools of his neighborhood, and this was supplemented by a term of study at the Hopewell Academy at Lower Oxford. He assisted with the management of the home farm until August 11, 1862, when he enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, a nine months' regiment, and served to the expiration of his enlistment, and participated in the battles of Antietam and Chancellorsville. Upon the invasion of the state of Pennsylvania by General Lee's army in 1863, Colonel Joseph W. Hawley was called upon by Governor Curtin to assemble his regiment and rendezvous at Harrisburg, and from this was organized the Twenty-ninth Emergency Regiment. Mr. Rupert was detailed by his captain as clerk of Dr. W. S. King, medical director of the Department of the Susquehanna, with headquarters at Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, and he served in this capacity until the emergency was over and the regiment was mustered out of service. On January 1, 1864, Mr. Rupert received the appointment of clerk in the office of David Andrews, recorder of deeds for Chester county, Pennsylvania, and he served in this position until the fall of 1866, and then entered the office of the prothonotary of Chester county as clerk. He retained this position until June, 1867, when he entered the office of Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, as clerk and remained there until Mr. MacVeagh's removal to Harrisburg. In 1872 he was elected prothonotary for Chester county, served in this capacity until January, 1876, and four years later entered into partnership with Horace M. Phillips, under the style of Rupert & Phillips. Their business was that of conveyancing and money lending, and has continued up to the present time (1903). In addition to the duties devolving upon him as a member of this firm, Mr. Rupert was appointed cashier of the Dime Savings Bank of Chester County, in 1893, which position he still holds; secretary of the Edison Electric Illuminating Company, and one of the receivers of the Chester County Guarantee Trust and Safe Deposit Company of West Chester, Pennsylvania, this appointment being made by the court in 1895. His business career has been characterized by marked diligence, and he has steadily worked his way upward, undaunted by the obstacles in his path, which has served but as an impetus to renewed effort. In his political sentiments Mr. Rupert is a Republican.

On September 18, 1873, Mr. Rupert married Sarah Louisa Groff, who was born at Gap, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, February 19, 1851, a daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth (Miller) Groff. Their children are: Mabel, born in West Chester, December 2, 1874, who received her education at the public schools of her native town, and on June 26, 1901, became the wife of George Joseph Moses, son of Lewis C. and Annie (Lumis) Moses; they have one child, Katherine Rupert Moses, born in West Chester, May 19, 1902; Jennie, born May 8, 1879; Ethel, born April 12, 1882, graduated from the Young Ladies' Collegiate Institute of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; John Leslie, born April 2, 1888, and Sarah E., born March 26, 1894.

RICHARD HARRY STRODE, deceased, whose name had long been actively and honorably associated with the agricultural interests of Chester county, Pennsylvania, traced his ancestry in direct line to George Strode, the progenitor of the American branch of the family.

George Strode (1) was a native of the parish of Millbrook, county of Southampton, England, where he was by occupation a grocer. He purchased five hundred acres of land located in Concord township, Pennsylvania, from William Penn, the founder of that state, July 25, 1682, and shortly after this date came to the United States and settled on his estate.

George Strode (2), probably a son of the first named George Strode, resided in East Bradford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where his death occurred about the year 1757. His children, so far as known, were: George, John and William. John (3), second son of George Strode, was the father of Richard Strode (4), who was born March 7, 1742, and united in marriage December 28, 1763, to Sarah Hickman, daughter of Francis Hickman, of Thornbury. Their children were: Mary, Joseph, Caleb, Francis, Ann, Richard, John and Moses, all of whom died young with the exception of Joseph and Richard. The father of these children died May 22, 1814.

Richard Strode (5), son of Richard and Sarah Strode, was born in East Bradford township, acquired his education in the common schools, and followed the occupation of his forefathers, that of farming. He married Frances Oshorn, and among their children was a son, Marshall Strode (6), who was born in East Bradford township, May 10, 1820, on the old homestead. He attended the district school and later devoted his attention to farming and marketing in the city of Philadelphia. In 1868 he purchased the mill property now known as Strode's Mill, in East Bradford township, and successfully operated the same up to the time of his decease. In his political preferences he adhered to the policy of the Republican party, and held the office of supervisor of the township, discharging his duties both acceptably and creditably. On March 4, 1847, occurred the marriage of Marshall Strode and Elizabeth M. Darlington, who was born March 8, 1823, daughter of Amos and Jane (Mercer) Darlington. Their children were: Frances Jane, born July 14, 1848, died July 8, 1851; Amos Darlington, born January 14, 1852; Richard Harry, born September 4, 1855, died October 12, 1898; Clara, born January 18, 1857, died February 15, 1860; Jennie, born March 17, 1859, died April 3, 1860, and Frank Darlington, born November 1, 1862. The father of these children died January 10, 1880, survived by his widow, whose death occurred January 23, 1881.

Richard H. Strode (7), second son of Marshall and Elizabeth Strode, was born in East Bradford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, September 4, 1855. His educational advantages were obtained at the public schools of his native township, the Friends' School at West Chester, and the Normal School of the same city. He began his business career in the capacity of a farmer and breeder of fine and select stock in the vicinity of his birthplace, later spent two years in the state of Nebraska, and upon his return from the west, in 1893, located in West Chester, Pennsylvania, where the remainder of his life was passed. He maintained a high place among the citizens of that community, and his business career and private record were alike above reproach. In politics he was a firm advocate of the fundamental principles upon which the Republican party was formed, and his church affiliations were with the Society of Friends.

Mr. Strode married, June 6, 1882, Hannah Mary King, who was born November 16, 1857, a daughter of Brinton and Lydia Ann (Ring) King. Their children were: Franklin Brinton, born January 6, 1884, a student in the High Street School at West Chester; George King, born January 16, 1886, also a student in the same school; Ida Dorothy, born September 5, 1887, and Norman Archibald, born August 14, 1889, the two latter named being pupils in the public schools of West Chester. The father of these children died October 12, 1898, having spent a busy, industrious and honorable life; he was a man of gentle and retiring disposition, devoted to the interests of his family, a lover of nature in all her moods, and an admirer of fine horses.

Brinton King, father of Mrs. Strode, was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, October 19, 1812, and subsequently became one of the enterprising and prosperous agriculturists of that section of the state. He was a Republican in his political affiliations. On August 8, 1848, he was united in marriage to Lydia Ann King, born March 21, 1826, and the following named children were born to them: George Dillwyn, born October 29, 1849; Ella R., born May 25, 1852, died January 5, 1884; Hannah Mary, born November 16, 1857; Wellington, born April 11, 1860, died December 12, 1880, and Archibald Dick King, born March 26, 1864. Mr. King's death occurred June 20, 1893, his wife having passed away February 26, 1888.

THE OAT FAMILY. The earliest ancestors of this family of whom there is any authentic information were George and Sarah Oat, who resided in Philadelphia and were descended from English families who were among the early settlers of Pennsylvania, and were consistent members of the Society of Friends. They were the parents of a large family of sons and daughters, among whom was Jesse Oat, who was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he was reared and educated. He learned the trade of coppersmith, which line of industry he successfully pursued for a number of years, and became well and favorably known as a just and upright citizen. For several years prior to his demise he led a retired life, having been compelled to retire from active business pursuits owing to failing health. Jesse Oat married for his first wife Catherine Hoppel, a descendant of German ancestry, and among the children born of this union was a son, Joseph Oat, mentioned hereinafter. After the decease of his wife, Jesse Oat married Charlotte Hoppel, a sister of his first wife, and the issue of this marriage were several sons and daughters. The death of Jesse Oat occurred in the forty-eighth year of his age.

Joseph Oat, son of Jesse and Catherine Oat, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, January 28, 1796. He was educated in the schools of his native city, after which he served an apprenticeship at the trade of coppersmith, presumably under the tuition of his father, and, like his worthy sire, followed that line of business successfully for a number of years. On account of impaired health he removed with his family to Manoa, Haverford township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, where he purchased a farm and country homestead, which is now owned by the Delaware County Country Club. Mr. Oat was a man of strong individuality, and was prominently known for his probity of character. In all his business transactions he was scrupulously just, and in his trade and manufacturing establishment, which was located at 232 and 234 Quarry street, Philadelphia, he was regarded as a capable mechanic and master of his art. He was largely responsible for the development and improvement in the manufacture of copper pans, kettles and pipes used in the sugar refining and similar establishments, steamships and large vessels, and at the time of his death there was no man better known in his line of trade in the city of Philadelphia.

December 9, 1816, Joseph Oat married Sarah Van Meter, who was descended from an old and prominent New Jersey family, and to this marriage were born the following named children: George R., born March 31, 1818, mentioned hereinafter; Israel, born August 10, 1819, married Maria Worrall, and settled in Marple township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania; Charles C., born January 21, 1822, mentioned hereinafter; Ann Maria, born December 10, 1823, became the wife of George W. Colladay, of Philadelphia; Sarah, born November 14, 1826, became the wife of Robert S. Dunlap, of Philadelphia; Caroline Frances, born September 8, 1829, became the wife of William J. Reed, of Philadelphia; Josephine, born July 20, 1831, became the wife of Elisha Worrell, of Marple township, Delaware county. After the death of his wife, Joseph Oat chose for his second wife Sarah Roberts, the marriage ceremony having been performed October 1, 1835. Their children are: Francis Joseph, born August 15, 1836, died in childhood; William Henry, born March 14, 1838, died in childhood; Harriet Whitman, born March 27, 1839, died in childhood; Mary Roberts, born March 27, 1840, died in childhood; William Henry (2), born February 22, 1841; Emily Walker, born June 26, 1843, became the wife of Robert Grier, of Philadelphia; Joseph Lovering, born November 28, 1845; Albert Duy, born December 9, 1846, mentioned hereinafter; Fanny D., born October 1, 1849; Matilda Dunlap, born August 10, 1851. Joseph Oat, the father of these children, died December 5, 1888, and his wife, Sarah (Roberts) Oat, passed away December 6, 1879, aged seventy-three years.

George R. Oat, son of Joseph and Sarah (Van Meter) Oat, was born in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, March 31, 1818. His educational advantages were obtained in the schools of that city, and after laying aside his school books he learned the trade of coppersmith under the competent tuition of his father. By perseverance and close application he became proficient in the art of copper working, and was finally admitted into partnership with his father. This arrangement continued for some time, when a younger brother,

C. C. Oat.

Charles C. Oat, was admitted into the business, and the firm was then known as Joseph Oat & Sons. Under their united efforts the business of the establishment was greatly increased, giving employment to many skilled operatives, and became known as one of the most successful of its kind in the Quaker City. Upon the retirement of Joseph Oat (father) the sons, George R. and Charles C. Oat, continued in the business, and, following the principles established by their worthy father, they, too, became well and favorably known in the trade and commercial circles of Philadelphia, where the name of Oat was everywhere regarded as synonymous with integrity and straightforward business transactions. George R. Oat retired from the manufacturing business some time prior to his decease.

George R. Oat married, September 8, 1840, Elizabeth Apple, born September 26, 1821, a daughter of William and Mary Apple, and the issue of this marriage was two children: 1. Mary Elizabeth, born July 13, 1841, became the wife of George Cookman Suddards, and their children are: George Oat, born July 10, 1870, married Grace M. Hebert, November 12, 1895, and the issue of this union was two children—Mary Elizabeth, born October 23, 1897, and Grace Herbert, born February 1, 1901, died May 11, 1901; William James, born February 27, 1872, died July 7, 1899. 2. Joseph H. Oat, who married, October 15, 1868, Helen L. Hicks, and their child, Elizabeth C., born July 27, 1869, became the wife of Albert Lucas, on February 14, 1893, and their children are: Albert Hawley Lucas, born July 25, 1894, and George Rodman Lucas, born February 11, 1900. Joseph H. Oat died May 11, 1871; Elizabeth (Apple) Oat, wife of George R. Oat, died January 28, 1880. December 17, 1885, Mr. Oat was united in marriage to Sarah R. Oat, born August 20, 1842, a daughter of Charles and Anna Parrish (Roch) Oat. George R. Oat died June 27, 1898; he was beloved and esteemed not only by his immediate relatives, but by those who knew him best throughout his active business career and also by many appreciative friends and acquaintances.

Charles C. Oat, third son of Joseph and Sarah (Van Meter) Oat, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, January 21, 1822. After completing a thorough education in the schools of Philadelphia, he took up the practical duties of life by learning the hardware business, which he discontinued after a short period of time. He then entered his father's establishment, which was located at 232 and 234 Quarry street, Philadelphia, where he learned the routine of the trade and business, and was finally admitted into partnership with his father and elder brother, George R. Oat, the firm continuing business under the name of Joseph Oat & Sons. The practical knowledge and good business judgment displayed by Charles C. Oat aided materially in the success of the enterprise, with which he was actively connected for a long period of time, and upon his retirement from active pursuits he was the possessor of an ample competence.

Charles C. Oat married, January 24, 1845, Elizabeth Townsend Beaumont, born January 21, 1824, a daughter of Davis and Elizabeth McClellan) Beaumont, the former named having been a native of Bradford township, Chester county, but the greater portion of his life was spent at West Chester, Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Oat were the parents of one child, D. Beaumont, born May 6, 1848; he married Mary E. Strode, a daughter of Francis and Thamazine (Meredith) Strode, and to this union was born three children: Charles F., who married Mary Painter; George R., who married Maria Dunleavy; and Joseph H. Oat. Charles C. Oat died November 29, 1883, and his loss was keenly felt by his widow and children, as well as by a large circle of friends and business associates who were privileged to know him during his lifetime and appreciate his many excellent characteristics.

ENOS ELDRIDGE THATCHER, a well known financier of West Chester, Pennsylvania, is descended from a family which has been for more than a century resident in the state. His grandfather, Enos Thatcher, was born March 14, 1786, and married Elizabeth Jacobs.

Richard Jacobs Thatcher, son of Enos and Elizabeth (Jacobs) Thatcher, was born August 27, 1817, in Delaware county, Pennsylvania, and was educated at the district school and the Friends' Boarding School at Westtown. He learned the trade of a cabinet maker, which he followed for years at Kennett Square, Chester county, and later engaged in farming in Pennsbury township, in the same county. In 1854 he removed to Willistown township, and in 1866 to West Chester, where he established himself in the grocery business on the corner of High and Gay streets. After a time he sold his interest in this business and opened a store on Market street, in which he maintained his interest during the remainder of his life. In politics he was a Republican and filled the office of school director in the township of Willistown. He was a member of the Society of Friends. He married Harriet H., born July 19, 1820, daughter of Enos and Susannah (Hoopes) Eldridge. Their children were: Jesse P.; Enos Eldridge, mentioned at length hereinafter; Susannah Jacobs, and Margaret E. Mr. Thatcher died January 19, 1875.

Enos Eldridge Thatcher, son of Richard Jacobs and Harriet H. (Eldridge) Thatcher, was born December 31, 1844, in Pennsbury township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and received his primary education at the district school of the neighborhood, after which he became, as his father had been before him, a student in the Friends' Boarding School at Westtown. In June, 1865, he was employed as a clerk in the Downingtown National Bank, where he remained until January, 1868, when he entered the office of Kirk, MacVeagh & Co., at West Chester. Here he was employed until June 12, 1868, when he became teller in the First National Bank of West Chester. December 3, 1872, he was elected cashier of this bank, and continued in that position until June 15, 1887, at which time he established himself in the bond business in West Chester. This business he has conducted ever since, and is still engaged in it. In 1891 he was made treasurer of the Shenandoah Pulp Company and the Harper's Ferry Paper Company, both of Harper's Ferry, West Virginia. In politics he is a Republican, and takes an active interest in local affairs, particularly in the cause of education, having held for many years the position of treasurer of the Normal School of West Chester. His religious belief is that of the Society of Friends, of which he is a member.

Mr. Thatcher married, June 5, 1873, Lydia, born February 26, 1847, in East Caln township, daughter of Richard and Mary (Edge) Pim. Mr. and Mrs. Thatcher are the parents of the following children: Richard Pim, born April 5, 1875, resides in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, and is in the employ of the Cambria Steel Company; he married Alice M. Bentley, who died in October, 1902; Charles Rowland, born December 17, 1876, also resides in Pottsville; Emily Pim, born August 1, 1878, married John I. Lane, and resides in Poughkeepsie, New York; Harriet Eldridge, born October 28, 1880, married David F. Lane, and resides in Poughkeepsie, New York. Arthur Stockton, born January 17, 1886; and Marian Edge, born April 28, 1892.

JOSEPH KIFT, who enjoys the distinction of being the oldest florist in Chester county, is a grandson of Nathan Kift, who was born in North Devon, Devonshire, England, and when a young man removed to Middlezoy, Somersetshire, where he followed his trade, which was that of a butcher. Later he removed to Bath, where he conducted a successful business. While living in Middlezoy he married. His death took place in Bath.

Robert Kift, son of Nathan, was born at Middlezoy, Somersetshire, England, and like his father, followed the trade of a butcher. He married Jane Sharman, who was also a native of Somersetshire. He died in April, 1830.

Joseph Kift, son of Robert and Jane (Sharman) Kift, was born July 23, 1827, in the parish of Borough Bridge, Somersetshire, England, and received his education in the schools of Bath. He selected as his vocation in life the business of florist and gardener, and at the age of fourteen went to Scotland, where he worked at his trade in and around Edinburgh for seven years. At the expiration of that time, having attained his majority, he sailed from Liverpool, England, on the sailing vessel "Propius," for New York, landing there on Monday, November 6, 1848, the day before Zachary Taylor was elected president of the United States. During the winter he remained in New York city, and in the following spring went to Philadelphia, where for the next two years he followed the business of a florist. In 1851 he settled in West Chester, Pennsylvania, where, from that time until the present, he has followed his chosen calling. His establishment, which is one of the most extensive of its kind in the county, is conducted under his personal supervision. In 1876 he opened in Philadelphia a branch of his business, and of this branch his eldest son is the manager. In politics he is independent, and is a Prohibitionist in principle. He is a member of Holy Trinity Protestant Episcopal church of West Chester.

During Mr. Kift's residence in Edinburgh, he had become engaged to Jane Leslie, a native of that city, where she was born September 29, 1827, a daughter of John and Jane (Stewart) Leslie. When Mr. Kift had made sufficient progress in the New World he sent for his betrothed, who sailed from Liverpool on the steamship "City of Manchester," and arrived in Philadelphia on October 3, 1851. Three days later, October 6, they were married in that city. Mr. and Mrs. Kift are the parents of the following children: 1. Robert, born July 12, 1852, in West Chester, Pennsylvania, and is now in charge of his father's business in Philadelphia, where he resides; he married May Rose, and their children are: Robert Leslie, Frederick Howe, and Virginia. 2. Joseph, born December 27, 1853, in West Chester, Pennsylvania, married Nellie Graham, and had two children: Jane Leslie, born January 29, 1878, and Archibald Graham, born June 12, 1881; after the death of his wife, which occurred February 14, 1897, he married Edith Potter; they reside in West Chester. 3. John Leslie, born October 4, 1855, died July 16, 1856. 4. Ellen Ogilvy, born May 7, 1857, died August 17, 1865. 5. Mary Anna, born November 1, 1858, died August 3, 1859. 6. Anna Sharpless, born May 10, 1861, married John Scheidt, and resides at Chadds Ford, Pennsylvania; they have one child, Jacob Henry. 7. and 8. Edward Paschall and Jennie P. (twins), born January 24, 1864; the former named died June 7, 1883; the latter married Harry J. Foy, and they reside at Colorado Springs, Colorado, and have had one child, Josephine Kift, born July 28, 1897, died February 6, 1903. 9. William Newton, born November 2, 1866, died May 8, 1867.

HENRY CLAY BALDWIN, president and manager of the National Crayon Company of West Chester, Pennsylvania, and also actively connected with various other extensive enterprises in that town, is a grandson of George Baldwin, and son of Johnson Caleb and Hannah S. (Speakman) Baldwin, and his birth occurred in East Fallowfield township, June 4, 1836.

Johnson Caleb Baldwin, father of Henry C. Baldwin, was born in West Bradford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, October 16, 1804, and in the common schools of that vicinity he obtained a practical education. He began his business career as a butcher, and later became a farmer in East Fallowfield township, Chester county, but after a few years devoted to this occupation he again engaged in the butcher trade, which he continued to follow up to the time of his decease. In politics Mr. Baldwin was a staunch Democrat, giving his party an active and intelligent support on all general questions, and serving in the office of supervisor of East Fallowfield township, and in religion he was a member and liberal supporter of the Society of Friends. He was united in marriage to Hannah S. Speakman, who was born in Newlin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, August 26, 1808, a daughter of Francis Speakman. Their children were: John Holowell, a resident of Monmouth, Illinois; Mary F., who resides in West Chester, Pennsylvania; George Speakman, a prominent citizen of Marysville, Ohio; Henry Clay, engaged in business in West Chester; Joseph Worth, who died in 1874; and Johnson Caleb, whose death occurred in West Chester, in 1889. The father of these children died January 12, 1863, in East Fallowfield township, Chester county; his widow died in West Chester, July 30, 1890, and their remains were interred in the cemetery at Marshallton, West Bradford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

Henry C. Baldwin, third son of Johnson C. and Hannah S. Baldwin, obtained a practical education in the public schools of his native township, and after laying aside his school books assisted his father in the butcher business until he was eighteen years of age. He then learned the trade of carpenter, and for six years successfully pursued that occupation; subsequently he engaged in the contracting and building trade which he followed until 1872, after which he established the West Chester Steam Planing Mill and Sash Factory, which he operated until 1902, when he disposed of that plant. He then became interested in the National Crayon Company of West Chester, Pennsylvania, and at the present time (1903) is serving in the capacity of president and manager of this extensive establishment. He is also a director in various enterprises in West Chester, among them being the First National Bank, Dime Savings Bank of Chester County, the Edison Electric Illuminating Company, the Denny Tag Company, and the Penn Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Chester County. Mr. Baldwin possesses all the attributes of character that go to make a successful business man, and has won an honorable reputation and standing in the commercial world as well as in the community in which he resides.

In political sentiment Mr. Baldwin is a Republican, and he has been chosen by the members of that party to fill the office of school director in West Chester, and he has also been a member of the West Chester board of health since the organization of that branch of the borough government. In his fraternal relations he is a member of West Chester Lodge, No. 322, Free and Accepted Masons; R. A. Howell Chapter, No. 202, R. A. M., West Chester; St. Alban Commandery, No. 47, Knights Templar, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; West Chester Council, Royal Arcanum, No. 1003; and Uppewoc Tribe, No. 47, Improved Order of Red Men, of West Chester, and he has served as treasurer of this tribe since its organization in 1860. In his religious belief Mr. Baldwin is a member of the First Baptist church of West Chester, and has served as president of the board of trustees for over a quarter of a century. He is also president of the board of trustees of the Young Men's Christian Association of West Chester, Pennsylvania.

On December 27, 1860, occurred the marriage of Mr. Baldwin and Anna Martha Heck, who was born March 28, 1841, a daughter of Chambers C. and Catherine (Evans) Heck. Their two children were: Eva J., born May 23, 1862, died August 11, 1892; she was the wife of William Way Atkins, and mother of one child, Henry Baldwin Atkins, born September 12, 1889; the other child of Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin was Herbert Clarence, born January 18, 1870, who married Ida May Rambler, and died October 4, 1901.

DAVID C. WINDLE. The Windle family of Chester county, represented in the present generation by David C. Windle, of West Chester, is of English origin. The American branch was planted by Francis Windle, who came about 1725 and settled about 1728 in East Marlborough township, where he purchased a farm (in 1742) upon which he resided until his death, September 26, 1788, at the age of nearly seventy-eight years. He was a farmer by occupation and a Friend in religion. He married, April 14, 1733, Mary Jackson, who was born February 24, 1705, at Clonerany, county of Wexford, Ireland, and who came to America when twenty years old and settled at London Grove, Chester county; in religion she was a Friend. Her parents were Isaac and Ann (Evans) Jackson, and her paternal grandfather was Anthony Jackson, of Lancashire, England, who emigrated to Ireland in 1649. Francis and Mary (Jackson) Windle were the parents of nine children: Thomas, Ann, William, John, David, Moses, Isaac, James and Mary.

William, third child and second son of the family last named, was born in East Marlborough, where he passed his entire life. He was a farmer, and he erected the building which stands on the old homestead farm. He was a man of excellent character, a member of the Society of Friends, and his political affiliations were with the old Federalist party. As did his father, he married one of the name of Mary Jackson.

David, son of William and Mary (Jackson) Windle, was born on the family homestead, March 17, 1784. He was a mason in his youth, and followed that occupation until his marriage, when he purchased the parental farm, which he cultivated until his death, in 1870, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. He was well educated, and was an active and enterprising man. He was a Friend in religion, and a Whig in politics until the organization of the Republican party, with which he thenceforth affiliated. He married Mary, a daughter of John and Maria McConnell Morgan, who bore him nine children, of whom five were sons, and of that number three were soldiers of the Union during the great rebellion. The children were: 1. Rebecca, who died at the age of eighteen years; 2. William, who was a farmer in Kennett township, and died in November, 1902; 3. Mary Elma, now the wife of William A. Cloud, of Media; 4. John M., a farmer living in Newlin township; during the rebellion he served in the Second and One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Pennsylvania Regiments, in the latter as orderly sergeant, and was wounded in the battle of Antietam; 5. David C., to be further mentioned below; 6. Francis, who became a lawyer and was district attorney of Chester county; he served in the Third Regiment, Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, and was one of the guards having custody of Jefferson Davis, after the capture of the arch-traitor; 7. M. Jennie, a teacher in West Chester; 8. Sidney, who died at the age of two years; 9. Thomas A., a farmer living in East Marlborough township.

David C., fifth child and third son of David and Mary (Morgan) Windle, was born on the homestead farm, October 23, 1843. He was educated by Isaac Martin and at the Unionville Academy, then conducted by Professor Milton Dumall. In August, 1862, shortly after passing his eighteenth birthday, he enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, and next month participated in the desperately fought battle of Antietam, and he was also engaged in the battle of Chancellorsville. After the expiration of his term of enlistment, he served for two months with the emergency force called out by Governor Curtin to protect the state against the invasion by General Robert E. Lee. He then re-enlisted in the Third Regiment Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, with which he served during the remainder of the war, his service including the operations about Richmond, and he was for a time one of those who stood guard over Jefferson Davis, at Fortress Monroe. It was his remarkable experience to serve a term of nine months without being sworn into the service, and he was honorably discharged November 9, 1865, with the rank of sergeant.

Returning to his home at the conclusion of his long and arduous military service, Mr. Windle engaged in farming, but soon removed to East Hollowfield township, and for five years he devoted himself to teaching. After the expiration of that period he gave his attention more particularly to the management of his fine farm in West Goshen township. A man of excellent business ability and broad public spirit, he has habitually taken an active and intelligent interest in all questions of public concern, and he has been frequently called to important positions of honor and trust. He has served as school director for more than a quarter of a century, also as tax collector and in other local offices. In 1890 he was elected prothonotary of Chester county, and during a long period discharged the duties of that important office with a high degree of ability and with spotless integrity. He is prominently connected with the Society of Friends, in which he is superintendent of the first-day school, and a member of the philanthropic committee. He is a member of McCall Post, No. 31, G. A. R., and of the Grange, and he has held the highest office in the latter named body. His political affiliations have always been with the Republican party. He is known as a man of broad intelligence and discriminating judgment, and given to much reading in historical and general literary lines. He is a concise writer and a pleasing and forceful speaker, and through his attainments and his fine personal qualities he has long been a potent force in the intellectual life of his city and county.

Mr. Windle was married, March 25, 1869.

M. W. Hodgson

to Miss Anna Thomas, a daughter of Emmor and Hannah (Fairlamb) Thomas, of West Goshen township. She was liberally educated, and previous to her marriage was known as a most capable teacher. Of her marriage with Mr. Windle were born, all in Chester, six children, of whom three are now occupying highly honorable positions in life, while the others are fitting themselves for broad fields of usefulness. They are as follows:

Charles T. Windle, born April 4, 1870; graduate of normal school and business college; is now principal of the schools at Southampton, Pennsylvania; he married Miss Anna Bailey Carver, July 26, 1893.

Florence M. Windle, born September 19, 1872, a normal school graduate, and now a teacher.

Lucy A. Windle, born November 6, 1875, educated in the public schools, is a graduate of Dr. S. Weir Mitchell's Orthopedic Hospital, and is now a professional masseuse.

Frederick F. Windle, born November 4, 1878, a normal school graduate, and now a law student in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Ernest G. Windle, born April 5, 1881, a normal school graduate, teacher and student.

Alice C. Windle, born December 18, 1884, a high school graduate.

mention that all of the three children deceased died from accidental causes.

In 1842 John Hodgson, the father of the family named, returned to West Chester and established "The Jeffersonian," a Democratic weekly which is still in existence, the property of the son William. Mr. Hodgson remained owner of this paper until he disposed of it to his sons William and Charles, he continuing in the capacity of its editor up to 1865, when his son William became its sole proprietor.

In 1857 John Hodgson was elected a Democratic member of the Pennsylvania legislature, at which time the two political parties were so evenly balanced in strength as to require the change of only a few votes to win victory. He died in 1877, in Chester, Pennsylvania, shortly after establishing the "Times," which is now a prosperous paper of that city.

William H. Hodgson, eldest son of John Hodgson, became apprenticed to the trade of printing when he was only twelve years of age, and up to this time he has never engaged in any other business. As an artist in the "art preservative," Mr. Hodgson has always been regarded by members of the craft as well as the general public, a master. Because of his clean and intelligent work and the excellent taste displayed by him in job printing and in the "make up" of his newspaper, he has won the distinction of bringing into these lines examples which have been of value to his fellows, as well as a means of education to all who have been brought in contact with the results of his painstaking efforts. In 1872, on November 19, the West Chester "Daily Local News" was started by him as publisher, with W. W. Thomson as editor, and these names have been uninterruptedly at the head of the paper up to this time, a period of nearly thirty-two years. In this connection it is not out of place to mention that the business manager, all of the reportorial corps, the foreman, pressman and several others in the various departments of the paper, have been in their respective positions from twenty to twenty-eight years, thus proving that such ties of association could not have existed but for a mutual respect and satisfaction felt alike by employer and employes.

"The News" has won a place in the affections and esteem of the people of Chester county and in many places beyond the county line, because of its newsy features, its fairness to all parties and sects, and its correct manner of serving its clientage, which is the largest of any of the inland dailies in Pennsylvania. Its equipment in the way of presses, typesetting machines and other features necessary to the publication is not surpassed in any borough in the United States, and its general success is a marvel to newspaper

WILLIAM HALL HODGSON, of West Chester, Pennsylvania, is a native of the state, born in Doylestown, Bucks county, October 15, 1830.

His father, John Hodgson, came from England to America when five years of age, with his father William, and mother Ann, a brother Francis, and sisters Sarah, Ann, Mary and Jane. In this country three more children were born to them: Benjamin, William and Esther.

John Hodgson, father of the family, learned the printing trade in the office of the "Village Record," in West Chester, and soon after went to Doylestown, Bucks county, where he worked as a compositor on the "Intelligencer" of that place.

There he was married to Elizabeth Hall, and after a time located in Norristown, Pennsylvania, and purchased the "Herald," which he published for a few years, then selling it and removing to Philadelphia to engage in mercantile pursuits, and there it was that his wife died. She was the mother of five children, namely: William (the subject), Elizabeth, Annie, Charles and John; of these all are now deceased excepting William and Elizabeth, the latter being the wife of J. Atwood Pyle, ex-postmaster of West Grove, Pennsylvania. All of the sons, like their father, learned the printing trade, and it is worthy of makers throughout the country. This enviable position it has won upon its merits; by a strict attention to business, and an unfaltering determination to make it a paper for the people, a fireside necessity, and a welcome daily visitor to the homes of an enlightened public.

Mr. William H. Hodgson was married three times. His first wife was Alice Clayton, who died in about two years without issue. Sarah Rich, youngest daughter of Anthony and Maria Rich, of Buckingham township, Bucks county, was the second wife. She died in August, 1865, leaving no children. The third and present wife was Mrs. Wilhelmina Pierson, nee Dennison, of Philadelphia, their marriage taking place in that city in 1872. One child was born to them, a son, Walter Dennison Hodgson, who is married and residing in West Chester.

Mr. Hodgson has continuously resided in West Chester for nearly seventy years, excepting a few months in 1857, which he spent in the west on a business prospecting tour. In 1901 he, with his son, made a three months' tour of Europe, and previously visited Bermuda on a pleasure trip. He is a Democrat in politics and a Presbyterian in religious faith. At this time he is a member of the board of trustees of the First Presbyterian church of West Chester, a member of the Order of Free and Accepted Masons, of the Odd Fellows, Patrons of Husbandry, and the West Chester (social) Club.

LOWNES TAYLOR is the grandson of Lownes Taylor, who was born February 17, 1791, on the old Taylor homestead, and was a son of Joseph and Mary (Lownes) Taylor. Joseph Taylor, or his father, had exchanged the Pocopson mill property for what has since been known as Taylor's mill, near West Chester. Lownes Taylor had learned the milling business in Pocopson, and, on the division of his father's estate, took the mill property and the homestead, which is known as "Ditcot." He increased the capacity of the mill, improved the dam, and built a brewery at the corner of Ashbridge and High streets, West Chester. He was a successful business man, and accumulated what was then regarded as a large property. He contributed liberally toward the building of the West Chester Railroad, and took the first train over the road. He married Rachel, daughter of Richard and Rebecca (Webb) Baker, and their children were: Richard Baker, mentioned at length hereinafter; Rebecca Webb, born July 7, 1823, died December 3, 1844; Benjamin, born March 20, 1825, succeeded to his father's business, later went west, became connected with the first Pillsbury mills in Minneapolis, Minnesota, and died there; Joseph George, born August 16, 1827, was a farmer on a part of his father's estate, better known then as the "Henry Hoopes farm;" Edward, born August 26, 1829, was engaged in varnish manufactories and planing mills in the west, and died in Philadelphia; Balton Lownes, born February 1, 1832, is a dentist in Minneapolis, Minnesota. In politics Mr. Taylor was an old line Whig, and in religion a member of the Society of Friends. He died July 27, 1833, and his wife passed away.

Richard Baker Taylor, son of Lownes and Rachel (Baker) Taylor, was born September 19, 1821, in West Goshen, and was educated at the Westtown Friends' Boarding School, and at Wilmington, Delaware. He learned the milling business at his father's mill, and, after pursuing it for a time, turned his attention to horticulture, in which he accomplished noteworthy results. He produced the Rutter pear, and was interested in the Horticultural Society at West Chester. In politics he was a Republican, and an earnest anti-slavery man. He assisted many fugitive slaves to escape, his house being one of the stations of the underground railroad. He was a member of the Society of Friends. He married, June 6, 1849, Anne B. Lamborn, born March 5, 1824, a daughter of Robert Lamborn, of Kennett Square. They were the parents of two children: Lownes, mentioned at length hereinafter; and Helen, who is an artist in Philadelphia. Mrs. Taylor died April 21, 1879.

Lownes Taylor, son of Richard Baker and Anne B. (Lamborn) Taylor, was born August 4, 1854, in West Goshen, Chester county, and was educated at Swarthmore College and Cornell. He married Florence, daughter of Gilbert R. York, and five children have been born to them: Archer, born August 1, 1890; Anne, born July 13, 1892; Agnes, born August 26, 1893; Aurora, born September 22, 1894; died January 26, 1903; and Elinor, born January 2, 1896.

BENJAMIN VANDEVER. The Vandever family, represented in the present generation by Benjamin Vandever, had for its ancestor Morton Vandever, who was a native of Sweden, one of three brothers who were the original immigrants. Morton Vandever located in the village of Brandywine, a part of the city of Wilmington, Delaware, where he resided for many years and was widely known as the landlord of the "Green Tree Inn," a famous hostelry of its day, located at the head of what is now Vandever avenue, which runs from that point to the Delaware river. During the Revolutionary war the British soldiers took possession of this inn, devoured all the food and drink that was in the house, and did not depart until ordered to do so by the proprietor, who subsequently made it a point to regain ample remuneration for the damage he sustained. HIGH STREET FRIENDS' MEETING HOUSE.

Vandever married and reared a family of several children.

Benjamin Vandever, son of Morton Vandever, was born on the family homestead before named in April, 1770. He was a farmer in Brandywine Hundred, state of Delaware, where he passed his life. He was a boy of seven years when the battle of the Brandywine was fought, and he preserved distinct recollection of the noise of the conflict and the accounts of it which he heard related by participants. In a later day he met General Washington, and he cherished with pride the recollection of having shaken hands with the great soldier and of being addressed by him. Benjamin Vandever was a Methodist in religion, and a Whig in politics. He married Mary Murray, who bore him the following named children: Thomas, who married Allis Baker; Elizabeth, who married Sham Ring, of Chadds Ford, Pennsylvania; Nancy, who became the wife of William Provost, of Wilmington, Delaware; Mary, who became the wife of John Righter, of Wilmington, Delaware; John, mentioned hereinafter; Sarah, unmarried; Benjamin, who resided at Port Deposit, Maryland; Robert, a resident of Havre de Grace, Maryland; Joseph; Marton, who married a daughter of William Walters, of Dug Dale; and Emmor, who died in early life. Benjamin Vandever, father of these children, died in April, 1865, at the unusual age of ninety-five years; he survived his wife many years, her death having occurred in 1819.

John Vandever, son of Benjamin and Mary (Murray) Vandever, was born March 16, 1796, at Brandywine Hundred, Delaware, where he received his education in the common school. He was apprenticed to a stone mason and on completing his term he removed to Londonderry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he followed his trade until his death, December 6, 1856. In politics he was a Democrat. He married, October 21, 1819, Sarah Miller, born December 13, 1798, at Doe Run Village, West Marlboro township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Jesse and Mary (Baker) Miller. Their children were: 1. Mary A., born April 8, 1821, deceased; 2. Ruth B., born September 17, 1822, deceased; 3. Emmor, born July 6, 1824, deceased; 4. Julia A., born April 4, 1826, who became the wife of Howard Kimble, and is deceased; 5. Thomas Ellwood, born January 5, 1828, deceased, who married Barbara Bobb; 6. Hannah, born November 22, 1829, who became the wife of Theodore B. Unpstead, and who resides in Coatesville, Pennsylvania; 7. Jesse Miller, born September 5, 1832, deceased; 8. Benjamin, born August 11, 1835; 9. Sarah E., born July 17, 1837. The mother of these children died April 4, 1883.

Benjamin Vandever, son of John and Sarah (Miller) Vandever, was born August 11, 1835, in Londonderry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He was educated in the public schools, and he learned the trade of bricklayer, which he followed for a period of twelve years. He then passed a year in charge of a hotel at Dublin Gap, Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, and developed such an aptitude for the business that it became his life work. The following year he conducted the City Hotel at Harrisburg. In 1866 he purchased the Stephenson House, at Coatesville, which he managed for the long term of twenty-three years, during this time greatly improving the property, constantly keeping it up to the fullest requirements of the traveling public and making for it an enviable reputation. He then sold the property, and for a year traveled in the west, going as far as California. Returning to Pennsylvania, he purchased the Columbia Hotel at Philadelphia, which he conducted for a year, then disposing of it and purchasing a valuable farm tract near Coatesville, which he conducted with much success for eight years, making a specialty of feeding fine cattle for the market.

April 18, 1898, Mr. Vandever became owner of the Green Tree Inn, in West Chester, one of the oldest establishments of its kind in the borough. Upon this property he has annually expended large sums of money, modernizing it in every respect, and making it one of the cosiest and most popular inland hotels in all Pennsylvania. Situated at the corner of Gay and High streets, the terminal of the Philadelphia street car line, it is a favorite resort of very many denizens of the metropolis and of its outlying suburbs, on evenings and particularly on Sundays in the summer season, and Mr. and Mrs. Vandever have made themselves favorites with these visitors, as well as with the general traveling public, by their homelike welcome to their guests, and their careful preparations for their comfort, not only at their beautifully spread tables, but in their elegant parlors and upon their spacious verandas.

In politics Mr. Vandever is a Democrat of the Jefferson-Bryan school, and is a supporter of the principles enunciated in the Chicago platform of 1896. He is not a political aspirant, but while a resident of Coatesville was for two terms a member of the council. He was a charter member of Goddard Lodge, No. 385, Free and Accepted Masons, in the village last named, and is still affiliated with it.

JOHN FORSYTHE FAMILY. John Forsythe (2), the founder of the Chester county branch of the Forsythe family, was the son of John Forsythe and Margaret Cox, of the Parish of Anlow, near a little village called Artikelly, about two miles distant from Newton Limavady, in county Derry, about fifteen miles easterly from the city of Derry. His father, John Forsythe, was probably the grandson of John Forsythe, who emigrated from Scotland about 1655. At that time Cromwell was engaged in depopulating certain parts of county Derry, driving out the troublesome natives and replacing them with Scotchmen, whom he hoped would be more tractable; and among others the Forsythe family was induced to locate in the north of Ireland. Margaret Cox was apparently of both English and Scotch descent. The family appeared to have been numerous in the vicinity of Artikelly. Tradition has it that she was related to King James II. of Scotland. John Forsythe and Margaret Cox had nine children. The eldest was John Forsythe, the emigrant, who was born June 11, 1754, at Artikelly. His brothers and sisters were as follows:

Catherine, born 1755, emigrated to America, 1830, a widow, died 1852; Elizabeth, who married John Cox in 1777, and probably remained in Ireland; Jane, who married Richard McCammon, emigrated to America about 1800, settled near Wilmington, Delaware; their daughter, Margaret, married William Marshall, of Kennett; they had two children—William L. and Susan Jane (now Wilkinson); Jacob, who was married about 1783, and removed to Chester county, Pennsylvania, 1815. He was followed in 1820 by his brother Alexander, who in company with Jacob then removed to Pittsburg, where they continued to live and where are yet many of their descendants; William, the youngest son, is believed to have studied medicine and continued to live near Artikelly. His great-grandson, John Forsythe, with his mother, were occupying the old homestead at Artikelly in 1892; of the other two children, Sarah and Margaret, there is no record.

John Forsythe, the emigrant, came to America in 1773, at the age of nineteen. The voyage occupied seven weeks and three days. Among the passengers was a first cousin of the same name who settled in Georgia. His son was afterward a member of the cabinet of President Andrew Jackson. There is a Forsyth county in Georgia, and other indications that the family became one of standing. It will be noted that the southern branch of the family spelled the name without a final "e". Another companion on this voyage was John Oliver, who settled in Mifflin county, where he afterward became a judge.

Soon after landing in Philadelphia, John Forsythe started westward and finally found a home with William and Sabilla Kirk in Nantmeal township, Chester county. He soon found employment at teaching school, for which both by education and otherwise he seemed to have been especially fitted. He is described by one who knew him later in life as a person of medium height, very erect, strong and muscular, with a head long and narrow, forehead perpendicular, large Roman nose, gray eyes and sandy hair. As a young man he wore a cue so long and thick that when it was cut it is said to have filled a good-sized hat. He was then attired in the court dress of knee-breeches, buckles for his shoes, and a fancy scarlet waistcoat. His worldly goods were packed in a sea-chest which is still preserved in the family. Among other things, we are informed that his mother had spun and made for him nineteen fine linen shirts. He was also possessed of a fiddle.

The Kirk family with whom he lived were members of the Society of Friends. The records of Uwchlan Monthly Meeting show that John Forsythe was admitted to membership, January 4, 1776, and tradition further relates that the fiddle and scarlet waistcoat were then buried in the garden, and his dress and address forthwith became that of a member in good standing. Reports do not agree as to the direct cause of this change in religious belief. There are those who would have us believe that it was due to the preaching of Rachel Kirk, and particularly to a sermon on the text, "There is a principle implanted in every human, and which if attended to will convince of evil and approve of well-doing." There are others, however, who insist that the attractions of a fair maiden named Susan Kirk, a niece of the said minister, had much to do with the conviction. Be that as it may, John Forsythe remained to the end of his life a consistent and active member of the Society.

During the autumn of 1776, John Forsythe moved to Birmingham, residing with one Thomas Meeter, a shoemaker and farmer, whose farm was located within a short distance of the old meeting-house. He here became more actively engaged in school teaching. The school-house was quite near to the famous meeting-house. It is reported that he frequently had eighty pupils, all of whom he taught without any assistance excepting from the older boys. An education in those days did not go far beyond the three R's. His teaching, however, was thorough. Of this, frequent mention has been made by his pupils, many of whom in after years became men of reputation in Chester county. He is believed to have been the first teacher of English Grammar in the neighborhood. As there were no text-books, he taught from his own manuscripts and his knowledge of the subject. There was considerable opposition to it among some of his patrons who thought it unnecessary for their children to thus spend their time. It is related that one of his pupils informed him that his parents had decided that he need not learn grammar. The reply was, "Tell father I am master here, and thou wilt have to continue." The late Dr. William Darlington, of Concord, related that a pupil from Dilworthtown informed him that his daddy said "he needn't larn grammar." The immediate reply was, "I don't care what daddy says, thee has got to learn grammar." It is stated that his grammar in manuscript was years afterward given to John Comly, who was then a young man in limited circumstances, just beginning to teach. It was understood that the grammar was to be published. It soon afterward appeared as Comly's Grammar and went through many editions. He stated that he thought John Comly more in need of the profits derived from it than he. Comly's Spelling Book is said to have been a similar history and derived from the same source, although in neither work have we been able to find that credit was given to John Forsythe.

At the date of the battle of Brandywine, September 11, 1777, John Forsythe was still living with Thomas Meteer, over whose farm the Americans retreated, followed closely by the Hessians. It is related that in the retreat the American soldiers seized whatever they could carry, the Hessians taking what remained. One of the retreating Americans, whilst engaged in looting the Meteer house, noticed that John Forsythe carried a watch. The soldier caught the fob, but the owner got his hand on the watch before it left its pocket, and continued to hold on until he saw that the soldier was attempting to get something from his pocket, which he supposed to be a pistol. Thinking his life worth more than his watch, he let go, the soldier running with the watch and flourishing a drumstick which he pulled from his pocket. The British were following so closely that they fired at the retreating Americans from the porch. Among other things, John Forsythe lost all the nineteen linen shirts which he had brought from home, excepting the one which he then wore, and also the coat he was wearing, which was of the regulation Quaker cut. During the succeeding winter all the occupants of the house suffered for want of clothing of every description.

Although the religious belief of John Forsythe did not permit him to take part in the battle, it did not prevent him from assisting in every way possible in caring for the wounded and burying the dead, in which he was busily engaged for several days. Prior to the battle, General Washington had ordered the old meeting house to be cleared of its benches and prepared for hospital purposes. Here many of the wounded were cared for, as is attested by the blood stains yet to be seen on the floor.

After the battle, as John Forsythe was busily engaged in the graveyard, where were buried many of those who were killed in battle or died from wounds, he was approached by two men who asked him to assist them in burying their master. He furnished the tools and selected a spot in the northeast corner of the old yard, where they dug a grave, making it of unusual length, and deeper at one end. Here they buried Lord Percy, together with one of his servants, killed in the battle, whom they placed in a somewhat erect position at his feet. They informed John Forsythe that their master was an Englishman who had accompanied the army for the purpose of seeing war; that just prior to the battle he had been riding with Lord Cornwallis in the vicinity overlooking the valley of the Brandywine, when he declared that he had seen this same scene in a dream before he left England, and that he dreamed that he should die there. So certain was he of it that he placed his watch and other valuables in the care of a companion for safe keeping, to be returned to his friends in England. Some days later a small company of American cavalry came to the school house and asked John Forsythe to show them the grave of Lord Percy. Upon his doing so they rode back and forth over it until it was leveled to the ground. Many years afterward one of those who took part in this corroborated the tradition as given, and expressed regret for the part he had taken in it. Who Lord Percy was is not known. It is believed that the name was an assumed one, as it does not appear upon the records of the British army.

Near the close of the Revolution John Forsythe purchased the Meteer farm upon which he had been living. The title was taken subject to a mortgage of two hundred pounds held by Caleb Brinton. In the course of time John Forsythe was prepared to pay off this mortgage, carrying the funds in the shape of silver dollars to Caleb Brinton in the evening. He, however, refused to receive it, saying that he made it a rule never to receive money after sundown. It was tendered to him bright and early the next morning, and a receipt taken. For some reason Caleb Brinton failed to satisfy this mortgage record, which oversight was discovered in a recent transfer of the property to a descendant of John Forsythe, and the proper satisfaction was made about one hundred years later by his grandson, George Brinton, who had acted as executor of his grandfather's estate.

Thereafter his summers were spent in farming and his winters in teaching in the old school-house near the meeting house. With succeeding years his reputation seems to have increased so that many were desirous of attending his school. His charge was $1 per quarter. After a time he concluded that this was not sufficient, and accordingly gave notice that from the beginning of the current term it would be $1.25. On the last day of this term, each pupil as he entered in the morning handed him $1, that being the usual time for paying. At the close of the day he informed his pupils that he would not teach the next term.

Another teacher was secured, but soon afterward he was again asked to take the position, which he agreed to do at $1.50 per quarter.

April 12, 1781, he was married to Hannah, daughter of John and Hannah Cope Carter. After residing for one year on her mother's farm in Birmingham, then East Bradford township, they returned to his own home, where they continued to reside, he farming and teaching as before, until the death of his brother-in-law, James Carter, after which they sold their own farm and again removed to the Carter homestead, which they purchased and occupied during the remainder of their days, excepting a brief interval spent at Westtown Boarding School. In 1799 the school building had been sufficiently completed to permit of its being opened. Two teachers had been secured, neither of whom was competent to organize a school. John Forsythe was applied to, but at first refused. He finally consented, however, when it became evident that none else was to be had properly qualified for the work. A small dwelling was built for himself and family, since known as the Forsythe Cottage, consisting of three rooms, one on the first floor and two on the second. With his two assistants he had entire charge of one hundred boys, not only as a teacher, but also their oversight and discipline. It is true the course was somewhat limited, but text-books were equally scarce and his assistants without much experience. There is no question, however, but that he possessed the true gift of teaching—to discover that wherein each pupil might excel, and to encourage him along that line, so that in after years many have acknowledged not only his ability to awaken and teach, but also the value of the information imparted.

On April 6, 1801, he resigned his position at Westtown and returned to his home in East Bradford. Thereafter he devoted himself to farming and to literary pursuits and to matters pertaining to the Meeting, of which he was an active member, in the records of which his name frequently appears. He seemed to have been especially interested in scientific matters, particularly in Count Rumford and his writings. There were at one time a number of his manuscripts, most of which have disappeared, except one which has been deposited with the Chester County Historical Society for safe keeping. It is a treatise on physiology and kindred subjects, and while it does not show much of original scientific research, it is considered a pretty faithful digest of what was known on the subject at that time. The style is rather antiquated, abounding in large words and long sentences, with considerable circumlocution. He died March 3, 1840, and was buried at the old Birmingham graveyard.

John Forsythe (3), son of John Forsythe (2), and Hannah Carter, was born in Birmingham township, Chester county, May 19, 1783. He was educated by his father at the old Birmingham Meetinghouse School. He is reported to have been an apt student, and at an early age began to assist his father in teaching the other boys. About the year 1806 his father purchased a farm of two hundred acres in West Goshen township, adjoining the Westtown farm, and placed it in charge of his son John. Here he continued to reside through the remainder of his life. He was married, September 23, 1812, to Ruth Truman, daughter of William and Susanna Ferree Truman. Farming was his business through life, and he made a business of it. We know that his cattle were the best and commanded the highest prices in the market. Many of the Chester county farmers became dissatisfied with the prices paid them by the brewers for their barley. John Forsythe, with others, organized the Farmers' Brewing Company and erected a plant at the corner of Tenth and Filbert streets, Philadelphia, in order to secure a better market for their grain. This was not a success, however, and was finally sold. It was rumored that their superintendent was receiving a salary from the other breweries in the city to make the enterprise a failure.

John Forsythe had decided ability as a mechanic. It is related that he could make an axle for a cart as skillfully as a wheelwright. A new dwelling being needed, he rented a saw mill on the Westtown farm, cut his own trees, converted them into lumber, and built the house. The building of it required two years. The larger part of the carpenter work was done by one man, all the woodwork being taken from the timber grown on the property. The house has always been considered of excellent design. The mill-dam had been washed away several times. Finally he undertook the rebuilding on a plan of his own, and his work stands to-day. John Forsythe was a member of the Westtown school committee for several years.

Although not as much interested in scientific matters as was his father, he was always an intelligent reader and thoroughly informed on matters of current interest. He was noted for the correctness of his life in every particular, and almost entire freedom from sickness. He died September 30, 1870, at the old homestead in West Goshen township.

He was a consistent and active member of the Society of Friends, although not what might be termed a leader in matters pertaining either to the religious or business part of the same. In politics he was early in life a Whig of the anti-slavery type, and later a Republican. In temperance he was a pioneer.

James Forsythe (4), son of John Forsythe (2) and Hannah Carter, was born in Birmingham, July 1, 1785. He was educated by his father, with his brother, at the old Birmingham school and at Westtown, being of the first one hundred. He continued to live with his father, having charge of the farm. He was one of the first to refuse to furnish liquor to his helpers in harvest time. In consequence he found himself short of help, but bravely undertook the work with the assistance of one man. He had, however, during the previous winter, made for himself two grain cradles, the first that had been used in the neighborhood, which were of great assistance. His next neighbor so approved of the stand which he had taken on the liquor question that as soon as his own harvest was disposed of he took his entire force and assisted James Forsythe to finish.

Hannah Forsythe (5), daughter of John Forsythe (2) and Hannah Carter, was born December 8, 1787, in Birmingham township. Her education was completed at Westtown, she entering the school when it was opened in May, 1799. She was married, May 5, 1813, to Enos Thomas of West Goshen township.

Hannah Forsythe (8).

Sarah Forsythe (10).

James Forsythe (11), son of John Forsythe (3) and Ruth Truman, born in West Goshen, December 11, 1821, was educated at Westtown, entering in 1832, when a little less than twelve years of age. Four years later he had completed the usual course of study at the school and was offered a position of teacher of mathematics, which the family physician advised him not to accept.

In 1838 he entered the employ of the Triadelphia Iron Works, located at Coatesville, erected in 1837 by James Yearsley and John and James Forsythe, Sr., under the firm name of Yearsley & Forsythe. The works were located almost directly under the Pennsylvania Railroad bridge crossing the Brandywine Creek at this point, which was built during his residence at the works (?). In 1846 the partnership of Yearsley & Forsythe was dissolved, the latter withdrawing. The following year J. & J. Forsythe & Sons purchased twenty acres of land at Thorndale and erected the rolling mills which were known as the Thorndale Iron Works, and of which James Forsythe was superintendent. The financial depression which followed the election of Polk and Dallas resulted in the closing of almost every rolling mill within the state of Pennsylvania, and among them the Thorndale Iron Works. In February, 1852, the company made an assignment to Charles Downing. James Forsythe then removed to West Goshen township, having purchased eighty acres of his father's farm, upon which he erected buildings. In 185— he opened a boarding school for boys, which was continued until 1861. In 1864 this property was exchanged for a farm of two hundred acres and a gristmill at Spruce Grove, in Coleraine township, Lancaster county, where he continued to reside until 1875, when he sold the property and removed to Upper Providence township, Delaware county, which was his home until his death. He was one of the first students at Westtown to give attention to botany, under the encouragement and tuition of Davis Reese. His interest in it continued throughout his life, and he was reputed to be the foremost botanist in southern Lancaster county during his residence there. During its first fifty years Westtown was pre-eminently a mathematical school, and in common with many other members of the family, James Forsythe had quite a reputation in this branch, and also in history. He was a great reader during the latter part of his life, and was well informed on almost any subject.

He was a consistent although not an active member of the Society of Friends. He was a member of the Republican party from its rise, and a subscriber of the New York Weekly Tribune from its beginning until after the death of Horace Greeley. He died December 12, 1893, in Upper Providence township, Delaware county, and was buried at Middletown Friends' burying ground.

Emily Evans, the wife of James Forsythe (11), was born November 13, 1815. She was the daughter of Isaac Evans and Mary Conard, of Bird-in-Hand, Lampeter township, Lancaster county, the granddaughter of Isaac Evans and Ann Windle, and great-granddaughter of William Evans and Hannah Leves, who emigrated in 1730 from Ballycairn, Ireland, taking 1,000 acres of land in Lampeter township, Lancaster county, directly from William Penn, the title to which continued in the family until about 1850. She was educated at Westtown Boarding School. She died, February 20, 1901, at Media, and was buried at Middletown Friends' burying ground.

Truman Forsythe (12), son of John Forsythe (3) and Ruth Truman, was born in West Goshen township, 4 mo., 30, 1823, and was educated at Westtown Boarding School, after which he assisted his father in the management of the farm, which he purchased in 1852. He was in every respect a practical and successful farmer. He inherited his father's mechanical ability, which was used to excellent advantage in the business. He was quick to recognize the advantages of farm machinery, and among the first to adopt it. He was married to Rachel Hoopes Thomas, daughter of Isaac and Lydia Hoopes, and widow of Enos Thomas. In 1897 he was appointed on the committee of management of Westtown Boarding School, of which he was for many years an active member, being particularly interested in the farm. Under his supervision the large meadows were undrained and the stone road built from the school buildings to the station. In 188— he was married to Mary Ann (Irwin) Parker, soon after which he removed to 100 East Biddle street, West Chester, where he continued to reside until his death, 2 mo., 21, 1900. He was an active member of the Society of Friends. For many years he was a stockholder in the old Birmingham Library, in which he continued to be interested after his removal to West Chester. He was a great reader, a good talker, and was held in high esteem by a very large circle of friends and acquaintances.

William Forsythe (13), son of James Forsythe (4) and Ann Truman, born in East Bradford township, 11 mo., 20, 1811. He was educated at Westtown, entered as a student in 1829, and was teacher from 9 mo., 29, 1834, to 10 mo., 29, 1836. He was married in 1838 to Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph and Mary Pusey, and settled on a farm at Thorndale, a portion of which was afterward purchased by the Thorndale Iron Works.

Susanna Forsythe (15), daughter of James Forsythe (4) and Ann Truman, was born in East Bradford township, Chester county, 5 mo., 1, 1815. She was educated at Westtown, and was married 11 mo., 6, 1847, to Aaron, son of Isaac and Sarah Sharpless; resided in Birmingham. In 1869 Aaron and Susanna Sharpless were appointed superintendent and matron of Westtown School, which position they continued to fill until 1847, after which they lived on their farm at Birmingham until the death of Aaron Sharpless, when she removed to West Chester, where she continued to reside.

John Forsythe (16), son of James Forsythe (4) and Ann Truman, was born in East Bradford township, 4 mo., —, 1817, and was educated at Westtown. He was married 5 mo., 18, 1854, to Mary P., daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Smith. They purchased a farm in Birmingham township, Chester county, near Chadd's Ford, which continued to be their home throughout their lives.

Elizabeth Forsythe (18), daughter of James Forsythe (4) and Ann Truman, was born 7 mo., 20, 1821, in East Bradford township, and was educated at Westtown Boarding School.

Lewis Forsythe (19), son of James Forsythe (4) and Ann Truman, was born 4 mo., 3, 1825, in East Bradford and was educated at Westtown. He was employed at the Thorndale Iron Works, in which his father was interested. He was married 5 mo., 15, 1854, to Mary Ann, daughter of Davis and Sarah Hoopes, and purchased a farm in Pennsburg township, where they resided for eight years. He was bookkeeper at Westtown Boarding School from 1866 to 1879, which position he filled to the satisfaction of the authorities, and where he was highly esteemed by all, particularly the students. In 1879 he purchased a farm near West Grove, in which vicinity he continues to reside.

John Evans Forsythe (24), son of James Forsythe (11) and Emily Evans, was born 2 mo., 1, 1850, at Thorndale, in Caln township, Chester county; removed with his parents in 1853 to West Goshen township, and in 1865 to Spruce Grove, Coleraine township, Lancaster county. He was educated at Westtown; at the high school of Professor James W. Andrews, at Union, Coleraine township; at Haverford College, class of '72, and at Harvard University. He was teacher of classics at Westtown Boarding School from 11 mo., 1873, to 10 mo., 1877, excepting one summer spent in Europe. He was afterward variously engaged in teaching until 1885, when he organized the Forsythe school at Twenty-second and Locust streets, which he continued until 1 mo., 1, 1895.

John E. Forsythe apparently inherited his great-grandfather's gift for teaching. At the beginning of his work at Westtown he found about thirty boys in the classical department. At the time of his leaving, almost all the boys and perhaps two-thirds of the girls were pursuing the classical course. His ability to awaken and enthrall his students with a desire for learning and to thus hold them was recognized by all. The Forsythe school at Twenty-second and Locust streets, Philadelphia, was exceedingly popular under his management. The attendance exceeded one hundred boys from some of the foremost families in Philadelphia.

Not satisfied with the classical text-books, he early began the preparation of a Latin Grammar and Primary Reader to accompany it, which were exceedingly popular with his students and well received as far as they were introduced. In addition he had many original charts and other helps for the students.

On 6 mo., 20, 1894, he was married to Helen Lucretia MacDonald. In January of 1895 he removed to Upper Providence township, Delaware county, where he has since been residing.

Isaac Forsythe (26), son of James Forsythe (11) and Emily Evans, was born 12 mo., 27, 1853, in West Goshen township. His parents removed in 1864 to Spruce Grove, Lancaster county, and in 1875 to Upper Providence, Delaware county. He was educated at Professor James W. Andrews' High School, in Union, Lancaster county, at Westtown Boarding School, and graduated from Haverford College, class of '77. The larger part of the year 1883 was spent in the employ of the Philadelphia Water Department on a survey to supply the city with water from the Delaware at the Water Gap. The following spring he was employed with the Pennsylvania Railroad engineers on the bridge at Hackensack, New Jersey. The next three years were spent at the Friends' Asylum, Frankford, as steward and clerk. Resigning this position, he made many trips to the west, residing in and visiting the states west of the Mississippi, from Texas to Dakota. In 1888, in partnership with Samuel Conard, late of the firm of Cooper & Conard, he established a real estate and brokerage business in Philadelphia, giving special attention to western securities and lands. This partnership terminated in the year 1892. He was married, 3 mo., 14, 1894, to Sarah G. (191), daughter of Jesse H. and Susan C. (70) Garrett, and then became a resident of Media, in which vicinity he has since continued to reside. In politics he is a Republican, at the same time maintaining and insisting that "Principle takes precedence to party ties." He has been a member of the board of managers of the Home for Aged and Infirm Colored Persons since 1894, and actively engaged in everything pertaining to the Institution; also a member of the board of trustees of the Normal and Industrial School at Christiansburg, Virginia, under the auspices of the Friends' Freedman Association; of the Pecono Pines Assembly and Summer School at Naomi Pines, Pennsylvania; and of the House of Industry at 718 Catherine street, Philadelphia.

Ruth Ann Forsythe (27), daughter of James Forsythe (11) and Emily Evans, was born 1 mo., 27, 1856, in West Goshen township, Chester county, and was educated at Westtown; at the High School of Professor James W. Andrews, of Coleraine township, Lancaster county, and at Swarthmore College, being a graduate of the class of '79. She was a teacher, and for a number of years principal of the Friends' School at Moorestown, New Jersey. She also taught at the Forsythe School at Twenty-second and Locust streets, during the larger part of its continuance. She is now a resident of Media, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, and is yet engaged in teaching, although less actively. She is recognized as having decided ability, not only to impart information but also to manage a school.

Emily Forsythe (28), daughter of James Forsythe (11) and Emily Evans, was born 5 mo., 15, 1858, in West Goshen township, Chester county, and was educated at Professor James W. Andrews' High School and at Westtown Boarding School. Thereafter she resided with her parents, and for many years was actively engaged in managing the farm in Upper Providence township. She now resides in Media, Delaware county, Pennsylvania.

HANNAH CARTER FORSYTHE. The following sketch of Hannah Carter Forsythe, by Ann Shatpless, was presented at the second reunion of the Forsythe family, held August 17, 1900:

From the nature of the case, this paper must be a very incomplete sketch. It is but an outline of the life of Hannah Forsythe, the grandmother of very few now living, only five; the great-grandmother of many of us in maturer years, and the great-great-grandmother of the company of young people present with us today. In this outline have been woven some personal recollections gathered from the lips of those who knew her, who loved to listen to her narrations and to minister to her wants in a cheerful old age. The farm owned until 1883 by her grandson, William Forsythe, and now occupied by George Bartram, in Birmingham township (then East Bradford), Chester county, was in 1754, the property of John and Hannah Cope Carter. Here, 1 mo., 29, 1754, our common ancestor, the little Hannah, was born; here in 1851, ninety-seven years later, she died. One is tempted to name over the striking experiences which came to this country within the compass of her life—the old French war, the Revolution, the War of 1812, the Mexican war, the inauguration of all the Presidents from Washington to Franklin Pierce; the visit of Lafayette, the Abolition Movement, and various compromises of the anti-slavery cause; the steamboat, the Erie Canal, and the railroad. But it is not history we want today; it is something more personal, that appeals more to the heart, the simple annals of a virtuous ancestor.

Where George Bartram's house now stands was not the Carter homestead of 1754. The old house stood farther up the hill toward the north, a better location than the present dwelling, we should say. Not so thought our grandmother, for the higher the ascent the farther she had to carry the water from the spring in the valley. Accordingly the new house was placed, about 1812, nearer to the water supply.

Little Hannah Carter had three brothers—Samuel, who lived to be eighty-seven, and died in 1836; James, who farmed the home place until his death in 1795; and John, worthily represented in our gathering today. She also had one sister, Jane, who, with her mother, had the privilege of riding on horseback to Meeting at Birmingham, while Hannah trudged that way on foot, up the great hill that faced their residence, and along the road now closed, which then ran diagonally across country, from about the point where the school-house stands (school-house no longer), nearly to the crossroads where the Birmingham road intersects the Street road.

She went this way to school, too, only farther:

her course lay past the meeting house, past Seal's store, and followed the road up to its turn to the north. Just there in the lower part of the lawn of Mary Biddle, Hannah would enter the school-house where ruled and taught Benjamin Hawley. His school, I am told, was the only one grandmother ever attended, and some one suggests that this vigorous letting alone in youth was the explanation of her vigorous mind in old age.

Her father, John Carter, died in 1770, when Hannah was past sixteen years, and a year later, her sister Jane moved across the valley to the home of James Painter. On that presumably sunshiny day in Fifth-month, a wedding table under the trees at the west end of the old house appeared as the sign of the gladness and hospitality, and Jane had a generous outfit. But when, ten years later, Hannah's wedding portion was allotted, war had so lessened their possessions that she had to be content with little. Just when the young Irish school-teacher, named John, came that way we do not know, nor aught of the wooing save its result.

John Forsythe had suffered by the war, as has been told on a previous occasion, and for two or three years the young couple lived at the home of her mother. But they had the wholesome desire to have a farm of their own, and accordingly we find Hannah Forsythe starting out one morning, probably in the spring, for their new possession, the place now owned by Jonathan and Annie Eldridge, then called the Turner place. She rode on horseback, and carried her little son John in her lap. There had been from the Street road a short cut across the field and the path had been open, but this morning fences were up, and a longer way 'round, through gates which she must open and shut, proved to be her tedious portion. The house was small, and their earthly possessions not great. Half a mile away was her husband's school; his hours were long, and the boys came back with the master to board at his home. So that with the care of her own three children, John, James and Hannah, the care of their lively, hearty boarders, and the care of the farming interests in her husband's enforced absence (so that the mortgage might be lifted), she certainly had to look well to the ways of her household, and did not eat the bread of idleness. There is one dim memory of a load of cheese of her making being marketed in Baltimore that paid the last of the debt on the farm. But when her brother James died in 1795, John and Hannah Forsythe went back to the Carter place.

Then Westtown claimed his labors for a short two years, and in the Forsythe cottage on the Westtown lane she made out to stay a yet shorter time, glad to return in 1801 once more to the East Bradford home, to go no more out until fifty years later, when her body was carried in the early spring to the graveyard at Birmingham. This last long unbroken period of her life is the one which a few of her descendants now living can remember and can describe. In outward appearance she was neither stout nor spare, neither tall nor short. A lameness (she thought the result of a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism, at the age of nineteen, and induced by carrying on her laundry operations in bare feet), required the use of a cane. Old though she was, she was comely, of regular features, fresh and fair of countenance; indeed the most remarkable part of her personal appearance was the freshness and smoothness of her complexion; scarcely a wrinkle marked her face; her white hair was drawn back as tight as it could well go, to the level top of her head, and then coiled into a very small and tight knot. It was kept in its place by neither comb nor hairpin, but by its own cohesive force. Thus she had worn it from her girlhood, for thus her mother had wished her to wear it. But in youth this mode had not been entirely agreeable to her own tastes, and one day, affecting a different style, she was about to descend the stairs in her changed appearance, when she heard the language not spoken by mortal tongue, but just as plain as if so spoken, "Why need thee worry her with it?" So forcible was it that she went back to her room and restored the topknot to its place, and her mother's wish remained her law to the end of her life. Over this white crown of honor she wore the cap of mull, and in winter one yet thicker. A white handkerchief covered her shoulders. Her sleeves came to her elbows, and there entered in a partnership with long mitts to cover the rest of her arms. Whatever her dress, whether the dark pongee for daily wear, or the fawn-colored challi for First-days, she was always neat. When she rode to meetings on horseback, she wore her low-crowned, broad brimmed drab hat (beaver), tied by a ribbon under her chin. In winter a silk hood underneath the hat kept her warm. But when carriages came into use, her daughter-in-law prevailed on her to give up the extensive, intrusive hat for the closer fitting plain bonnet.

Of her occupations, shirt making was her specialty, and not content with making the shirts, she made the buttons, too. The cotton thread was wrapped around a bodkin until a sufficient nucleus was formed. Then the outside was buttonhole stitched so closely that the button was hard and firm. She knit stockings up to her eightieth year, and occasionally thereafter, but her hands grew stiff, and then grandmother sat with no handiwork, in her old green arm chair, leaning forward, for the chair had a tilt to it that sent every occupant to the front.

Her eyes grew dim with age, but in the afternoon, when the western sun came into her room, she spread out her Testament on the window sill and tried slowly to read its precious pages. After the Friends' library appeared in its monthly issue of forty pages, her granddaughter read it to her every First-day afternoon for years, the stipulated sayings and doings of early Friends. And through many of these fifty years she was the recipient of the kind attentions of a thoughtful daughter-in-law.

Except for the rheumatism, her health was mostly good. One word as to her temperance in eating. At four o'clock in the afternoon she took her hot water and bread or dried biscuit, nothing more then or that day. But the vigor of her mind was greater than that of her body, and, though she may have been a little forgetful, no childishness was apparent. Not given to much communication, she was quiet rather than garrulous. It has been tersely stated that when she talked she said something. Her neighbor over the way, Betsy Painter, daughter-in-law of her sister Jane, came in one morning to release her usual caretaker for attendance at Quarterly Meeting. She brought her knitting and counted on a quiet time. When the visit was over, her testimony was that she had never spent a day more pleasantly, for grandmother knew more about the neighbors and their relationship than Betsy had ever heard before.

Cheerful and lovely as were her days here, she dwelt on the great hereafter, and her main concern seemed to be ready to die. Trials of spirit came to her as come to all, and one such was the fear that having been of so little use in the world, her Heavenly Father had passed her by and forgotten her. Such was her feeling one First-day afternoon when Elizabeth Pitfield, a ministering Friend of Philadelphia, came to see her. Whether she knew or did not know from outward source the state of grandmother's mind, we can not tell, but her words quoted from Isaiah were singularly appropriate: "Can a woman forget her child? Yea, they may forget it, yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me."

Near the end of the winter of 1851, on the Fourth-day afternoon after monthly meeting, she was taken ill. She suffered from oppression so much that it was difficult to lie down. Thus she continued for nearly a week, when on the 4th of 3 mo., 1851, her long and beautiful, though humble life, was ended. Strangely and sadly enough, five days later, the same household was called upon to mourn the death of her son James, in whose family she had long been living, she having survived her husband eleven years and one day.

COPE. According to researches made in England by a member of the American branch of the Cope Family, the earliest known ancestor was John Cope, Esquire, of Denshanger, in the county of Northampton, who was twice high sheriff of the county and five times knight of the shire in parliament; he espoused the cause of Henry IV, and died in 1417, Joan, his widow, died in 1435. Next in line comes William Cope, Esq., who married a daughter of William Gossage, of Spratton, and she was living in 1487. Their son Alexander Cope was father to Sir William Cope, of Hanwell, in Oxfordshire, knight cofferer to Henry VII.; buried at Banbury in 1513. By his first wife, Agnes, daughter of Sir Robert Harcourt, he had one son, Stephen Cope, of Bedhampton, county of Hants, Sergeant of the Poultry to Henry VIII and Edward VI, living in 1552. His wife was Anne, daughter of William Saunders, of Banbury, by whom he had a son, Sir Anthony Cope, of Bedhampton, knight, living in 1573, while his widow, Anne, daughter of Sir Humphry Stafford, of Blatherwyke, survived till 1613. Next came Edward Cope, whose wife, Mand, was living in 1634. Their son, John Cope, died at Marden, in Wiltshire, in 1656, and Margaret, his widow, in 1670. This John Cope survived his son of the same name, who died at Chisledon, in Wiltshire, 1649, while Elizabeth, his widow, was living in 1681 at Avebury, Wiltshire.

Oliver Cope, son of the last named John Cope, purchased two hundred and fifty acres of land from William Penn in 1681, and with his wife, Rebecca, came to Pennsylvania perhaps the next year. He settled on Naaman's Creek, near the Delaware river, and there died in 1697, leaving four children:

1. William, b. about 1672, m. Mary ——— and is supposed to have had a son Oliver, a daughter Rebecca, and perhaps other children.
2. Elizabeth, m. ——— Foulk, and a second husband, Hugh Blackwell, of Bethel, and died about 1765, leaving children by the first.
3. Ruth m. Thomas Buffington, of Bradford, and died about 1728, leaving several children.
4. John, b. about 1691; d. 2 mo., 14, 1773.

John Cope, last named, purchased two hundred acres of land in East Bradford, in 1712, and erected thereon a log house which stood for one hundred and fifty years. He is said to have married about this time, but his wife did not long survive, and even her name is unknown. He was again married, 9 mo., 30, 1721, at her father's house, to Charity, widow of John Evans and daughter of Robert and Jane (Chandler) Jefferis, of East Bradford. She was born 4 mo., 11, 1695, and died about 1743, after which John married, 12 mo., 23, 1748, Elizabeth Fisher, widow of Thomas Fisher, of East Caln. He appears to have united with Friends after his second marriage, and he was an active member of Bradford Monthly Meeting from the time it was established in 1737, until his death. Beside farming he appears to have carried on the manufacture of malt. By this second wife he had eight children:

5. Hannah, b. 4 mo., 25, 1724; d. 10 mo., 10, 1817; m. John Carter.

6. Samuel b. 1726; d. 9 mo., 15, 1817. See forward.

7. Mary, b. 1728; d. 2 mo., 6, 1813, unmarried.

8. John, b. 1730; d. 7 mo., 31, 1812; m. Grace Cloud and Mary Dickinson, and had fifteen children.

9. Nathan, b. 1733; d. 12 mo., 3, 1820; m. Amy Banc.

10. Caleb, b. 11 mo., 4, 1736; d. 5 mo., 30, 1824; m. Mary Mendenhall. He was ancestor of the shipping merchants of the name in Philadelphia.

11. Joshua, twin with Caleb, d. 1818; m. Jane Brown.

12. Joseph, b. 6 mo., 1, 1740; d. 12 mo., 11, 1820; m. Ann Taylor.

Samuel Cope (6) was married 6 mo., 7, 1753, at Bradford Meeting, to Deborah Parke, born 6 mo., 5, 1734; died 1 mo., 13, 1774; daughter of Jonathan and Deborah (Taylor) Parke, of East Bradford, and settled on the eastern half of his father's farm. He also purchased other land in the vicinity. He was married a second time, 6 mo., 21, 1781, to Margaret (Dickinson) Smith, a widow, who was buried 3 mo., 22, 1804. He was an active member of Bradford and West Chester Meetings, and by his first wife had ten children:

13. Charity, b. 4 mo., 8, 1754; d. 8 mo., 29, 1840; m. Caleb Baldwin.

14. Jesse, b. 10 mo., 10, 1755; d. 10 mo., 18, 1755.

15. Samuel, b. 10 mo., 1, 1756; d. 2 mo., 28, 1837; m. Elizabeth Blackford.

16. Abiah, b. 3 mo., 22, 1759; d. 10 mo., 5, 1826; m. Jane Morris.

17. Rebecca, b. 12 mo., 23, 1760; d. 3 mo., 5, 1764.

18. Jonathan, b. 12 mo., 22, 1762; d. 6 mo., 10, 1840. See forward.

19. Deborah, b. 3 mo., 17, 1765; d. 9 mo., 1770.

20. Mary, b. 3 mo., 15, 1767; d. 7 mo., 27, 1832; m. Jesse Green.

21. Sophia, b. 3 mo., 17, 1769; d. 11 mo., 13, 1776.

22. Deborah, b. 9 mo., 16, 1771; d. 8 mo., 16, 1837.

Jonathan Cope (18) was first married to Susanna Mercer, who died leaving one child; married secondly, Zillah, daughter of John and Esther (Dicks) Darlington, of East Bradford, born 9 mo., 5, 1769; died 9 mo., 12, 1844. He settled a short distance northward from his father, on Broad Run, in East Bradford, where he owned one hundred and fifty acres of land. He had learned the trade of a blacksmith and edge-tool maker, and established a tilt-mill on the stream. His augers and gimlets had a wide reputation. Upon the establishment of a Friends' meeting at West Chester he transferred his membership from Bradford, and occupied the position of an overseer for some years. By both wives he had twelve children:

23. Phebe, b. 4 mo., 28, 1790; d. 10 mo., 5, 1842; m. Joseph Gheen.

24. Elizabeth, b. 5 mo., 17, 1797; d. 3 mo., 31, 1819, unmarried.

25. Susan, b. 9 mo., 11, 1798; d. 1 mo., 11, 1846, unmarried.

26. Jesse, b. 12 mo., 31, 1799; d. 12 mo., 11, 1802.

27. John, b. 8 mo., 23, 1801; d. 9 mo., 14, 1884. See forward.

28. Margaret, b. 1 mo., 17, 1804; d. 11 mo., 24, 1848, unmarried.

29. Caleb B., b. 11 mo., 13, 1805; d. 1 mo., 27, 1879; m. Hannah Sharpless.

30. Samuel, b. 6 mo., 12, 1807; d. 9 mo., 10, 1813.

31. Deborah, b. 10 mo., 23, 1808; d. 2 mo., 7, 1887; m. Thomas Hatton.

32. Jonathan, b. 8 mo., 10, 1810; d. 11 mo., 27, 1872; m. Gulielma Maria Thomas.

33. Chalkley, b. 6 mo., 10, 1813; d. 10 mo., 15, 1813.

34. Darlington, b. 6 mo., 13, 1815; d. 1 mo., 8, 1888; m. Sally Thomas and Ann Cope.

John Cope (27) married in 1826, Hannah Hayes, born 2 mo., 21, 1803; died 11 mo., 26, 1882; daughter of Eli and Sarah (Ward) Hayes, of Newlin township. He took the farm of his father, but about 1848 removed to a newer set of buildings and there continued to reside. He and his wife were members of West Chester Meeting. Children:

35. Hayes, b. 12 mo., 27, 1826; d. 2 mo., 15, 1834.

36. Allen, b. 2 mo., 26, 1829; living at the homestead, unmarried.

37. Thomas Savery, b. 6 mo., 11, 1831; m. Hannah Carpenter.

38. Sarah H., b. 10 mo., 1, 1833; m. Robert Garrett.

39. Jonathan, b. 12 mo., 15, 1835; d. 6 mo., 20, 1849.

40. Eli H., b. 4 mo., 15, 1838; m. Lydia M. Woodward.

41. Zillah M., b. 10 mo., 12, 1840; d. 9 mo., 15, 1844.

42. Hillborn, b. 11 mo., 1, 1842; d. 6 mo., 20, 1844.

43. John G., b. 3 mo., 20, 1845; m. Sallie A. Woodward.

44. Josiah, twin with John G.

Josiah Cope, the last named, was born in East Bradford and educated in the public schools of that township, after which he attended Professor Allen's school in West Chester and the State Normal School at Mansfield, Pennsylvania. For a few years he assisted his father on the farm, but in 1868 entered into mercantile life at Oxford, and two years later engaged in the manufacture of fertilizers at Lincoln University, which he still conducts, having a branch store in Oxford. He was married March 11, 1869, to Josephine Sharpless, daughter of Joel and Sarah Ann (Green) Sharpless, of Middletown, Delaware county. They have no children.

In politics Mr. Cope has followed the example set by his forefathers, and is a Republican. He has held the position of a school director for twelve years, and is a member of the Masonic Order and of the Grand Army of the Republic. In 1864 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Ninety-second Regiment at West Chester, under Captain Brooks, and served on garrison duty in Maryland. He and his wife attend the Presbyterian church.

GILBERT COPE. Joseph Cope (12), son of John and Charity (Jefferis) Cope, of East Bradford, and grandson of Oliver Cope, the immigrant, was born 6 mo., (August) 1, 1740; died 12 mo., 11, 1820; married 4 mo., 6, 1769, at Birmingham Meeting, Ann Taylor, born 10 mo., 17, 1749; died 2 mo., 26, 1803; daughter of Benjamin and Sarah (Nookes) Taylor, of Pennsbury, and granddaughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Haines) Taylor, who came from Didcott, in Berkshire, England, in 1708.

Joseph Cope learned the trade of a stone mason, and erected several of the old buildings in the neighborhood. By deed of 11 mo., 17, 1767, he purchased from Dr. Joseph Peirce a farm of sixty-nine acres close by his father's, and now the property of George B. Mellor. He built an addition to the house, and in 1788 enlarged his landed possessions by the purchase of one hundred and twenty-seven acres from John Lockhart, of which a large part is now owned by Herman Hoopes. He also erected a malt house, to which many of the surrounding farmers brought their barley. He took an active part in the affairs of the township as well as in his meeting, being a member of Bradford Meeting, at Marshallton. After the death of his first wife he married Hannah Way, a widow, who survived him. By the first he had eight children:

45. Elizabeth, b. 1 mo., 12, 1770; d. 4 mo., 28, 1843; m. Jacob Jefferis, of East Bradford.

46. Mary, b. 1 mo., 1, 1772; d. 4 mo., 19, 1830, unmarried.

47. Sarah, b. 8 mo., 15, 1775; d. 4 mo., 22, 1863; m. John Gibbons.

48. Charity, b. 3 mo., 12, 1779; d. 7 mo., 25, 1803, unmarried; a teacher.

49. John, b. 5 mo., 1, 1783; d. 3 mo., 18, 1811, unmarried; educated at the University of Pennsylvania, and taught school for a short time.

50. Isaac, b. 9 mo., 3, 1786; d. 11 mo., 18, 1789.

51. Hannah, b. 6 mo., 18, 1789; d. 7 mo., 26, 1819, unmarried.

52. Joseph, b. 12 mo., 27, 1794; d. 4 mo., 4, 1870.

Joseph Cope, last named, was educated at the neighborhood schools and at the boarding school of John Comly, author of educational works, at Byberry, Philadelphia county. In the year 1820 he visited England, partly on account of his health, there being a tendency to consumption in the family, and his mother, brother John and sisters Charity and Hannah having succumbed to this disease.

He was married 11 mo., 27, 1823, to Rachel W. Cope, born 7 mo., 11, 1799; died 2 mo., 3, 1834; daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Willits) Cope, of Fayette county, Pennsylvania. He was again married, 4 mo., 6, 1838, to Eliza Gilbert, born 11 mo., 4, 1799, in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, died 5 mo., 18, 1862, daughter of Abner and Ann (Cooper) Gilbert and granddaughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Walton) Gilbert, who with several of their children were taken captives by Indians in 1780 from what is now Carbon county, Pennsylvania. He inherited the homestead and carried on farming, and dealing somewhat in live stock. Being much interested in the improvement of the latter, he visited England again in 1839 and brought back some fine specimens of Durham cattle and Southdown sheep, of which he was an enthusiastic breeder for many years. He was actively interested in local affairs and in those of his religious society. In the years 1849-1851 he erected new buildings on the eastern and most elevated part of his farm, and removed thereto in 1852, leaving his eldest son at the old homestead. Soon after this he changed his membership from Bradford to West Chester Meeting of Friends, the latter being much nearer. Like some others of his father's family he possessed considerable literary taste, and especially for the old standard English authors, as indicated in the naming of some of his children. In his correspondence he seldom omitted quoting from a favorite poet or prose writer. By his first wife he had six, and by the last two children:

53. Ann, b. 11 mo., 1, 1824; m. Darlington

Cope, of Franklin township, and now living at the village of Lincoln University.

54. John, b. 11 mo., 23, 1825; d. 3 mo., 4, 1867; m. Caroline Baldwin in 1853, and Hanna M. Cooper in 1863. He was assistant superintendent of the West Chester & Philadelphia, and Baltimore Central Railroads, and lost his life by an accident, leaving one child.

55. Paschall, b. 1 mo., 7, 1827; d. 8 mo., 25, 1873; m. 1 mo., 17, 1856, Amy A. Baily, now residing with her only child, Lydia, wife of Isaac Sharpless, president of Haverford College.

56. William Cowper, b. 7 mo., 28, 1828; d. 2 mo., 5, 1868; m. 9 mo., 21, 1864, Margaretta M. Hughes, and left one daughter, Mary, now wife of J. Edwin James, of East Bradford.

57. Ellen, b. 2 mo., 10, 1830; d. 12 mo., 5, 1874; m. 4 mo., 7, 1859, Lewis Passmore, of London Britain, and left children, William C., Thomas L., and John W. Passmore.

58. Edward Young, b. 8 mo., 1, 1831; d. 9 mo., 13, 1896, near Winona, Ohio; m. 9 mo., 25, 1857, Alice Gilbert, and left children, Charles and Anna.

59. Rachel W., born 3 mo., 26, 1839; d. 10 mo., 18, 1874; m. William Cope, of Fayette county, Pennsylvania, and a second husband, Job Huestis, of Columbiana county, Ohio, and left children, Francis R. and Edna E. Cope and Edward C. Huestis.

60. Gilbert, b. 8 mo., 17, 1840.

The last named grew up on the farm and enjoyed the pleasures of going barefoot, wading, swimming and fishing in the creek which flowed through the farm, and navigating the duck pond in a wash-tub or section of a hollow log for a canoe. He attended in succession family schools, the Friends' School in West Chester, and the Westtown Boarding School, but only in winter after he was eight years old and ceased before he was seventeen. At twelve he became infatuated with botanical pursuits, which for many years afforded much pleasure. Instead of preserving the dried plants he found an easy method of printing the leaves in natural colors, and made his herbarium of many hundreds of species in this way. At seventeen he had his attention drawn to the subject of genealogy, which eventually became the ruling passion, yet the study of families naturally led to an interest in local history and resulted in the collection of a large amount of data relating to surveys and the establishment of mills, manufactories and places of religious worship, etc.

Beginning with the Cope Genealogy, published in 1861, he has compiled the Brown, Dutton, Sharpless (1333 pages), Dunwoody and Hood, and Smedley (1000 pages) Genealogies, beside assisting in the compilation of other similar works, and he is now engaged upon two large family histories. In conjunction with his friend, the late Judge Putney, he compiled the "History of Chester County," a large quarto volume of over 800 pages, published in 1881. From an interest in the details of past generations came the desire to preserve the ancient records and documents, and of the latter he has put tens of thousands into book form, including archives of the county and valuable manuscripts in possession of the Philadelphia Library, the College of Physicians, and the Historical Society of Pennsylvania. He has done more than any one else for the preservation of the records of the Society of Friends, and to make their contents accessible to inquirers, having copied thousands of pages and made abstracts of births, deaths and marriages from those of his own county and many from other counties and states. For the safety of his own collections he has had a fire-proof vault erected at his residence.

Since 1872 his home has been in West Chester, and he was married there, 2 mo., 5, 1880, to Anna Garrett, born close by the old Birmingham Meeting, 12 mo., 7, 1848; daughter of David and Marv Ann (Hoopes) Garrett, and descended from William Garrett, the settler in Darby, through two Samuels and two Aarons in succession. She has been a valuable and sympathetic assistant in his pursuits. They have had four children: Herman, born 11 mo., 21, 1880; a graduate of Westtown Boarding School, now clerking in Philadelphia; Ellen, born 2 mo., 27, 1884; a graduate at Westtown, and now a student at Wellesley College, Massachusetts; David G., born 8 mo., 18, 1885; died 9 mo., 12, 1885; Joseph, born 11 mo., 21, 1886, a student at Westtown.

ROBERT T. CORNWELL. That branch of the Cornwell family which is represented by Captain Robert Thompson Cornwell came from the state of New York, where his father, Daniel Cornwell was born, June 5, 1804.

Daniel Cornwell was educated in the public schools, and he made farming his occupation, in Chemung county, New York. He was a Whig in politics until the dissolution of the party, when he became a Republican. February 17, 1831, he married Elizabeth Thompson, daughter of Robert Alexander and Mary (Wallace) Thompson. Her father, a son of Robert and Mary (Roberts) Thompson, with a brother, settled at Thomson Ridge, New York. His wife was a daughter of William Wallace, born in Scotland, in 1749, who married a Miss Crawford, a native of Scotland. William Wallace emigrated to the north of Ireland. A Presbyterian in religion, the differences between his church and the Catholics caused him to emigrate to America in 1794, and he settled at Scottstown, Orange county, New York, where he resided until his death, May 27, 1832, at the age of eighty-three years. Daniel Cornwell died May 29, 1883, aged eighty years, and his wife died February 12, 1903, aged ninety-three years.

Robert Thompson Cornwell, son of Daniel and Elizabeth (Thompson) Cornwell, was born in Orange county, New York, January 29, 1835. He received his education at public and private schools, at the Monticello Academy in Sullivan county, New York, and at the University of Northern Pennsylvania, an academy situated at Bethany, Wayne county.

His early occupation was teaching. He was in 1853 and 1854 an instructor in both the before mentioned academies. In April, 1855, he was called from the Monticello Academy to Millersville, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, to teach grammar and mathematics in a three months Normal Institute held under the auspices of the late Dr. James P. Wickersham, then superintendent of common schools in that county. This institute was so successful in its results as to lead to the establishment in the fall of that year of the Lancaster County Normal School, in the same place, and Mr. Cornwell became a member of its faculty. He occupied this position until the fall of 1858, when he and J. Willis Westlake, A. M., from the same faculty, resigned to accept an invitation to open what proved to be a very useful and successful academy and normal school at Indiana, Indiana county, Pennsylvania.

In April, 1861, at the breaking out of the war of the rebellion, he raised a company, under the first call of President Lincoln for troops, many of his students joining it. But the company was not accepted, as a great many more troops were offered by Pennsylvania than were necessary to fill her quota of the call, and Mr. Cornwall disbanded his company and again resumed his school work. In August, 1862, he raised another company which joined the Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. This regiment organized at Philadelphia in October, 1861. A number of his men joined Company "I" and the remainder Company "K" of that regiment, filling both to a maximum, and Captain Cornwell was mustered as the commanding officer of the former. He shared the services of his company and regiment in 1862, guarding the navy yard, railroads, etc., at Annapolis, Maryland; in 1863, as a part of the Eighth Corps, in West Virginia; and in 1864 as a part of the Sixth Corps, in front of Petersburg, Virginia, at Monocacy, Maryland, and with General Sheridan in his great campaign in the Shenandoah Valley. On the 13th of June, 1863, at the time of General Milroy's disaster in the valley, Captain Cornwell was captured while sick with typhoid fever in the hospital, and remained a prisoner of war (most of the time in Libby Prison, at Richmond, Virginia,) until May 2, 1864, when he was specially exchanged. Early in July, 1864, while in front of Petersburg, he was detailed as provost marshal of the Third Division of the Sixth Army Corps, on the staff of General James B. Ricketts, commanding that division, where he served until the expiration of his company's term of service, October 25, 1864, when he was honorably discharged.

Upon quitting the service he came to West Chester, where his wife and child were, and at once entered upon the study of law in the office of Hon. William B. Waddell, who was later president judge of the courts of Chester county. He was admitted to practice December 10, 1866, since which time he has devoted himself continuously to his professional work. He was for ten years (1868-1878) associated in the practice of the law with the late Hon. William Darlington under the firm name of Darlington & Cornwell.

In adopting the law as a profession, Captain Cornwell did not lose his interest in educational work. He served as school director in West Chester about twenty-five years, during the greater portion of which time he was president of the board; and he has been one of the trustees of the West Chester State Normal School almost continuously since its organization in 1871. He has moreover taken a leading part in other enterprises and charities of his vicinage. He has been president of the Electric Light Company of West Chester from its organization in 1885; president of the Chester County Hospital from its incorporation in 1892; is a director in the National Bank of Chester county; chairman of the executive committee of the Dime Savings Bank of Chester county; one of the managers of the Assembly Association of West Chester since its incorporation, and of Oaklands cemetery, of which he has been secretary and treasurer for more than thirty years.

He is a Republican in politics. Attaining his majority with the birth of that party in 1856, he cast his first vote for its then candidate for president, John C. Fremont. He is a member of McCall Post, No. 31, G. A. R.; of the Union Veteran Legion, and of the Pennsylvania Commandery of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States.

Captain Cornwell for five years (1873-1878) held a commission in the National Guard of the state, commanding the Wayne Fencibles of West Chester, an organization which always enjoyed a superior record. During the fierce railroad riots of 1877 he, with his command, guarded the engines and train which took Governor Hartranft and staff over the mountains to Pittsburg, and, almost immediately upon arriving there, Captain Cornwell, in command of a battalion consisting of the Wayne Fencibles and Company H of Chester, Pennsylvania, was entrusted with the responsible duty of guarding one of the first two freight trains started east from Pittsburg on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Captain Cornwell was married, May 9, 1859, to Lydia Ann Jackson, of Chester. She was born October 2, 1834, a daughter of Joseph and Mary (Gray) Jackson. Her father was the son of Israel, who traced his lineage through Israel, John and William to Isaac Jackson, who was born in Ireland, in 1665, came to America in 1725, and settled at Londongrove, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Isaac Jackson was a member of the Society of Friends. The children of Robert Thompson and Lydia Ann (Jackson) Cornwell were: 1. Gibbons Gray, born August 18, 1861; 2. Martha Jackson, born January 29, 1865; 3. Mary Elizabeth, born March 18, 1867; 4. Ada Westlake, born January 9, 1873, married October 7, 1902, to Joseph Hemphill, Jr., M. D., of West Chester, Pennsylvania. 5. William Darlington, born September 19, 1874.

Gibbons Gray Cornwell, eldest child in the family named above, began his education in the public schools of West Chester, subsequently attended the State Normal School of the same place, and was graduated from Yale University in the class of 1886. He read law with his father, was admitted to the bar June 10, 1889, and father and son became associated in practice under the firm name of Cornwell & Cornwell.

For many years, Gibbons Gray Cornwell was a member of Company I, Sixth Infantry, National Guard of Pennsylvania, and in 1897 he was elected to its captaincy. His regiment promptly answered the call of President McKinley for troops for the Spanish-American war, and rendezvoused at Camp Mount Gretna, Pennsylvania, April 28, 1898, and was mustered into the service of the United States as the Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, May 10, following. The regiment was assigned to the Second Brigade, Second Division, Second Army Corps, and served at Camp Alger and elsewhere, awaiting orders for the seat of war, but the early cessation of hostilities occasioned its muster out on October 17, 1898. Captain Cornwell commanded his company during this period. After his regiment had resumed its place in the National Guard, he was promoted to the lieutenant-colonelcy.

He is a member of West Chester Lodge, No. 322, F. & A. M., Howell Chapter, No. 202, R. A. M., and of St. Albans Commandery, No. 47, K. T. He is also a member of the West Chester Club, the West Chester Golf and Country Club, West Chester Fire Company No. 1, of which he is a vice-president, and the West Chester Assembly. In politics he is a Republican.

Colonel Cornwell was married, January 18, 1899, to Miss Ella Eberman, born at Strasburg, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, August 20, 1866, a daughter of Edward Miller and Mary Angelica (Potts) Eberman. The children born of the marriage were Mary Gray, born in July, 1900, who died in infancy; and Gibbons Gray, Jr., born August 8, 1902.

HEMPHILL. Nothing positive is known concerning the Hemphill family of Chester county prior to 1747, in which year James Hemphill was a taxable in Edgmont township, now part of Delaware county. The tax lists of the county for the years 1741-6 are unluckily lost. All that can be said with certainty is that Alexander Hemphill and his children (no record of his wife) came to this country from the northern part of Ireland before the middle of the eighteenth century. A tradition that is very general among Alexander's descendants is that he came from Newton-Limavady, in the county Londonderry, when his son Joseph was eight years of age. The appearance of Joseph's name on the tax list of 1753, and his marriage in 1760, would seem to set the date of arrival about 1740.

1. Alexander Hemphill, the father, first appeared on the Chester county tax list in 1754, as an "inmate" in Edgmont. He never became a land-owner, and probably lived with his son James, or his son-in-law, John Fox. In 1766 or 1767 he went to live with his son James, who was then in Goshen, and here he stayed, following his occupation—that of a malster—until his death in April or May, 1768. In his will, on file at West Chester, he gives to his son-in-law, John Fox, five shillings, and to his grandchildren, James and Hannah Fox, ten pounds each upon arriving at the age of twenty-one; the balance of his estate, appraised at three hundred and seventy-seven pounds, he bequeaths to his two sons, James and Joseph, in equal shares. He names his son, James, and his "friend, Thomas Wills," as his executors. Alexander's children, so far as positively known, were:

2. James.

3. Mary, married at Holy Trinity (Old Swedes') church, Wilmington, February 26, 1753, to John Fox. He resided in Edgmont, 1753 to 1761, and was for some fifteen years after that date a resident of Upper Providence township. Mary Fox probably died before her father, leaving only the two children mentioned in Alexander's will.

4. Joseph.

2. James Hemphill, as above stated, was in Edgmont as early as 1747, and may have been there even earlier. He was married at Christ's church, Philadelphia, December 26, 1750, to Elizabeth Wills (b. in Middletown township, December 30, 1731), daughter of Thomas and Ann (Hunter Penrose) Wills, of Middletown.

He lived in Edgmont until 1758, when he bought a farm of one hundred and seventy-five acres in Goshen township, to which he moved with his family, and continued his occupation of farmer and malster until his death in 1809. He served at different times as a township officer in both Edgmont and Goshen, and from 1762 to 1803, was one of the trustees of Middletown Presbyterian church. He was buried August 12, 1809, at Saint John's (Episcopal) church, in Concord township.

After the sale of his plantation in 1812, his widow and three of his daughters moved to West Chester, where the widow died, November 27, 1819. Her will is on file at West Chester. The children of James and Elizabeth Hemphill, so far as known, were:

5. James, who went to Kentucky, fought under St. Clair and Wayne in the Indian wars of 1791-4, and was last heard from in 1795.

6. Ann, married December, 1772, Alexander Boggs, of Goshen. They had two children, Ann married Levi Talley, of Delaware; and Alexander.

7. Mary, married about 1773, William Dunwoody, son of David and Agnes Dunwoody, of Whiteand. He must have died before 1809, as in that year Mary appears in the settlement of her father's estate as "Mary, the wife of Benj. McLane." Her daughter Ann Dunwoody (b. 1775), married William Gilpin, of Wilmington, and had nine children, among whom were Edward Woodward Gilpin, for many years chief justice of Delaware, and Vincent Caldwell Gilpin, sometime mayor of the city of Wilmington.

8. Catherine, b. 1760; d. in West Chester, December 7, 1836, unmarried.

9. Elizabeth, b. 1762; d. in West Chester, July 1, 1846 unmarried.

10. Susanah, b. 1765; married Oct. 30, 1792. John Quinn, of Whiteland, who died July 3, 1793. She lived for many years with her maiden sisters in West Chester, where she died, May 8, 1838. Her only child, John Hemphill Quinn, b. Sept. 3, 1793, studied medicine under Dr. Jacob Ehrenzeller, and later at the University of Pennsylvania, where he graduated in 1814. He married Jane Osbourn, and settled in West Chester, where he practiced until his death, Dec. 1, 1823.

11. Peter, b. about 1773; was a private in Col. McClellan's Chester County Cavalry in the Whiskey Insurrection, 1793; and soon after moved to Hagerstown, Md., where he died in December, 1805, unmarried.

12. William.

13. Alexander.

4. Joseph Hemphill, son of Alexander, was born in Ireland about 1732. He first appeared on the Chester county tax list in 1753, a "freeman" in Edgmont. He was at that time a tailor by occupation, but in 1758 he bought a farm of 138 acres in Thornbury township, and began farming. In 1783 he purchased an adjoining tract of 113½ acres, which together with some 50 acres left to his wife by her father made his farm one of the largest in that part of the county. The entire farm of 300 acres remained in the family for many years. Joseph was supervisor of the township in 1774 and 1775, and served several terms as overseer of the poor. He was an active member of Saint John's church, and a frequent and liberal contributor to its support. He was married at Gloria Dei (Old Swedes') church, Philadelphia, December 31, 1760, to Ann Wills (b. in Middletown, Nov. 21, 1739), a sister of his brother James' wife. After Joseph's death, about 1797, his widow continued to live on the farm, and died there April 24, 1834, aged ninety-five. Their nine children were all born in Thornbury.

14. Alexander, b. about 1761; was lost at sea about 1785.

15. Christiana, b. 1764; d. in West Chester, Feb. 24, 1838, unmarried.

16. Wills, b. about 1766; lived for a time on the farm and later was interested in the forge at Glen Mills; died about 1811, probably unmarried.

17. Ann, b. about 1768; m. at St. James' (Episcopal) church, Perkiomen, Aug. 12, 1794, to Charles Willing, oldest son of Thomas Willing, the Philadelphia patriot and financier. Charles' first wife was Rosalind Evans, by whom he had three children. By Ann Hemphill he had but one child, George Charles, b. Dec. 17, 1795. He married Ann Caskey and left one son, Charles George Willing.

18. Joseph.

19. Mary, b. 1775; d. in West Chester, February 11, 1852, unmarried.

20. Thomas.

21. Elizabeth, b. 1780; d. in Philadelphia, 1875, unmarried.

22. Susanah, b. Sept. 26, 1784; m. at Christ's church, Philadelphia, April 30, 1807, to Charles Lungren, of Rockdale, Pa.; d. in Philadelphia, March 25, 1862.

12. William Hemphill, son of James and Elizabeth (Wills) Hemphill, was born in Goshen, December 6, 1776. He was educated in schools at West Chester and Wilmington, and in October, 1794, was apprenticed to James Wilson, of Wilmington, to learn book-binding. Having completed his term of apprenticeship, he returned to Goshen in July, 1796, and soon after commenced the study of law in the office of his cousin, Joseph Hemphill. In May, 1799, he was admitted to the Chester county bar, and in November, 1803, he was appointed deputy attorney general for the county, which office he held for five years.

That he was one of the leaders of the bar is attested by the records of the courts of Chester county, his name appearing as counsel in almost one-third of the cases tried from 1805 to the time of his death. That he was a progressive citizen is shown, not only by the fact that in front of his residence on High street (where the Chester County Bank now stands) was laid the first brick pavement in the town, but also by the fact that he was the most energetic solicitor of funds and the largest contributor to the West Chester Academy. He was one of the organizers of the West Chester Fire Company in 1799, and was for several years its treasurer. He was prominent in the councils of the Federal party, and in 1811 became the candidate of that party for state senator; and, though defeated by Hon. John Gemmill by a small majority, he had the satisfaction of running well ahead of his ticket. He was married December 5, 1804, to Ann McClellan (b. Aug. 15, 1787), daughter of Colonel Joseph and Keziah (Parke) McClellan, of West Chester. He died in West Chester, October 2, 1817, and was buried in the Friends' burying-ground on High street. After the death of his widow, August 19, 1860, his remains were taken to Oakland cemetery and placed by the side of hers. William and Ann (McClellan) Hemphill had four children:

23. James Alexander, b. in West Chester, Oct. 5, 1805; appointed midshipman in U. S. Navy in 1823, and served until 1826, when he resigned and returned to West Chester to study law. He was admitted to the Chester county bar in November, 1828, and practiced for ten years. He then devoted his attention to journalism. He died in West Chester, Dec. 14, 1879, unmarried, and was buried at Oaklands.

24. Joseph.

25. Elizabeth, b. Jan. 26, 1810; m. 1826, Dr. Wilmer Worthington, of West Chester; d. May 10, 1875.

26. Keziah Ann, b. Aug. 27, 1812; m. 1830, Hon. Thomas S. Bell, of West Chester; d. Sept. 23, 1859.

13. Alexander Hemphill, son of James and Elizabeth (Wills) Hemphill, was born in Goshen about 1778. He was educated in West Chester, and in 1802 moved to Philadelphia, where he engaged in the brewing of beer. He was married, April 23, 1803, to Rachel Folwell, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Watts) Folwell, of Southampton, Bucks county. He died in October, 1804, and his widow married again in 1809, Amos Reeder, of Lawrenceville, New Jersey. She died in 1854, aged 71 years. Alexander and Rachel had but one child. (27) Elizabeth Wills, b. 1803; m. John Wilkinson, and had one son, Alexander Hemphill Wilkinson, who is still living.

18. Joseph Hemphill, son of Joseph and Ann

(Wills) Hemphill, was born in Thornbury, January 7, 1770. In 1788 he was placed in a grammar school at West Chester to prepare for college, and soon after entered the University of Pennsylvania, from which he received his degree of A. B. in 1791. He then began the study of law under the direction of the late Thomas Ross, Esq., and in August, 1793, was admitted to practice. A few years later his father died, and Joseph, feeling that he had already received his share of his father's estate in the form of a more liberal education than the other children had received, and believing that he would be able to support himself by his fast increasing practice, generously gave releases for his share to the other heirs.

In 1797, he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania Assembly and was continued in that office for three years. He was an active member, was instrumental in promoting the final adjustment of the Wyoming controversy, and succeeded in obtaining the passage of the law which gave Chester county her poor house, the first of the kind authorized by the laws of the state. In 1800 he was elected from the district composed of Chester and Delaware counties to the Seventh Congress of the United States. In opposing the repeal of the judiciary law, during this session, he made his first speech in Congress, and it was not until some years later, when a member from Philadelphia, that he made his second. It was this that gave him the name among his more intimate friends of "Single-Speech Hemphill." He removed in 1804 to Philadelphia, where he was elected the following year to the state legislature. From this time until 1811 he was actively engaged in the practice of law in Philadelphia, and was employed in almost every case of importance in Chester and Delaware counties besides.

By the act of March 30, 1811, the district court for the city and county of Philadelphia was created, and Joseph Hemphill, though a decided Federalist, was commissioned by Governor Snyder, an uncompromising Democrat, as the first president judge of the new court. Considering the heat of partisanship at the time, no better illustration of the esteem in which Judge Hemphill was held can be found. Upon the expiration of a six-year term he was recommissioned, but owing to delicate health and weak eyes he soon (1819) resigned.

In 1819 he was again elected to Congress, this time from the city of Philadelphia, and he was continued as a member for twelve years. As chairman of the committee on the slave trade, he took a prominent and distinguished part in the debates on the subject, and particularly in the exciting discussion on the attempt to restrict slavery in Missouri. In conjunction with Hon. Charles

Fenton Mercer, of Virginia, he prepared a report on the enormities of the slave trade, which was eulogized in the "Edinburgh Review," and the British House of Commons. Next to the suppression of the slave trade, the subject of internal improvements was Joseph Hemphill's particular "hobby." Soon after his admission to the bar, he had at a public meeting made a speech in which he had prophesied the development of the West and the appearance of great cities upon the borders of the great lakes; and while in Congress he devoted a great deal of his attention to legislation leading to the fulfillment of this prophecy. He was ever ready to assist in the encouragement of industries, the building of roads and canals, the protection of harbors and the improvement of rivers, and was an earnest advocate of legislation to relieve the veterans of the Revolution. In 1827, between the sessions of Congress, he made a visit to the Old World, chiefly with a view of establishing plants for the manufacture of porcelain in this country, and after a thorough examination of some of the largest European factories, returned to Philadelphia and engaged in the business. The enterprise was not a success and was soon abandoned.

Joseph Hemphill was married September 11, 1806, by the Rev. Dr. Clarkson, to Margaret Coleman (b. Oct. 13, 1774), daughter of Hon. Robert and Ann (Old) Coleman, of Lancaster, Pa. He died in Philadelphia, May 29, 1842. His widow soon after moved to West Chester, where she died August 3, 1853. Both are buried in Laurel Hill cemetery, Philadelphia. Of their two children, but one survived them.

28. Robert Coleman.

29. Alexander Wills, b. in Philadelphia, April 8, 1811; d. there Nov. 17, 1834.

20. Thomas Hemphill, youngest son of Joseph and Ann (Wills) Hemphill, was born in 1778, in Thornbury. When his father's estate was divided in 1802, Thomas received half of the farm; upon securing the interests of his sisters, and upon the death of his brother Wills a few years later, he became the owner of the entire tract. To this he added by purchase some 300 acres more. Here he spent his life. He was an active member and for some years a vestryman of Saint John's church, Concord. He was married April 14, 1825, to Ann Phipps (Crosby) Leiper (b. July 30, 1798), daughter of Pierce and Christiana Crosby, and widow of John Leiper. Thomas died March 16, 1843, and his widow, December 9, 1873, both on the old farm. They had five children:

30. Thomas Wills.

31. Susan Ann, b. July 3, 1829; d. Feby. 11, 1845.

32. Margaretta Coleman, b. Sept. 5, 1831; m. June 26, 1862, John Mitchell Baker, of Chadd's Ford.

33. Joseph.

34. Pierce Crosby, b. Nov. 20, 1835; lived on the old farm until after his mother's death in 1873, and then took up his residence in Philadelphia, where he now lives; unmarried.

24. Joseph Hemphill, second son of William and Ann (McClellan) Hemphill, was born in West Chester, December 7, 1807. His education was obtained under the direction of Jonathan Gause and Joshua Hoopes, of West Chester, and James W. Robbins, of Lenox, Massachusetts. Having read law in the office of Hon. Thomas S. Bell, he was admitted to the Chester county bar, August 3, 1829, and soon after to the Delaware county bar. Devoted to his profession, he was not long in reaching a position among the leaders of the bar, which he maintained until his death. In January, 1839, he was appointed by Governor David R. Porter to the office of deputy attorney general, serving until January, 1845, when he declined a reappointment. He was several times the nominee of his party for the legislature and for Congress, and in 1861 was named for the president judgeship of the district composed of the counties of Chester and Delaware. The Republican majority at that time was, however, too great to be overcome even by the popularity of such a man as Joseph Hemphill, and he was defeated, though by a greatly reduced majority.

The late Judge Futhy, who knew him well, has said: "His career as a lawyer was characterized by a remarkable degree of fairness towards an opponent in the trial of a cause, a quiet, yet resolute bearing, close attention to the details of the case in hand, and the most watchful care over the interests of his clients. He was not only a sound and well-read lawyer, but an excellent belles-lettres scholar. He took a deep interest in public events, and his mind was stored with contemporaneous history, both local and general. In politics he acted with the Democratic party, and for forty years had taken a leading part in its counsels, speaking at public meetings and supporting its nominations. But his patriotism rose above party, and he hesitated not to rebuke it when it was in conflict with his sense of duty."

Joseph Hemphill was married in Philadelphia, November 22, 1841, to Catherine Elizabeth Dallett (b. Feby. 14, 1811), daughter of Elijah and Judith (Jenkinson) Dallett, of Philadelphia. Joseph died February 11, 1870, and his widow, May 13, 1878. Both are buried in Oaklands cemetery. They had seven children, six of whom survived them:

35. Joseph.

36. Ella, who married John Dallett, of Orange, N. J.

37. Elijah Dallett.

38. Ann, who married Louis, Vicomte d'Hendrecourt, of Paris, France.

39. Catherine Dallett, who married John S. Wilson, and now lives in Baltimore, Md.

40. William.

41. Wilmer Worthington, b. May 20, and d. July 10, 1853.

48. Robert Coleman Hemphill, son of Joseph and Margaret (Coleman) Hemphill, was born in Philadelphia, February 26, 1809. He was educated in private schools in that city until seventeen years of age, when he entered Princeton College. Leaving that institution at the end of the year because of poor health, he spent the next few years of his life traveling through Europe. He was a member of the First City Troop of Philadelphia during the "Buckshot War," and one of the earliest members of the Philadelphia Club. In 1850 he removed to West Chester, and soon after purchased a farm near Hemphill station, which was named in his honor. After a few years, however, he gave up the farm and returned to West Chester, where he spent the remainder of his life.

He was married twice. His first wife, to whom he was married by Bishop White, October 2, 1834, was Martha Bryan, daughter of William P. Bryan, of Philadelphia. She died August 4, 1843, aged 30. He then married, March 30, 1849, Mary Caldwell, widow of Arthur Wellington Caldwell, and daughter of George and Elizabeth (Stone) Guier, of Philadelphia. He died in West Chester, January 17, 1888, and she February 4, 1895. Robert Coleman Hemphill had six children, three by each wife:

42. William Coleman, b. in Philadelphia, June 24, 1835; m. Elizabeth Ann Long. He was for many years engaged in business in West Chester, served in Co. H, 97th Reg't Pa. Vol., during the Civil war, and died in Philadelphia, June, 1888, leaving two children. Of these, the older, Margaret, lives with her mother in West Chester; and the younger, Martha Bryan, is the wife of Lewis H. Miller, of that place.

43. Henry Clifford, b. at his grandfather Hemphill's summer place, "Summerville" (now known as "Strawberry Mansion," in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia), August 25, 1837; m. Ann Rosalie Bell, daughter of Hon. Thomas S. and Keziah Anne (Hemphill) Bell, of West Chester. Of their fifteen children, but six are now living: Martha Bryan, who m. Wm. A. S. Ingram, of West Chester; Ann Bell, who m. Henry Speakman, of Berwyn; Robert Coleman, now in the employ of Adams Express Co. at West Chester; Ethel, who m. Clarence Cunningham, of West Chester; Caroline and Roscoe, who are living at home. Mr. Hemphill died on the 3d of November, 1903.

44. Martha Bryan, b. 1843; d. 1843.

45. Mary, who is at present living with her brother Robert, in West Chester.

46. Margaret Coleman, who also resides with her brother Robert.

47. Robert Coleman, b. August 6, 1858. He was educated in the public schools of West Chester and at Villa Nova College. After an extended tour of Europe he returned to West Chester, and has ever since made his home there. Since 1888 he has been engaged in the oil business in Philadelphia. He was married Sept. 15, 1892, to Emma Mortimer Sellers, daughter of William Henry and Jane Elizabeth (Armstrong) Sellers, of Philadelphia. They have one child, Jane Sellers.

30. Thomas Wills Hemphill, son of Thomas and Ann (Crosby Leiper) Hemphill, was born in Thornbury, January 22, 1826. He remained on the old place until its sale in 1895, when he removed to Media, and in 1900 to Newtown township, Delaware county, where he died July 27, 1903. He was for fifty years a vestryman of St. John's church, Concord. He married, January 15, 1852, Anna Maria Matlack, daughter of Isaiah and Phebe (Hoopes) Matlack, of East Goshen. They had four children: 48. Elizabeth Holmes; 49. Thomas Wills; 50. Anna Cornelia and 51. Sarah Matlack. Of these, Thomas, the only one who lived to reach maturity, married 1877, Sarah Jane Neely, daughter of Thomas Neely, of Philadelphia. They reside in East Goshen township, and have nine children: Thomas Wills, Anna Neely, Robert John, Isabella, Joseph, Frederick, Helen Bennett, Elizabeth Holmes and Edna Matlack.

33. Joseph Hemphill, son of Thomas and Ann (Crosby Leiper) Hemphill, was born in Thornbury, August 24, 1833. He married, in 1857, Phebe Ann Woodward, daughter of Caleb Woodward, and had by her four children: (52) Charles Woodward, now married and living in Lawrence, Kansas; (53) Margaretta, who married H. T. Smith, of Wellington, Kansas; (54) Emma, and (55) Elizabeth A. The family moved to Kansas in 1863, and all of the children are now living there.

35. Joseph Hemphill, son of Joseph and Catherine Elizabeth (Dallett) Hemphill, was born in West Chester, September 17, 1842. He attended private schools in West Chester, and then entered Willistown Seminary at East Hampton, Massachusetts. In 1860 he entered his father's office as a student of law, and continued his studies until September, 1862, when as first sergeant of Company D, Second Pennsylvania Militia, he was called into service. The regiment having been discharged, he went a few weeks later to Cambridge, Massachusetts, registering as a student in the senior class of Harvard Law School, where he was under the personal direction of the late Chief Justice Parker of New Hampshire, and of Parsons and Washburne, the well-known legal writers. Upon his return from Massachusetts the following June, he enlisted in the Forty-third Regiment, and as first sergeant of Company E of that regiment was again called out when the invasion of the state took place in 1863. After two months service the regiment was mustered out, and he then resumed his studies with his father. On October 31, 1864, having passed an excellent examination, he was admitted to the bar, and soon after went into a partnership with his father, which lasted until the death of the latter in 1870. From that time until his elevation to the bench he continued in the active practice of his profession, having his office in the Hemphill Building, which was erected by his father in 1836-7.

In politics Joseph Hemphill is a conservative Jeffersonian Democrat. He was for several years chairman of the Democratic committee of Chester county, and was several times the nominee of his party for the legislature and the district attorneyship. He was elected in 1872 to the constitutional convention and his services in that body during that and the following year were both conspicuous and useful. His valuable services in framing the state constitution, his excellent judgment and well-balanced legal mind, his high standing at the bar, and his great personal popularity in the county, led the Democratic party, in 1889, to name him as its candidate for additional law judge, and in the fall of that year he was elected by a majority of thirty-two votes in a district that had for years been overwhelmingly Republican. That the county one year before had given Harrison a majority of four thousand over Cleveland; and that the entire Democratic ticket, excepting Joseph Hemphill, was badly defeated, shows the esteem in which he is held. Judge Hemphill took his seat January 6, 1890, and in June, 1897, upon the death of Judge Waddell, he became president judge of the courts of Chester county. Upon the expiration of his term in 1899 he was nominated by the Democratic party for re-election, and was endorsed by every party in the county with a ticket in the field. He is, therefore, now serving his second term. He is recognized by the bar of the state as one of the ablest common pleas judges in Pennsylvania, and it is said that no county court in the state meets with fewer reversals in the supreme court than that of the county of Chester.

Judge Hemphill was married February 28, 1867, to Eliza Ann Lytle, daughter of Colonel Edward H. and Elizabeth (Shoenberger) Lytle, of Blair county, Pennsylvania. Joseph and Eliza Ann Hemphill have had four children, three of whom are living: (56) Lily, who lives with her father; (57) Joseph; (58) Edward, who died young; (59) William Lytle, who also lives with his father.

37. Elijah Dallett Hemphill, son of Joseph and Catherine Elizabeth (Dallett) Hemphill, was born in West Chester, June 30, 1845. He was educated in private schools in West Chester and at the Philadelphia Polytechnic College, from which he graduated with the degree of M. E. in the spring of 1866. The following fall he leased Allegheny Forge, Blair county, Pennsylvania, which he operated for one year. He then went west, and was attached during the following year to the engineer corps of the Lake Superior and Mississippi Railroad Company, then in course of construction. In 1871 he accepted the position of superintendent of the Allentown (Pennsylvania) Gas Works, where he remained until the fall of 1879. He then engaged, with his brother William, in the flour, feed, grain, and coal business in West Chester, under the firm name of Hemphill Bros. Since 1893, when the partnership was dissolved, he has continued to conduct the business alone, having purchased his brother's interest. He is a member of the Philadelphia Commercial Exchange.

He was one of the organizers of the Edison Electric Illuminating Company of West Chester, and of the Dime Savings Bank of Chester county, of which latter he was for several years the secretary. He was also one of the charter members of the West Chester Club, of which he has been a director almost continuously since its organization, and is now its president.

He was married, November 22, 1871, at the church of the Atonement, Philadelphia, to Rebecca Mickle (b. Oct. 10, 1848), daughter of Isaac and Clara (Tyndale) Mickle of Camden, New Jersey. Mrs. Hemphill is a descendant in the seventh generation from Archibald Mickle, who came to Philadelphia in 1682 and soon after settled in Gloucester county, New Jersey. Her father, Isaac Mickle, was a prominent member of the Gloucester and Camden bars, and author of "Reminiscences of Old Gloucester." E. Dallett and Rebecca Hemphill have had nine children, seven of whom are living: (60) Rebecca, living at home; (61) Clara, living at home; (62) Elijah Dallett; (63) Elizabeth, died in infancy; (64) Catherine, died in infancy; (65) Marjorie, living at home; (66) James Mitchell, graduated at Haverford Grammar School, 1902, and now taking the course in civil engineering at ~~Rehnsclaer~~ Polytechnic Institute, Troy, New York; (67) Isaac Mickle, now attending Haverford Grammar School; (68) John Mickle, also at Haverford.

40. William Hemphill, son of Joseph and

Catherine Elizabeth (Dallett) Hemphill, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, December 23, 1851. He was educated in private schools in West Chester and at Dr. Clemson's school at Claymont, Delaware. In 1872 he engaged in the tobacco business in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he remained until 1879. From 1879 to 1893 he was a member of the firm of Hemphill Bros., in West Chester, and in the latter year, having sold his interest in the business to his brother Dallett, he engaged with James L. King, of West Chester, in the wholesale grain and feed business, under the firm name of William Hemphill & Co. He continued in this business until his death. He was for many years prominent in the counsels of the Democratic party of the county, served on the county committee, and was for several years its chairman. He served one term as jury commissioner of the county, 1889-1892. He was married, April 27, 1875, at the Church of The Savior, West Philadelphia, to Mary Sharpe Holloway, daughter of Chalkley Trayherne and Priscilla (Brandenburg) Holloway, of Ohio. He died in West Chester, September 21, 1895. His widow and two youngest children (the other two having died young) are still residing in West Chester.

69. Laura Brandenburg.

70. Gillies Dallett.

71. Mary Sharpe.

72. Dorothy.

57. Joseph Hemphill, oldest son of Joseph and Eliza Ann (Lytle) Hemphill, was born in West Chester, December 11, 1869. He was educated in private schools in West Chester and Philadelphia until 1887, when he became secretary to his uncle, John S. Wilson, president of the Central New England & Western Railroad Company in New York city. In 1892 he returned to West Chester and entered the office of the late Dr. Isaac Massey to study medicine, and the same fall entered the medical school of the University of Pennsylvania. Graduating in 1897, he became resident physician at the Chester County Hospital, and soon after commenced the active practice of his profession in West Chester. During the Spanish-American war he was hospital steward of the Sixth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and was with his regiment at Camp Alger during the entire campaign. He is a member of the Chester County and Pennsylvania State Medical Societies, bacteriologist for the borough of West Chester, medical examiner for the National Guard of Pennsylvania, and since 1902 a member of the staff of the Chester County Hospital. He has recently been appointed assistant surgeon of the Sixth Regiment, National Guard, Pennsylvania.

Dr. Hemphill was married October 7, 1902, at the First Presbyterian church of West Chester, to Ada Westlake Cornwell, daughter of Captain Robert Thompson and Lydia Ann (Jackson) Cornwell, of West Chester. They reside at 205 West Gay street, West Chester. They have one child, Joseph Hemphill 3d, born January 3, 1904.

62. Elijah Dallett Hemphill, Jr., oldest son of Elijah Dallett and Rebecca (Mickle) Hemphill, was born in Allentown, Pennsylvania, April 19, 1877. He was educated at Worrall's Academy and the State Normal School in West Chester, Haverford Grammar School (graduating in 1895) and the University of Pennsylvania, from which he received his degree of B. S. in 1899. In both of the last named institutions he was president of his class at the time of graduation, and at the University he was for some time editor-in-chief of the "Red and Blue," the literary magazine of the college. Upon the breaking out of the Spanish war, he left college and enlisted in Company I, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, but was soon after detached from his company to serve at the headquarters of the Second Brigade, Second Division, Second Army Corps, where he remained until the close of the war.

In July, 1897, he registered as a student of law in the office of J. Frank E. Hause, Esq., at West Chester, and, having taken part of his law course during his last two years in college, was admitted to the Chester county bar December 9, 1901. He has since been engaged in active practice, his office being the same as was occupied by his uncle, Joseph Hemphill (35), and his grandfather, Joseph Hemphill (24). The building, long known as the "Hemphill Building," stands on the site occupied by the offices of Joseph Hemphill (18) and William Hemphill (12). It is now the property of Judge Hemphill, and has been in the family over one hundred years.

Mr. Hemphill is an active Democrat. He served for one year as secretary of the county committee of that party, was delegate to its state convention in 1901, was one of the organizers of the Young Men's Democratic Association in 1900, and has been the president of that organization ever since.

He was married June 17, 1902, at old Saint David's church, Radnor, to Florence Paleske Thomas, daughter of Dr. Charles Monroe and Marion Elmslie (Turnbull) Thomas, of Devon, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Hemphill is a granddaughter of the late Dr. Amos Russell Thomas, founder of Hahnemann Hospital and for many years dean of Hahnemann, Medical College, Philadelphia; and of the late Dr. Laurence Turnbull, of Jefferson Medical College.

Mr. and Mrs. Hemphill have one daughter, Marion Dallett Hemphill, born June 23, 1903.

John Acker

Andrew Hemphill was assessed in East Caln township in 1753.

John Hemphill, who was beyond question a near relative of Alexander, the forefather of the Chester county Hemphills, was a taxable in Edgmont in 1753. He was afterwards assessed in Marple, Haverford, Whiteland, and as a school teacher in Willistown in 1764. He was in Goshen at the time of Alexander's death there, and was taxed in other townships of the county as late as 1785. He was married at Gloria Dei church, Philadelphia, October 16, 1755, to Elizabeth Powell, daughter of Robert Powell, of Whiteland, and had by her one son, Joseph. His second wife, whom he married at the First Presbyterian church of Philadelphia, August 15, 1762, was Margaret Boggs. John Hemphill, of Summerville, Lancaster county (b. 1773; d. 1837, is thought to have been a son of this John by his second wife.

Samuel Hemphill, of Clooney, in the parish of Aughenlow, county of Londonderry, Ireland, was taxed as a single man in Chester county, 1768-70.

(For further data concerning the Hemphill family, including the female lines, see "The Hemphill Family of Chester and Delaware Counties, Penna." by E. Dallett Hemphill, Jr., of West Chester.)

JOHN ACKER, an old and honored resident of West Chester, who has lived a life of unusual activity, and who has at various times rendered public services of great value in important positions of honor and trust, is of German ancestry. Henry Acker, the emigrant ancestor, came to the United States in the sailing vessel "Royal Judith," Robert Terpin, master, and landed at Philadelphia on September 25, 1732. His son John Conrad (2) was father of Conrad (3).

Conrad Acker was born in Limerick township, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, in 1740. In 1774 he purchased of Evans Jones two tracts of land of one hundred and forty acres, in Uwchlan township, Chester county, for which he paid £500. He located on this land and was engaged in its cultivation until his death, July 15, 1815. He was one of a party who helped to bury the bodies after the Paoli massacre. He married Barbara Rubel, who survived him a score of years, dying March 26, 1825. Their children were Conrad, Catherine, Jacob, Henry, John, Barbara, Mary, Eva and Hannah.

John (4) fourth child of Conrad and Barbara (Rubel) Acker, was born in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, January 5, 1774. He was educated in the common schools. When he was one year old his parents removed to Uwchlan township and he resided there, engaged in farming, until 1825. He then purchased the Cauffman farm in East Whiteland township, which he cultivated during the remainder of his life. He was a man of industry and probity, and served for some time as supervisor. He was a supporter of the German Reformed church at Pikeland, and he was a Federalist in politics. He died December 4, 1847. His wife was Catherine Laubach, a daughter of Henry and Anna Maria (De Franc) Laubach, and of their marriage were born the following children: 1. Elizabeth, born January 9, 1801, and died June 18, 1882; she married Abraham Fetters. 2. Mary, born November 4, 1803; she married Samuel Fetters. 3. John, born November 29, 1814.

John (5), youngest child and only son of John (4) and Catherine (Laubach) Acker, was born in Uwchlan township, November 29, 1814. He was educated in the neighborhood schools and at Joshua Hoopes's school in West Chester. He remained with his parents until he was of age, when he engaged in farming upon his own account. In 1856 he entered upon a grain, coal and lumber business at East Whiteland, which he conducted successfully until 1876. In that year he went to Kentucky, locating in the finest blue grass region in that state, where he followed a fruit growing and nursery business. In 1896 he sold his property and returned to his native county, taking up his residence in West Chester.

In politics, Mr. Acker was originally a Whig. When that party became extinct, he affiliated with the Republican party, at its organization, and he has since been one of its most loyal supporters. In 1840 he was elected justice of the peace, and he served as such for a period of ten years. In 1849 he was elected to the state legislature, and he was again elected in 1851. He has frequently served as judge, inspector and clerk of election. During many terms of court he served as juror. On one important case, which occupied the attention of himself and fellow-jurors for three weeks, the issue to be determined was the amount of damages to be assessed in favor of land-owners against the Delaware and Wilmington Railroad for land taken in the construction of the road from the Berks county line to the Delaware state line. To all these varied and exacting duties Mr. Acker brought qualifications of the highest order—excellent knowledge of business, a calm and dispassionate judgment and a sense of justice from which he could not be swerved.

Mr. Acker was married April 13, 1837, to Miss Lydia Harrar, of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, a daughter of William Harrar. The children born of this marriage were Catherine, William, Caroline, Elenor, and Mary. Their first, second and youngest children died in infancy. Caroline and Elenor received their education at the Roseland Female Institute, at Hartsville, Bucks county, Pennsylvania. Caroline died September 5, 1878, in her thirty-eighth year, and her remains were interred at Grace Hill cemetery, at Shelbyville, Kentucky. Elenor taught school for twenty years. Mrs. Acker died September 30, 1864, in the forty-sixth year of her age. Mr. Acker was married November 28, 1867, to Miss Mary L. Weaver, a daughter of Baldwin and Thirza Weaver. Her death occurred April 7, 1898.

Since his return from Kentucky, Mr. Acker has lived in pleasant retirement, enjoying the repose which is the fitting reward of an active and useful life. Now in his eighty-ninth year, he is a fine exemplification of manhood in its full ripeness, possessing all his mental faculties unimpaired, and with a memory which is a mine of reminiscence of interest and profit to those who surround him.

JOSEPH HEMPHILL, one of the foremost lawyers of his day, was born in West Chester, December 7, 1807, son of William and Ann (McClellan) Hemphill. The father was also an able lawyer, and was a native of the same town as was his son.

Joseph Hemphill received his education under the instruction of Jonathan Gause and Joshua Hoopes, and James W. Robbins, of Lenox, Massachusetts, and read for his profession with his brother-in-law, Hon. Thomas S. Bell. He was admitted to the bar in 1829, and was engaged in active practice until his death, February 11, 1870. He was devoted to his profession, and brought to it talents of the first order. He served as deputy attorney-general for Chester county from 1839 to 1845, and declined a re-appointment. In 1861 he was the Democratic nominee for the president judgeship of the Chester and Delaware counties judicial district, but was defeated by the Republican candidate. He bore a full part in the promotion of community interests. His death occasioned widespread regret, and on the day of his funeral members of the local bar testified to their admiration for his character.

Mr. Hemphill was married, in 1841, to Catherine Elizabeth, daughter of Elijah and Judith Dallett, of Philadelphia. Of this marriage were born six children—Joseph; Ella, wife of John Dallett; Elijah Dallett; Ann, who married Albin Garrett; Catherine Dallett, who became the wife of John S. Wilson, and William. Joseph, the eldest child, followed in the footsteps of the father, and became a lawyer.

JOSEPH J. LEWIS, lawyer, born in West-town in 1801 and died in 1883, was a son of Enoch Lewis, a teacher and mathematician of high ability, and who was prominent among the Friends, and wrote frequently and forcefully in opposition to slavery and in advocacy of abolition.

Joseph Lewis inherited much of the parental temperament and ability. He was educated under Jonathan Gause, under whom he served as a teacher in West Chester, after he had for a time occupied the position of principal of the Chester County Academy, near Frazer. While yet a teacher, young Lewis read law, and he was admitted to the bar in 1825. He served as district attorney from 1835 to 1837. He was commissioner of internal revenue under the administration of President Lincoln. He was a man of broad general knowledge, and had traveled extensively.

WILLIAM DARLINGTON, one of the most influential men of his time, and a lawyer of distinction who began the practice of his profession during the early part of the last century, was a man of public spirit, and one who aided in every enterprise that conduced to the uplifting and betterment of mankind. He was born 10 mo., 19, 1804, a son of Abraham and Susanna (Chandler) Darlington, and a descendant of a family whose history has been closely interwoven with that of Chester county, Pennsylvania, for several centuries.

Abraham Darlington (father), was born 8 mo., 28, 1757, second son of Thomas and Hannah (Brinton) Darlington, and settled in Thornbury township. He married 3 mo., 22, 1781, Susanna Chandler, born 10 mo., 10, 1760, a daughter of Isaac and Esther Chaudler. Their children were: Isaac, born 12 mo., 13, 1781, died 4 mo., 27, 1839; Hannah, born 5 mo., 16, 1783, died 11 mo., 2, 1839; Thomas, born 11 mo., 14, 1784, died 11 mo., 8, 1860; Benedict, born 9 mo., 22, 1786, died 7 mo., 17, 1864; Abraham, born 7 mo., 17, 1789, died 7 mo., 31, 1879; Clement, born 7 mo., 4, 1791, died 8 mo., 19, 1791; Esther, born 5 mo., 5, 1793, died 1 mo., 7, 1877; Susanna, born 11 mo., 11, 1795, died 9 mo., 15, 1803; Eliza, born 5 mo., 26, 1797, died 3 mo., 17, 1878; Sidney, born 2 mo., 19, 1799, died 7 mo., 7, 1868; Chandler, born 11 mo., 4, 1800, died 3 mo., 29, 1879; William, born 10 mo., 19, 1804, mentioned hereinafter. Abraham Darlington (father) died 2 mo., 14, 1844, and his wife, Susanna (Chandler) Darlington, died 5 mo., 12, 1849.

William Darlington, youngest son of Abraham and Susanna (Chandler) Darlington, was educated in the common schools of his birth-place, and then studied law with his brother, Judge Isaac Darlington, one of the foremost lawyers of Chester county. On January 31, 1826, he passed a creditable examination before a committee composed of Ziba Pyle, William H. Dillingham and Townsend Haines, who were appointed by the court, and was sworn in at the bar on the same day before his brother, who was then the presiding judge. He possessed the requisite characteristics for success—courage, sagacity, equanimity, aptness, precision, brevity and force—was watchful of the interests of his clients, yet at the same time always fair to his opponents, and by industry and perseverance rapidly rose in his profession and soon won a place among the leading representatives of the Chester county bar. He had a distaste for the practice of criminal jurisprudence, but delighted to delve in the deep and rich mines of legal science, and consequently his practice was both desirable and lucrative. It was chiefly confined to the county courts in eastern Pennsylvania and the supreme court of the state, although he was frequently engaged in the district court of the United States at Philadelphia and was a member of the bar of the supreme court of the United States at Washington. In 1837 he was elected a member of the state convention to remodel the constitution, and thirty-five years later, when further amendments were to be considered, he was elected by the people to represent them in the constitutional convention of 1873, in which he took a most conspicuous and honorable part. He served as deputy attorney-general for Chester county from 1835 to 1838, under Governor Ritner. He was an honored member of the Philosophical Society of West Chester, and the following is an extract from the "memorial" of that society:

"He was a man who, in the strong language of Napoleon, was 'victory organized.' He rose up out of the common level, lifting up others with him,

Not propped by ancestry,

Whose grace chalks successors their way, but by the force of his own merits acquired high station and great wealth; yet he was not puffed up, proud, or aristocratical, but remained plain and unpretending and true-hearted; was easily approached, and always interested in the wants and purposes of the people, countenancing worthy young people, and taking an active part in affairs."

About the year 1851 Mr. Darlington traveled in Europe, attended the World's Fair, visited the locality where his progenitor, Job Darlington, lived, at Darnhall, England, and kept a journal of all he witnessed, worthy of preservation. His literary taste, which was varied and ardent, inclined largely to modern history, although it is believed that he read it more as a record of events than as showing a development of thought in that direction.

Mr. Darlington married, 3 mo., 19, 1829, Catherine Paxson, and the issue of this union was the following named children, who are of the fifth generation in America: Charles, who died in childhood; William H., who married Hettie Brinton, daughter of Caleb Brinton; Stephen P., who married Josephine Lewis, daughter of Hon. Joseph J. Lewis; Francis J., who married Annie M. Biles, of Maryland; Isabella, who became the wife of Auditor General L. G. McCauley; and Catherine Mary, who became the wife of Jerome B. Gray. The death of Mr. Darlington occurred on December 6, 1879, in the corridor of the court house, while on his way to the court room to try a cause.

CHARLES MINER, a journalist of considerable ability, was born in Norwich, Connecticut, in 1780, and died in 1865. He was of Puritan ancestry. He removed to the Wyoming Valley, Pennsylvania, in 1809. With his brother, Asher Miner, he edited and published the Luzerne Federalist. In 1807, 1808 and 1816 he served in the Pennsylvania legislature as a representative from Luzerne county. He edited the True American, in Philadelphia, in 1816, removing the next year to West Chester, where he purchased the Chester and Delaware Federalist, and changed the name of the paper to the Village Record. He was a model journalist, writing vigorously and logically, and impressing his personality upon his every expression. He was an earnest opponent of slavery. He devoted much thought to economic affairs, and gave strong encouragement to the silk-growing industry. From 1825 to 1829 he was a member of congress. He was a personal friend of Henry Clay, and was held in regard by others of the distinguished men of his day. His biographer wrote of him that he was in youth and age a perfect gentleman, a true type of what is termed "a gentleman of the old school."

THOMAS S. BELL, a distinguished jurist and lawyer, was born in Philadelphia, October 22, 1800. He came to West Chester as a stranger, but soon came to be known as a capable lawyer and made rapid advancement in his profession and in public life.

He was a deputy attorney-general for Chester county, 1823-28; a member of the state constitutional convention from the senatorial district of Chester and Montgomery counties in 1837, and was re-elected to the state senate in 1838, but was denied his seat on account of alleged errors in the election returns. In 1829 he was a member of the board of visitors to the West Point Military Academy. In 1839 he was appointed to succeed Judge Darlington as president judge of the Chester and Delaware judicial district, and served until 1846. He was appointed an associate justice of the supreme court of Pennsylvania in 1846, and served with ability and efficiency until December 1, 1851, when the tenure of office was changed by a new constitutional provision. In 1855 he became president judge of the judicial district comprising the counties of Wayne, Pike, Carbon and Monroe, and he was senator from Chester and Delaware counties from 1858 to 1860.

Mr. Bell was twice married, first to Caroline, a daughter of Judge Darlington, and (second) to Keziah, a daughter of William Hemphill. He died June 6, 1861, spared the sorrow of witnessing the untimely death of his son and namesake, who had just opened a promising career at the bar when the Civil war broke out, but entered the army, and, while serving as lieutenant-colonel, fell on the bloody field of Antietam.

DAVID TOWNSEND, man of affairs and scientist, was born in Pughtown, in 1787, and died in 1858. He was appointed clerk in the office of the register and recorder of Chester county in 1810; was elected commissioner of Chester county in 1813, and was appointed prothonotary in 1827. In 1814 he became one of the original directors of the Bank of Chester County, and he was its cashier from 1817 to 1849; in 1835-36 he directed the building of a new banking house which was a model of classical style. He was a warm friend of education, and served as a trustee of the West Chester Academy. He delighted in botanical studies, and maintained a correspondence with botanists in Great Britain and in Europe. In 1833 a genus of plants allied to the asters was named "Townsendia" in his honor. He was one of the founders of the Chester County Cabinet of Natural Sciences.

J. SMITH FUTHEY, jurist and author, was of Scotch-Irish descent, and was a son of Hon. Robert and Margaret (Parkinson) Futhey, of West Fallowfield township, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

He was educated in his native county, and became a law student. He was admitted to the bar in 1843. He practiced successfully until 1879, when he was appointed by Governor Hoyt to the judgeship of the fifteenth judicial district to fill a vacancy. In 1879 he was elected to the bench for a term of ten years, without opposition, and his term had not yet expired when he died, in 1888. He presided with fairness and judicial ability, and left a praiseworthy record.

He was a man of decided literary tastes and ability. In collaboration with Gilbert Cope, he wrote (1881) "A History of Chester County." This work will ever possess a great value, being regarded as the most valuable of its class produced within the county, and it is only just to say that many of the facts contained in these volumes, "History of Chester and Delaware Counties," have been derived from its pages. The life of Mr. Futhey is often held up as an example to the young, a model of the achievements of untiring industry.

EUSEBIUS H. TOWNSEND, long a merchant and man of affairs of West Chester, was a native of that city, born in 1817, a son of Joseph and Sarah Townsend. He was largely interested in financial concerns, and in 1861 became a director in the Bank of Chester County (afterward the National Bank of Chester County), and was continued in that position until his death in 1889. He conducted also a large dry goods business, and was known as a merchant of ability and unsullied integrity. He attended the Orthodox Friends' meeting, and was an active member of the West Chester Trust and Relief Society.

WILLIAM EVERHART. The memory of William Everhart is held in lasting honor in Chester county for his spotless character and his broad humanitarianism. He was born in West Vincent, May 17, 1785, a son of James Everhart. His father entered the Revolutionary army at the age of seventeen, and performed the full duty of a soldier. His splendid spirit was transmitted to his son.

William Everhart, in his early years, taught and practiced surveying. He then conducted a mercantile business in Tredyffrin, whence he removed to Pughtown. He subsequently bought a farm in West Whiteland, adjoining the Boot farm, and erected a building and conducted a store. Later he bought the Wollerton farm in West Chester, and divided it into lots, erected the Mansion House, and perhaps other buildings in the town.

On the declaration of war between the United States and Great Britain in 1812, he recruited and drilled a corps of riflemen, but his company was not called into active service. A subsequent adventure was of thrilling interest. Sailing for England in the ill-fated ship "Albion," in order to arrange for the importation of goods, he was shipwrecked on the coast of Ireland, the only passenger saved. In 1852 he was elected to congress. He was a man of most benevolent disposition, and was unsparing of his means in the cause of charity. He was deeply religious, and his love for humanity made him an uncompromising abolitionist.

SETH LUKENS, deceased, for many years a well-known resident of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, where he was actively engaged in business pursuits, was a son of George and Esther (Jeans) Lukens, and his birth occurred March 20, 1814, at Kulpville, where his early life was spent in acquiring an education in the common schools.

He was brought up in a deeply religious atmosphere, was a member of the Society of Friends by birthright, and was for a number of years an elder in the Gwynedd Monthly Meeting. He inherited a strong humanitarian disposition, his father having made his home a station on the "underground railroad" during the days of slavery, and, following the paternal example, he was an ardent anti-slavery advocate and an active laborer in the cause of temperance reform.

In 1845 Mr. Lukens was united in marriage to Mary M. Hamer, who was born February 28, 1821, in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Dr. James and Frances (Gotwals) Hamer, of Montgomery county. On the maternal side she is a granddaughter of Abraham and Magdalena (Detwiler) Gotwals, and on the paternal side a granddaughter of James and Sarah (Bates) Hamer. Mrs. Lukens obtained her preliminary education in the schools of her native township, and this was supplemented by a two years' course of study at a school in Plymouth township, Montgomery county, which was under the personal and efficient supervision of Mrs. Hannah Williams.

The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Lukens: 1. Frances H., born January 9, 1846, acquired her education in the schools of Montgomery county and the Adelphian Institute at Norristown, and in 1868 became the wife of Edmund P. Zimmerman, a son of John and Margaret Zimmerman of Montgomery county; four children were born of this marriage—Mary H., wife of John Schwenk, of Providence Square, Montgomery county, and their child, Harold Schwenk, was the first great-grandchild born to Mr. and Mrs. Lukens; Margaret, Caroline L., and Walter S. Zimmerman. 2. Esther J., born September 17, 1847, received a common school education and subsequently attended the Pennsylvania Female College at Collegeville; she was united in marriage to George W. Bockius, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, the son of Christopher and Margaret Bockius, and the issue of this union was the following named children—Charles H., married Martha Murray, and they are the parents of two children—Dorothy and Esther Olga Bockius; Mary M., wife of Ralph Savin, and one child has been born of this marriage, Margaret Savin; David L.; Esther J., wife of Benjamin Peel, and they are the parents of one child, Majorie Peel; and Christopher Bockius. 3. Annie M., born May 2, 1855, acquired her education in the schools of Montgomery county and at Swarthmore College; she is now the widow of Henry Daniels, mentioned at length in the following sketch. 4. David H., born June 22, 1858, in Montgomery county, married Ada A. Lowery, a daughter of Harry and Sallie Lowery, residents of Montgomery county, and one son has been born to them, Harry L. Lukens. 5. Caroline A., born April 10, 1863, was a student in the schools of Montgomery county and at the Friends' School, located at Fifteenth and Race streets, Philadelphia, a graduate of Swarthmore College, and at the present time (1903) serving in the capacity of matron of the Central Building of Swarthmore College. Seth Lukens, father of these children, died September 17, 1902, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years.

HENRY DANIELS, deceased, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, December 28, 1850. He traced his ancestry on the paternal side to William Ball, a prominent resident of Berks county, Pennsylvania, who married, and among the children born to him was a son, William Ball, who was born in the year 1710, married Martha Brumfield, and died in 1780. Their daughter, Sarah Ball, became the wife of John Daniels, and their children were as follows—William, John Joseph and Abigail Daniels. John Daniels, second son of John and Sarah (Ball) Daniels, married and was the father of one child, William Daniels.

William Daniels, father of Henry Daniels, was born in New York city, in 1817. His parents dying when he was quite young, he was reared by an aunt in Camden, New Jersey. He acquired a practical education at the public schools of Camden, after which he learned the trade of tailor and this line of industry he followed during the entire period of his business career. He was a Presbyterian in religion, and a Republican in politics. In September, 1842, Mr. Daniels married Cynthia E. Hoffman, born March 23, 1822, educated in the public schools, and a Baptist in her religious views, a daughter of John Gabriel Hoffman, who was born in Germany, but came to America at the age of twelve years. Their children were—John N. M., Sarah, William J., Henry, and Mary C. Daniels. William Daniels, father of these children, died in 1879.

Henry Daniels obtained his educational au-vantages in the public schools of Philadelphia. In December, 1866, he was indentured to William Mann to learn the trade of bookbinding, where he remained until October 30, 1881, when he established a bindery on Seventh street, below Market street, in Philadelphia, on the site now occupied by the Penn National Bank. He removed his place of business to 53 North Seventh street, but finding that the accommodations were not adequate to his increasing trade he removed to 623 Commerce street, and in 1891 to 141 North Seventh street, where he continued in business until his death, which occurred May 23, 1902. He resided in the city of Philadelphia until 1893, when he removed to Swarthmore, where was his home at the time of his death. He served in the capacity of borough councilman for one term, and was a director of the Swarthmore Building Association. He was highly respected by all who had the honor of his acquaintance, was of the highest integrity, of generous spirit and kind and considerate to all. His political affiliations were with the Republican party.

July 3, 1883, at Gwynedd, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, Mr. Daniels married Annie M. Lukens, daughter of the late Seth and Mary M. Lukens, and a descendant of Jan Lukens, one of the early settlers of Germantown, Pennsylvania. Their children are—William Seth, born May 7, 1886, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Alma, born December 6, 1888, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Helen, born February 12, 1896, at Swarthmore, Pennsylvania; Mary, Howard and Henry, Jr., the three latter named having died in infancy.

EDWARD D. BINGHAM. The Bingham family of Chester county, which had for its brightest representatives the late William R. Bingham, D. D., a brilliant minister of the gospel, and Edward D. Bingham, a talented lawyer of West Chester, is of old and honored standing in Pennsylvania, and has contributed many worthy members to the professions and to public life.

The name of Bingham appears in early colonial days in Adams county, where was born Hugh Bingham, paternal grandfather of Edward D. Bingham. Hugh Bingham received but an ordinary district school education, but he was a man of fine native ability, and carved out for himself a successful career. In his early life he removed to York county, where he became a prosperous farmer, and a stockholder and director in a bank. A Presbyterian in religion, he was an elder in his church for a quarter of a century. In politics he was a Whig of the Henry Clay school. His wife Margaret was a daughter of Colonel John Kelley, of York county; she was born during Washington's second administration, and she lived to see that of President Benjamin Harrison. She was the mother of five children, John, Margaret, Eliza, William R. and Ezeiah; the first named son became a lawyer, and died soon after being admitted to the bar.

William R., third child and second son of Hugh and Margaret (Kelley) Bingham, was born in Adams county, Pennsylvania, in 1822. He received his literary education at Jefferson College, in Cannonsburg, and studied theology at the Western Theological Seminary in Allegheny City, from which he was graduated in 1847. He was at once ordained to the Presbyterian ministry, and for twelve years thereafter labored usefully and acceptably in the pastorate of the Great Valley Church at Chester Valley, Chester county, Pennsylvania. After a retirement of one year, he took charge of the church at Oxford, but eighteen months later failing health obliged him to abandon all active work, and nearly a decade passed before he resumed regular ministerial duty. In 1878 he entered the pastorate of the Avondale and West Grove Presbyterian churches, with which he was connected for ten years, leaving these charges in 1888 to take the chair of theology in Lincoln University, a position which he adorned during the remainder of his active career, while he was at the same time president of the board of trustees. As earnest student and deep thinker he was widely known for his profound knowledge of Biblical subjects, and, in recognition of his large abilities and sincere Christian character he received from Westminster College the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. He was a Republican in his political affiliations, an uncompromising opposer of human slavery and an ardent Unionist. He ever took a deep interest in advancing the interests of the community along educational and material as well as religious lines. He married Nannie Davidson Allison, who was born August 29, 1825, youngest daughter of Robert and Mary (Elliott) Davidson, of Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania. Hon. Robert Allison was a prominent and influential man, a Whig in politics, who had represented his district in congress. John Allison, father of Robert Allison, was one of the early settlers of Franklin county, and was a member of the state convention which ratified the constitution of the United States. In the same body also sat Jacob Elliott, maternal grandfather of Nannie Davidson Allison.

Three children were born to the Rev. Dr. and Nannie (Allison) Bingham: 1. Edward Donaldson; 2. Mary Allison, who was the first graduate of Wellesley College, in 1879, and president of its alumni association until her death, in her twenty-sixth year; 3. Hugh W., who died in infancy. The mother of these children died September 25, 1863, and in 1886 Dr. Bingham married Jennie Gardner, born April 6, 1840, and died January 14, 1893, a daughter of the late Thomas Gardner, of Chester county.

Edward Donnalldson Bingham, eldest child of the Rev. Dr. William R. and Nannie Davidson (Alison) Bingham, was born February 10, 1854, in East Whiteland township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He attended a private school in Oxford until his seventeenth year, when he entered the sophomore class of Princeton College, from which he was graduated in 1874, two years previous to his attaining his majority. For two years afterward he served as a tutor in Lincoln University, and with such signal success and acceptability as to assure him a distinguished career as a teacher had he persisted in educational work. But his predilection was for law, and in 1876 he resigned his tutorship to enter the law office of Bruce & Negley, in Pittsburg. In the autumn of 1878 he was admitted to the bar, and entered upon practice in West Chester, where he conducted a large and constantly increasing business during the remainder of his life, drawing to himself a clientele from the best citizens and men of affairs in Chester county. His integrity was equal to his ability, and he enjoyed the esteem of bench and bar alike. In 1890 he was elected district attorney, and discharged the duties of that important position with indefatigable industry and independence. He was a member of the First Presbyterian church, and his political affiliations were with the Republican party. His death occurred December 28, 1901, at St. Augustine, Florida.

Mr. Bingham was married, September 20, 1888, to Morning, a daughter of the late S. Reed and Alice (Beeson) Johnston, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. She was graduated from Hillsboro College, Ohio, and studied at the Academy of the Fine Arts, Philadelphia, and was a pupil of Miss Sartain. She belongs to the Chester County Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mrs. Bingham's ancestors were Scotch-Irish, who were driven by the persecutions of Charles II from Scotland into the north of Ireland. Her great-great-grandfather, Dr. Samuel Johnston, came to America in 1769, and settled near Shippenburg, Pennsylvania. He entered the Revolutionary war as a surgeon, served two years, and died of camp fever. His son, John Johnston, was postmaster of Pittsburg from 1804 to 1822, and was prominently identified with the earliest history of the First Presbyterian church of that city. He married Mary, daughter of Samuel Reed, of Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, a soldier in the Revolution. Their son, Samuel Reed Johnston, was born in Pittsburg, in 1797. He was a printer and publisher, and treasurer of Allegheny county several terms. His son, Samuel Reed Johnston, Jr., father of Mrs. Bingham, was born in 1832, and died in 1901. He was a celebrated artist printer, and inventor of a process of multicolored printing known as "Owl-type," which has been widely copied in Europe and in this country. He stood in the very first ranks among the artistic printers of the world. The handsomest piece of typography ever seen in this country was the Sartain book designed by Mr. Johnston in 1887—a record covering over three hundred years of the family of the famous Philadelphia engraver, John Sartain. In Mr. Sartain's opinion, Mr. Johnston was foremost among artistic masters of typographic art in the country. Speaking at another time of Mr. Johnston's ability, he said, "I regard you as the Aldines of the day." Besides being an art printer par excellence, Mr. Johnston was a literary writer of ability, and a born dialectician.

Mrs. Bingham's mother was the daughter of Richard and Nancy Crawford Beeson. Mr. Beeson was a Pittsburg lawyer, and a direct descendant of the founder of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, which was formerly called Beeson's Town. Mrs. Beeson was a granddaughter of Colonel Robert Crawford, of Revolutionary fame, whose ancestors came from Crawford, Scotland.

BARTRAM. Richard Bartram, the earliest known ancestor of this family, lived and died in Derbyshire, England. John Bartram (1), his son, married Elizabeth ———, and in the year 1683 came from Ashbourne, in that county, to Pennsylvania, with his wife and four children, and settled in Darby township, west of Darby Creek. He died 9 mo. 1, 1697, and his widow 7 mo. 4, 1723. Issue:

2. John, died in Darby, 6 mo. 14, 1692.
3. Isaac, his father's heir by deed of gift, devised the homestead to his mother during life, and then to his nephew John, the botanist; he died 7 mo. 10, 1708.
4. William, married 3 mo. 22, 1696, Elizabeth Hunt, daughter of James and Eliza (Chambers) Hunt, of Kingsessing. She died 8 mo. 21, 1701, and he married again, 8 mo., 1707, Elizabeth Smith, born 1 mo. 17, 1689-90; daughter of William and Elizabeth Smith, of Darby. On October 18, 1710, "Being about to remove myself, wife and youngest child into Carolina, there to dwell," he made his will, but whether he did remove is not clear. His will was proved in Pennsylvania in 1712, and in 1715 his widow married John Smith, of Burlington, New Jersey.
5. Mary, married, 2 mo. 21, 1696, John Wood, of Darby.
6. Elizabeth, born in Darby, 5 mo. 8, 1684, married, in 1705, John Cartledge.

Children of William Bartram:

7. John, b. 3 mo., 23, 1699; see forward.

8. James, b. 8 mo., 6, 1701; m. 4 mo., 30, 1725, Elizabeth Maris, and settled in Marple, where he was living 1765; had one daughter, Mary.

9. Elizabeth, b. 12 mo. 10, 1709-10; d. 11 mo. 15, 1732, unmarried.

10. William, b. 4 mo. 3, 1711; m. Elizabeth Smith, widow, and settled at Cape Fear, North Carolina.

John Bartram (7), born in Darby township, was married 2 mo. 25, 1723, at Springfield meeting, to Mary Maris, daughter of Richard and Elizabeth Maris, of Springfield. She died in 1727, and he was married a second time, 10 mo. 11, 1729, at Concord meeting, to Ann Mendenhall, born 7 mo. 22, 1703, died 1 mo. 29, 1789, daughter of Benjamin and Ann (Pennell) Mendenhall, of Concord. By the first he had two and by the last nine children:

11. Richard, b. 1 mo. 24, 1723-4; d. 11 mo. 19, 1727-8.

12. Isaac, b. 9 mo. 17, 1725; d. 1801; m. Sarah Elfreth and Mary Steel, widow.

13. James, b. 6 mo. 25, 1730; d. 1824; m. Sarah Bunting.

14. Moses, b. 6 mo. 16, 1732; d. 1809; m. Elizabeth Budd.

15. Elizabeth, b. 8 mo. 27, 1734; died in infancy.

16. Mary, b. 9 mo., 21, 1736; d. 1817; m. Benjamin Bonsall.

17. William, b. 2 mo. 9, 1739; d. 1823, unmarried.

18. Elizabeth, twin with William, d. 1824; m. William Wright.

19. Ann, b. 6 mo. 24, 1741; m. George Bartram, 1764.

20. John, b. 8 mo. 24, 1744; d. 1812; m. Eliza Howell, granddaughter of No. 8.

21. Benjamin, b. 7 mo., 6, 1748; d. 1826; see forward.

To John Bartram belongs the honor of being the earliest American botanist, and when we consider the state of the science of botany in that day, and the almost total want of sympathy in the public mind with such studies, his labors appear truly wonderful. Being left an orphan at the age of thirteen, it is evident that his subsequent intellectual acquirements were founded on natural abilities of no common order. By the aid of such books as he could obtain he studied the Latin and Greek languages, and dipped somewhat into physie and surgery, acquiring in the latter science so much knowledge as to be useful to his neighbors. While engaged in his agricultural occupations he was attracted by the variety and beauty of the vegetation around him, and the study of this became the ruling passion of his life.

From his uncle, Isaac Bartram, he inherited the original homestead in Darby, but by deed of September 30, 1728, he purchased at sheriff's sale a property on the Schuylkill river, about three miles below the then situation of Philadelphia, and there established the famous "Bartram's Garden," now one of the city parks. Here he erected in 1731 a stone house, which is still standing, where he collected numerous trees, shrubs and flowers not native to the locality. Having thoroughly explored the vicinity and made the acquaintance of the vegetable productions thereof, he widened his field of research by visiting the neighboring provinces, seeking not only the gratification of his curiosity but also the discovery of such things as might be beneficial to mankind. His friend, Joseph Breintnall, an enterprising merchant of Philadelphia, undertook to convey some of his collections and observations to the celebrated Peter Collinson, of London, and this opened up a correspondence with the distinguished botanists of the Old World, which continued for many years. Among these were Dr. John Fothergill, Sir Hans Sloane, Peter Kalm, John James Dillenius and John Frederic Gronovius. His son, William Bartram, himself subsequently a traveler and author, frequently accompanied his father in his excursions, and from a sketch of the latter, written by the son and published in Professor Barton's Medical and Physical Journal, we make some extracts.

"He employed much of his time in traveling through the different provinces of North America, at that time subject to England. Neither dangers nor difficulties impeded or confined his researches after objects in natural history. The summits of our highest mountains were ascended and explored by him. The lakes Ontario, Iroquois and George; the shores and sources of the rivers Hudson, Delaware, Schuylkill, Susquehanna, Alleghany and San Juan were visited by him at an early period, when it was truly a perilous undertaking to travel in the territories, or even on the frontiers of the aborigines.

"He traveled several thousand miles in Carolina and Florida. At the advanced age of near seventy years, embarking on board of a vessel at Philadelphia, he set sail for Charleston, in South Carolina. From thence he proceeded by land through parts of Carolina and Georgia to St. Augustine, in East Florida. When arrived at the last mentioned place, being then appointed botanist and naturalist for the King of England, for exploring the provinces, he received his orders to search for the sources of the great river San Juan (or St. John's).

"Leaving St. Augustine, he traveled by land to the banks of the river, and, embarking in a boat at Picolata, ascended that great and beautiful river (near four hundred miles) to its sources, attending carefully to its various branches and the lakes connected with it. Having ascended on one side of the river, he descended by the other side to its confluence with the sea.

"In the course of this voyage or journey he made an accurate draft and survey of the various widths, depths, courses and distances, both of the main stream and of the lakes and branches. He also noted the situation and quality of the soil, the vegetable and animal productions, together with other interesting observations, all of which were highly approved of by the Governor and sent to the Board of Trade and Plantations in England, by whose direction they were ordered to be published for the benefit of the new colony.

"He was a man of modest and gentle manners, frank, cheerful, and of great good nature; a lover of justice, truth, and charity. He was himself an example of filial, conjugal, and parental affection. His humanity, gentleness and compassion were manifested upon all occasions, and were even extended to the animal creation. He was never known to have been at enmity with any man. During the whole course of his life there was not a single instance of his engaging in a litigious contest with any of his neighbors, or others. He zealously testified against slavery, and, that his philanthropic precepts on this subject might have their due weight and force, he gave liberty to a most valuable male slave, then in the prime of his life, who had been bred up in the family almost from his infancy.

"He was born and educated in the sect called Quakers. But his religious creed may, perhaps, be best collected from a pious distich, engraven by his own hand in very conspicuous characters upon a stone placed over the front window of the apartment which was destined for study and philosophical retirement.

" 'Tis God alone, Almighty Lord,
The Holy One, by me adored.
John Bartram, 1770."

"This may show the simplicity and sincerity of his heart, which never harboured nor gave countenance to dissimulation. His mind was frequently employed, and he enjoyed the highest pleasure, in the contemplation of nature as exhibited in the great volume of creation. He generally concluded the narratives of his journeys with pious and philosophical reflections upon the majesty and power, the perfection and the beneficence, of the Creator."

Dr. Colden, of New York, writing to Peter Collinson, in 1744, says, "I had the pleasure of seeing Mr. Bartram at my house this summer. It is really surprising what knowledge that man has attained merely by the force of industry and his own genius. He has a lively fancy and a surprising memory and indefatigable disposition." Dr. Garden, writing to John Ellis, 1755, says, "When we came to Philadelphia I met with John Bartram, a plain Quaker, but a most accurate observer of nature:" and again, writing from Charleston, South Carolina, in 1760, he says, "I have been lately in the woods for two hours with John, and have shown him most of our new things, with which he seems almost ravished of his senses, and lost in astonishment."

It appears from the minutes of Darby Meeting that in 1758 John Bartram was excluded from membership on account of his religious views, which might be styled Unitarian, and the carving of the above distich on the stones of his mansion twelve years later was doubtless intended as a reaffirmation of his position.

He was one of the original members of the American Philosophical Society, his name standing next to that of Benjamin Franklin, who headed the list. The "Memorials of Bartram and Marshall," an interesting volume of nearly six hundred pages, was published by Lindsay & Blakiston, in 1849, for Dr. William Darlington, and contains the botanical correspondence of John Bartram and his cousin Humphry Marshall with other noted botanists.

The death of John Bartram occurred on 9 mo. 22, 1777, eleven days after the battle of Brandywine, and a granddaughter, who distinctly remembered him, stated that he was exceedingly annoyed and agitated, and she thought his days were shortened by the approach of the royal army after the battle, he being apprehensive that it might lay waste his darling garden, the cherished nursling of almost half a century.

Benjamin Bartram (21) was married, 2 mo. 4, 1773, at Darby Meeting, to Elizabeth Hunt, born 9 mo., 6, 1756, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Sellers) Hunt, of Kingsessing and Darby. They resided in Darby township, where he died in 1826, having survived his wife many years.

WILLIAM BARTRAM (39) was born March 21, 1830, in Marple township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, where is his present residence, a son of Samuel (30) and Massey (Pratt) Bartram.

He attended Jonathan Gause's Institute, a boarding school which educated many who became prominent in this section. After completing an apprenticeship in the tanning and currying trade, in Haverford township, he worked as a journeyman for six months. He then rented the property and purchased the business of the old Pratt tannery on Crum Creek, and he conducted his enterprise for seven years with much success. He then took up his residence upon his father's old farm, and fed cattle for some years, after which he turned his attention to dairying, a business which he made serviceable to the community and remunerative to himself. Deeply interested in educational affairs, he has rendered capable service as a school director, and has aided largely in the development of the school system. He is a member of the Society of Friends, and has also served upon the school committee of that body. His political affiliations are with the Republican party. He is now in his seventy-fourth year, vigorous in body, and in the prime of his mental powers. The old Pratt homestead upon which he lives is one of the landmarks in the neighborhood, and the house is more than one hundred years old. The tract contains one hundred and seventy acres, and upon it was his grandfather Pratt's tannery, and which was owned by Mr. Bartram's parents before he came to live upon it.

Mr. Bartram was married, January 10, 1861, to Mary Anna Garrett, who was born March 8, 1841, a daughter of Lewis and Elizabeth (Leedom) Garrett, and she died in 1886. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bartram were: 1. Elizabeth G., who resides at the parental home; 2. Hannah M., who married William P. Hipple, and to whom were born two children, William Bartram and Henry; and 3. Anna Laura, who died at the age of nine years.

T. ELLWOOD BARTRAM (46) was born May 11, 1846, eldest son of John Benjamin Bartram (34) and Hannah H. Bunting.

He acquired his early education in the Friends' School at Darby, and on completing his studies he entered upon his business career as a salesman in a country store at Paschallville. There he remained for about a year and a half, after which he became connected with the clothing trade in Philadelphia, at the corner of Second and Market streets, in the employ of the firm of Chestnut & Kohlhos, with whom he remained for a year. He then became connected with I. Newton Price, in the manufacture of artificial slate. When he had been engaged in that business for a year and six months, he came to Upper Darby and joined S. S. Powell in the conduct of the coal and lumber business, under the firm name of Bartram & Powell. This relation was maintained for about six years, when his brother Samuel purchased Mr. Powell's interest. Subsequently the partnership was dissolved, T. Ellwood Bartram retaining possession of the lumber and continuing to conduct his yard until 1883, when he sold out to J. Alfred Bartram. He then purchased a farm and began raising vegetables for early marketing, following that business with success until 1893, when he turned his attention to floriculture and built his first greenhouse, in which he began raising roses for market. To-day he has twenty-five thousand square feet under glass, and an indication of his success is that the flowers sent from the Bartram greenhouse always command the highest market price and are in constant demand. He makes a specialty of preparing for the Christmas trade, and labors to have all his plants bloom at that time. In the new enterprise he has prospered, and his business has proven most successful. He served for one term as auditor of his township, and in his political views he is an independent Republican. His religious faith is indicated by his connection with the Society of Friends.

Mr. Bartram was married, February 23, 1871, to Rebecca S. White, of Philadelphia, a daughter of John J. and Mary K. (Shoemaker) White. Her father was a son of Joseph and Rebecca (Smith) White, and her mother was a daughter of Dr. Nathan and Maria Frances (Kirkbride) Shoemaker.

John Henry Bartram, a son of T. Ellwood and Mrs. Bartram, has succeeded the father in business. He married Mary H. White, a daughter of Howard and Anna (Ellis) White, and they have one daughter, Anna Ellis Bartram. The second child of T. Ellwood and Rebecca S. Bartram was Walter Maris, who died in his thirteenth year.

SAMUEL BUNTING BARTRAM (48) was born October 30, 1853, a son of John Benjamin Bartram (34) and Hannah (Bunting) Bartram.

He obtained his early education in the Friends' School of Darby, and afterward attended and finished his educational training at the Crittenden Business College in Philadelphia. He then began preparations for his business career by learning the trade of a pattern maker in the shops of Chambers Brothers, and he followed that pursuit for three or four years. He then returned to Fernwood, and began dealing in coal and lumber in connection with his brother, T. Ellwood Bartram. This relation was maintained for about five years, when the business was divided and the partnership dissolved, T. Ellwood Bartram taking the lumber and Samuel B. Bartram the coal, feed and grain. For about eight years the latter named continued in that line of business, and then extended the scope of his labors by becoming a real estate dealer. He gave up his mercantile interests, and has since conducted real estate operations, although he is now largely living a retired life at Lansdowne. The only township office that he has ever filled has been that of judge of election, in which capacity he has served for three or four years. He is an active Republican, and a member of the Friends' Meeting.

Mr. Bartram was married in 1886 to Hannah Garrett, born June 1, 1857, daughter of Lewis Garrett and Phebe Ann (Lewis) his wife, of Willistown. Her brother, Eli Lewis Garrett, married Martha S. Price, and has two children, Lewis Price and Stephenson Garrett.

JOHN ALFRED BARTRAM (49) was born in Darby, January 1, 1861, youngest child of John Benjamin Bartram (34) and Hannah Bunting Bartram.

After receiving an education in the Friends' School in his native township, he entered upon his business career in the capacity of a clerk in the employ of his brother, T. Ellwood Bartram, in the lumber business. After a time he purchased the lumber portion of the business, and for twelve years he conducted the yards with excellent success, enjoying a liberal patronage because of his honorable methods and his marked enterprise. He then sold out to Rufus Hooper, and for a time he retired from active business in the mercantile line, devoting his energies for two years to agricultural pursuits. On the expiration of that time, in 1893, he went to Philadelphia to accept a position with the firm of Strawbridge & Clothier, with whom he has continued to the present time. In the summer season he conducts the Bartram Hotel at Wildwood, New Jersey, having a capacity for one hundred guests, the hostelry being open from June until October, and he has established for his house an excellent reputation. In the locality where he resides, his worth and ability are recognized by his fellow townsmen, who have at various times called him to public office. He was a member of the first board of health in the town, serving for three years, and he was a member of the town council of Lansdowne for two years. In his political affiliations he is a Republican. He is a member of the Friends' Meeting, and he also holds membership relations with the Order of Sparta.

Mr. Bartram was married, October 19, 1886, to Edwina A. Moore, of Lansdowne, a daughter of Albert and Edwina Moore, and their marriage has been blessed with four children: 1. John Louis, born December 17, 1887; 2. Albert Moore, born June 6, 1891; 3. Florence Julia, born February 17, 1893; 4. Frances Hannah, born August 24, 1903.

WILLIAM BARTRAM (54) was born October 1, 1840, on the farm of his father, in Lower Darby township. His parents were Thomas L. (35) and Elizabeth (Davis) Bartram, and he was the fifth of their seven children.

He was educated in the neighborhood schools, and at an early age he began assisting his father in the cultivation of the farm. In 1858, when eighteen years of age, he engaged in the woolen business with his brothers, Samuel and Isaac, and he continued in this line for three years. His next employment was as a clerk in the old Blue Ball store, with which he was connected for two years, when he returned to the successors of the original firm and remained with them until 1865. In that year he formed a partnership with John R. Haines, in the cloth business, but at the end of two years disposed of his interest and opened a country store at Hainesport, New Jersey. This he conducted for three years, after which he engaged as clerk for Barclay Haines, with whom he remained until 1875, in which year he went to Mount Holly and accepted a clerkship in the lumber business. In 1878 he engaged in business on his own account, so continuing for three years, and then returned to the clothing business with Edward T. Steel. Finally he and his brother Nathan took charge of the old home farm, which they managed in connection with the coal business, he acting as clerk until 1894, when he opened a real estate business, which has since occupied his attention.

Mr. Bartram has at various times been called to important local positions in which his service was marked by genuine ability and scrupulous fidelity to the trusts committed to him. In 1884 and 1885 he served as collector, and for seven years, from 1894 to 1901, he was assessor of Lansdowne borough. His religious affiliations are with the Society of Friends, and his political affiliations are with the Republican party.

Mr. Bartram married Ellen Howard, daughter of Benjamin and Sarah (West) Thorne, by whom he has two children, Elizabeth West Bartram, and Lucy Taylor, now the wife of Edward Brinton Temple, and mother of an only son, Charles Brinton Temple.

PARSONS FAMILY. Richard Parsons, son of Richard and Mary Parsons, was born on the 20th of December, 1730. He married Jemima Hibbs, born on the 11th of May, 1741, daughter of William Hibbs.

Richard Parsons, his wife and children, brought a certificate from Wrightstown, Bucks county, Pennsylvania, to the Chester Monthly Meeting, April 30, 1781. He died April 6, 1828, aged ninety-seven years, three months and seventeen days, and was buried in the Friends' burying ground in Providence township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. He was a strict Friend, and was for some time janitor of the Friends' Meeting in Providence. He was short of stature. Richard and Jemima Parsons had nine children, as follows: 1. Mahlon, born July 4, 1762; 2. Joshua, born June 27, 1764; 3. Naomi, born February 4, 1766; 4. Rebecca, born February 7, 1768; 5. Jemima, born July 6, 1770; 6. Mary, born April 10, 1772; 7. Mary, born May 27, 1774; 8. William, born September 4, 1776; 9. Richard, Jr., born February 20, 1782.

Mahlon (2), eldest child of Richard (1) and Jemima (Hibbs) Parsons, was born July 4, 1762. He married Mary Wood, and settled in Nether Providence township, Delaware county, Pennsylv-vania. To them were born eight children, as follows: Jemima, Nathaniel, Joseph, Mahlon Gibbs, Mary, George, Israel and Hannah.

Nathaniel (3), eldest son of Mahlon (2) and Mary (Wood) Parsons, was born October 14, 1790, and died September 28, 1828, aged thirty-seven years, eleven months and fourteen days. He married Mary Pyle, who was born December 26, 1786, and died December 29, 1863, aged seventy-seven years and three days. Nathaniel and Mary Parsons had six children, as follows: 1. Franklin, born in Radnor, September 24, 1813; 2. Joseph, born in Providence, February 19, 1815; 3. Mary Ann, born in Providence, October 10, 1816; 4. Phoebe, born in Providence, July 28, 1819, and died in infancy; 5. Phoebe, born in Providence, October 10, 1821; 6. Richard, born in Marcus Hook, February 6, 1824, and died December 24, 1903.

Franklin Parsons (4), eldest child of Nathaniel and Mary (Pyle) Parsons, was born September 24, 1813. He received a limited education in the public schools. His father died when he was but fifteen years of age, and he was put to learn the trade of carpentering, which he followed for many years, and in which he was quite successful for the times and country in which he lived. December 22, 1836, he married Elizabeth B. Ward, who bore him two children: Nathaniel, born December 13, 1837, and Deborah Ann, born February 21, 1839. Elizabeth Parsons died May 17, 1872, and March 30, 1875. Franklin Parsons married Mary L. Urian, who was born October 7, 1823, and with whom he continues to live (January, 1904), at his snug home at Glenolden, where he celebrated his ninetieth birthday on September 24, 1903. His oldest child, Nathaniel, learned the trade of his father, and early in life moved to the state of Michigan, where he married and had three children, Eva, Ward and Lizzie. He afterward moved to the state of Washington, where he was married a second time, no issue. Deborah Parsons married George W. Duffee. They had four children, as follows: Lizzie, Frank, Eva and Anna. Lizzie Duffee married Edward Bokencamp, and they had five children: 1. Edward; 2. Raymond; 3. Elwyn; 4. Lizzie; 5. Minerva.

Joseph (5), second son of Nathaniel and Mary (Pyle) Parsons, was born February 19, 1815. His education was confined to the public schools, which, on account of the death of his father when he was thirteen years of age, he left, and went to work. At the age of seventeen he was apprenticed with Jacob Kitts to learn the trade of millwright. During his apprenticeship he was converted and joined the Methodist church at Lima, about the year 1832, and he remained a devoted member of this church until his death, February 6, 1901, a period of sixty-nine years. He was active in all church affairs, and for many years was a class leader, steward, Sunday-school superintendent, trustee, exhorter, and a local preacher. He married Ellen E. Hughes, February 16, 1841. She was the youngest child of William and Eleanor Hughes, and was born in Aston township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, February 9, 1813. She was converted early in life, and joined the Mount Hope Methodist Episcopal church about the year 1832. She was one of the founders of the Methodist church at Lima, the remaining three being William Fox and his wife and Mira Macauley. Six children were born to Joseph and Ellen Parsons: 1. Mary, born March 8, 1842, and died May 19, 1897, unmarried; 2. John, born February 18, 1844; 3. George, born August 18, 1845, died August 5, 1856; 4. William, born May 8, 1847; 5. Matilda, born April 15, 1849, died March 10, 1891; 6. Lewis P., born January 25, 1856.

John W. (6) second child and eldest son of Joseph and Ellen (Hughes) Parsons, was educated in the public schools, in the Chester Academy and at the State Normal School at Millersville. After teaching for a number of years, including four years as principal of the Upland high school, he resigned the latter position to enter the United States Custom House in Philadelphia. He was appointed by the United States Civil Service Commission as a member and chairman of the Board of Civil Service Examiners for the Custom Service at the port of Philadelphia, which position he held for a period of five years. In 1893 he was elected a director of the public schools in Upland, and was continued in this office for ten years, and for nine years he was president of the board. He was connected with the Methodist church at Upland for twenty-two years, and during this time was a steward for twelve years and Sunday-school superintendent for fifteen years.

He was married in Upland, by the Reverend James M. Pendleton, D. D., March 30, 1876, to Miss Annie E. Bentley. Six children were born to them: 1. John Frederick, born February 18, 1877; 2. Harvey Bentley, born May 3, 1880; 3. George Theodore, born May 22, 1882; 4. Jesse Spence, born August 18, 1886; 5. Isaac Ivison, born August 1, 1889; 6. Ellen Hughes, born January 16, 1891.

William Hughes Parsons, third child of Joseph and Ellen Parsons, was born May 8, 1847. He attended the public schools of Middletown township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, until his sixteenth year, when he was apprenticed to a machinist in Chester, Pennsylvania. After learning his trade he worked for a time in Chester, and in 1867 he moved to Phoenixville, where he has resided ever since. In 1900 he was elected burgess of the borough of Phoenixville. He has also served a number of years on the school board.

He takes a prominent part in all public affairs of the borough, and is regarded as one of its most substantial citizens. He was for a number of years a member of the firm of Bryne & Parsons, in the manufacture of hosiery, etc., in which they were very successful. August 4, 1872, he married Margaret Haines, and two children were born to them: Horace G., born July 24, 1873, died August 9, 1873; and Clarence Parsons, born May 13, 1877. The last named, after graduating in the Phoenixville high school, entered into partnership with Charles Baker in the manufacture of underwear. In this undertaking he has been very successful and bids fair to become a successful business man. May 22, 1902, he married Minnie Terrill, and to them has been born one child.

Lewis Pike Parsons, the fourth son of Joseph and Ellen Parsons, was born January 25, 1856, in Lima, Pennsylvania. He attended the public schools of Middletown township until 1873, when he entered the employ of the Phoenixville Works to learn the trade of machinist, and he has remained in the employ of the proprietors of these works, with a slight intermission, ever since. In November, 1878, he married Celinda Mattson, and to them were born four children: 1. Herbert Franklin, born May 13, 1881, died October 21, 1881; 2. William Leroy, born July 4, 1882; 3. Richard Gay, born January 19, 1889, died August 20, 1889; 4. Ellis Heath, born August 18, 1896.

Mary Ann Parsons, the first daughter and the third child of Nathaniel and Mary Parsons, was born October 10, 1816. March 19, 1840, she was married to William Carr, and settled in Springfield township, where she continued to reside until her death, January 25, 1904. Of her marriage have been born six children:

1. John Carr, born in 1841, and died in infancy.

2. Martha Carr, born May 26, 1842, and died August 1, 1844.

3. Mary Parsons Carr, born September 13, 1844, and died August 10, 1901, unmarried; she was a woman of exemplary character, kind and affectionate in her disposition, and enjoyed the love and esteem of a large circle of friends and relatives.

4. William Henry Carr, born October 12, 1846, after attending the schools of the neighborhood, learned the trade of carpenter. In connection with his trade he has had the management of his father's farm, attending market twice a week for the greater part of the year. October 3, 1870, he married Mary A. Franks, and to them were born four children: 1. Bessie, born March 23, 1874, died March 24, 1874; 2. Lillie M., born January 12, 1876; 3. Emma, born March 6, 1878; 4. Clara, born September 14, 1880. Lillie M. was married to Lewis Hannon, October 16, 1895, and to them were born two children: William Lewis, born July 31, 1896, and Bessie May, born August 24, 1898. Clara L., married Howard Snyder, July 27, 1898, and one child was born to them April 29, 1900. Howard Snyder died February 5, 1901.

5. Joseph Franklin Carr, born November 8, 1851, died September 27, 1854.

6. Franklin Parsons Carr, born October 1, 1855. He attended the public schools and secured a good common school education. He learned the trade of a carpenter, in which he has been successful. He purchased a portion of his father's farm, on which he has built a pleasant home. In October, 1884, he married Maggie Ella Myers, and to them were born four children: 1. Bessie R., born May 10, 1885; 2. Edith F., born April 19, 1888; 3. Elsie M., born September 29, 1891; 4. Franklin P., born November 14, 1899.

Phoebe Parsons, the fifth child of Nathaniel and Mary Parsons, was born October 10, 1821. On February 18, 1841, she married Isaac Naylor. They engaged in farming in Claymont, Delaware, and afterward moved to Marcus Hook, where they resided for a number of years, thence removing to the Brandywine, a mile or two from Wilmington, where they were engaged in farming until their deaths. They were the parents of nine children: 1. Susanna, born January 29, 1842, died July 19, 1885. 2. Nathaniel, born March 25, 1844. 3. Isaac Pyle, born April 24, 1846. 4. Thomas Alfred, born November 4, 1848. 5. Samuel Walker, born May 27, 1851, died July 9, 1880. 6. Mary Paulina, born November 3, 1853. 7. Emma Matilda, born April 13, 1856. 8. Anna Elizabeth, born December 15, 1858, died December 19, 1858. 9. Amos Franklin, born September 13, 1860, died February 14, 1903, unmarried.

Susanna Naylor, the eldest of these children, married John Price, October 17, 1860. They had one child, Almond, born July 23, 1861, who was married to Adaline T. Guthrie, July 23, 1881, and of this marriage were born two children, Ethel, born November 26, 1888, and Robert Garrett, born February 27, 1895, died November 25, 1896. John Price died December 26, 1864. Susanna Price was married a second time, June 8, 1871, to John P. Fredd, and to them were born four children: 1. George, born July 14, 1873, deceased. 2. Phoebe, born April 14, 1877, died June 26, 1902. 3. Susanna, born April 17, 1879. 4. Emma, born December 29, 1880.

Nathaniel Naylor, born March 25, 1844, married Ella La Coupt, January 27, 1874. Their only child, Clyde Warren, was born August 2, 1875, died August 17, 1875; Ella Naylor died August 8, 1875, and Nathaniel married Annie A. Rambo, August 7, 1879. Of this marriage were born three children: 1. Charles Calvin, born July 12, 1882. 2. Inez Rambo, born October 25, 1883, died August 2, 1884. 3. Paul Clyde, born May 10, 1887. Nathaniel Naylor is a minister of the gospel of the Baptist denomination, and has accomplished much good by his untiring efforts in the ministry.

Isaac P. Naylor, born April 24, 1846, married Ella May Longbotham, January 28, 1869, and to them were borne three children: 1. Viola May, born November 5, 1869. 2. Charles Henry, born May 20, 1872. 3. Alfred Herman, born December 20, 1875. Viola May married Harvey Barndt, February 15, 1893. Charles Henry married _____, August 19, 1902.

Thomas Alfred Naylor, born November 4, 1848, after attending the schools of Wilmington for some years, entered a higher school in Wilmington, where he graduated with honors. He learned the trade of machinist, and has been very successful in his undertakings. He moved to Baltimore, where he engaged in the carpet cleaning business. He was married to Lenore McLeod, July 13, 1874, and to them were born three children: 1. Lawrence Alexander, born April 8, 1875. 2. Dora McLeod, born January 16, 1878, died December 31, 1898. 3. Leonore Mather, born December 2, 1892.

Samuel Walker Naylor was born May 27, 1851. He married Louisa Jordan, July 18, 1878, and their only child, Samuel, died in infancy.

Mary Paulina Naylor, born November 3, 1853, married Charles Massie, September 16, 1875; no issue.

Emma Matilda Naylor, born April 13, 1856, married Thomas T. Weldon, April 28, 1882. To them were born five children: 1. Eva, born October 16, 1883; 2. Thomas, born September 22, 1886; 3. Meta N., born December 2, 1888, died November, 1889; 4. Hannah P., born January 3, 1892, died June, 1894; 5. Herbert F., born December 8, 1895.

Richard Parsons, the sixth child of Nathaniel and Mary Parsons, was born February 6, 1824, and died December 24, 1903. He learned the trade of a carpenter, and after working for a few years in Delaware county, Pennsylvania, moved to Michigan. After a number of years' residence in that state, he moved to Iowa, where he engaged in farming, also working at his trade when opportunity offered. May 11, 1848, he married Sarah Middleton, who was born September 24, 1822, and died March 1, 1861. Of this union were born seven children: 1. Thomas M., born August 10, 1849; 2. Joseph, born October 12, 1851, died March 11, 1853; 3. Mary A., born August 30, 1853; 4. Sarah, born October 24, 1855, died in 1857; 5. Elizabeth, born October 24, 1855; died in 1863; 6. Emma, born in 1858; 7. Richard, born February 28, 1861.

Thomas M. Parsons, eldest of the last named family, married Hannah Countryman, September 25, 1874, and to them were born two children, Harry, born February 25, 1876, and Eva, born January 19, 1886.

Mary A. Parsons, born August 30, 1853, married Joseph Walker, March 29, 1876. Soon after their marriage they removed from Delaware county, Pennsylvania, to the state of Iowa, where she joined her father and brother, and there they engaged in farming. Five children were born to them: 1. Ella M., born June 6, 1877; 2. Herbert P., born July 19, 1880, died February 20, 1887; 3. Clara E., born September 24, 1886; 4. Alice Mae, born June 30, 1890; 5. May Olive, born August 25, 1892.

PHILIP M. SHARPLES. The family of Sharples, of Sharpless, in the county of Lancaster, England, is very ancient, as we find Adam de Sharples living in 1320. A supposed branch of this family removed to Wybunbury, in Cheshire, where we find Richard Sharples, born about 1555, with Cicely his wife, and some children. There are some reasons for believing that this Richard was the father of Jeffrey Sharples, of Wybunbury, who was married under a license obtained from the Bishop of Chester, dated 27th of April, 1611, to Margaret Ashley, of Wich Malbank, spinster. She was married at Wybunbury on the 21st of January, 1643-4, and her husband died on the 15th of December, 1661. Their children were Richard, Ellen, Margery, a daughter who died in infancy, John, Mary and Rebecca.

John Sharples, son of Jeffrey and Margaret, was baptised on the 15th of August, 1624; married 2 mo. (April) 27, 1662, Jane Moor, and they with seven children embarked for Pennsylvania, where they arrived on the 14th of 6 mo. (August), 1682. Their first home was a cabin built against a rock on the banks of Ridley Creek, not far from Chester, and there the father died, 4 mo. 11, 1685. His widow survived until 9 mo. 1, 1722, when she had reached the age of eighty-four years. They had united with the Friends (or Quakers) in their native land, and the births of their children are among the records of the Society there. They were as follows:

1. Phebe, b. at Mearemore, 10 mo. 20, 1663; d. 4 mo. 2, 1685.
2. John, b. at Blakenhall, 11 mo. 16, 1666; m. Hannah Pennell.
3. Thomas, b. at Hatherton, 11 mo. 2, 1668; d. at sea 5 mo. 17, 1682.
4. James, b. at Hatherton, 1 mo. 5, 1670-1; m. Mary Lewis.
5. Caleb, b. at same, 2 mo., 22, 1673; d. 7 mo. 17, 1686.
6. Jane, b. at same, 6 mo. 13, 1676; d. 3 mo. 28, 1685.
7. Joseph, b. at same, 9 mo. 28, 1678.

O. W. Sharples

Joseph Sharples, the last named, was married 3 mo. 31, 1704, at Haverford Meeting, to Lydia Lewis, born in Glamorganshire, Wales, 3 mo. 8, 1683; died 1763; daughter of Ralph and Mary Lewis. Joseph had learned the trade of a carpenter and erected the first permanent dwelling of the family, a short distance from the rock before mentioned. He settled for a few years in Nether Providence, but about 1713 removed to a tract of three hundred acres in Middletown, on Chester Creek, which he had purchased from his mother and brother John. He and his wife were active members of Middletown Meeting, of which he was both an overseer and an elder. He died in the spring of 1757. He had ten children:

8. Susanna, b. 12 mo. 18, 1708; m. Joseph Chamberlain.

9. Joseph, b. 7 mo. 8, 1707; d. 1 mo. 4, 1769; m. Mary Pyle.

10. Benjamin, b. 11 mo. 26, 1708-9; d. 3 mo. 16, 1785; m. Edith Broom and Martha Mendenhall.

11. Samuel, b. 12 mo., 7, 1710-11; d. 11 mo. 24, 1790; m. Jane Newlin.

12. Lydia, b. 3 mo., 7, 1713; d. 1741; m. John Martin.

13. Nathan, b. 9 mo. 2, 1715; d. 1755; m. Hannah Townsend.

14. Jane, b. 12 mo. 4, 1718; d. 1775; m. Jacob Pyle.

15. Abraham, b. 5 mo. 7, 1720; d. 1784; m. Ann Young.

16. Jacob, b. 10 mo. 14, 1722; d. 7 mo. 19, 1775; m. Ann Blakey.

17. William, b. 3 mo. 31, 1725; d. 5 mo. 4, 1751; m. Abigail Sharp.

Nathan Sharples (13) was married 10 mo. 10, 1741, at Birmingham Meeting, to Hannah Townsend, born 6 mo. 9, 1718; died 12 mo. 31, 1790; daughter of Joseph and Martha (Wooderson) Townsend, of East Bradford township, formerly from Berkshire, England. They resided for a short time in West Caln township, but in 1744 removed to some land belonging to her father, in East Bradford. In 1747 Nathan purchased two hundred and three acres in Goshen township (now West Chester), adjoining the land of his father-in-law, and removing thereto died a few years later. His widow married in 1758, Charles Ryan, by whom she had a daughter Ann, who became the mother of Judge Townsend Haines, of the courts of Chester county. Nathan Sharples had six children:

18. Joseph, b. 1 mo., 24, 1744; d. before his father.

19. Martha, b. 9 mo. 16, 1745; m. Jacob Haines.

20. Lydia, b. 7 mo. 27, 1746; d. before her father.

21. Nathan, b. 8 mo. 29, 1749; d. before his father.

22. William, b. 1 mo. 9, 1752; d. 10 mo. 11, 1817. See forward.

23. Hannah, b. 11 mo. 15, 1753; d. 1804, unmarried.

William Sharples (22) was born in Goshen township (now the borough of West Chester), in a log house which stood about sixty feet southwest of the present brick dwelling (built in 1801) on the south side of Dean street, midway between High and Church streets, and died 10 mo. 11, 1817, in the house next south of the Bank of Chester County. He was married 10 mo., 7, 1773, at Birmingham Meeting, to Ann Hunt, born 1 mo. 16, 1755; died 11 mo. 5, 1820; daughter of William and Sarah (Fred) Hunt, of Westtown, and granddaughter of Joseph Hunt who came from England in 1714. William Sharples learned the trade of a cabinet-maker, which he followed for a time in a shop near the corner of High and Dean streets. He inherited the homestead, and in 1789 erected a large barn thereon of stone, stable high, which was quite an innovation from the odd style of log barns. He sold that part of his farm lying east of the Wilmington Road, being ninety acres, and in 1792 bought a house and lot on High street, opposite the court house, from James and Hannah Smith. To this house he built an addition on the south, and opened a store therein. In 1794 the room or rooms over the store were rented to Jones, Hoff & Derrick, who printed the "West Chester Gazette", the first literary venture of this kind in the county, which continued but six months. In 1797 the "Literary Museum" was published in the same rooms for a like period. In 1795 William Sharples was elected a member of the Pennsylvania Society for the Abolition of Slavery; and upon the incorporation of West Chester into a borough, in 1799, he became the first burgess, and was also at the head of the West Chester Fire Company, organized the same year. He had seven children:

24. Sarah, b. 7 mo. 30, 1774; d. 2 mo. 10, 1832; m. Philip Derrick.

25. Lydia, b. 8 mo. 8, 1776; d. 2 mo. 15, 1844; m. Dr. Levi Roberts.

26. Nathan Hunt, b. 5 mo. 18, 1779; d. 3 mo. 22, 1838. See forward.

27. William, b. 6 mo. 9, 1783; d. 6 mo. 10, 1784.

28. Hannah, b. 11 mo. 6, 1785; d. 10 mo. 5, 1843; m. Isaac Rogers.

29. Rebecca, b. 6 mo. 9, 1789; d. 7 mo. 22, 1836; m. David Townsend.

30. Nancy, b. 11 mo. 10, 1792; d. 4 mo. 30, 1806.

Nathan H. Sharples (26) was married 10 mo. 11, 1804, at Birmingham Meeting, to Martha Price, born in Kingsessing, Philadelphia, 11 mo. 3, 1785; died in West Chester, 9 mo. 11, 1852; daughter of Philip and Rachel (Kirk) Price, of East Bradford. In his boyhood he learned the printing business with Jones, Hoff & Detrick, and assisted his father in the store and on the farm, which varied occupations he followed for several years after marriage. By his father's will he inherited all the estate, subject to provision for his mother and legacies to his sisters, which trusts were fulfilled beyond the legal requirements. In 1818 he built a brick house at the southwest corner of Union and High streets for his mother, for which the brick was burned on the farm. Finding a demand for brick, he engaged in their manufacture for a time, but this exciting competition, and business not being sufficient for two yards, both were abandoned for some years. In 1826 he was elected a member of the Chester County Cabinet of Natural Science, in which he took an active part, and, with his nearest neighbor, Dr. William Darlington, pursued the study of botany with great interest and pleasure. In 1830 he erected Price's Boarding School for his father-in-law, Philip Price; and Hannah P. Davis, daughter of the latter, conducted it for several years with great success. It was built on a part of his own farm, and he remained intimately connected with its management during the remainder of his life. The building is now occupied by the Church of the Surz Foundation. He was one of the trustees of the West Chester Academy, and in 1832 erected a large boarding house for the use of the students, which since has been remodeled into a hotel and is known as the Sherman House. In 1836 he joined with others who agreed to build for Joshua Hoopes a house suitable for a boarding school for boys, and was appointed superintendent for its erection. This building is situated on the highest point in the borough, and is now the residence of Thomas B. Taylor. In 1811 he was one of the committee of Westtown Boarding School. Being a member of the Society of Friends by birth, he also became one by conviction, taking an active part in the affairs of the meeting, of which he was the clerk for many years, and an elder at the time of his death. He had seven children:

31. Hannah, b. 10 mo. 4, 1805; d. 7 mo. 3, 1882; m. Edward B. Darlington.

32. William P., b. 2 mo. 9, 1808; d. 5 mo. 21, 1879; m. Anne G. Pennell and Sarah J. Leedom.

33. Philip P., b. 4 mo. 26, 1810; d. 1 mo. 14, 1902; m. Mary A. Paschall.

34. Henry P., b. 9 mo., 16, 1813; d. 9 mo., 29, 1890; m. Harriet D. Price and Hannah W. Martin.

35. Ann, b. 4 mo. 24, 1816; d. 7 mo. 22, 1883; m. Stephen Paschall.

36. Alfred, b. 4 mo., 3, 1822; m. Elizabeth Sharples.

37. Samuel Emlen, b. 7 mo. 28, 1828.

S. Emlen Sharples, the last named, was married 3 mo. 10, 1852, at the residence of John Serrill, in Darby, to Martha S. Ash, born in Darby, 7 mo. 13, 1831; died in West Chester, 11 mo. 11, 1892; daughter of Robert P. Ash and Hannah Serrill, his wife, of Buckingham, Bucks county, Pennsylvania. He learned the cabinet making trade, and afterward engaged in brick-making and building in West Chester. For several years he was a member of the firm of Sharples & Hall, lumber and coal, but, the business being divided, he took the lumber alone, and still continues in the calling, being assisted by his son, Serrill Sharples.

The following named children were born to S. Emlen and Martha S. Sharples: Martha, unmarried; Robert Pennell, employed as a clerk in the Sharples Separator Works in West Chester; Philip M., mentioned hereinafter; Edward D., who is a resident of Council Bluffs, Iowa; David P., a resident of West Chester; Serrill, engaged in the lumber business with his father; and Mary, (Mrs. Mary Sharples Darlington) who is now living on the old homestead, which consists of three hundred acres of land in Middletown, on Chester creek.

Philip M. Sharples, second son of S. Emlen and Martha S. Sharples, was born August 10, 1857, in Goshen township, now the borough of West Chester, in the brick dwelling on the south side of Dean street, midway between High and Church streets, which was erected in 1801. This is the same house in which his father and grandfather were born, his great-grandfather having been born in the old log house which stood about sixty feet southwest of the present brick building. He attended the Friends' school of West Chester, the West Chester State Normal School and Worrell's Academy. He gained his first business experience as an apprentice in Copes' foundry and machine shop, then was employed with James Moore at the Iron Works in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and later in the Buckeye Engine Works at Salem, Ohio. In 1881 he established the business in West Chester, which has grown to large proportions. At first employing only three men (one of whom is still with him), his trade increased so rapidly that he found it necessary to augment his force of employes from time to time, and in the present year (1903) he has between four and five hundred men on his pay roll. In the beginning he conducted a general foundry and machine business, but shortly afterward he began the manufacture of cream separators, and finally made a specialty of that article. He is now the largest manufacturer in his line in the world, the plant now shipping its products to all parts of the civilized globe, and the separator is known and used in all dairy districts throughout this and other countries. In religion he is an adherent of the doctrines of the Society of Friends, and in politics a supporter of the principles of Republicanism.

Mr. Sharples married Helen E. Brinton, a daughter of George and Mary Brinton. Their children are: Helen B., Philip T. and Lawrence P. Sharples.

THE NEW CENTURY FOUNTAIN. The beautiful drinking fountain at the end of North High street, West Chester, is the monument of the New Century Club, by which body it was erected at an outlay of $500, the funds being provided through the generosity of Mr. P. M. Sharples. The figure is the production of Miss Martha G. Cornwell, of West Chester, a sculptress who has won an enviable reputation in New York city. The property upon which the fountain stands was donated by Mrs. Anna Warrington.

HAYES. The minutes of William Penn's Commissioners of Property, under date of 7 mo., 3, 1705, show that the Proprietary, by deeds of lease and release, dated 11th and 12th October, 1681, conveyed to Richard Haunds (or Hands), of Swanford, in the county of Oxon (Oxford), husbandman, one thousand acres of land in Pennsylvania, and the said Richard, by indentures of lease and release, dated 13th and 14th December, 1700, conveyed the same land to Henry Hayes, of Fullvell, in the said county, carpenter.

A warrant was granted September 3, 1705, to Henry Hayes, "lately arrived in this province," to take up five hundred acres of land, one moiety of the original purchase of Richard Hands, and on 11 mo., (January) 28, 1705, he obtained another warrant for four hundred and eighty-four acres, the remaining sixteen acres being allowed for "liberty land" in the suburbs of Philadelphia. By the first warrant a survey was made of three hundred and eighty-four acres, October 9, 1705, on the west branch of Brandywine, just south of the present Coatesville, and on 3 mo., 24, 1706, a tract of six hundred acres was surveyed to him in East Marlborough, including the site of Unionville. There being some vacant land adjoining the last, he obtained another warrant, 4 mo., 22, 1713, under which he took up five hundred acres more, extending to the north-west corner of East Marlborough. A patent for all his lands, one thousand four hundred and eighty-four acres, was dated November 25, 1717.

He was commissioned a justice of the common pleas, etc., August 26, 1717, in which position he appears to have continued until his death, in 1745. He was also elected a member of Assembly in the years 1715, 1716, 1728 and 1730. He was not a Friend, though several of his children joined that society. His wife Rachel was living in 1736, and was probably the mother of all his children, but he left a widow, Isabella, who was perhaps the same person who purchased land in Lancaster county, March 8, 1746-7, and subsequently married Andrew Caldwell, of Leacock.

The will of Henry Hayes, of East Marlborough, husbandman, is dated April 1, 1745, and was proved December 30, 1745, in which he names his living children, fourteen in number:

1. William, married 11 mo., 19, 1725-6, at Londongrove Meeting, to Jane James, born 9 mo., 28, 1707, daughter of George and Ann (Woodward) James, of Springfield. By deed of September 10, 1729, Henry Hayes, of Marlborough, Gentleman, and Rachel his wife, conveyed to William Hayes of the same township, yeoman, for love and affection, one hundred acres of land. In 1764, William and wife appear to have removed to or near Wilmington, soon after which Jane died, and he returned the following year. His will is dated 2 mo., 19, 1771, and was proved June 18, 1783.

2. Richard, married Mary ———, and settled in West Marlborough, where he died in the winter of 1742-3, leaving children, Henry, Margaret, Mary, George, Jonathan and Jesse. To Henry he devised the plantation, purchased from Daniel Davis, at twenty-one. His widow was married again to ——— Welch.

3. Joseph, married 8 mo., 26, 1727, at Bradford Meeting, Jean Woodward, daughter of Richard Woodward, of Bradford. His parents conveyed to him, by deed of gift September 10, 1729, one hundred and seventy-seven acres of land in East Marlborough, where he died in 1748. His widow was married 9 mo., 22, 1750, at Londongrove Meeting, to William Wickersham, of Newlin.

4. James, married about 1736, Mary Cox, daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Buzby) Cox, and settled in East Fallowfield township, where he died in 1758. In 1764 his widow was assessed with two hundred and sixty-eight acres of land, twelve cattle, three horses and eight sheep.

5. John, perhaps the same John Hayes who settled in Oxford township about 1754 and died there in 1766, leaving a widow, Margaret, who died about 1783, and children, David, John, Mary, married to James Dickey; Elizabeth, married to Walter Hood; Hannah, married to William Baily; Ann, who married William Starret; and Margaret, who married Robert Bunting. In 1764 John Hayes had two hundred and fifty acres of land, two horses, four cattle and ten sheep. The village of Hayesville derives its name from this family.

6. Stephen, married in 1734 to Sarah Hope, born 6 mo., 22, 1713, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Hobson) Hope, of Kennett. His father gave him a deed for one hundred and seventy-seven acres, one hundred and twenty-five perches, of land in East Marlborough, October 25, 1736, and Stephen and wife conveyed the same to John Jackson, April 15, 1743. They afterward lived in Fallowfield, where Stephen died in 1758. He is said to have had a son Stephen, who married Betty Way, of Kennett, and a son John, who is mentioned in the will of his grandfather, Hope.

7. Thomas, married 10 mo., 11, 1734, at Kennett Meeting, to Mary Kirk, of Christiana Hundred, New Castle county, widow of Alphonus Kirk and daughter of Thomas and Mary Nichols. His father gave him a deed for one hundred and seventy-seven acres, one hundred and twenty-five perches, in East Marlborough, May 15, 1732. He died in the winter of 1738-9, and his widow married Jonathan Jackson in 1743.

13. Rachel, married 3 mo., 26, 1730, at Kennett Meeting, to William Wickersham, son of Thomas and Alice Wickersham, of Marlborough.

14. Ruth, married to ——— Heaney, as mentioned in the will of her brother, James Hayes.

15. Lydia, married 12 mo., 3, 1741, to Thomas Nichols, of Christiana Hundred, New Castle county, where she died 7 mo., 24, 1805.

Children of (1) William and Jane Hayes:

16. John, born 8 mo., 2, 1726; died in West Marlborough, 1762; married 8 mo., 11, 1749, Hannah Kirk, stepdaughter of his uncle Thomas Hayes, and had children, David, William, Jesse, Abraham, Ann and Hannah.

17. David, born 8 mo., 14, 1728; married 5 mo., 13, 1752, Ann Baily, daughter of Joel and Betty Baily, of West Marlborough. They had children, Phebe, Anna, David, Nathan, Hannah, Jacob and Joel. The most of the family removed to Virginia.

18. Sarah, born 12 mo., 24, 1730; married 6 mo., 20, 1753, William Lamborn, of Londongrove.

19. William, born 8 mo., 8, 1833.

20. Hannah, born 1 mo., 1, 1736; died 9 mo., 13, 1799; married Samuel Swayne.

21. Mordecai, born 5 mo., 29, 1738; died 1824; married 4 mo., 18, 1764, at Centre Meeting, Ann Greave, born 8 mo., 2, 1735; daughter of John and Jane (Chandler) Greave, of New Castle county. They settled on a farm of two hundred acres in Newlin township.

22. Thomas, born 3 mo., 24, 1741; married 4 mo., 25, 1763, Ruth Jones, daughter of Evan and Sarah Jones, of East Bradford, and had children, Sarah, Rachel, Hannah and Thomas.

23. Joshua, twin with Thomas.

24. Abraham, born 9 mo., 1743.

25. Rachel, born 3 mo., 1747.

Children of (2) Richard and Mary Hayes:

26. Henry, married 9 mo., 17, 1748, Ann Strode, daughter of John and Magdalen Strode, of West Marlborough. They removed to the east side of the Brandywine, at Chadds' Ford, and kept tavern at the old Chadds house for several years, but in 1766 went to Wilmington, where Ann died. Henry married again, 4 mo., 1768, Ann Wood, of Darby, where he subsequently resided until his death, in 1786. He was probably the sheriff of that name, 1772-3. By his first wife he had children, Magdalen, Elizabeth, Mary, Margaret and Henry.

27. Margaret, married 10 mo., 11, 1746, Jeremiah Starr, and again, 11 mo., 15, 1769, to John Jackson.

28. Mary, married 9 mo., 7, 1744, Ebenezer Speakman, of Newlin.

29. George. 30. Jonathan. 31. Jesse.

Children of (3) Joseph and Jane Hayes:

32. Rachel, married 4 mo., 17, 1747, to John Moore.

33. Isaac, married 10 mo., 5, 1750, at Londongrove Meeting, Hannah Harlan, daughter of Ezekiel Harlan, of West Marlborough. He died in East Marlborough, 1759, leaving children, Rachel, Ruth and Lydia and his widow married John Buller.

34. Henry, married first to Elizabeth ——— and secondly, 6 mo., 10, 1773, to Jane Todd. He resided for some time in Newlin township, but in 1776 purchased a farm of one hundred and thirty-two acres in Londongrove. By his first wife he had a daughter Elizabeth, who married Emmor Baily.

35. Abigail, married at the Swedes' church, Wilmington, November 3, 1755, to Richard Woodward, of West Bradford.

36. Joseph, married at Swedes' church, August 12, 1753, Joanna (or Hannah) Passmore. It is said that a son, John Hayes, had large possessions on the Miami, in Ohio, and raised cattle extensively.

37. Caleb, married at Swedes' church, November 20, 1756, Mary Baily, daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Bentley) Baily, of West Marlborough. He bought and settled on one hundred and thirty acres of land in Newlin township, and there died in 1786.

38. Ruth, married at Swedes' church, April 29, 1754, Joseph Pyle.

Children of (4) James and Mary Hayes:

39. Nathan, died in West Marlborough about 1823, having no children, but a considerable estate which he devised to his nephews and nieces.

40. Henry, probably died unmarried.

41. Sarah, married 5 mo., 30, 1759, Aaron Baker, of West Marlborough.

42. Rachel, married 4 mo., 13, 1763, to John Jones.

43. Hannah, married 4 mo., 17, 1765, to James Clark.

44. Lydia, married 9 mo., 1, 1773, to Isaac Stroud.

Children of (7) Thomas and Mary Hayes:

45. Samuel, married about 1760, Elizabeth Job, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Maxwell) Job, of Nottingham. He became the owner of the homestead of one hundred and seventy-seven acres in East Marlborough, by release from his sister, January 7, 1760. His children were Ann, Lydia, Job, Thomas, Mary, Sarah, Jonathan, Ruth, Dinah, Nathan, Elizabeth and Jane. Of these Job purchased the homestead in 1792, and by his wife, Sarah Henry, had children—Thomas, who died in infancy; Nathan, M. D., of Unionville, who died in 1819; Levi, who remained at the homestead; and Job, who died young.

46. Dinah, perhaps the same who married January 12, 1768, at the old Swedes church, Christopher Rich or Reix, of East Fallowfield.

Children of (21) Mordecai and Ann (Greave) Hayes:

47. Jane, born 2 mo., 3, 1765; died in her fourth year.

48. Jacob, born 9 mo., 7, 1766; died 12 mo., 22, 1788, unmarried.

49. Eli, born 10 mo., 21, 1768; married Sarah Ward and had children Hannah, Ann, Mary and perhaps others.

50. John, born 7 mo., 23, 1772; died in twenty-third year.

51. Jonathan, born 1 mo., 3, 1776; died unmarried.

52. Mordecai, born 7 mo., 19, 1780; married 12 mo., 24, 1801, at Kennett Meeting, Mary House, daughter of Amos and Martha House, of Pemsbury. Their son Jacob Hayes inherited the homestead and was the father of William M. Hayes, Esq., of the Chester county bar.

Children of (37) Caleb and Mary (Baily) Hayes:

53. Isaac, born 10 mo., 12, 1762; died 10 mo., 4, 1844; married Sarah Walton, daughter of Benjamin and Abigail (Gilbert) Walton, of East Fallowfield. She was born 10 mo., 15, 1770, and died 9 mo., 16, 1843. They resided on a farm in East Fallowfield, and had children—Elizabeth, Israel, Rebecca, Mary, Benjamin, Sarah and Isaac. Of these, Benjamin, born 8 mo., 28, 1804, died in West Chester, 1 mo., 24, 1901, was the father of Dr. Isaac I. Hayes, the Arctic explorer.

54. Anne, married John Cooper and went to Ohio. Her five sons each received a farm from his father.

55. Caleb, studied medicine and afterward became a lawyer; was twice married, and had six sons by each wife. He removed to western Ohio.

56. Ellis, married Rachel Wickersham and had three children, Mary, Jehu and William, born in Fallowfield; removed to Columbiana county, Ohio, and afterward further northwest.

57. Ruth, married Joseph Brown and they removed to the Miami or to Illinois.

58. Abigail, married James Milleson, and about 1795 removed, with seven children, to Fayette county, Pennsylvania.

ISAAC JACKSON HAYES, deceased, well known for many years as one of the firm of David Snyder, the celebrated manufacturer of agricultural implements at what was known as Blockley, now known as Angora, a suburb of Philadelphia, was born in 1818, a son of John and Catherine (Snyder) Hayes. After finishing his education, which was acquired in the public schools, he learned the machinist trade with Jesse Maris, of Upper Darby, and then engaged with Uncle David Snyder, with whom he remained associated for a number of years, and the latter years of his life were spent at various occupations. Mr. Hayes married Elizabeth H. Morris, a daughter of Amos and Eliza (Hahn) Morris, who is well known throughout Ridley township as a descendant of a creditable line of ancestors who originated in England and came to this country several generations ago, making their home in Ridley township. John Hahn, the grandfather of Mrs. Hayes, erected the old house built of imported English stone which is now over one hundred years old, and which with its surrounding eighteen acres is the home of Mrs. Hayes. The old house, even though it has stood through the storms of a century, is still as staunch as when first constructed. Certain it is that the builders of the past made their structures to withstand time, and to remain a monument of the sturdy manhood which gave them existence.

Amos Morris, father of Mrs. Hayes, was born in Ridley township. After completing his education he engaged in a general farming business near Chester, Pennsylvania, and in this line of industry achieved marked success. He acquired many acres of land in Delaware county, and was enabled to retire from active business pursuits at the age of fifty-five years. He lived many years to enjoy the fruits of his labor. He was the son of Phillip and Ann (Mackinson) Morris. He married Eliza Hahn, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Davis) Hahn, who were also descendants of good old German and English stock. Their children were: Elizabeth H., now the widow of Isaac J. Hayes; Ann, who died unmarried; and William Knowles Morris, who also died unmarried.

Mrs. Elizabeth H. Hayes, by her husband, Isaac J. Hayes, had one child, William Morris Hayes, who is engaged with the J. B. Lippincott Publishing Company, of Philadelphia.

W. MARSHALL SWAYNE, a sculptor of note and a man of letters, now living in retirement in New Garden township, Chester county, bears the name of his great-great-grandfather, who was born in Berks county, England, in 1688. This early ancestor came to America in his youth and made his home in Delaware county, Pennsylvania, where he married a woman named Elizabeth Dell. Among the children of this union was William, born in 1721, who married Ann Pusey, and died in 1785. The line traced here is that of his son Benjamin, who was born in East Marlborough township, 11 mo., 1, 1763. He was educated in the common schools of his day, and spent his life as a farmer in Chester county, dying 2 mo., 7, 1848. His wife was Susanna Woodward, of London Grove township, born 8 mo., 5, 1773, died 3 mo., 20, 1806, and the issue of this marriage was three children: William, born 11 mo., 4, 1802, died 8 mo., 7, 1838; Joel, born 5 mo., 22, 1804, died 5 mo., 9, 1840; Susanna, born 2 mo., 25, 1806, died 9 mo., 11, 1836.

William Swayne, eldest child of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Woodward) Swayne, was born on his father's farm in East Marlborough township, Chester county, 11 mo., 4, 1802. He gained the education that the schools of the time afforded, and became a farmer, like his father. He was a man of marked individuality, and held a leading part in the affairs of the township. He attended Friends' Meeting, and was a Democrat in politics. He married Mary Ann Marshall, born 5 mo., 21, 1802, died 5 mo., 9, 1864, a daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Worth) Marshall, of East Bradford township, the father being a farmer of prominence in local life. Five children were born of the marriage, as follows: 1. Benjamin W., born 7 mo., 14, 1827; he married Margaret Bancroft, born 10 mo., 14, 1830, daughter of John and Susan Bancroft, of Philadelphia, and they were the parents of one son William, born 9 mo., 16, 1851. Margaret (Bancroft) Swayne died 5 mo., 8, 1852. For his second wife Benjamin W. married Jane T. Pennock, born 1 mo., 30, 1833, a daughter of James and Amy Pennock, of London Grove township. 2. William Marshall, born 12 mo., 1, 1828, mentioned hereinafter. 3. Jacob, born 10 mo., 26, 1830, died 2 mo., 12, 1898, he married Sarah Jane Noblit, born 3 mo., 24, 1833, died 2 mo., 20, 1902, daughter of Hamilton and Mary Noblit, of Wilmington, Delaware. 4. Elizabeth M., born 9 mo., 8, 1833, became the wife of Charles Barnard, son of Richard M. and Hanna Barnard. 5. Joel J., born 7 mo., 8, 1837, lost his life while in the service of the Union army in June, 1862; he was serving as adjutant under General Kane. William Swayne, father of these children, died 8 mo., 7, 1838.

W. Marshall Swayne, second child and second son of William and Mary Ann (Marshall) Swayne, was born in Pennsbury township, Chester county, 12 mo., 1, 1828. He showed unusual aptitudes, and was given more than ordinary school advantages. After the work of the public schools, he attended the West-town boarding school, and the private school of that accomplished educator, Jonathan Gause. On finishing his school work he took up farming, in which he has maintained a lifelong interest, although his artistic talent led him into other pursuits. He became a sculptor of recognized ability, and had sittings from the most prominent men of his time. Among those whom he modeled were Abraham Lincoln, William H. Seward, Andrew Johnson, S. P. Chase, Colonel Forney and Bayard Taylor. It was in 1858 that he left his early home for West Chester, and soon after that he went to Washington to accept a position in the internal revenue department, and in 1867 he was appointed United States collector of internal revenue by President Andrew Johnson for the seventh district of Pennsylvania. Here he remained for some time, following which came his professional life as a sculptor. In 1875 he removed to his present home in New Garden township, where he has made farming an avocation, and has contributed in many ways to the higher interests of the community, where he is greatly admired and beloved. He attends the Presbyterian church, and for some time was a member of the Union League Club of West Chester.

Mr. Swayne was married, 11 mo., 14, 1830, to Mary Barnard, born 8 mo., 9, 1828, a daughter of Richard M. and Hannah (Wilson) Barnard, the former named having been a noted surveyor and conveyancer of Newlin township, Chester county. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Swayne: 1. Ada B., born 10 mo., 23, 1851, became the wife of Dr. John W. MacPherson, 11 mo., 26, 1882, and her death occurred 7 mo., 17, 1884. 2. A. Canova, born 9 mo., 21, 1853; he married, 9 mo., 11, 1883, Hannah Thomas, daughter of George and Rachel Thomas, of West Chester. 3. William M., born 8 mo., 30, 1855; he married 12 mo., 16, 1898, Anna Cheyney, daughter of William Hickman and Philena (Webb) Cheyney, and their children are—Leonore B. and Lillian C. Swayne. 4. Richard M. B., born 11 mo., 11, 1858; he married 10 mo., 11, 1887, Daisy Davis, daughter of Richmond and Caroline (Howell) Davis, and the issue of this marriage was one daughter, Marion, born 2 mo., 26, 1901. 5. Mary B., born 4 mo., 30, 1862. 6. Kate C., born 10 mo., 5, 1865, became the wife of Robert C. Bancroft, son of Joseph and Anna Bancroft, 11 mo., 25, 1886, and their children are: Dorothy M., born 6 mo., 23, 1898; and Ernest B., born 9 mo., 22, 1901. 7. Alice W., born 9 mo., 14, 1868. 8. Ella N., born 3 mo., 29, 1872.

DAVID DETWILER, an active agriculturist of Tredyffrin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, comes from a vigorous German ancestry. His paternal grandfather, Jacob Detwiler, a native of Germany, came in 1765 to near Howellville, where he purchased a large tract of land which is still known as the "Detwiler Property." He was a farmer, a Whig and an abolitionist, and an enthusiastic member and useful trustee of the Mennonite church. He died at the age of eighty-seven years, and his wife, who was Elizabeth Hunsicker, exceeded this longevity, dying in 1862 at the age of ninety years. They had four children, all of whom are deceased: Jacob, Sallie Kolb, Henry, and Mary Wismer.

Henry Detwiler, second son and third child of Jacob Detwiler, was born in 1793, near Howellville, where he resided until his marriage, after which he removed to Yellow Springs, in East Pikeland township, but soon returned to Howellville. He left the latter place a second time (in 1832), and settled in the western part of Tredyffrin township, where he died, August 1, 1873, aged eighty years. He was an extensive farmer, owning and managing three farms in the last named township. He was a Republican, and served as school director, and held several other township offices. He was a member and trustee and sacramental steward of the Mennonite church. He married Catherine Latshaw, who, like her husband, was a sincere Christian. She was born in 1800 and died in 1879, aged seventy-nine years. She was a daughter of Jacob Latshaw, who was born in Germany, and came to East Vincent township, Chester county, where he resided until his death.

The children of Henry and Catherine (Latshaw) Detwiler were: Jacob, a farmer of Pughtown, now deceased; Catherine Heistand, deceased; Isaac, a farmer of Charlestown township; John, who owned two farms in Virginia and two in Chester county; Elizabeth Funk, of East Vincent township; Mary Funk, of Spring City; Henry, deceased; Sarah Jacobs, deceased; Abraham, a retired farmer of East Pikeland township; Anna, deceased; Susan Jacobs, and David.

David Detwiler, son of Henry and Catherine Detwiler, was born in Tredyffren township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, August 22, 1846, and his education was obtained in the public schools of that locality. His boyhood was passed upon his father's farm, and in this manner he became thoroughly familiar with the routine work of a farmer, in which occupation he still continues. He is a leading and useful member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and an energetic and intelligent citizen of Tredyffrin township. From 1872 to 1882 he dealt largely in stock. He now owns two good farms—his home farm of one hundred and twenty-eight acres of land, and an adjoining farm of ninety-six acres. A Republican in politics, he has served his township as supervisor for two years, auditor for six years, and as school director for twenty-three years, being treasurer of the board for ten years. He united in his twentieth year with the Salem Methodist Episcopal church, in which he has been a steward and trustee from the time he became a full member, and is an exhorter, and has been Sunday-school superintendent. He has been active and useful in all the political, civil and religious affairs of his community.

Mr. Detwiler was united in marriage to Miss Anna M. Wersler, daughter of George and Elizabeth (Beaver) Wersler, the ceremony being performed February 22, 1872, and the following named children were born to them: 1. George A., who resides in Phoenixville and owns a marble yard; he married A. Lulu Snyder, a daughter of Joseph Snyder, of East Pikeland township; 2. Elsie Mae, wife of Embury E. Green, and mother of two children; 3. Frank L., who is married to L. Manola Stauffer, and is the father of one child; he resides on one of his father's farms; 4. D. Walter, who died in his twenty-first year, and up to his death resided on the home farm; Elizabeth L., Hattie M., Mary L. and Sarah E. Detwiler, all of whom are at home. All are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

ANTOINE WINTZER, vice-president of the Conard & Jones Rose Company of West Grove, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and recognized throughout the United States as an authority on rose culture and canna breeding, was born in the city of Mulhausen, province of Alsace, Germany, then France, April 1, 1847, a son of Antoine and Anna M. (Werlain) Wintzer.

Antoine Wintzer, grandfather of Antoine Wintzer, was a native and life-long resident of Alsace, where he was engaged in farming interests. He reared a family of four children, among them being Antoine, father of Antoine Wintzer, who was born in Alsace, France, in 1797. He obtained a common school education, and upon attaining young manhood became a market gardener. He served six years in the French army. In 1854 he came to this country, settling first in Westport, Connecticut, and later in Flushing, New York. He was united in marriage to Anna Werlain, who was born in June, 1805, a daughter of Antoine Werlain, who was a merchant tailor of Alsace, and served in the French army at Waterloo. Six children were born of this union, four sons and two daughters.

Antoine Wintzer obtained an excellent common school education in the town of Flushing, New York, and after laying aside his school books he turned his attention to learning the horticultural business. On August 1, 1866, he removed to West Grove, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and was given complete charge of the rose culture with the firm of Dinger & Conard. Owing to the thorough knowledge he had acquired of the art, and his skillful management of the plants, he was enabled to bring the name of the firm world-famous. He organized a new method of propagating roses, and thus re-suscitated a larger field, and in 1874 the firm conceived the idea of mailing roses and plants, and since that time this method has been universally adopted by the leading florists in the transportation of flowers. The firm with which Mr. Wintzer is connected has sent roses through the mails throughout the United States and to other parts of the world. He has developed many new varieties of cannas, and the famous "Mt. Blanc," which enjoys an international reputation, is a child of his hybridizing. Mr. Wintzer is a true lover of his art, and in laboring for the advancement of horticulture his sole ambition is to leave something that will linger after his work here has been completed. In politics Mr. Wintzer is a Democrat, but takes no active part in public affairs. He is a prominent member of the American Florist Society and the American Rose Society.

On September 18, 1872, Mr. Wintzer married Emma Moon, a daughter of John and Jane Moon. Their children are: Louis A., who married Mabel Hobson, and they are the parents of one child, Madaline Wintzer; Antoinette Louise, a missionary in the south, under the auspices of the Presbyterian church of West Grove; Helen J., wife of Cornelius Kelleher; Charles R. unmarried; Norman Leon, unmarried, and Rose M. Wintzer. The family reside in a beautiful and commodious home in the vicinity of West Grove, which is furnished with all the modern conveniences for the comfort and ease of its inmates. Mr. Wintzer and the members of his family are regular attendants at the services of the Presbyterian church at West Grove, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

I. CARY CARVER. The Carver family not only appears in the early colonial annals of Pennsylvania, but it is of great antiquity in England, Ireland and Germany. The name certainly appears as far back as the year 1100, when members of the family bore arms during the Crusade.

An interesting genealogist, Mr. Elias Carver, of Doylestown, Pennsylvania, ascribes to a common ancestor all the numerous families in America bearing the name of Carver, but is unable to trace the Pennsylvania branch farther than to William Carver, in 1682. From him, presumably, descended Captain John Carver, of the Provincial Troops in America, who became famous as an explorer. After the close of the French war, in 1766, Captain Carver traveled westwardly through the unknown forest until he reached the Mississippi river, and he bought from the Indians a tract of land on the east bank of the stream from the Falls of St. Anthony as far as the south end of Lake Pepin, thence eastward five days' travel, and then north six days' travel, accounting each day's travel as twenty miles, and thence to the Falls of St. Anthony in a direct line.

The family records in the possession of I. Cary Carver agree with those of Mr. Elias Carver in identifying their common American ancestor in the person of William Carver, who came to Pennsylvania in 1682. He married Joan Kinsey; their son William married Elizabeth Wansley; their son Joseph married Hannah Worthington, and their son John married Ann.

whose family name is unknown. Isaac, son of John and Ann Carver, married Sarah Martindale. All these names are now common in all sections of the state.

Isaac and Sarah M. Carver were the parents of two children, one a daughter, who died in infancy. The son, George W. Carver, was born October 11, 1810, in Buckingham, Bucks county, Pennsylvania, where he was reared and lived the life of a farmer until 1861. In that year he removed to West Chester, and engaged in a mercantile business in which he continued until 1870, when he retired, and has since made his home with his children. His wife was Mary Ann Cary, a native of the same county as himself, and who died in 1865. Ten children, of whom six survive, were born of this marriage, five sons and five daughters, and of the sons three served in the Union army during the great rebellion.

I. Cary Carver, second child and eldest son of George W. and Mary Ann (Cary) Carver, was born in Buckingham, Bucks county, Pennsylvania. He was educated in the local schools, and was engaged in farming until he enlisted in what was known as Ringgold's Light Battery under the old militia establishment, but which, when mustered into the service of the United States, in September, 1861, took the name of Durell's Independent Battery D, Pennsylvania Volunteer Artillery, with which organization he served during the period of three years, until the expiration of his term of service in September, 1864. After being honorably discharged from the army, Mr. Carver turned his attention to clerical work. He subsequently became a clerk in the National Bank of Chester County and in 1884 he was made cashier of the institution, a position which he has filled to the present time.

Mr. Carver was married, in 1881, to Miss Anna M. Jefferis, daughter of I. Bayard and Lydia T. (Haines) Jefferis, of West Chester, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

HON. WAYNE MACVEAGH, LL. D., lawyer and statesman, known and honored throughout the land, is a native of Chester county, born in Phoenixville, April 19, 1833. He came from an unbroken English lineage, recognizable from the beginning of the sixteenth century.

He began his education in the Pottstown public schools, and when sixteen years of age entered Yale College, from which he was graduated at the age of twenty, tenth in a class of one hundred and eight. While yet a student, he gave evidence of those powers which distinguished his active career—vehement oratory, keen analysis, fiery invective and cutting sarcasm. This was exemplified in a debate before the Linonia Society of Yale College, three months after his entrance to the institution. The question for debate was: Should the United States recognize the independence of Hungary? The Hungarian patriot, Kossuth, was then in this country, and public sentiment was strong and enthusiastic in behalf of him and his cause. For this reason, none of the Linonians seemed disposed to uphold the negative of the proposition. Finally MacVeagh, then a lad of sixteen, was appealed to, and, to the great surprise of all, he accepted, and made a most masterly presentation of an unpopular side of the question.

Mr. MacVeagh studied law in West Chester, where he was admitted to the bar, April 26, 1856. Entering at once upon practice, he came in time to prominence in the courts of the state and in the federal courts as well. In 1859 he was elected district attorney, and served until 1864. In 1862 he recruited a company of cavalry for the Union army, and was commissioned captain, soon being promoted to the rank of major, and assigned to duty on the staff of General Crouch, commanding the district of the Susquehanna, with whom he served at the time of the impending rebel invasion.

His larger political career may be dated from 1864, when he was called to the chairmanship of the Pennsylvania Republican State Central Committee in which capacity he rendered splendid service in the conduct of the gubernatorial and presidential campaigns. In 1870-71 he was United States minister to Constantinople, under appointment by President Grant, and in that position he displayed statesmanlike ability of the first order. In 1880 he joined the Young Men's Reform Club of Philadelphia, and aided in revolutionizing municipal politics. He was a member of the Pennsylvania State Constitutional Convention in 1872-73, and took a prominent part during the deliberations of that body. In 1877 he was placed at the head of the commission sent to Louisiana by President Hayes to reconcile political differences in that state. President Garfield, immediately after his inauguration, called Mr. MacVeagh to his cabinet in the capacity of attorney-general, and he discharged the duties of the position with masterly ability until after the assassination of his chief and the installation of President Arthur, when, with the remainder of the cabinet, he resigned, and resumed his law practice in Philadelphia. In 1892 he supported Mr. Cleveland for the presidency, Mr. MacVeagh was ambassador to Italy from 1893 to 1897. A key to his character, illustrating his ideas of political conduct and fair-dealing, is found in his long identification with the Civil Reform Association of Philadelphia, of which he has been chairman, and with the Indian Rights Association. In 1881 he received from Amherst College the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

Mr. MacVeagh married Miss Virginia Cameron, a daughter of Hon. Simon Cameron.

THE LUKENS IRON AND STEEL COMPANY of Coatesville, under the management of the Huston brothers, Abram F. and Charles L. Huston, is one of the most important manufacturing establishments in Chester county, as well as one of the largest of its kind in the United States. It possesses a most interesting history covering considerably more than a century, and during all of this period the Huston and Lukens families or their ancestors have been its sole owners and managers.

In the public mind, the beginning of the enterprise dates from 1810, when Isaac Pennock, the great-grandfather of the Huston brothers, opened his iron mill at the site of the present mammoth works. Pennock, however, had made his beginning twenty years before this (in 1790), when he built what was called the Federal Slitting Mill, at a place now called Rokeby, on Buck Run, about four miles south of Coatesville. He had been reared a farmer, and his parents strongly opposed him in his venture, but he was determined, and results amply vindicated his judgment and self-knowledge. In 1810 he removed to the banks of the Brandywine, at Coatesville, as before mentioned, where he purchased a sawmill property which he converted into the Brandywine Rolling Mill—the first rolling mill in all America to make boiler plates.

In 1816 Dr. Charles Lukens, a son-in-law of Isaac Pennock, and the maternal grandfather of the present proprietors, came into possession of the plant and conducted the business until his death, in 1825, after which, according to his request, his widow, Mrs. Rebecca W. Lukens, assumed the responsibility. She contended with such difficulties as have brought ruin to many men of ability and industry. It was before the establishment of railroads, and the coal used in the works was wagoned from Columbia, thirty-five miles distant, while the finished product was similarly transported to Philadelphia or Wilmington, distances of thirty-eight and twenty-six miles, respectively. In spite of all seemingly insuperable obstacles, Mrs. Lukens conducted the business with consummate success, maintaining a general oversight over the manufacturing department, conducted by a superintendent, and retaining in her own hands all pertaining to financial and commercial concerns. She handed down the property in highly prosperous condition to her heirs, who, in recognition of her masterly ability in maintaining it, changed the name of the works from Brandywine Mills to Lukens Mills.

After the death of Mrs. Lukens the business was conducted by her sons-in-law, Abram Gibbons and Dr. Charles Huston. In 1855 Mr. Gibbons retired after a brief but honorable and successful career, leaving the business to Dr. Huston, who, with his partner, Charles Penrose, carried on iron manufacturing until the death of the latter named, in 1881. Meantime, Dr. Huston's two sons, Abram F. and Charles L. Huston, had come into the works, in 1872 and 1875, respectively. In 1881 Dr. Huston's health began to decline, and from that time until his death, in 1897, while still at the head of the firm, he committed the conduct of the business in larger degree to his sons, and acted in an advisory rather than in a managerial way. In 1890 the partners formed the incorporated Lukens Iron and Steel Company, of which since the death of Dr. Huston, Abram F. Huston has been the president and Charles L. Huston the vice-president.

In the history of the Lukens Iron and Steel Mills is contained that of the inception and development of iron and steel manufacturing in Pennsylvania and in the United States. In the original small mill on Buck Run, Isaac Pennock made his plates from single blooms which were heated in an open charcoal fire, then rolled out into plates, and afterward slit into rods for general blacksmithing uses, and from this process came the name of the works, the Federal Slitting Mill. the first the shearings were cut into nails, but when, at a later day, the reverberatory furnace came into use, the scraps were worked over. The plate rolls of that time were from sixteen to eighteen inches in diameter and from three to four feet long between the housings, and an overshot water wheel provided the power. It was not uncommon for the mill to come nearly to a stop, and in this event the workmen would climb out upon the rim of the wheel and with their combined weight effect the passage through the rolls, thus preventing a "sticker," and, as a consequence, fire-cracked rolls and broken ones also, later on. As increased power became necessary, the overshot wheel was supplanted by a breastwheel, and a heavy flywheel was added and geared to high speed for power storage. These improvements permitted the use of larger rolls, twenty-one inches in diameter and sixty-six inches long, and this describes the equipment and product of the works so late as 1870. In the meantime, and during the management of Dr. Lukens (1816-1825), steam boilers first came into use; and under him, and with such means, were produced the first boiler plates made in America, an accomplishment so notable as to be well worthy of being commemorated, as it is, in the initial line of the Lukens Iron and Steel Company's "Handbook," a little volume invaluable to all concerned with the trade which it represents. In 1870 a new and entirely modern steam plate mill was erected, and the old mill, which had been so conspicuously useful, was relegated to more humble but fully as necessary uses as a puddling mill. The new mill was a real innovation, and was largely the product of the mechanical skill of Dr. Huston. Its chilled rolls were twenty-five by eighty-four inches, then deemed a large size. As demands upon the capacity of the mills increased, a three-high mill was set up, with solid chilled rolls thirty-four inches in diameter, one hundred and twenty inches long, and weighing eighteen tons each, the largest mill of its kind then erected in the United States. This was equipped with automatic hydraulic lifting tables and other ingenious mechanical appliances, including cooling tables with mechanical transferring apparatus for conducting the plates to the hydraulic and steam shears, with a set of straightening rolls to take the plates just as they come from the mill while still red hot, and transform a wavy and irregular surface into one true and level.

The present plant of the Lukens Iron and Steel Company covers an area of one hundred and sixty-six acres (not including eighty-one acres recently purchased), upon which stand twelve great buildings—a 140-inch plate mill, a 48-inch universal mill, two open hearth steel plants, containing six furnaces each, a 34-inch slabbing mill, a slabbing mill boiler house, a 22-inch puddle mill, an 84-inch plate mill, a 134-inch plate mill, a machine flanging shop, a machine shop and a structural shop. Here also are the gas producers for the east side. The product of the works includes all sorts of boiler and flat structural steel for building purposes, for bridges, ships, etc., and flanged work, much of which is covered by the company's own patents, and all in demand in every part of the United States and wherever American commerce extends. The works are at the basis of the commercial life of Coatesville, employing an army of sixteen hundred operatives.

To the large property of the Lukens Iron and Steel Company was more recently added a beautiful adornment, an office building built of brick in the old colonial style of architecture. The building is practically fireproof, with steel floor girders carrying fifteen inches of concrete, upon which rests the floor proper. Both gas and electricity are used for illuminating, the latter provided by the company's own plant, and the heating is the vapor system regulated by a thermostat system which maintains a uniform temperature. The first floor is occupied by the treasurer and purchasing agent and their assistants, and also contains a telephone exchange whence connection may be had not only with all departments of the works, but with the entire country by the long distance lines. A private wire connects with the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad freight offices. On the second floor are the rooms of the president, vice-president and the general sales agent. The basement contains a department of comfort equal in all respects to that of a first-class hotel. The edifice occupies the center of a handsome lawn, most of which has been raised as much as six feet above the original level. The sides of the walks are sodded, while the remaining portion is set in grass, with shrubbery at intervals. A hedge of California privet surrounds the entire lot, which is entered, front and rear, through massive ornamental iron gates.

With all these modern adornments, are carefully preserved the old homes with which the Huston family has been identified throughout the years of the development of the great industry with which its present members are associated. South of the office building is the old residence which was occupied by Dr. Charles Lukens, in 1816, and where the mother of the Huston brothers of to-day was born. Next north of it is the large homestead of Dr. Charles Huston and his wife, built and occupied shortly after their marriage, where their children were born and from which they were buried. The handsome home of Abram F. Huston is opposite the office building, on the east side of First Avenue, and that of Charles L. Huston is on the west side, next south of the office, and adjoining the homestead.

Dr. Charles Huston, whose name is inseparably connected not only with the Lukens Iron and Steel Mills but with the history of iron manufacturing in Pennsylvania and in the United States, was a man of varied talents and great ability in whatever field he entered. His progressiveness of spirit was inherited from his father, Dr. Robert Mendenhall Huston, who came of a prominent family of Philadelphia and who pursued a conspicuously useful career in that city. Dr. Robert M. Huston was a member of the faculty of Jefferson Medical College, and while eminent in his profession was also a leader in various public enterprises of great moment. He was foremost in the organization of the first gas company in Philadelphia and in the building of the first gas works, and his service in that important accomplishment brought him an unusual expression of appreciation—the gift by his colleagues, on January 30, 1840, of a solid silver service of artistic workmanship, engraved with appropriate designs, gas jets and the like, and bearing the following inscription: "Presented to Robert M. Huston, M. D., by the stockholders, in testimony of their appreciation of his services to them and the public as president of the Board of Trustees of the Philadelphia Gas Works." The pieces of this service were divided among the descendants of Dr. Huston, and some are now in the possession of Mr. Abram F. Huston, of Coatesville.

Charles Huston acquired his education in the University of Pennsylvania, from which he was graduated at the early age of eighteen years. He then entered Jefferson Medical College, where he mastered a three years' course, and was graduated in the year of his attaining his majority. For eighteen months afterward he pursued advanced professional studies in the best medical colleges and hospitals in Europe. After returning home he engaged in practice in Philadelphia, and it was during this period that he married Miss Isabella Lukens, a native of Coatesville, Chester county, to which place they removed in 1848.

In 1849 Mr. Huston, with his brother-in-law, Abram Gibbons, entered upon the management of the Lukens Iron Mill. He speedily developed a remarkable aptitude for all pertaining to the business, and gave himself assiduously not only to the study of all the various mechanical processes pertaining to iron manufacture, but made deep researches into the field of metallurgy. As a result, he came to be actively associated with the iron business for the remainder of his life, nearly half a century, and was recognized as one of the most accomplished ironmasters of his time. To him was due the modernization of the Lukens plant, and his innovations in machinery and methods were imitated throughout the country. He became a leading figure in the councils of the trade, and was habitually made the presiding officer at gatherings of the eastern iron plate manufacturers in Philadelphia, and his views were ever regarded with confidence and approbation. He had much such reputation for an intimate knowledge of the properties of iron, derived from long-continued personal investigation, that when, in 1877, the manufacturers of boiler plate were requested by the United States treasury department to send a committee to Washington to advise with the board of supervising steamboat inspectors in framing a proper standard of tests for boiler plate, he was chosen chairman of the committee, and his recommendations were adopted by the board. In following years his counsel was frequently sought by government officials, and his recommendations were solicited and followed by the leading steam boiler inspection and insurance companies throughout the country, and also by the committees appointed at various times by the city councils of Philadelphia in establishing their standard of test requirements for high-grade boiler plates. In 1878-79 he published in "The Journal of the Franklin Institute" a series of articles upon the behavior of iron and steel under varying conditions of heat and stress, and years later these attracted the notice of engineers in Europe, whom he had anticipated in their investigations. In 1895 Dr. Huston was chosen by Hon. Chauncey M. Depew as the man best fitted by ability and experience to write the article on the "Iron and Steel Industry," in his able and comprehensive history, "One Hundred Years of American Commerce." Two years later (in 1897) occurred the death of Dr. Huston, else, it is reasonable to presume, his pen would have afforded much more of valuable matter pertaining to a science which he loved with an ardor that is not to be measured by any commercial standard. After the partial failure of his health in 1881, he spent a portion of his time in the south and in California, and the direct management of the Lukens Works was committed to his sons. Aside from his manufacturing interests, Dr. Huston took a leading part in the promotion of community interests. He was president of the Coatesville Gas Company, which he aided in organizing, in 1871, and he aided in various other public enterprises.

Mrs. Isabella P. Huston, wife of Dr. Huston, was a daughter of Dr. Charles and Rebecca W. (Pennock) Lukens. Her mother was a daughter of Isaac Pennock, the pioneer iron manufacturer who has been previously mentioned in this narrative, and her father was Mr. Pennock's successor in the business. Mrs. Huston was a woman of benevolent disposition, and a helpful worker in educational and kindred lines. To her was due the founding of the Coatesville Public Library, for which she provided a building and many of the books out of her personal means. She was a member of the first board of directors, and her husband was for some years president of that body. Dr. and Mrs. Huston were the parents of seven children. The mother of this family died in 1889, and her husband survived her for eight years.

Abram F. Huston, elder of the two sons of Dr. Charles and Isabella (Lukens) Huston, was born in Coatesville, July 7, 1852. He was reared in his native town, attended Jonathan Taylor's Academy, pursued advanced studies under a private tutor, and entered Haverford College, from which he was graduated with the class of '72, at the age of twenty years. He then entered the Lukens Company Works, beginning in the lowest of the mechanical department, and working his way upward until he had gained a familiar practical knowledge of every department. In 1882 he took charge of the business, and later, after the Lukens Iron and Steel Company was incorporated, upon the death of Dr. Huston, he was called to the presidency, a position which he has occupied to the present time. He inherited his father's tastes and abilities in a marked degree, and has come to an equal prominence among the ironmasters of the state. In 1902 he was elected to the presidency of the Association of American Steel Manufacturers and to the chairmanship of its executive committee. When Mr. Schwab attempted his unsuccessful movement for a combination of the eastern plate mills, it was stated on good authority, and repeated editorially by "The Iron Age," that the project could be made to succeed were such a man as Abram F. Huston placed at the head of the undertaking.

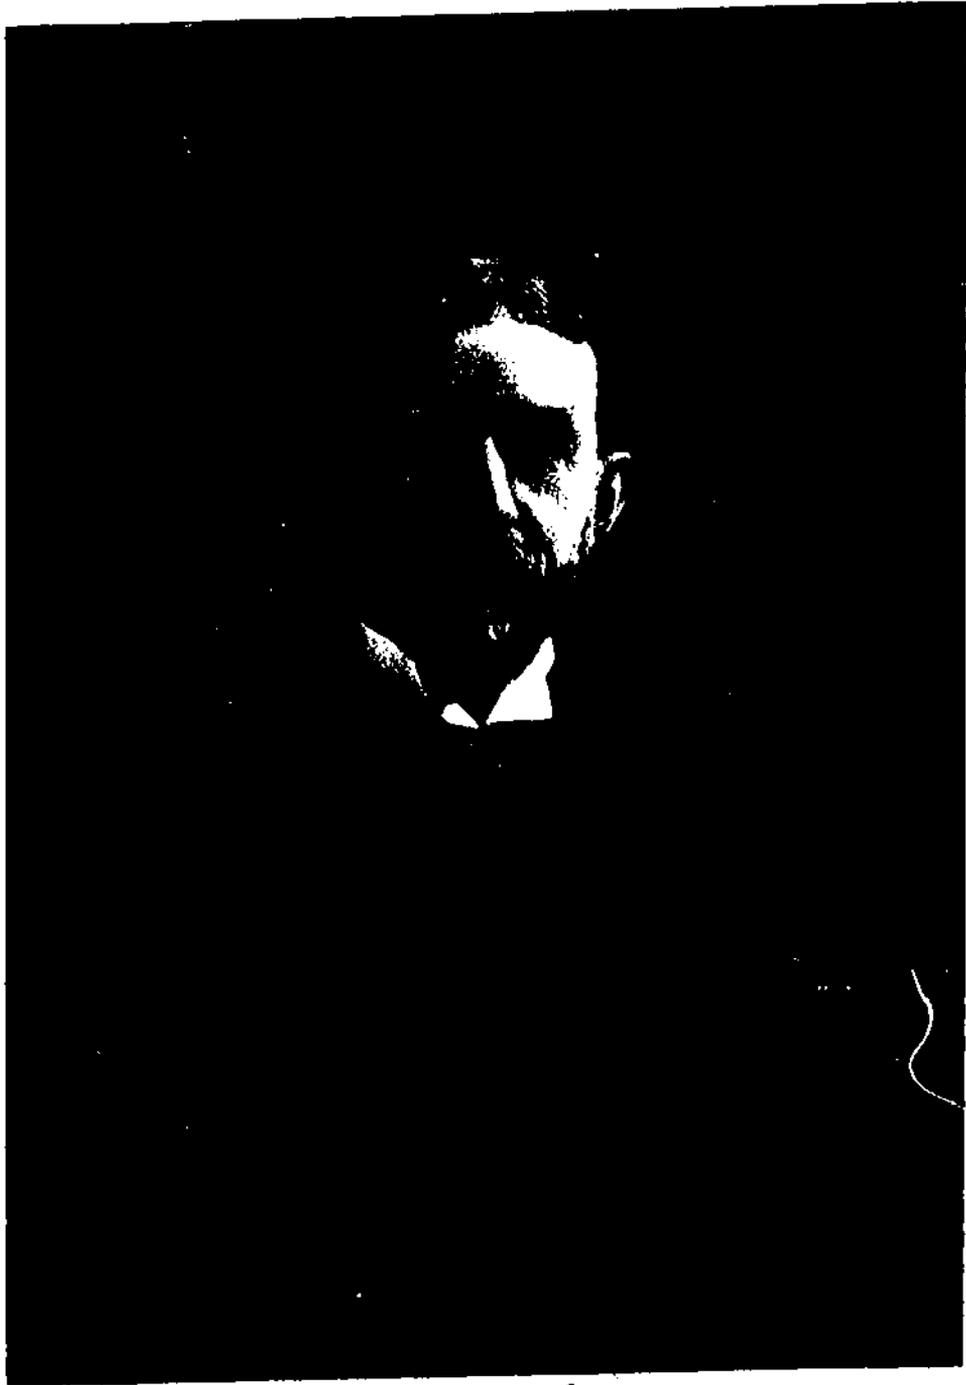

Mr. Huston was married, January 7, 1889, to Miss Alice Calley, daughter of M. H. and Elizabeth B. Calley, her father being a native and resident of Delaware. Mr. and Mrs. Huston are the parents of three children: Isabel, Alice R. and Marjorie Huston.

Charles L. Huston, the younger of the two sons of Dr. Charles and Isabella (Lukens) Huston, was born in Coatesville July 8, 1856. He began his education under private tutors, entered Haverford College, from which he was graduated in 1875, then took a short course in a Philadelphia business college, and at once entered the Lukens Company's works, and labored in turn in every department, becoming proficient in all the operations of each. With his brother he divided the duties of conducting the operations of the company at the time of his father's retirement in 1881, and he became vice-president upon the death of Dr. Huston in 1897. He is well known as a mechanical engineer, and takes care of the practical part of the business, while his brother is principally concerned with its financial and general business conduct. In addition to his duties in connection with the Lukens Iron and Steel Company, Mr. Charles L. Huston has also been connected with the Belmont Iron Works in Philadelphia from its organization.

Mr. Huston is a man of marked public spirit, and known for his many broad charities. For some years he maintained at his own individual expense a private hospital for the benefit of the sick and injured people of the borough, and when it was succeeded by a new large hospital organized as a public institution, he was made president of the board of directors, which position he occupies at the present time. He has for years taken an active interest in the Young Men's Christian Association, not only in his home town, but throughout the state. For eight years he has been a member of its state executive committee, and in 1902 he was elected to the presidency of the state association, a position which he now occupies. He aided primarily in the organization of the Young Men's Christian Association in Coatesville in 1891, and he has been its president from that time to the present. He has ever been one of its most liberal supporters, and the erection of its beautiful building, costing $30,000, was due in great part to his personal effort and contributions. His wife, who was Miss Annie Stewart, a daughter of Major James T. Stewart, of Savannah, Georgia, is equally interested with himself in charitable and benevolent work. They are the parents of two children: J. Stewart and Ruth.

FRIENDS' BOARDING SCHOOL, WEST-TOWN. This educational institution was founded by the body of Friends of Pennsylvania and New Jersey known collectively as Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, the desired object being the instruction of the youthful members in the practical branches of learning, and at the same time to inculcate the doctrines and testimonies peculiar to this society; or, to use a favorite expression, to give them a guarded religious education. Various persons had realized the desirability of such an establishment for several years, but it was in 1794 that the Yearly Meeting took hold of the subject and appointed a committee to carry out the concern. After viewing sites in other counties, they fixed on the present location, and purchased the farm of nearly six hundred acres from James Gibbons, in which family it had continued from the first settlement. The deed was executed on the 1st of 4th month, 1795, and the price was £10 per acre. Most of the land was heavily wooded, and as buildings in that day were erected by the use of native materials, a saw mill was built on the farm, and bricks were burned in the year last mentioned. In 1796 a building 100 by 56 feet, and three stories high was roofed in, but it was not till 5 mo., 6, 1799, that a school was opened therein with twenty pupils of each sex. By midwinter there were one hundred of each, and another hundred applications waiting. The boys occupied the east end and the girls the west. In 1812-13 the boys' wing was extended thirty-five feet, and in 1833 a similar addition was made to the girls' wing. In 1846 the building was raised another story, and nurseries erected about this time. Bath rooms for the girls were annexed in 1850, and for the boys about 1856. A laundry was added about 1852, and in 1868 a separate building was erected for class rooms for the boys, in which year the main structure was only saved from destruction by fire through strenuous efforts.

In order to introduce more modern improvements, it was decided to erect a new building of much greater length, and work thereon was begun in 1885, on what is now the boys' wing and central building. These were ready for use by 1st month, 1887, and, by crowding, accommodated the entire school until the completion, early in 1888, of the girls' wing, occupying nearly the site of the old building. A new laundry and plant for heating and lighting the new structure were involved in this regeneration, and the total cost was about $321,000, all covered by subscriptions made for the purpose. Since then, minor improvements have been made, including a natatorium and a cold storage plant.

A grist mill was among the early structures for the use of the school and neighborhood. Houses for the married teachers and other employees have been erected at different times, including one for the farmer in 1850.

For thirty-seven years the school was in continuous session, without regular vacations. Scholars entered at any time, but not for less than a year, and left the institution at the convenience of parents or guardians. In 1836, spring and fall vacations were introduced, nearly coterminous with the fourth and tenth months. In 1890 the long summer vacation was substituted, and the school year divided into three terms with vacation of ten days near the middle of the 12th month, and another of two weeks at the time of Yearly Meeting in the 4th month; but in 1903 the first of these was shifted to cover the popular holidays of Christmas and New Year.

Wood was the fuel until about 1838, when coal was substituted. Tallow candles furnished light, incomprehensible as it may seem to people of this age, for many years, after which oil lamps had a brief sway, and in 1854 gave way to gas made from Carolina rosin. The new building is lighted by electricity and warmed by steam from the boiler house.

In the earlier periods, great care was taken to keep the sexes from social intercourse, and the boys and girls could scarcely see each other except in the religious meetings, though brothers and sisters might meet for an hour each week in the visitors' parlor, and first cousins less frequently. In 1881 all were brought together in the dining room, and this was followed by a gradual intermingling in recitations until in 1889, a complete system of coeducation was in operation, and is considered a great advance.

This institution being the property of the Yearly Meeting, is controlled by a committee of about sixty men and women, and these are divided into sub-committees having charge of special departments. To carry out the directions of this committee there have been superintendents and matrons residing at the school, whose duties have been onerous. In 1896 the superintendent was relieved of a part of his burden by the appointment of William F. Wickersham as principal, who has the direct control of the educational work, and this has proved to be a marked benefit. The following have filled the positions of superintendent and matron to the present time: Richard and Catharine Hartshorne, 1799; Joshua and Ann Sharpless, 1800-1811; Joseph and Hannah Whittall, 1811-1818; Philip and Rachel Price, 1818-1830; Pennock and Sarah Passmore, 1830-1836; Nathan Sharpless and sister Martha Jefferis, 1836-1843; Pennock and Sarah Passmore, 1843-1848; Joseph and Hannah E. Snowdon, 1848-1858; David and Rachel H. Roberts, 1858-1861; Dubre and Jane W. Knight, 1861-1868; Charles J. and Martha D. Allen, 1868-9; Aaron and Susanna F. Sharpless, 1869-1874; Benjamin W. and Rebecca G. Passmore, 1874-1881; Jonathan G. and Susanna R. Williams, 1881-1891; Zebedee and Anna P. Haines, 1891-1896; Edward G. and Elizabeth S. Smedley, 1896 to the present time.

Among the many teachers who have conscientiously labored for the good of the school, we may mention John Forsythe, Enoch Lewis, John Bullock, Sarah Farquhar, John Gummere, Sibilla Embree, Pennock Passmore, Benjamin Hollowell, Davice Reece, Howard Yarnall, Sarah Baily, Hugh D. Vail, Joseph G. Harlan, Martha Barton, Margaret Lightfoot, Samuel Alsop, Sen. and Jun., who have passed away, and David J. Scott, Isaac Sharpless, C. Canby Balderston and Albert Votaw, who are not now connected with the institution. Davice Reece was also the boys' governor for about twenty-eight years, and Sarah Baily's teaching covered a period of thirty-five years. Several of those above named were authors of educational works.

The present force of teachers is composed of Watson W. Dewees, history and literature; Thomas K. Brown, mathematics and political economy; Ann Sharpless, normal department;

Miriam Elfreth, German and French; Mary Ward, English; Egbert S. Cary, physics and manual training; Sarah B. Dewees, governess; J. Wetherill Hutton, astronomy and bookkeeping; Alfred S. Haines, English, botany and forestry; Elizabeth Yarnall, freehand drawing; Luella L. Walker, "West Hall" and reading; Anna M. Moore, English; W. Henry Elfreth, history and writing; E. Vivian Floyd, chemistry and geology; Hannah S. Pennell, Latin and French; Emily C. Smedley, physical training and physiology; Alice B. Paige, Latin and etymology; Agnes W. Neave, primary work.

The school has perhaps never been self-sustaining, nor expected to be, as the object has been to furnish the opportunity to secure a sound education at the lowest possible cost to the pupils, and the deficits have been met by voluntary contributions or from the income of legacies devised for such uses. The importance of the institution to the Society of Friends has been far beyond the mere literary advantages enjoyed, in the inculcation of principles of right thinking and right living.

The roll of students at present numbers eighty-five boys and ninety girls, the attendance not being up to the average of former years, owing doubtless to the fact that in some of the Friends centers, as in Philadelphia, Germantown and Moorestown, there are excellent day schools. In 1899 the centennial of the boarding school was celebrated by a grand reunion of the old scholars; and through the organization of the "Westtown Old Scholars' Association," with a system of biennial reunions on the spot, there is promise of increased interest in their alma mater.

GEORGE B. PASSMORE, deceased, for many years a well and favorably known citizen of the borough of Oxford, Chester county, Pennsylvania, having long been prominently identified with its business interests, traces his lineage to Andrew Moore Passmore, a native of Ireland, who in 1723 emigrated to this country and settled in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where for some time he was engaged at milling. Subsequently he removed to East Nottingham township, Chester county, where he pursued the quiet but useful calling of agriculture. He married and reared a large family of children, and among his descendants in the state of Pennsylvania are many of the leading and representative citizens.

Andrew Moore Passmore was born 12 mo., 12, 1800. He was married, November 15, 1820, to Judith Wilson, daughter of Samuel and Phoebe (Brown) Wilson, residents of Nottingham township, Chester county, where Mr. Wilson owned and operated a fine farm. Nine children were the issue of this union: 1. Phoebe P., born August 20, 1821, died January 4, 1903; she was the wife of E. Mortimer Bye, and mother of five children. 2. Samuel, born June 18, 1824, died in 1902; he married Emeline Stubbs, and they were the parents of ten children. 3. Ruth M., born April 2, 1827, unmarried. 4. Josiah K., born May 20, 1831, died March 25, 1832. 5. George B., born April 3, 1833, mentioned hereinafter. 6. Lydia E., born April 16, 1836, unmarried. 7. Mary E., born February 19, 1839, became the wife of Samuel L. Martindale, and two children were born to them. 8. Hannah A., born October 3, 1844, died June 30, 1880; she was the wife of Seneca Broomell, and mother of five children. 9. Ellis A., born January 17, 1847, died April 5, 1848. Andrew M. Passmore, father of these children, died January 5, 1874, and the death of his widow occurred February 14, 1885. They were both interred in the Friends' burying ground at Brick Meeting House, Cecil county, Maryland.

George B. Passmore, third son of Andrew M. and Judith (Wilson) Passmore, was born at what is known as Fulton House, Little Britain township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, April 3, 1833. He obtained his education in the common schools of the neighborhood, and at Delaware College, Newark, Newcastle county, Delaware, graduating from the latter named institution at the head of his class. His tastes and inclinations led him to adopt teaching as a vocation, and he served in that capacity for several years in his native township, later removing to Rising Sun, Maryland, where he successfully conducted the Friends' School for a long period of time. He was thoroughly qualified, both by the educational advantages he had received and by his genial and jovial disposition, to fill this position as he also possessed the faculty of imparting knowledge to his pupils without it becoming irksome and burdensome to them. Subsequently Mr. Passmore removed to Oxford, Chester county, where he engaged in the coal business, having extensive yards. In addition to this enterprise, he was part owner and served in the capacity of secretary and treasurer of the Susquehanna Fertilizer Company of Baltimore, Maryland.

Mr. Passmore was united in marriage, April 17, 1862, to Elizabeth Broomell, daughter of John and Esther (Moore) Hambleton Broomell, the former named a prosperous farmer of Upper Oxford township, Chester county. The following named children were the issue of this union: 1. John Andrew, born August 6, 1863, died August 20, 1863; 2. Hanson P., born January 22, 1866, married, May 25, 1893, Frances Branson, and they are the parents of two children—Andrew Moore, born May 19, 1896, and Horace Branson, born March 31, 1899; 3. Louella, born October 8, 1867, became the wife of J. Carroll Hayes on September 25, 1894, and four children have been the issue of this union—William Waldo, born September 25, 1895, George Passmore, born August 21, 1897, Ellen Russell, born November 6, 1900, and Margaret, born January 11, 1903; 4. Ellen, born May 12, 1870, became the wife of Fred B. Pyle on October 6, 1892, and their family consists of two children—Frederick Lawrence, born September 3, 1894, and Elizabeth, born April 6, 1896; 5. An infant daughter born January 2, 1873, died January 10, 1873; 6. Andrew, born September 13, 1874, died March 11, 1883; 7. George B., Jr., born September 16, 1878, married Abbie E. Palmer; 8. Norman Sumner, born November 4, 1882, unmarried. Mr. Passmore died September 7, 1890, and his demise was sincerely mourned by a wide circle of personal and business friends, also acquaintances. Throughout his long and useful career his name was regarded as a synonym for honesty and straightforwardness in all his affairs. His widow resides in a handsome and commodious residence in Oxford, Pennsylvania and is noted for her Christian character. She is public-spirited, and manifests a deep interest in all those things which tend toward the uplifting and betterment of humanity everywhere. She is a member of the board of managers of Swarthmore College, in which capacity she has served for twenty years. She was one of the managers of the "Chester County Children's Aid Society" for a period of fifteen years; and with her husband, and since his demise, has been an earnest worker in the temperance cause for the prohibition of the liquor traffic. For a number of years she has been a working member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and is now, and has been for seven consecutive years the president of the board of managers of the Oxford Public Library.

LINCOLN UNIVERSITY, in Chester county, Pennsylvania, near Lincoln University Station, on the Philadelphia and Baltimore Central Railroad, owes its founding to the zealous labors of the Rev. John M. Dickey, D. D., a devout Christian minister and large-hearted philanthropist.

He came from a Scotch-Irish ancestry of great physical vigor and strong traits of character. His great-grandfather, Samuel Dickey, came to America in an early day and settled in West Nottingham township, Chester county, where his namesake son built the first cotton factory west of the Schuylkill. Samuel (2) became the father of the Rev. Ebenezer Dickey, a Presbyterian clergyman of more than ordinary ability. Among the children of him last named were three sons who lived lives of great usefulness—John M. and Samuel, in the Christian ministry, and Ebenezer in the medical profession.

John Miller Dickey was born December 16, 1806, at Oxford, Chester county. He received his literary education at Dickinson College, and his theological training at Princeton (New Jersey) Theological Seminary, from which he graduated in course. He was licensed to preach in 1828, and his ministerial life extended over a full half century, terminating with his death in 1878, in his seventy-second year. His name is more particularly borne in remembrance for his services in the educational field, and in behalf of a down-trodden race.

In 1849 Dr. Dickey was serving usefully and acceptably in the pastorate of the Presbyterian church at Oxford. He was in his forty-third year, an age when most men are inclined to take life quietly, and avoid, rather than seek, new and untried ventures. But now he entered upon a new field which was to claim his attention during the remainder of his life. He was present at a meeting of the Presbytery of New London, called for the ordination of the Rev. James L. Mackey, the pioneer missionary of the Presbyterians to Corsico, on the west coast of Africa, and he conceived the idea of creating an institution for the training of colored missionaries for the evangelization of the Dark Continent whence their ancestors came. His mind and heart were well prepared for the work which he was to essay. He was, to begin with, deeply interested in all pertaining to education, having been as early as 1835, the principal agent in the founding of the Oxford Female Seminary. But weightier considerations now pressed upon him. A man of naturally large benevolence and broad sympathy, his interest in the colored race was intensified by hereditary influences. His mother, a woman of remarkable strength of character, was spoken of as "the friend of all, but especially of those in need; the colored people around her shared largely in her sympathies and kind instruction." His father had been one of the most active managers of the Chester County Colonization Society from its foundation in 1827, and he himself was further strengthened in his dawning purposes through his own intimate association with Elliot Cresson, a generous ally and benefactor of the society before named, and whose sister he married. To add to all these influences were the strong impressions he received during home missionary service in south Georgia and Florida.

Dr. Dickey's first but unavailing effort was to induce Mr. Mackey to abandon his purpose to go to Africa. He urged that it would be almost suicidal for a whiteman to undertake to live in that region, and that Mackey would do a better service by remaining at home and opening a school for the training of colored men, whose bodily constitution better fitted them for such missionary work as he had in view. Here the matter rested for some years, during which time occurred the notorious Parker case, that of two free colored girls who had been kidnapped from their home near Oxford and taken to Baltimore, where one was sold and sent to New Orleans. Dr. Dickey became the leader in the twelve months' contest for their recovery, a service attended with such great bodily danger that, when leaving home in connection with the case and the subsequent trial, he bade farewell to his family, uncertain that he would live to return.

In 1852 opportunity came to Dr. Dickey to advance the purpose which he had never ceased to cherish. James R. Amos, a young colored minister of the Methodist church, desirous of extending his education, solicited Dr. Dickey to obtain for him an entrance to an academy. With much difficulty Dr. Dickey gained for his protege admission to the school connected with the Presbyterian Synod of Philadelphia, but the faculty was soon obliged to relegate the colored student to the position of janitor, on account of the prejudices of his white classmates, who, learning shortly afterward that he was continuing his studies privately, protested in a body and his dismissal became imperative. Dr. Dickey then sought to secure his admission to Princeton Seminary, but the entrance examination proved as effectual a barrier as race prejudice was in the former instance. Unable to enter a school, for some time the young man once a week visited Dr. Dickey's study, each time walking a distance of twenty-eight miles. Meantime Dr. Dickey corresponded with almost every school in the United States that was understood to hold at all liberal views toward the colored race, but without success, and he finally determined upon the creation of an institution for the education of colored youth only. His first mention of his project was before a colonization meeting held in Oxford church. It was given form before the Presbyterian Assembly of 1853 in a memorial from the Presbytery of New Castle, and the Assembly resolved to "cordially approve and recommend the establishment of a high school for the use and benefit of the free colored population of the country." October 8 following, the Presbytery of New Castle adopted resolutions providing for the establishment of such an institution as had been proposed, and these embodied the desires and conclusions of Dr. Dickey, reciting the inability of the colored people to secure educated ministers and teachers, the difficulties experienced by colored youth in obtaining a liberal education, and the great need for missionary work in Africa, for which an educated colored ministry would be eminently adapted. In April following (1854) a charter was procured from the legislature for Ashmun Institute, named for Jehudi Ashmun, who was agent for the Liberia Colonization Society from 1822 until his death in 1828, a man of deep piety and self-sacrificing spirit. By the terms of the organic act, Ashmun Institute was to be "an institution of learning for the scientific, classical and theological education of colored youth of the male sex."

Meantime Dr. Dickey had given himself unsparingly to the arduous work of providing means for the projected institute. He first endeavored to obtain a site in or near Oxford, but encountered strenuous resistance, the people fearing a reduction of value of contiguous property. He then selected a farm tract near Hinsonville, about four miles from Oxford, which he bought upon his own responsibility. For three years after the granting of the Institute charter, Dr. Dickey was busied in obtaining money for the purchase of the land and the erection of buildings. He delivered innumerable addresses, and made urgent personal appeals to people of heart and means, traveling often and far in prosecution of his work, and facing indifference, prejudice and opposition almost everywhere. He was put to such straits that he mortgaged his private property to provide for the erection of the first buildings. He finally overcame what appeared to be insuperable difficulties, and on the last day in the year 1856 he had the satisfaction of seeing Ashmun Hall opened and dedicated. This was while the slave power was yet dominant in the United States; while the fugitive slave law was in force; before Abraham Lincoln had become a national figure, and seven years before that immortal man had penned the Proclamation of Emancipation. But faith was strong in Dr. Dickey, and upon a marble slab in the front wall of Ashmun Institute were inscribed the words of hope and promise: "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." Upon this dedicatory occasion an eloquent address, "God Glorified in Africa," was delivered by the Rev. C. Van Rensselaer, D. D., secretary of the Presbyterian board of education, who had been a warm friend of the enterprise. Next day, January 1, 1857, the first short session was opened under the charge of the Rev. J. P. Carter, A. M., of Baltimore, who was the principal and the sole teacher. There were but four students at the opening, and among them was James R. Amos, whose name is already familiar in this narrative. He had labored in the erection of the building, and was the first steward of the institution. He was the first graduate, in 1858; in the same year he was licensed by the Presbytery of New Castle, and in 1859 he sailed for Liberia, where he labored faithfully for five years as a missionary and a pioneer in extending mission work. In 1864, while on a visit to the United States, he came to an untimely death from consumption.

The story of Ashmun Institute during the years which intervened before the close of the Civil war is a record of difficulties and struggles. But, finally, as prophesied in the memorial slab in the original building, the night was gone and the day had dawned. With the restoration of peace, in 1865, came new friends and more bountiful gifts. In the following year, out of reverence for the Martyred Emancipator, the grandest figure of his age, Ashmun Institute became Lincoln University by charter amendment.

The property of Lincoln University comprises a tract of one hundred and thirty-two acres of land, upon which stands a handsome group of buildings. University Hall, for recitation purposes, is an entirely modern building and contains valuable apparatus for instruction in various departments of natural science. Livingstone Hall, for commencement assemblages, with a seating capacity of one thousand, was the gift of Miss Susan Gorgas, of West Chester. The Vail Memorial Library, a beautiful structure, was provided through the munificence of William H. Vail of Newark, New Jersey. The Harriet Watson Jones Hospital was built by J. M. C. Dickey, of Oxford. There are four dormitories: Houston Hall, for the theological students, the gift of H. H. Houston, of Philadelphia; Cresson Hall, the gift of the Freedman's Bureau, through the instrumentality of General O. O. Howard; and Ashmun Hall and Lincoln Hall, both built with undesignated funds. Several friends have more recently built a lavatory with gymnasium features. There are nine residences for professors. The University is open to students of all religious denominations, the only requisite for admission being evidence of fair moral character. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States commends the school, and holds a veto power in the election of professors in the Theological department.

The number of students now enrolled is two hundred and forty-one. In all more than one thousand young men have been under training in the University; four hundred in the full college curriculum, and six hundred in a preparatory and partial course. Two hundred of these have been fitted for the ministry by an additional three years' course of instruction in theology, and entered the ministry of the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Congregational and Episcopal churches. Other collegiates entered the legal and medical professions, and a large number became teachers.

The faculty is (1904) as follows: Rev. Isaac N. Rendall, D. D., Mary Warder Dickey, President; Rev. John B. Rendall, D. D., H. Cassidy, Professor of Classical and Ecclesiastical Latin; J. Craig Miller, M. D., William A. Holliday, Professor of Natural Science; Rev. Robert Laird Stewart, D. D., Professor of Pastoral Theology, Evidences of Christianity, and Biblical Antiquities, and Dean of the Faculty; Walter L. Wright, Jr., A. M., Reuben J. Flick, Professor of Mathematics; Rev. William Deas Kerswill, D. D., Henry A. Kerr, Professor of Hebrew, and librarian; Rev. George B. Carr, D. D., William E. Dodge, Professor of Sacred Rhetoric; Rev. William H. Johnson, Ph. D., Professor of Greek; Rev. John M. Galbreath, A. M., Mrs. Susan D. Brown, Professor of Instruction in the English Version of the Bible; Rev. George Johnson, A. M., John C. Baldwin, Professor of Systematic Theology; Rev. David A. McWilliams, B. Sc., Professor of History and Political Economy.

EBENEZER V. DICKEY, M. D., was born on December 15, 1821, and died on July 31, 1858. He was the youngest son of the Rev. Ebenezer Dickey, D. D., of Oxford, Chester county, and a brother of the Rev. John M. Dickey, D. D., and the Rev. Samuel Dickey.

Like his father and his brothers he was eminent both in character and in the service of his generation. Though early deprived of a father's care, he was favored by the excellent training of a remarkable mother. After a course of education at Hopewell and New London Academies, he became a student at Lafayette College in 1840, but passed before graduation to the University of Pennsylvania, where he was graduated in medicine in 1844. Beginning practice in his native district, he attained a high position in his profession. He was associated with his brothers in their many years' gratuitous labors for the maintenance of the Oxford Female Seminary, where he gave instruction in chemistry and physiology. Municipal affairs also shared his extra professional activities. From the first year of his settlement in Oxford, when he was appointed clerk of election and assistant burgess, up till the time of his death, he was seldom allowed to be free from similar citizen duties; and there was scarcely a borough office which he did not at some time fill. In 1847 he served as chief burgess.

But Dr. Dickey's most notable public exertions were in connection with the building of the Baltimore Central Railroad, and the establishment of Oxford's first bank. Among the foremost in the railroad enterprise, he addressed the meeting at Unionville, at which the subscription for stock was opened; and a month later at the meeting of stockholders in November, 1853, he was elected to the board of directors, on which he served during three years of the undertaking's harassing and hindering financial difficulties. In January, 1857, he was elected president of the board, but his last illness was upon him, and in five months he felt compelled to send in the resignation of his office.

The previous year he was chosen representative to the state legislature, where he was successful in obtaining the charter of the Octoraro Bank at Oxford, of which he was appointed the first president. In every movement for the benefit of the borough of Oxford and the neighborhood he took a practical interest, characteristic of his family. His part in two exciting incidents of the year 1852, in which his brother John was prominent, is well remembered—an extinction and exposure of some local alleged spiritualistic manifestations, and the notorious Parker kidnapping at Nottingham. In the latter case, his two post mortem examinations, in which he was conjoined with another Oxford physician, gave decisive evidence of the murder by poisoning of the master of one of the abducted girls.

The sun of this bright and beneficent life went down while to human eyes it seemed yet noon. A severe cold by which Dr. Dickey was attacked in the winter of 1856, issued in rheumatism that affected the heart. In 1857 a visit was made to Europe, in the hope of benefit from the voyage and a change of climate. But the hope proved vain. The end came on July 31, after much occasional suffering, latterly even to "intense agony," which was borne with devout uncomplaining resignation and unwavering faith in Christ Jesus and the home-rest beyond.

The public spirit of Dr. Dickey was adorned by his wisdom and decision of judgment, his strict integrity, his earnestness of purpose and energy of fulfillment, his cheerfulness, his sympathy, his consideration for others, and his unvarying kindness, by which qualities he won the respect, confidence and good will of all who knew him, exercised a wide influence for good in every relation, and left a corresponding blank at his lamented and comparatively early death. Just before his departure he recalled the time, twenty-seven years gone, when his father, on his death-bed, placed his hand on his head, and said, "God bless you, my son, and make you a good boy!" He went on to tell how from that hour—he was scarcely nine years of age—it had been his own prayer that the farewell benediction might be confirmed by his father's God. And that the desire of father and son was granted could not be questioned. At fifteen he joined the church of which his father and brother in succession had so long been pastors. And the reality of his profession was manifested not only in his ministry of spiritual counsel and consolation to his patients, but also and especially in his steadfastness and consistency among the peculiar influences and temptations inseparable from his public positions and his unavoidable intercourse with all sorts and conditions of men.

Dr. Dickey was married, in 1845, to Frances G. Ralston, daughter of Samuel Ralston, of Brandywine Manor, and sister of the Rev. Dr. James Grier Ralston, at one time president of the Oxford Female Seminary, and later of the Oakland Female Institute, Norristown, Pennsylvania. Four children, with his widow, survived him, his elder son, S. Ralston Dickey being the second successor of his father in the presidency of the bank, now the National Bank of Oxford.

REV. SAMUEL DICKEY was the second son of Rev. Ebenezer Dickey, D. D., and was born at Oxford, Pennsylvania, on April 17, 1818. With the exception of his college and seminary years he spent all his life in his native place, and at the time of his death was justly spoken of as the most influential citizen of the lower part of Chester county.

He was graduated from Lafayette College in 1837, having had the advantage of residing while there with his uncle, Dr. George Junkin, the public-spirited and energetic founder and president of the college. Thence he proceeded to Princeton Seminary, where he took a post graduate as well as the usual course. In 1841 he was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of New Castle, and after a full trial of his gifts he was unanimously called to be pastor of Union church, Colerain, Lancaster county, about seven miles from Oxford. Here he labored for nine years, refusing a unanimous call to succeed Dr. Martin at Chanceford, York county. Mr. Dickey's pulpit gifts and accomplishments were of a high order, his proclamation of the truth being full, clear and impressive. He was, moreover, a faithful and tender pastor. Precious memories of his ministry survive among the people of his charge, which, however, he was sorrowfully compelled to resign in 1853. He had long struggled against ill-health, affecting particularly his throat, which had been delicate from student days, and had in vain sought recovery by a visit to Europe.

For several years previous to his retirement from the stated work of the ministry, Mr. Dickey had been associated with his brothers John and Ebenezer in conducting their disinterested and widely useful enterprise, the Oxford Female Seminary, to which, like them, he gave gratuitous service. His subjects of instruction were Latin, Greek, Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy and Botany. The two last were favorite studies, his knowledge of and delight in plant life finding expression also in the grounds and greenhouses attached to his home. Living in the Seminary for a considerable time before his marriage, he won the esteem and affection of his pupils as a friend as well as a teacher.

In 1858 Mr Dickey found a congenial and fitting regular life work as president of the Oc-toraro Bank, afterwards the Oxford National Bank, succeeding his brother, Dr. Ebenezer Dickey. This office he held for nearly a quarter of a century, during which time the directors, as they said in their memorial minute, had "the benefit of his wise counsel, untiring energy and great personal influence, whereby this bank has been safely guided through severe pecuniary crises and firmly established in the confidence of the business community." Along with his brothers, Mr. Dickey had a prominent share in the long and trying but at length successful work of bringing the railway to Oxford, and at the time of his death he was a director of the Baltimore Central line. He was the superintendent and treasurer, too, of the Peach Bottom Railroad, of which he was the projector, and on behalf of which he addressed meetings in the districts through which it passes. In 1847 he was president of the Oxford town council, in which he served at different periods for nine years. But, in addition to these official positions, Mr. Dickey's hand was in all things for the common good; he was never behind in any effort for the moral, educational and commercial advantages of his native town and neighborhood. He took a special interest in the cause of temperance. He was not ashamed to wear the regalia of the Sons of Temperance, and with his brother John, purchased the Oxford Hotel, which though at a loss, was conducted for a time as a temperance house. An ardent Republican, he was active in political affairs, and was a strong supporter of the North during the Civil war. While of one mind with his elder brother, and co-operating with him in most, if not all, of his multifarious plans for the public good, he was especially helpful to the crowning undertaking of Dr. Dickey's life. For many years he was a trustee of Lincoln University and a member of the executive committee, and at the time of his death had been treasurer of the board for eighteen years, giving to the institution, besides his many contributions, much valuable time, wise counsel and gratuitous labor. We cannot doubt that it would have been a source of much gratification to him that the Greek chair in College and Seminary should be occupied for a time by his eldest son, who bears his own and the family name of Samuel Dickey.

After the resignation of his ministerial charge Mr. Dickey preached only occasionally. His chief service to the church was now rendered in connection with the ancestral congregation at Oxford, to whose funds he was a liberal contributor. For a long period he was president of the board of trustees, and in conjunction with his relative, Mr. J. R. Ramsey, the treasurer, took the management of the finances, and was also largely instrumental in the erection of the substantial and commodious new church building, which, with its landmark steeple, is the most conspicuous edifice in the little borough. Given to hospitality, his home was a place of resort for ministers, to the younger of whom he was generous in friendship, encouragement and assistance.

Mr. Dickey was gifted with a keenly discerning, sagacious and vigorous mind, joined with an uncommon power of mental concentration and strenuous habits of work. To his unsurpassed business qualities there was added, as years went on, an extensive knowledge of men and business affairs, which was frequently drawn upon by consultation. But the moral features of his character were not less manifest. He was a man of piety, which was revealed not only by his earnestness while exercising his peculiar and noted power in public prayer, but by his "good report of all men" as to his rare unswerving truthfulness and integrity. But he was the "good" as well as the "righteous" man—of utterly unselfish public spirit, of unostentatious benevolence, contributing conscientiously and freely to every worthy cause, and of genial spirit and manners. A valued helpful relative and a constant friend, he was ready to challenge, without respect of persons, anything dishonorable or mean, but equally ready to make acknowledgment if convinced of error. All these features unite to explain his great personal influence.

Mr. Dickey received a sudden call to rest from his labors. On January 14, 1884, he was returning from the annual meeting of the Baltimore Central Railroad Company in Philadelphia, when near Tenth street, in a street car he was seized with sickness, which was found after death to proceed from heart disease. He was borne into a store near the site of his grandfather Miller's once familiar residence—the first to be erected in Philadelphia with a marble front—and there passed away in a few minutes without speaking. A large company gathered from far and near to his burial, who could say "Amen" to the strong testimony borne by competent witnesses, that this man of business had never in all his transactions compromised his religious profession or given room to doubt the purity of his motives in his public and private service of his fellows. He was the last survivor of three brothers who each gave a similar lifelong service to their generation, enhanced by a similar unquestioned high personal character.

Mr. Dickey was twice married—first to Eugenie, daughter of Henry Cazier, of Newcastle county, Delaware, who died in 1862, leaving two daughters, Mrs. Sarah E. Hopkins, of Cecil county, Maryland, and Mrs. Mary I. Price, of Scranton, Pennsylvania, and one son, Henry, who died at the age of nine; and in 1868, to Jennie, daughter of ex-Senator Captain John B. Rutherford, of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, by whom he had three sons, Guy Rutherford, who died in infancy, Professor Samuel Dickey, of McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, and Irvine R. Dickey, attorney at law, Parkersburg, West Virginia.

JOHN MILLER CRESSON DICKEY, a life-long resident of the borough of Oxford, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a representative of a family of Scotch-Irish extraction whose connection with Chester county dates back to the early part of the seventeenth century, when the new American republic was passing through the first stages of existence. Among the children born to Samuel Dickey, the progenitor of the family in America, a native of the north of Ireland, was Samuel Dickey, who in 1759 married Mary Jackson, a descendant from English Puritans, who bore him four sons—John, Samuel, Ebenezer, and David Dickey.

Rev. Ebenezer Dickey (grandfather) was born in the vicinity of Oxford, Chester county, Pennsylvania, March 12, 1772. He was a student at the University of Pennsylvania during the provostship of Dr. John Ewing, and graduated with high honors from that noted institution in the year 1792. Two years later he was licensed as a minister of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian church, and in 1796 became pastor of the Associate Reformed congregations of Oxford and Octoraro. His connection with the latter named church was continued until 1800, and with the former until his death. His sermons were eloquent and masterful, he was free from sectarian bigotry, his advice was frequently sought and seldom disregarded, and his views were far in advance of the general opinions and feelings of his day. The degree of doctor of divinity was conferred upon him by the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, in 1823. The Rev. Ebenezer Dickey and his wife, Jane (Miller) Dickey, eldest daughter of John Miller of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, were the parents of six children. His death occurred May 31, 1831, in the sixtieth year of his age.

Rev. John Miller Dickey (father) was born at Oxford, Chester county, Pennsylvania, December 16, 1806, and he died March 21, 1878. He began the study of the classics in the academy connected with his father's church in Oxford, then under the preceptorship of Mr. Kirkpatrick, who subsequently went to Milton, Pennsylvania, accompanied by his pupil, who there completed his preparation for college. He then entered Dickinson College, Carlisle, from which he was graduated in 1824, and then became a student at Princeton Theological Seminary under Drs.

Hodge Alexander and Miller, from whence he was licensed to preach in 1828, being then in the twenty-second year of his age. The custom of the church in those days required him to spend two years in missionary labor, and he was sent to visit the northern tier of the counties in Pennsylvania, then possessing few Presbyterian churches, and then spent one year in Georgia. In 1830 he was ordained pastor of a church in New Castle, Delaware, but the following year, on the death of his father, he received a unanimous call to the Oxford Presbyterian church. He maintained at one time in different parts of his congregation more than twelve Sunday schools, regular preaching in Oxford and West Nottingham churches, and at other points, and also established Zion church as a separate congregation. He organized and established the Oxford Female Seminary, a training-school for women, wherein moral science and the Bible formed part of the course. He was also the founder of Lincoln University, the first Negro college in the world, which was located about four miles from Oxford, at what is now called Lincoln University Station, this being the spot where a young colored man, afterward a missionary in Africa, and whom Dr. Dickey had partially educated in his own study, used to pray that a way might be opened up for the education of his race. In 1854, owing to impaired health, he removed to Philadelphia, where he continued to reside during the winter season of the ensuing three or four years.

Dr. Dickey was united in marriage, in 1834, to Sarah Emlen Cresson of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, born July 1, 1806, and died February 3, 1878, a sister of Elliott Cresson, and a descendant of a prominent French ancestry, and for forty years they shared the joys and sorrows of life together. They were the parents of the following named children—Mary Warder, born July 31, 1837, died February 17, 1853; Ebenezer, born June 19, 1839, died December 7, 1884; John M. C., born January 6, 1842, mentioned at length hereinafter; and Clement Cresson, born August 12, 1844, who graduated from Princeton College, became a minister of the Gospel, and for a number of years preached the word of God at Haddington, Philadelphia. His health became so seriously impaired that he was forced to relinquish his pastorate and remove to Colorado Springs, where he married and spent the remaining years of his life; he died March 7, 1893. The Rev. Dr. Dickey died March 21, 1878, having survived his wife only six weeks; she passed away February 3, 1878.

John M. C. Dickey was born in Oxford, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in the same house in which he now resides, January 6, 1842. He acquired an excellent education at Hopewell Acadony, graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1864, entered the law office of Samuel H. Perkins, where he received a thorough legal training, and was admitted to practice as an attorney in the district court and in the court of common pleas for the city and county of Philadelphia, under Judge Sharswood, in February, 1865. In partnership with Joseph Turner he established a law office at 625 Walnut street, Philadelphia, but after a short period of time, at the earnest request of his father who required his assistance and counsel in his labors, he dissolved his business connection with Mr. Turner and returned to his home in the borough of Oxford. In 1870 he again resumed his chosen profession of law, was admitted to practice in Chester county, with Judge Butler on the bench, his principal reason for this being exemption from jury duty.

Mr. Dickey was elected a member of the Law Academy of Philadelphia, March 2, 1864, and was elected a member of the Union League of Philadelphia, February 15, 1869. He is also a member of the Harvard Club. In 1864 he rendered patriotic and valuable service in the cause of the Union, at James river, Bermuda Hundred and City Point. He served as burgess of Oxford for two consecutive terms, to the entire satisfaction of his fellow citizens.

During the latter years of his father's life Mr. Dickey rendered him valuable assistance in the work of Lincoln University, and shortly after the death of his father he became a trustee of this institution, in which capacity he is serving at the present time (1903), and frequently he has donated liberally to the support of the same. Since his fourteenth year he has held membership in the Oxford Presbyterian church, of which he has been elder for many years, and of which his father and grandfather were pastor. He has to a large extent continued an important part of their work—that of visiting in the surrounding country the sick, afflicted and those in trouble and distress—and for over thirty years has been a faithful teacher in the Sunday school, having a class in the male department. He has also been a leading factor in various private and public enterprises which have had for their object the welfare and advancement of his community, county and state.

Mr. Dickey was united in marriage, in May, 1872, to Anna Rendall, a daughter of the Rev. John Rendall, a missionary in Madura, India, and one daughter was born of this union, Jane Rendall Dickey. Mrs. Dickey died in 1875. April 7, 1887 Mr. Dickey chose for his second wife Annie Fleming Arnot, a daughter of the Rev. Dr. William and Jane Nicol (Fleming) Arnot, of Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. Dickey have two adopted children—Robert Graham and Edith Scott Dickey.

JAMES L. AND EDWARD A. PENNOCK. The Pennock family of Chester county, Pennsylvania, represented in the present generation by James L. and Edward A. Pennock, enterprising and prosperous business men of London Grove township, trace their ancestry to Christopher Pennock, who, prior to the year 1675, was united in marriage to Mary Collett, of Clonmell, county of Tipperary, Ireland. After residing for a number of years in the vicinity of her home and in Cornwall, England, they set sail for America and about the year 1685 landed in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where his death occurred in 1701. He was an officer in the service of King William of Orange, and participated in the battle of Boyne in 1690.

Abraham Pennock (great-grandfather) was reared in Chester county, Pennsylvania, acquired a practical education in its common schools and upon attaining man's estate devoted his attention exclusively to the vocation of agriculture which proved a most profitable means of livelihood. He married and reared a family of children, among whom was a son, James Pennock.

James Pennock (grandfather), was born in West Marlborough township, Chester county, received his educational advantages in the common and private schools of the neighborhood, and his active career was spent in the cultivation of a farm whereon he resided up to the time of his decease. He held membership in the Society of Friends, and from the time he was allowed his first vote he gave his allegiance to the Republican party. James Pennock and his wife, Amy (Thomas) Pennock, a native of West Marlborough township, were the parents of the following named children: Evan T., who married for his first wife Margaret Hayes, and for his second wife Rebecca R. Waters Hoopes; Abraham, who married Sarah Passmore and their family consisted of three children; Levis B., mentioned at length hereinafter; and Jane T., wife of Benjamin W. Swayne.

Levis B. Pennock (father) was born on the old homestead in West Marlborough township, Chester county, in 1830. He attended the common schools in the vicinity and thus received an education which qualified him for an active and useful career. Throughout his entire life he resided on his farm in West Marlborough township, conducted his operations on an extensive scale, and became a prosperous and influential citizen of the community. Mr. Pennock was united in marriage to Ann Hadley, daughter of John Hadley, of Kennett township, Chester county, and by this union there were four children born—James L.; Samuel J., mention of whom will be made in the following paragraphs; Jane T., who became the wife of Arthur Yeatman; and Anna, who became the wife of Samuel Wilson. Levis B. Pennock, father of these children, died in 1900; he was survived by his wife, Ann (Hadley) Pennock, who is living at the present time (1903).

James L. Pennock, eldest son of Levis B. and Ann (Hadley) Pennock, is a native of West Marlborough township, Chester county, the year of his birth being 1861. He pursued his studies at the common schools in the neighborhood of his home, at the schools of Kennett Square, and at Swarthmore College, and after leaving took a business course at Poughkeepsie, New York, Business College, graduating therefrom. He returned to the home farm and engaged in agricultural pursuits, and continued at this occupation until 1885, during that period achieving a large degree of success; he then located at Chatham, London Grove township, where he entered into partnership with his cousin, Edward A. Pennock, in the management of a coal, lumber and feed business. They are practical business men, conduct their transactions in a prompt and honorable manner that meets the approval of their numerous patrons, and during the years that have intervened since their establishment in business have gained a large and lucrative trade which is constantly increasing in volume and importance. Mr. Pennock is a member of the Society of Friends, and his political affiliations are with the Republican party. He is unmarried.

Samuel J. Pennock, second child of Levis B. and Ann (Hadley) Pennock, was educated in the common schools and finished at Concordville, in Shortlidge's Academy. He then took up farming, and is to-day conducting the home place in West Marlborough township. He also deals considerably in live stock, and is one of the active young men of his township in public affairs. He married Elizabeth Lippincott, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and they are the parents of three children.

Edward A. Pennock, only living son of Abraham and Sarah P. Pennock, was born on the ancestral estate in West Marlborough township, Chester county, in 1862. He obtained his preliminary education at the public schools of his native township, and this was supplemented by a regular course of instruction at Swarthmore College, from which institution he was graduated in 1883 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He is now engaged in business with his cousin, James L. Pennock, and is one of the representative and influential citizens of Chatham, London Grove township, Chester county. Mr. Pennock married Mrs. Sarah Smith, of Boston, Massachusetts, and the issue of this union was a daughter, Margaret Pennock, who resides at home with her parents.

DR. JESSE GREEN LOLLER, son of Dr. Bennett Pierce and Sarah Ann (Green) Loller, was born in East Marlborough, Chester county, Pennsylvania, August 21, 1854, where he is now engaged in the active and successful practice of veterinary surgery. He is a grandson of Ennor and Hannah Loller, the former named having been born May 7, 1791, and they were the parents of the following named children: Rachel, who became the wife of William Shivery; Minerva, born May 28, 1817, who became the wife of Allen Talley; Frank; Elizabeth, who became the wife of Daniel Mercer; Ann C., born August 18, 1819, who became the wife of William Cloud, and died February 21, 1897; Dr. Bennett Pierce; and Chalkley Loller, all now (1904) deceased.

Dr. Bennett Pierce Loller, father of Dr. Jesse G. Loller, was born June 15, 1827. He acquired a liberal education in the schools of Chester county, and for many years was one of the prominent and successful veterinary practitioners of southern Chester county. He was united in marriage to Sarah Ann Green, who was born December 12, 1827, and among the children born to them were the following named: 1. Charles S., born February 21, 1852, who married Alice Gilmore, now deceased, and their children are: M. Theresa, Mabel B., Bennett P., deceased; Alice and T. Clemson Loller. 2. Jesse Green, born August 21, 1854. 3. Josephine, born June 22, 1856, became the wife of Amos Warfel, and their children are: Sarah, Maud, Elsie and William D. Warfel. 4. Rev. William H. S., born November 19, 1858; he was a student in the public schools, the Pennington and Drew Seminaries, then entered the Wilmington Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church. Owing to the sanitary conditions of the town, he requested to be transferred, and is now one of the most popular ministers in the New York Central Conference, stationed at Troy, Bradford county, Pennsylvania. He married M. Lydia Mendenhall, only sister of the late wife of Dr. Loller, a graduate of the West Chester State Normal School, and for nine years previous to her marriage one of the most successful teachers in the county, and they are the parents of the following named children: Rachel Anna, born November 25, 1895; Mary L., born February 3, 1900; and S. Florence, born April 5, 1902. 5. Lucretia Mott, born December 26, 1861, died August 19, 1877. Dr. Bennett P. Loller, father of these children, died May 9, 1882, and his wife, Sarah Ann (Green) Loller, died February 19, 1891.

Dr. Jesse G. Loller was a student in the local schools of East Marlborough, and, being of a studious disposition and temperament, soon became the possessor of a liberal education which qualified him for the active duties of life. After laying aside his school books he devoted his entire attention to learning the profession of a veterinarian, and is now considered the most efficient practitioner in that line in southern Chester county, Pennsylvania, and the adjacent state of Delaware.

Dr. Loller was united in marriage to Rachel Anna Mendenhall, a daughter of William L. and Mary E. (Nethery) Mendenhall, and one child was the issue of this union, Maurice Bennett, born October 12, 1888. Mrs. Loller was born July 28, 1865, on the old Mendenhall homestead, "Clear Spring Vale." Her preliminary education was acquired in the local schools of her birthplace, and this was supplemented by a thorough course of study at Martin Academy, Kennett Square, after which she was a successful teacher in adjacent townships until her marriage in March, 1885. Her death occurred January 24, 1892.

Moses Mendenhall and his wife Ann (Taggart) Mendenhall purchased the Mendenhall homestead, now the residence of Dr. Loller, his son, and Mary E. Mendenhall, from Mr. Johnson in 1805, and it has been in the possession of the family in direct line since that time. Moses Mendenhall and his wife, the latter named having been a daughter of William and Elizabeth Taggart, born at Taggart's cross-roads, now known as Willowdale, February 28, 1784, were the parents of two sons, namely: William, unmarried who died from bilious dysentery in August, 1825, and Jacob Taggart, who married Lydia Miller, and her death occurred in 1829, less than a year after their marriage; she was survived by an infant son, William L., aged two weeks. Jacob T. Mendenhall lost his life by drowning in the historic Pierce's Park Lake in August, 1839. William L. Mendenhall, father of Mrs. Loller, and the only child of Jacob Taggart and Lydia (Miller) Mendenhall, was born at the Mendenhall homestead on April 17, 1829. He acquired his education largely under the tutorship of Isaac Martin, teacher of a select school in Marlboro, and Thomas Conrady, teacher of a school in West Grove. Possessing an unusually talented mind, he quickly became master of his work, wrote for various publications, taught school in the adjacent townships, and served as justice of the peace in his native township. He married, November 3, 1864, Mary E. Nethery, and from that date to the present time (1904) she has been a resident of the old home. William L. Mendenhall died May 4, 1867, aged thirty-eight years, and his demise occurred not twenty feet from his birthplace. Mary E. (Nethery) Mendenhall was the eldest daughter of Harrison and Sarah A. (McCoy) Nethery, the former named having been born in London Britain township in 1813, the third son of Walter and Mary (Wiley) Nethery, and nephew of Bernard H. Wiley, of Kennett Square, Pennsylvania, manufacturer of the celebrated Wiley plows, well known among olden time farmers, and an occasional one is still doing service; the latter named was the eldest child of James and Hannah (Steele) McCoy, and she was born in Maryland, just over the Pennsylvania line, in 1820. Harrison and Sarah A. (McCoy) Nethery were the parents of the following named children: Mary E., mentioned above as the wife of William L. Mendenhall; Hannah J., who died in 1849; Susan Cloud, for many years a successful teacher in Chester county and the city of Wilmington, Delaware, later became the wife of William Maloney, and died in 1886; Caleb Wiley; Eber Sharp; and Sallie Wiley, who became the wife of Elmer E. McPadden, and her death occurred January 4, 1893.

The old Mendenhall homestead remains to the present day the same in external appearance as of olden time, but some slight changes have been made on account of the ravages of time. The old porch, which did service until it became unsafe, was supplemented by a new one in 1900. The exposed logs of which the east end of the house is built are exposed as of old, and according to the sayings of those now passed away, are the same in appearance as when it came into the possession of the Mendenhalls in 1805. The west end is built of stone taken from a bank on the premises, and this part of the house, barn and spring house were built in 1815, but the exact date of the log part is not known other than it was an old house in the year 1805. Few people now living remember the old blacksmith shop, which was in its day the center of attraction in its line of work. "Clear Spring," near the house, is known far and near and it has often quenched the thirst of man and beast during the heated term. There is still standing, and with fair prospects for years to come, an aged apple tree which was planted by Moses Mendenhall for his son, William, not later than 1809. At the same time he also planted a tree for his son, Jacob Taggart, but it succumbed to a strong northeasterly gale a few years ago, although its lease on life was vigorous, and it promised many fruitful years. Moses Mendenhall, the original purchaser, was a consistent member of the Marlborough Friends' Meeting, and was seldom absent from its mid-week and first-day gatherings.

HENRY LONGFELLOW BRINTON was born August 5, 1836, at the Brinton homestead in Birmingham township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, of the seventh generation of Brintons in America. His father was Joseph Brinton, born 1786, died 1868, a son of William and Deborah Darlington Brinton of Birmingham, members of the Society of Friends, owning and farming a large tract of land near Brandywine creek.

The original settler of the Brinton family was William Brinton, who emigrated with his family from Birmingham, England, in the spring of 1684, following William Penn, the proprietary, of whose religious tenets he was an adherent. He was a man of sterling integrity, peaceful disposition and indomitable perseverance. He purchased land and established a home in the unbroken wilderness, among the Indians, with whom he associated on terms of friendly intercourse. After a winter of hardship and privation, in 1685-6 he purchased additional land, increasing his holding to one thousand acres, extending three miles westward to the Brandywine. A portion of the stone dwelling erected in after years by his son William is now embraced in the handsome residence of Henry Faucett, near Dilworthtown, the eastern end of the tract. The progenitors of the line of Brintons to which the subject of this sketch belongs, including the pioneer, were: William, born in England, 1630, married Ann Bagley of England, 1659; William, born England, 1666, married Jean Thatcher, 1690, in Pennsylvania; Edward, born 1704, married Hannah Peirce; George, born 1730, married Esther Matlack; William, born 1756, married Deborah Darlington; Joseph, born 1786.

Joseph Brinton was twice married, his first wife being Jane Crosley, of Delaware. Of their six children none are living: they were Lavinia, Charlotte, Malinda, Edmund, Franklin and Deborah. His second wife was Susan Hackett, daughter of Andrew and Mary Braden Hackett, who emigrated from the northern section of Ireland to America in 1798. The resulting family consisted of eight sons and two daughters—Emmor, T. Elwood, William S., Henry L., Alfred, David R. P., Anna Mary, Levis, Elizabeth H. and Joseph. He was the father of the largest family of children of any of the line, all of whom except two grew to maturity, the last of the first family, Malinda Pierce, dying January, 1904, at the age of eighty-six years. In 1844 he sold one hundred acres of his fine farm in Birmingham to Clement Biddle, of Philadelphia, who was a minister of the Society of Friends at Birmingham Meeting for many years. This was the original home of the Darlington family in America. Here his mother, Deborah Darlington, daughter of John Darlington, was born and resided at the time of the battle of Brandywine, in 1777. It was purchased for Joseph by his father, William Brinton, who erected near the site of the old Darlington house, in 1818, a large stone mansion with a fine outlook towards the Brandywine creek and the western hills beyond. It still remains in a good state of preservation. Here Henry L.

was born in 1836, and in his early years, among the beautiful surrounding meadows, hills and forests, imbibed his ardent love of nature.

Henry L. Brinton was a farmer boy and received his early education at Birmingham public school. When nearly seventeen years old he entered the "Village Record" office in West Chester, and served four years apprenticeship at the printing trade, and was afterwards connected with the "American Republican" newspaper, West Chester. In the spring of 1861 he removed with his family to Oxford, Chester county, and established the first printing office in that fast developing town. In 1866, February 14, he founded "The Oxford Press," and in 1892 admitted his sons Douglas E. and William G. to partnership in the business. The office and paper gained an extensive patronage, the "Press" having the largest circulation of any paper in the county, with one exception, and but few weeklies of the state exceeding it.

He married Sarah F. Fisher, daughter of James and Sarah Freeman Fisher, of Uwehlan township, Chester county, who died at Oxford in 1890. The children of this union were two sons and one daughter—Douglas Emerson born August 27, 1859; married Hettie B. Hickman, of Oxford. Children: Bradford H., Madeleine (died in infancy), Sarah G., Elizabeth L., Anna M. and Henry L., Jr. William Gunkle Brinton, born May 24, 1865, married Mary Elder, of Lewistown, Pennsylvania—Children: George E., Robert Henry and Esther. Anna Brinton, born February 23, 1873; married Thomas F. Grier, of Oxford—Children: Evelyn Brinton. His second marriage, to Elizabeth Haines-Lincoln, daughter of Nathan and Lydia P. Haines, born in Lancaster county in 1840, took place November 19, 1895.

Henry L. Brinton served in the emergency periods of the Civil war, with his brother Ellwood, and his brothers Alfred, David and Levis were veterans during most of the time of the great struggle for the preservation of the Union. His father was a volunteer in the war of 1812, encamped at Marcus Hook for three months. He was a school director in Oxford for fifteen years and held other local offices. Himself and children are members of the Presbyterian church, and in politics is an independent Republican.

HON. JOHN B. HINKSON, prominent in the professional and political affairs of Delaware county, Pennsylvania, came from a family of remote German origin, though living in Ireland and intermixed with old Irish stock for several generations previous to being planted in America. Tradition states that three brothers of the name left Hanover, in northern Germany, early in the seventeenth century, and settled in county Cavan, in the north of Ireland, from whence came John Hinkson and Jane his wife, with one son, about the year 1765, and settled in Upper Providence township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. From him all the Hinksons of the United States are descended. In addition to the son Thomas, whom they brought with them, and who afterward married Mary Worritlow, three sons and four daughters were born to John and Jane Hinkson: John, married Abigail Engle; George, married Catharine Fairlamb; James, married Elizabeth Crossley; Jane, married Thomas D. Weaver; Mary, died unmarried; Sarah, married William Hawkins; and Nancy, married Joseph Dickerson. Their descendants are now scattered through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Maryland and some other states.

The children of John and Abigail (Engle) Hinkson (married in 1784) were: 1. Jane, who married Ambrose Smedley; 2. Frederic, who died in infancy; 3. Ann, who married David Baker; 4. John, grandfather of the subject of this sketch; 5. Abigail, who died in early childhood; 6. Mary, who married Abraham Hanor; 7. Joseph Engle, who married Ann Black; 8. Orpha, who married Jacob Evans; 9. Frederic James, who became a prominent financier of this county; 10. Edward Engle, who married Sarah Slawter.

The second son, Hon. John Hinkson, was born and reared in Delaware county, where for a time he followed agricultural pursuits and became prominent and prosperous. He was a Democrat in politics, and served as steward of the Delaware county infirmary, and later as sheriff of the county. He was also elected to the assembly and served with distinction for one term, and occupied also the positions of prothonotary, clerk of the court, recorder of deeds and register of wills in this county for a number of years, filling all these offices with marked ability. He died in 1844, in the fifty-fourth year of his age. He was twice married, first to Jemima Worrall, and after her death to Orpha Neide.

His oldest son was Joseph H. Hinkson, who was born in the county of Delaware in 1817, and passed all his life there, dying in the city of Chester in 1864, at the early age of forty-seven years. He was first a farmer and then a successful lumber and coal dealer. Politically he was a Democrat, and served as treasurer of Delaware county. In religion he was a Presbyterian. In 1840 he married Lydia Ann, daughter of Edward and Mary Edwards. His wife was a native of the county, of Welsh descent, her family being among the oldest in Delaware county. To them was born a family of children, five sons and two daughters, viz.: John B., the subject of this sketch, Edward E., Mary E., Lizzie E. (wife of John R. Sweney, musical director), Samuel E., Perciphor B. and Joseph H.

John Baker Hinkson, oldest son of Joseph H. and Lydia Ann (Edwards) Hinkson, was born October 2, 1840, in Chester, Pennsylvania. He was educated in the schools and in an academy in his native town, and at Lafayette College, from which he was graduated in 1860 with honors. He read law under the preceptorship of Hon. John M. Broomall, and was admitted to the bar in August, 1863. He was a busy and successful practitioner during a long career, guarding large interests of a numerous and wealthy clientele. He was always ardent in the maintenance of Democratic principles, and ever exerted a potent influence in the councils of his party, which he frequently represented in local and state conventions. While on the stump, in many momentous campaigns, he was a favorite and capable exponent of the policies which claimed his support. He served on occasions as a member of the city council, and in 1893 a splendid tribute was paid to his ability and integrity by his election to the mayoralty, in which contest he received a substantial majority in face of a large adverse party majority. In the discharge of the duties which he assumed, he rendered such valuable service to the community as to obtain the warm commendation and gratitude of all classes, and his administration has gone on record as unparalleled in point of usefulness, economy and devotion to public interests.

Mr. Hinkson was married on May 16, 1864, to Kate W. Caldwell, the youngest daughter of John A. and Sarah Jane (Warrington) Caldwell, of the city of Chester. Of their union was born a family of five children, four sons and a daughter: Joseph H., an attorney at law of Chester; John Caldwell, who is also an attorney at law and second vice-president of the Delaware Trust, Safe Deposit and Title Insurance Company, of Chester; Alfred H., who died when about eighteen years of age; Ridgely Graham, a superintendent of mining operations in Colorado; and Mary Edwards. Mr. Hinkson was a member of the Third Presbyterian church of Chester, in which he served as elder and trustee for many years. He died May 22, 1901.

THE FERRON FAMILY. James Ferron and wife Penelope landed at Newcastle, Delaware, from Ireland, November 1, 1791. Their family consisted of two sons: John, born in 1771, and James, born in 1778. John was a sailor, married in Ireland, and settled in Londonderry township, buying a tract of about twenty-five acres. He had no children. His wife, Mary, died in 1844, and he died in 1854.

James Ferron bought a farm of about the same size, and adjoining that of his brother John. He married Susanna Early, who died in 1823, in her forty-fifth year, leaving a family of seven children. James Ferron died in 1856, at the home of his son Henry, to whom the original home property was sold.

1. Mary, the eldest daughter, born November 16, 1804, died November 20, 1842. She married William McLea, and left three sons—William, Lewis and John.

2. James, born November 16, 1806, died November 30, 1842.

3. John, born February 2, 1809, married Jemima Maguire. They had five sons and one daughter. All of the sons are well known carpenters in Chester county.

4. Henry was born June 17, 1811, and died December 24, 1885. He was a farmer by occupation, and a man of excellent character. He married Margaret Jane Magee, daughter of Patrick Magee, a veteran of the war of 1812. To them were born three sons and six daughters, five of whom adopted teaching as a profession, and were without exception successful in their work. James F., the eldest son, died in infancy; Mary Theresa, deceased, is further written of in this sketch; Susanna E., was married to F. H. Webster, and lives near Jennersville, Chester county; they have three sons and one daughter—Henry, Margaret, Joseph and Leon; Ann Agatha died in infancy; John C. Ferron married Laura Magee, and they reside in West Chester, and have three children—Gertrude, Paul and Eugene; Mr. Ferron was county commissioner from 1900 to 1903. Margaret J., fourth daughter, assisted her sister Mary T. in teaching, and conducted the school for three years following the death of the latter. She now resides in Parkesburg, Pennsylvania. Henry A. Ferron married Anna L. Bouggy, of Philadelphia, and resides in that city; he has one son, Clyde H. Agnes E. Ferron, while engaged in teaching in Christiana, Lancaster county, was instantly killed there, while crossing the railroad. Frances Eugenie, the youngest child of Henry Ferron, Sr., married F. L. Campbell of Coatesville, and resides there.

The other children of James and Susanna Ferron were—6. Lewis, who married Mary Farra, and left two children, Ellen and Lewis. 7. Susanna. 8. Eleanor, who died in early life.

IN MEMORIAM.

In memory of Mary Teresa Ferron, daughter of Henry and Margaret Ferron, died June 21, 1900.

Mary Teresa Ferron died June 21, 1900. The dread summons, "Be ye therefore ready," came to her not at an unlooked-for hour, but after months of intense suffering, every day of which admonished her that the end of her life was drawing to a close, and all through the long hours of anguish she evinced the highest fortitude and submission to the will of God—longing to live, but not afraid to die.

Her death brought sorrow not to her family and friends only, but the noble profession to which she consecrated her life, in which she lived and was a striking ornament grieved at her departure. And well it might, for few, indeed, contributed more to the work of education than she.

When but sixteen years of age she began teaching in the public schools of Chester county, in which she continued until 1875, when she established at her home the school known as "Fernwood Academy," an institution which she conducted for twenty-five years, sending out yearly a body of well prepared teachers, as well as many others who have attained to various honorable positions in other professions.

"The evil men do lives after them; the good is oft interred with their bones"—so spoke the Bard of Avon. But he uttered only half a truth; for the beautiful, the good, the true, live also. Kind deeds are imperishable; kind thoughts are eternal; kind hearts are immortal, and the good in the life of a noble teacher spans the horizon of a greater world than ours, and the good in her life still lives to lift and bless us with its hallowed memories.

Her heart was the abode of all those noble virtues that characterized her life. It has been truly said that greatness springs from the head and goodness from the heart; she combined the faculties of the heart and the head. Her even temperament, broad culture, solid learning and wisdom were greatly admired by all, and carved her name in an imperishable niche among the educators of her native state; but it was the virtues of her heart that most endeared her to her pupils and associates. From it went forth on wings of love the unselfishness of her life, the purity of her character, the sincerity of her purpose and the serenity of her soul. Though dead, her life lingers, her influence broadens, her memory remains. The seeds that she scattered are growing, the flowers she planted are blooming and will blossom in the lives of her associates and rise as holy incense, perpetuating her name and her memory, while her life—all that she was, and all that she did—mutely points with significant finger to the sublime promise of the Eternal God, "Be ye faithful unto death, and I will give you a crown of life."

LEROY C. PASSMORE, for almost a quarter of a century prominently and actively identified with the commercial interests of West Nottingham township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, being a successful coal, lumber and grain merchant, traces his ancestry to John Passmore, a native of the parish of Husk, Berkshire, England, who accompanied by his wife, Mary (Buxcey) Passmore, daughter of Humphrey Buxcey, settled in Kennett, now Pennsbury, as early as 1714, afterwards removing to West Marlborough, where his death occurred about the year 1746. The children of John and Mary Passmore, so far as known, were William, John, Eleanor, Augustine, George, Mary and Samuel Passmore.

George Passmore, son of John and Mary Passmore, was born February 23, 1719; married, September 10, 1742, Margaret Strode, daughter of John and Magdalen Strode, of West Marlborough, and their children were: John, George, Margaret, Mary, Thomas, Elizabeth, Margery and Ann Passmore.

John Passmore, eldest son of George and Margaret Passmore, was born July 2, 1743; married, April 24, 1765, Phebe Pusey, daughter of Joshua and Mary Pusey, of London Grove, Chester county, and the following named children were the issue of this union—Mary, Margaret, Susanna, Ellis, Margery, Hannah, Mary, Lydia, Phebe, Sarah, George and Elizabeth Passmore.

Ellis Passmore, eldest son of John and Phebe Passmore, was born near Doe Run, Chester county, Pennsylvania, March 1, 1771. He was reared, educated and grew to manhood in this neighborhood. He married Ruth Moore, daughter of Andrew Moore, and the issue of this union was eight children—Phebe, Ruth, Ellis P., Andrew M., John W., George B., Benjamin J. and William Passmore.

John Wardell Passmore, third son of Ellis and Ruth Passmore, was a native of Cecil county, Maryland, the date of his birth having been October 30, 1802. His preliminary education was acquired at a private school and later he attended a boarding school conducted by Enoch Lewis, after which he served an apprenticeship at the trade of carpenter. He located in the township of West Nottingham, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and became one of its prominent and influential citizens. He followed his trade for a number of years, but subsequently turned his attention to teaching school. He was a strong advocate of the principles of the Whig party, and was chosen by that body to serve as county commissioner of Chester county, his tenure of the office being from 1836 to 1841. On October 13, 1822, Mr. Passmore married Deborah Brown, born January 12, 1801, a daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth Brown. Their children were: Ellis Pusey, born August 23, 1823; Samuel Brown, born December 13, 1827; Elizabeth Ruth, born November 11, 1830, and John A., born June 30, 1836, now deceased. John W. Passmore, father of these children, died at his residence in Chester county, June 26, 1848; he was survived many years by his widow, who passed away in May, 1895.

Ellis Pusey Passmore, eldest son of John W. and Deborah Passmore, was born in West Nottingham township, Chester county, August 23, 1823. His boyhood was spent in attendance at the district schools, where he obtained an education which prepared him for his active career. His first occupation was working on a farm, and during the period he was thus employed he gained a thorough knowledge of agricultural pursuits. Later he accepted a position as agent for an agricultural supply company, in which capacity he served for twelve years, his territory being the entire state of Pennsylvania. The following five years he was a resident of Butte City, Montana, but, life in the eastern portion of the United States being preferable to his tastes, he returned to Chester county, Pennsylvania, and again took up his residence in his native township of West Nottingham. He was an active member of the Society of Friends, and his political affiliations were with the Republican party. He married, December 23, 1847, Mary E. Lincoln, who was born June 8, 1824, a daughter of John and Frances Anna Lincoln of Cecil county, Maryland. Their children are: John W., born December 11, 1848, married Alice M. Martindale, and they reside in Butte City, Montana; Lincoln K., born September 2, 1850, married Ellen Faxon, and they reside in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Leroy C., born January 8, 1854; Emma F., born November 16, 1855, wife of John D. Haines and they reside in Butte City, Montana; Charles S., born July 8, 1858, married Susan Came of Old Orchard, Maine, and they reside in Butte City, Montana; Walter C., born December 1, 1860, married Lillian Haines; he is now deceased; Ellis Pusey, Jr., born October 26, 1863, died at the age of two years; Ellis Pusey, Jr., (2) born February 1, 1869, married Emily Pusey Shelmire and they reside in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The mother of these children died August 14, 1893.

Leroy C. Passmore, third son of Ellis Pusey and Mary E. Passmore, was born in Rising Sun, Cecil county, Maryland, January 8, 1854. He received an excellent English education at West Nottingham Academy, and the three years following his graduation he was engaged as a teacher in a school at Rising Sun, Maryland. After the expiration of this period of time he established a general store at the same place, which he successfully conducted for four years, but finally abandoned this enterprise, and for seven years devoted his time and attention exclusively to farming in Cecil county, Maryland. In 1890 he removed to West Nottingham township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and, in partnership with

E. A. Gillespie, established his present business of coal, lumber and grain, under the firm name of Passmore & Gillespie.

Mr. Passmore is a man of steadfast purpose and inflexible integrity, and all his business transactions are conducted on a strictly honorable basis. In politics he is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, and was chosen by his fellow citizens to serve as a director of the school board of West Nottingham township.

In 1880 Mr. Passmore married Rebecca E. Hunt, daughter of Marshall J. and Elmira (Haines) Hunt, the former named being a prominent machinist of Rising Sun, Maryland, and the inventor of the first corn drill. Four children were born of this union—Elmira H., unmarried; J. Walter, a student at Swarthmore College; Mary E., also a student, and Helen R., deceased. Mr. Passmore and his family are members of the Presbyterian church, and actively interested in the various departments of work connected with it.

THE HUEY FAMILY, the name of which was originally spelled Huet, claim for their pioneer ancestor in this country William Huey, a native of Ireland, a Protestant in religion, and a farmer by occupation, following that line of work in Westtown township, Pennsylvania. His wife, Jane Huey, a native of Wales, at her decease left two children, James and Mary Huey. James was born January 6, 1737, and died in 1820 or 1822; during his early manhood he married Mary Miller, and their children were: Eleanor, who became the wife of Nathan Hunt; Mary, who became the wife of Thomas Francis; Jane, unmarried; William, who married Lydia Way; Elizabeth, who became the wife of John Goodwin; and John, who married Phoebe Martin. Mary (Miller) Huey's father was an Englishman and her mother was a native of Barbadoes; this was a clandestine marriage, they emigrating to America and settling in Loudoun county, Virginia, and after their home was demolished by fire, they removed to the vicinity of West Chester, Chester county, Pennsylvania. The Miller family were members of the English church, but, there being no churches of that denomination in that section, they joined the Friends. Their children were—Mary, aforementioned as the wife of James Huey, and another daughter who married and settled in the western part of Pennsylvania. Mary Huey, daughter of William and Jane Huey, became the wife of Samuel Entriiken, and the issue of this marriage was three sons and four daughters; the family resided on the estate adjoining her father's in Westtown, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

William Huey, aforementioned as the eldest son of James and Mary (Miller) Huey, was born near Sugartown, Willistown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He was a prominent and wealthy man in his day, a member of the Society of Friends, and among the children born to him by his wife, Lydia (Way) Huey, was a son named James. James Huey removed to Baltimore, Maryland, in 1843, and in 1857 removed to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He engaged in the grain and feed business in both cities, and all his transactions were conducted in a thoroughly honorable and reliable manner. He married Rachel M. Gowphrey, who was a member of one of the oldest families in Chester county, and their children were: 1. William Gowphrey, mentioned hereinafter; 2. James Thomas, born in 1842, died in 1888; he was a lieutenant in the One Hundred and Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and served all through the war. He married Sally A. King, and they were the parents of one son, William H., born in 1866, who is now engaged in the brokerage business in Philadelphia with William Gowphrey Huey; 3. Lydia, born in 1844, died in 1845; 4. Jane, born in 1845, died at the age of six years. James Huey, the father of these children, died in 1876, and his wife died in 1882.

William Gowphrey Huey, eldest son of James and Rachel M. Huey, was born December 22, 1840, in Willistown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. When he was about three years of age, the family changed their place or residence to Baltimore, and in 1857 to Philadelphia. His education was acquired in the schools and university of Baltimore, and the Benjamin Swayne School in London Grove. He then secured employment in the wholesale dry goods house of Steel & Sharpless, and after remaining there for a number of years he engaged in the brokerage business in the city of Philadelphia, being now one of the leading representatives of that line of business. For a number of years he has been a prominent factor in the affairs of the city, has served three terms in the Philadelphia common council, and three terms in the select council. He is a Quaker in religion, a Republican in politics, and an honored member of the Union League Club, the State Historical Society, the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, and he is president of the board of directors of the Eastern Pennsylvania Penitentiary. He was united in marriage to Georgianna Jones, of Philadelphia, no issue.

John Huey, youngest son of James and Mary (Miller) Huey, was born near Sugartown, Willistown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He was successful in his business enterprises, and ranked among the influential and respected citizens of the community in which he resided. He adhered to the doctrines of the Society of Friends. John Huey and his wife, Phoebe (Martin) Huey, were the parents of the following named children:

Abraham, mentioned hereinafter; Lydia, who became the wife of Job Darlington; Mary Ann, who became the wife of William Baldwin; Sarah, who married for her first husband James Caldwell, and for her second Charles Goldsborough; John, who married Eliza Baldwin; and William, who married Mary Jane Menough.

Abraham Huey, eldest son of John and Phoebe (Martin) Huey, was born in Westtown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in November, 1806, and died May 8, 1883. He was educated in the public school, and was a farmer by occupation. He married Emeline Brinton, born in October, 1812, died April 5, 1865, a daughter of Edward and Susan Brinton, of Baltimore, Maryland, and their children were: 1. Susan, who became the wife of Elwood Hoopes, and to them were born five children; 2. Phebe, who became the wife of Samuel Marshall, and to them were born two children; 3. Anna, who married George B. Matlack, to whom she bore two children; after his death she married William Thomas, deceased; 4. John E., mentioned hereinafter; 5. Casandria, who became the wife of Harvey Darlington, and to them were born seven children; 6. William, who married Jean Stokes, and to them were born two children; 7. Arabella, died in infancy.

John E. Huey, fourth child of Abraham and Emeline (Brinton) Huey, was born in Birmingham township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, October 18, 1842. He was educated in the public schools of his native township, at Benjamin Swayne's school in London Grove, at a school in Fort Edward, New York, and, after his military service, in the school at West Chester conducted by Professor Allen. He was a young man of nineteen years when the Civil war broke out, and he enlisted (in 1861) in the Ninety-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanded by Colonel Henry R. Guss. With this command he bore a creditable part in the campaigns in Virginia, South Carolina and Florida, including the assault upon Fort Wagner, under General Quincy A. Gilmore. Succumbing to fever incident to exposure in the southern swamps, he was honorably discharged in 1863, but again took up arms with the emergency forces which were called out to protect the state against invasion by the rebel army under General Lee. After thus patriotically responding to the call of his country, he was drafted at a later day. His previous service had, however, told upon his physical powers, yet he was averse to pleading actual disability, and he provided a substitute.

After leaving the army, Mr. Huey engaged in farming in Birmingham township, and was so occupied until 1866, when he went west for a short period of time. In 1868 he resumed farming on his own account on the old Way farm in Pennsbury township, which had been purchased by his father, and he remained there until 1903, when he retired to his present home in West Chester. There he has taken deep interest in various manufacturing establishments and financial institutions. He is a director in the Denney Tag Company, the Philadelphia Type Casting Company and the Farmers' National Bank. He is a Republican in politics, and for fourteen years he rendered useful service as a school director in Pennsbury township. He is a member of Eureka Lodge, No. 23, Free and Accepted Masons, of Wilmington, Delaware, and a member of George A. McCall Post, No. 31, Grand Army of the Republic, of West Chester.

Mr. Huey, in 1871, married Hannah Mary Darlington, born September 5, 1841, a daughter of Edward B. and Hannah (Sharpless) Darlington, the former named having been a prosperous farmer of Birmingham township. To this marriage were born the following children: A. Dillwyn, born August 3, 1873, engaged in farming on the old homestead; he married Emily E. Raeder, and they are the parents of one son, John Edward, born July 22, 1903; 2. Martha D., born September 28, 1875, became the wife of Howland Speakman of Chicago, Illinois; 3. George M., born August 16, 1878, is connected with the management of the Denney Tag Works; 4. Ravanna G., born October 2, 1879. Mr. Huey and his family attend the Friends' Meeting.

PHILIP LESSIG DUNWOODY, a representative in the present generation of the Dunwoody family, whose members have been active and prominent factors in the upbuilding and material growth of Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a lineal descendant of John Dunwoody, one of the Scotch-Irish settlers in Londonderry township, Chester county, about the year 1736. John Dunwoody is also an ancestor of President Theodore Roosevelt. There was a large settlement of the Scotch-Irish emigrants in that section of the county during that year, and a Presbyterian church, widely known from that time to this as "Faggs Manor," was erected. John Dunwoody, the emigrant ancestor, was a school teacher at Fagg's Manor, and while a resident of that neighborhood he met Susanna Criswell, aged sixteen years, a daughter of William Criswell, whom he wished to make his wife. She refused to marry him unless he was the owner of a farm, so accordingly he purchased a tract of land in West Nantmeal township, and there they resided for many years. They were united in marriage at Brandywine Manor church, and eight children were the issue of this union. Many members of the Criswell family came to America with the Dunwoody family, and they were all a sturdy race of Scotch-Irish farmers.

James Dunwoody, eldest son of John and Susanna (Criswell) Dunwoody, pursued a course of medical study and after obtaining his diploma located in the state of Georgia, where he practiced his profession for a number of years. He was a skillful physician, and therefore had an extensive practice and gained a high reputation. He married a widow, who was the owner of a fine estate, and among the children born to them was a daughter, who married Hon. John Elliott, United States Senator from Georgia. A granddaughter of Mrs. Elliott, whose maiden name was Miss Bullock, married the late Theodore Roosevelt, father of Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States.

George Washington Dunwoody, a descendant of this same ancestry, was born in West Nantmeal township, Chester county, May 14, 1821, and his death occurred in 1890. He followed the occupation of a farmer, conducted his operations on an extensive scale, and was considered one of the representative residents of the community. He married Dorothy Benner, and the following named children were born to them—Elmer Benner, who married Susan Usley, and they are the parents of one daughter, Emma Florence Dunwoody; Emma F., who became the wife of Joseph Talbot; John H., who is a painter by trade; Philip L., mentioned at length hereinafter; Annie M., who became the wife of James Essick, and is now deceased.

Philip L. Dunwoody, son of George W. and Dorothy Dunwoody, was born in West Nantmeal township, July 13, 1867. He was a student at Allan's school house and completed his studies at the age of twenty years, after which he engaged in agricultural pursuits in his native township on what is known as the Washington farm. He then secured employment on one of the farms owned by Abner James, remaining for a period of four years, and the following year he rented a farm from George Flening which he managed very successfully. He then removed to his present home which consists of one hundred and thirty-five acres of rich and productive land, the property of James Butler, and here he conducts general farming and dairying. His dairy averages fifteen head of well selected cows, and the products from both industries find a ready sale in the nearby markets. He is a staunch and loyal supporter of the principles of Democracy, takes an active interest in local politics and has held the office of judge of elections; at the present time (1903) he is the incumbent of the office of minority inspector. For many years he was a member of the Patriotic Order of the Sons of America, and the Junior Order of American Mechanics.

Mr. Dunwoody married Fannie J. Bollinger, daughter of David and Margaret (Chamberlain) Bollinger, of Hopewell, Bedford county, Pennsylvania. Their children are—G. Allau, born August 5, 1896; and Bessie, born October 10, 1899. Mr. Bollinger, father of Mrs. Dunwoody, participated in the Civil war during almost the entire period; he was a foundryman by trade and for the past eighteen years has been employed at the Isabella Furnace. Mr. Bollinger and his wife were the parents of nine children, three of whom are now deceased. The surviving members of the family are—James M., born March 17, 1870, a blacksmith by trade and is employed by the Pennsylvania & Reading Railroad at Norristown, Pennsylvania. He married Emily Yocum, daughter of Nicholas Y. Yocum, proprietor of Loags Hotel, and they have a family of three children—Luther, Margaret and David Bollinger. Heler, born May 23, 1877, became the wife of Edgar Mauger of East Nantmeal township, a son of William Mauger of Juniata county, Pennsylvania; he is a carpenter by trade and is employed by the Philadelphia & Pittsburg Railroad. Their children are—Freda, Mamilla, William, and Allie Mauger. Jemima, born May 29, 1879, became the wife of Charles Gilbert, son of David Gilbert; he is a fireman on the Pennsylvania & Reading Railroad, and he has also worked as a miller; their family consists of two children—Ama, and James Gilbert. Ellie, born October 20, 1883, resides at home in Isabella and is attending the high school of the township. Frank, born September 11, 1885, resides at home with his parents, attends school in the winter and is now learning the trade of plumber and gas fitter at Norristown, Pennsylvania.

WILLIAM THOMAS GREEN. Among those actively and prominently identified with the agricultural interests of West Goshen township, West Chester, Pennsylvania, may be mentioned the name of William T. Green, who is a descendant of Elisha Green, who was born in Massachusetts, where he resided for many years. Upon attaining young manhood Elisha Green located in West Goshen township, Chester county, and for the remainder of his life engaged in agricultural pursuits; he was united in marriage to Miss Hannah Reese. Their son, Benjamin Green, was born in the township of West Goshen, Chester county, resided on the old homestead and devoted his time and attention to the tilling of the soil. He married Miss Miriam Gray, and their children were: Jane W., Emmor Reese, John P., Hannah E., Benjamin F., Ehna, Miriam Ann and Isaac Thomas Green.

Emmor Reese Green, father of William T. Green, was born in the township of West Goshen, Chester county, October 23, 1826. His early education was obtained in the district school, and later he was a pupil in the private school conducted by his father. He then entered the Woodward Mill, where he learned the trade of miller, and after thoroughly mastering all the details and particulars of the business, he concluded to follow the vocation of teaching school, being thus employed for two years. He was a close student all his life, and was well informed on the topics of the day. After resigning from the position of a teacher, he engaged in agricultural pursuits on his father's farm at Green Hill, West Goshen township, but retired from active business pursuits when he reached the age of forty-nine years. Mr. Green took an active interest in educational matters and everything pertaining to the advancement of the people and his advice was much sought after by his neighbors and friends. He was always kind and liberal to the poor and afflicted, and assisted them to the best of his ability. He was a Republican in his politics, held a number of local offices, the most important being supervisor of the township, which he filled most acceptably and creditably. On January 31, 1849, Mr. Green married Hannah Smith Gray, daughter of William and Mary (Bullock) Gray. Mrs. Green was born in Warwick township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, March 26, 1825. Their children are: William Thomas, Mary Elma, Benjamin Franklin, Sarah Emma, deceased; Ellen Miriam, Laura S., deceased; and Olivia Wollerton Green. Mr. Green died March 1, 1896, survived by his widow, who resides in West Chester, Pennsylvania.

William T. Green was born on the old homestead March 9, 1850, attended the West Chester schools, where he obtained an excellent education, and subsequently assisted his father in the management of the home farm. In 1872 he settled on his present farm, and the greater part of his attention has been devoted to dairy products for which he finds a ready market. He is now enjoying a good and profitable business, and is certainly deserving the success which is attending his efforts. Politically Mr. Green supports the principles and measures adopted by the Republican party.

On October 25, 1876, Mr. Green was united in marriage to Miss Emma G. Garrett, daughter of George S. and Harriet P. (Matlack) Garrett. They are the parents of one son, Evert M., born March 25, 1878; he resides on the old homestead with his parents.

The Gray family were a sturdy Scotch-Irish race. James and John Gray, the pioneer ancestors, emigrated to Pennsylvania prior to the middle of the eighteenth century, locating first in Burks and subsequently in Cumberland county. The brothers soon grew dissatisfied with their surroundings, and in 1749 decided to push out into the wilderness, where they finally settled, together with Robert Hog, and Samuel Bingham, in Tuscarora Valley, Juniata county, at a point about twelve miles from the present site of Mifflintown, where they erected a strong blockade house and stockade, on the famous Traders' Pass, leading from the Conococheague settlements westward to Fort Shirley at Aughwick. This they called Fort Bingham, and it was designed as a place of refuge and protection for themselves and families in the event of an attack by Indians. On June 11, 1756, the fort was attacked by Indians and Hannah Gray, wife of John Gray, and their three-year-old daughter, Jennie Gray, were captured, and with others carried into captivity by the savages. James Gray, the other pioneer ancestor, was absent from the Valley at the time, and his wife and children remained at home, where by good fortune, they were wholly overlooked by the savages. John Gray, learning that the prisoners had been taken across the mountains to Kittanning, then an important village, hastened to join Colonel John Armstrong in the expedition the latter was organizing for the capture of Kittanning, the stronghold of the Indian chieftains, Captains Jacobs and Shingas. John Gray was with Colonel Armstrong on September 8, 1756, when the village was given to the flames and the majority of the savages congregated there slain. Mr. Gray then learned that the captives from Fort Bingham has been sent to the French commandant at Fort Duquesne (now Pittsburg). The strain and hardship so impaired his health, that from henceforth until his death, which occurred in Bucks county, in April, 1759, he was a confirmed invalid. He left a will whereby he bequeathed to his wife one-half of his real and personal estate and the other half to his daughter Jane, should the mother and daughter return from captivity, and in the event of his daughter not returning, then her interest was to vest in his sister, Mary Gray, who had followed her brothers to the new world. Mrs. Gray returned but her daughter did not, and in order to retain the entire estate she substituted another child for the daughter. When the fraud was discovered, there were a series of suits which were tried in the courts of Pennsylvania, beginning in 1789 and continuing until 1834, a period of forty-five years, when final adjudication was made by the supreme court. Thomas Gray, an early ancestor of the family, located in Aston township near the close of the Revolutionary war, where he contracted with Abraham Sharpless, the then owner of the famous Taruna Iron Works at Glen Mills to transport all the ore from Marcus Hook and to return the pig metal to that place for shipment to points along the Atlantic coast. Colonel William C. Gray, grandson of the aforementioned Thomas Gray, played an active part in local affairs in his day and generation, and many of the public improvements that were made in the city of Chester from 1866 to 1896 were largely aided by the interest he took and the efforts he put forth in furthering projects whose design was for the betterment of the community. His military record will remain part of the story of Delaware county and the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and it is to be regretted that his narratives of the events of the great Civil war were not preserved in permanent form.

WILLIAM WAYNE. The Wayne family represented in the present generation by William Wayne, a resident of Paoli, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is among the oldest and most distinguished in the state, and its history has been closely intertwined with that of Chester county. The founder of the American branch of the family was Anthony Wayne, a native of Yorkshire, England, who in early life removed to county Wicklow, Ireland; he commanded a squadron of dragoons under King William, at the battle of the Boyne, and being warmly attached to liberal principles he migrated with his wife, Hannah (Faulkner) Wayne and family to America in the year 1722.

Isaac Wayne, son of Anthony and Hannah Wayne, followed the quiet but useful calling of agriculture, and during his entire lifetime was a useful and public-spirited citizen of the community in which he resided. He repeatedly occupied a seat in the provincial assembly, which attested to the esteem in which he was held by his fellow townsmen, and he distinguished himself in various expeditions against the belligerent Indians. He was united in marriage to Elizabeth Iddings, and among the children born to them was a son, Anthony Wayne.

Anthony Wayne, the famous military chieftain of Chester county, a son of Isaac and Elizabeth Wayne, was born in the township of Easttown, January 1, 1745. He received an excellent education, and for a number of years after completing his studies was employed in surveying, practical astronomy and engineering. He was an active and prominent factor in the preparation for the Revolutionary contest, being a member of the Chester county Whigs, and at a large meeting of the inhabitants of the county held at Chester in December, 1774, he was chosen chairman of a committee of seventy, who were appointed to aid in superseding the colonial government and to take charge of the local interests of the county. January 3, 1776, he was commissioned colonel of the Fourth Pennsylvania Battalion, and saw service in Canada, being wounded at the battle of Three Rivers, and being commander at Fort Ticonderoga. He was promoted to brigadier general in 1777, and joined Washington in New Jersey. He defended Chadd's Ford at the battle of Brandywine, September 11, 1777, and commanded the right wing at the battle of Germantown, in October of the same year. He performed excellent service during the starvation winter at Valley Forge, to which he brought many captured horses, cattle and other supplies. He was in the battle of Monmouth, New Jersey, June 28, 1778. He led the attack at Stony Point, on the Hudson, July 16, 1779, and with twelve hundred men reached the fort without being observed, and by a bayonet charge forced a surrender of the garrison. This was his most famous achievement, and for it Congress voted to him a gold medal (which priceless heirloom is now in possession of Mr. William Wayne, of Paoli), while his impetuous valor won for him the sobriquet of "Mad Anthony Wayne." Early in 1781 he suppressed a mutiny among the troops; he commanded at Green Spring in the same year; and bore a conspicuous part in the campaign which had its triumphant close in the capture of Yorktown. In 1782 he was assigned to the command in Georgia, and defeated the British and Indians, for which achievement that state rewarded him with the gift of a valuable plantation. He was brevetted major general in 1783; was a member of the Pennsylvania legislature in 1784; and a member of the state ratifying convention in 1787. In 1792 he was commissioned full major general, and was appointed by President Washington to the command in the northwest, to succeed General St. Clair, after the defeat of that officer. General Wayne's services here were conspicuously successful, and it is entirely probable that without them the Louisiana Purchase would not have been effected. He defeated the Indians at Fallen Timbers, or Maumee Rapids, August 12, 1794; built Fort Wayne, on the site of the present flourishing city of that name in Indiana; and concluded a treaty with the Indians at Greenville, in 1795. Truly a splendid record of patriotic service.

The Pennsylvania farm on which General Wayne resided was purchased by the emigrant ancestor, Anthony Wayne, and was situated in Easttown township, about one mile southeast of Paoli, and near the road leading from that town to the Leopard. The stone dwelling was erected by Anthony, the emigrant, in 1722 and 1724; the furniture of the parlor remains exactly as it was in the days of General Wayne, and the room is an admirably preserved relic of the olden time. General Wayne married Mary Penrose, who bore him two children—Isaac and Margaret Wayne. His death occurred at Presque Isle, Pennsylvania, December 14, 1796, and his remains were interred on the shore of Lake Erie.

HOMESTEAD OF GEN. ANTHONY WAYNE, EASTTOWN.

Now Estate of William Wayne.

Subsequently his son brought the remains to the family cemetery at St. David's church, and on June 5, 1811, a monument to his memory was erected by the Pennsylvania State Society of the Cincinnati.

The next in line of descent was Margaret Wayne, daughter of General Anthony and Mary (Penrose) Wayne, who was born in 1770, and died in 1810. She became the wife of William Richardson Atlee, and they were the parents of one child, Mary Wayne Atlee, who was united in marriage to Isaac Evans, and the issue of this union was a son, William Wayne Evans.

William Wayne Evans, who by an act of legislature was allowed to drop the name of Evans, was born in 1828. He was educated in the schools of Philadelphia, and this knowledge was supplemented by a course at the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he was graduated. He was a member of the Pennsylvania legislature, and served as captain during the war of the Rebellion. His religious membership was in the Protestant Episcopal church, and his political affiliations were with the Republican party. He married Hannah J. Zook, a daughter of David and Eleanor Zook, of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. Their children are: William, mentioned hereinafter; and Mary Atlee, who became the wife of John McCrea Wirgman. William Wayne, the father of these children, died in 1901.

William Wayne, only son of William and Hannah J. (Zook) Wayne, was born at Waynesborough, Chester county, Pennsylvania, August 27, 1855, and occupies the house in which he was born, erected by Anthony, the emigrant, in 1722 and 1724. His early educational advantages were obtained in the schools of Philadelphia, and at the University of Pennsylvania. His business career has been devoted to the tilling of the soil, and this occupation has proved both pleasant and remunerative. He is serving as a member of the Pennsylvania legislature, is active and prominent in the work of St. David's Episcopal church, Radnor, Pennsylvania, and his political sentiments coincide with those advocated by the Republican party. He holds membership in the following named societies: Cincinnati, Sons of the Revolution, Colonial Wars, Loyal Legion and Order of Albion.

In the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1883, Mr. Wayne married Mary Valentine Fox, a daughter of Dr. George and Sarah (Valentine) Fox, her education having been acquired in the schools of Philadelphia. Their children are: William, born February 29, 1884, at Paoli; and Edith Sarah Fox, born November 12, 1889, at Paoli.

THE NOBLIT FAMILY. The origin and name of this family is of French Huguenot extraction, the first of the name having fled from France during the St. Bartholomew massacre in 1572 and settled in the north of Ireland, where the family resided during several generations. About the beginning of the eighteenth century there were two brothers, descendants of this family, who emigrated to America, and tradition states that they landed presumably at or near where the city of Chester is situated. One of these two brothers migrated inland, and settled in what is now Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, and the other brother took up his abode in what is now Darby township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, and became the progenitor of this branch of the family. He married, and among his descendants was John Noblit, who in turn was married to a daughter of an old Delaware county family, and had born to him the following named children:

1. John, born March 13, 1761; 2. William, born September 30, 1762; 3. Mary, born August 10, 1764; 4. Thomas, born September 18, 1766; 5. Robert, born July 28, 1768; 6. Elizabeth, born December 15, 1772; 7. Ann, born July 28, 1775; 8. Dell, born October 19, 1777, mentioned hereinafter. John Noblit, the father of this family, died about the year 1785, aged about seventy years, and his remains were interred in the old St. Paul's Episcopal churchyard at Chester, Delaware county, Pennsylvania.

Dell Noblit, the youngest child of John Noblit, was born October 19, 1777, in Middletown township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. He learned the cabinetmaking trade, which occupation he followed for a number of years, and upon leaving his native county he settled in Wilmington, Delaware, where he engaged at his trade and in the manufacture of furniture. In his business career he achieved a well merited degree of success, and became well and favorably known for his probity of character; his habits and customs were at all times temperate and self-controlled, and for over sixty years of his century of life he had never taken stimulants or medicine. In 1801 Mr. Noblit was married to Elizabeth Wiall, of Philadelphia, and the issue of this union was the following named children: Stephen, born in 1802, who married Ann Parker; Hamilton, born in 1804, who married Mary Weldin; and Margaret, born in 1806, who died at the age of about thirteen years. Elizabeth (Wiall) Noblit died August 27, 1811. Mr. Noblit married for his second wife, December 31, 1812, Elizabeth Brattan, who was born November 18, 1795, a resident of Brandywine Hundred, New Castle county, Delaware. Of the thirteen children born of this union, those who attained years of maturity were as follows:

RESIDENCE OF J. C. NOBLIT.

JOSEPH C. NOBLIT.

Maria, who became the wife of Gregg Chandler; James B., who married Ellen Ross, of Virginia; John, mentioned hereinafter; Eliza, who became the wife of John Lykens; Dell (2), who married Elizabeth Curtis; Joseph H., who married; Louisa, who married, February 14, 1855. Oliver Knight, and they were the parents of one daughter, Elizabeth D. Knight; Louisa married (secondly) the Rev. Charles E. Murry, rector of St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal church, of Wilmington, Delaware; and Joseph Coyt, who married Ella Chandler, a daughter of Joseph Chandler, of Centerville, Delaware. Elizabeth (Bratton) Noblit, the mother of these children, died in October, 1869. Mr. Noblit was for a number of years one of the wardens of St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal church of Wilmington, Delaware, where he was a regular communicant until he became too much enfeebled by the weight of his years to leave his home. At the time of his death, which occurred January 21, 1878, it was justly said that his had been a good Christian life.

John Noblit, son of Dell and Elizabeth (Bratton) Noblit, was born at Wilmington, Delaware, March 21, 1817. He attended the private schools of his native city, and at the age of sixteen he began to learn the cabinet making trade under the tuition of his father. Having served the full apprenticeship as was the custom in those days, he worked for some time as a journeyman, and later succeeded to his father's business. He conducted this in addition to the manufacture of furniture for a number of years, with the exception of a brief period when he engaged in other pursuits owing to depression in business. In 1850 Mr. Noblit engaged in business in Philadelphia with his brother, Dell Noblit, under the firm name of D. & J. Noblit, in the manufacture of mattresses, bedding supplies and furniture for hotels and steamships. In this undertaking the firm met with immediate success, and in 1851 the two brothers engaged in the manufacture of haircloth, which line of enterprise was successfully continued until 1884, when John Noblit retired from active business pursuits. During his active and busy career of thirty-four years as a manufacturer in Philadelphia, he was also interested in other lines of enterprise, having been a stockholder of the Frankford & Southwark Street Railway, commonly known as the Fifth & Sixth Street Railway of Philadelphia, and he served that corporation in the capacity of president in 1882-1887, and 1888. He was for several years a director of the Philadelphia & Erie Railroad Company, having been chosen by the city to represent its interests in that corporation, and subsequently was elected by the railroad company as one of its regular directors, in which capacity he served creditably until his retirement.

Throughout his long and varied business career, the name of John Noblit was regarded as synonymous with honesty and straightforwardness in all his transactions, and at the time of his death he not only left his children an ample competence but the priceless heritage of an honorable name.

John Noblit was married, April 22, 1841, to Sarah H. Chandler, born August 11, 1819, a daughter of Benjamin and Rebecca (Hyndman) Chandler, of Wilmington, Delaware. Their children were: 1. John Hyndman, born May 22, 1844; 2. Alfred Thomson, born June 22, 1849, died May 3, 1855; 3. Joseph Chandler, born November 5, 1851, mentioned hereinafter. Sarah H. (Chandler) Noblit, the mother of this family, died December 9, 1856. Mr. Noblit married for his second wife Rebecca Read Hendrickson, a daughter of Peter and Rebecca (McCullough) Hendrickson, of New Castle county, Delaware. John Noblit died April 3, 1897, and his wife died December 14, 1897.

Joseph Chandler Noblit, youngest child of John and Sarah H. (Chandler) Noblit, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, November 5, 1851. He was a student of the public schools of his native city, and the knowledge thus acquired was supplemented by attendance at Rugby Academy. He then entered his father's business establishment, with which he was connected until 1885, when he removed to his present home, Fairhill, located in the vicinity of Chadd's Ford, Pennsbury township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and since that date he has contributed largely to the material and social advancement of the neighborhood. He has served in various local offices, and has been a prominent factor in all enterprises that tended toward the progress and wellbeing of the public.

Mr. Noblit was married, September 7, 1876, to Catherine Elizabeth Moore, who was born July-12, 1852, a daughter of John and Eliza (Heffelinger) Moore, who are now residents of Pennsbury township. Their children are: Marion Moore, born November 27, 1877; John, born January 6, 1879; William Hyndman, born October 15, 1881; Clara Edith, born July 2, 1888; and Sarah Chandler, born June 1, 1895. Mr. Noblit and his family are members of the Protestant Episcopal church.

JAMES T. BARNARD. The name of Barnard, or Bernard, is one of the most ancient of surnames, being first taken from Roche-Bernard, an old fortified manor-house of Normandy, and the ancestor of the Chester and Delaware county families of this name was Richard Barnard, who was a large landowner in the vicinity of Chester, Pennsylvania, as early as 1683, served in the capacity of grand juror at Chester in 1686, and died previous to May 5, 1698. Richard Barnard and his wife, Frances Barnard, were the parents of seven children, among whom was a son, Richard Barnard, born in 1684, who married about the year 1715, Ann Taylor, daughter of Abiah Taylor, and settled near Doe Run, West Marlborough township, then known as "Hilltown," where he had previously purchased between four hundred and five hundred acres of the Sincock tract, some of which is still in the possession of his descendants. In 1726 he became the owner of about two hundred acres in Newlin, also an adjoining tract in the township of East Marlborough.

Richard Barnard, son of Richard and Ann (Taylor) Barnard, of Newlin, married, January 3, 1754, Susanna Eckhoff, daughter of David and Winnifred Eckhoff. After the death of his wife, Mr. Barnard married, March 16, 1763, Lettice Baker, daughter of Joseph and Mary Baker, of Goshen, and ten children were the issue of this union. Two children were born to Richard and Susanna (Eckhoff) Barnard—Jeremiah and Rachel. Jeremiah Barnard, only son of Richard and Susanna (Eckhoff) Barnard, was born December 2, 1754, married, October 25, 1780, at London Grove Meeting, Elizabeth Passmore, born March 13, 1759, daughter of George and Margaret (Strode) Passmore, of West Marlborough township. Their children were: Susanna, Jeremiah, George, Margaret, Richard, Mary, Samuel, Rachel, John, Elizabeth, and Anna Barnard. Jeremiah Barnard died January 27, 1837, and his wife's death occurred October 13, 1847.

Jeremiah Barnard, Jr., eldest son of Jeremiah and Elizabeth (Passmore) Barnard, was born January 20, 1783, married, April 11, 1804, Abigail Pusey, born April 6, 1784, daughter of Ellis and Abigail (Brinton) Pusey, of London Grove, and they were the parents of the following named children, of whom the first three and the youngest, Philena, died in early life, the remainder living to an advanced age: Joshua, Ellis P., Lydia, James, Pusey, Elizabeth, Susan, and Philena Barnard. Jeremiah Barnard, father of these children, died February 15, 1845.

Pusey Barnard, fourth son of Jeremiah and Abigail (Pusey) Barnard, was born December 6, 1810, in the vicinity of Doe Run, West Marlborough township. He was reared and educated in that neighborhood, and later removed to Upper Oxford township. Here he purchased a farm of one hundred and forty-two acres on which he resided until 1865, when he removed to Christiana, Lancaster county, but in 1883 he returned to the old homestead, where his death occurred in October, 1884. Mr. Barnard married Phebe Coates, and after her decease he was united in marriage to Susan Walker Pownall, widow of Moses Pownall. Pusey and Phebe (Coates) Barnard were the parents of four children—James; Mary Louisa, who married Brinton Walker, of Christiana, Lancaster county, but her death occurred a few years after her marriage; Rebecca, and Anna Maria, both of whom died in infancy.

James T. Barnard, only son of Pusey and Phebe (Coates) Barnard, was born on the old homestead in Upper Oxford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, February 13, 1836. He received his early educational advantages in the common schools of the neighborhood, and later was a student at the West Chester Academy. He began his business career as an agriculturist, being employed on his father's farm up to the time of his marriage; he then purchased a farm in Lancaster county, on which he conducted operations for four years, and at the expiration of this period of time he returned to the old homestead in Upper Oxford, where he led a retired life, until 1902, when he moved to Christiana, Lancaster county, having given the management of the farm into the hands of his son, Harry W. Barnard. The farm is one of the most productive in that section of the county, being well cultivated and improved, and for a number of years its managers have made a specialty of breeding Holstein thoroughbred cattle.

Mr. Barnard is a loyal and public-spirited citizen, and has always been ready and willing to aid his country to the extent of his ability. In 1864 he answered an emergency call for troops to serve during the Civil war, was sent to Hagerstown, Maryland, and performed military duty there for a period of twenty days. Since attaining his majority he has always cast his vote with the Republican party, and has held the local offices of auditor and school director, serving in the latter capacity for sixteen years. He is a birth-right member of the Society of Friends.

On October 18, 1860, Mr. Barnard married Dorothea Davis, born near Chester City, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, October 11, 1838. She was reared there until she attained the age of seventeen years, when her parents, William S. and Catherine (Engle) Davis, in 1855, purchased a farm in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, whither they removed. The children born of this marriage were: 1. Orianna, died in early life. 2. Rebecca, died in infancy. 3. Mary T. 4. Pusey, died in early life. 5. William D., married Laura Schrack, of Northampton, Northumberland county, and is vice-president of the United T. and T. Company. Fidelity building, Broad street, Philadelphia. 6. Harry W., married Ella S. Cooper, and they are the parents of one child, Milton Everett, born September 11, 1902; Ella S. (Cooper) Barnard is a daughter of Calvin, born May 11, 1833, and Harriet Ann (Hunsicker) Cooper, of Birdinhand, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. 7. Everett P. Barnard, who studied medicine and is practicing at 2146 South Broad street, Philadelphia.

DAVID W. DEAKYNE, a prominent and progressive manufacturer of Chester, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, is a worthy descendant of an old and honorable family who have made their home in the state of Delaware for many years.

William S. Deakyne, father of David W. Deakyne, was a native of Sweden, whence he emigrated to this country in 1868, and settled in Delaware; he was one of the early settlers of that state, and was actively connected with all its early history. He acted in the capacity of recruiting agent for the state during the progress of the Civil war, in which his brothers participated, but owing to the impaired state of his health he was unable to serve his country in that way. He was engaged in the occupation of farming, and was the first man to ship Delaware peaches to the markets of New York and elsewhere, for which there is now such a constant demand and ready sale; he was also the pioneer of the commission trade in Delaware, which today is one of the most profitable of all the business enterprises that men engage in. In his political affiliations Mr. Deakyne was a firm supporter of the Republican party, and served as county commissioner for many years. He was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Statts, and their children are: Lena, widow of John Muer, of Chester; Dean J.; David W.; Charles, a resident of Ridley Park and W. S., who resides in Chester. The father of these children died in 1896, survived by his widow, who has now attained the age of seventy-one years.

David W. Deakyne, second son of William S. and Sarah Deakyne, was born in Taylor Bridge, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, May 11, 1864. He attended the local schools of his neighborhood, where he acquired an excellent education, and subsequently he commenced his business career in connection with W. F. Cutter, in the candy trade; he continued until 1884, when he entered into partnership with Dean J., his brother, in the same line of business, David W. being at that time only twenty years of age. They commenced business in a small way, and by always acting in a perfectly honorable manner and showing consideration for their customers, their business rapidly increased until now they are one of the largest jobbers and manufacturers of candy in that section of the state; they have three wagons in which their goods are delivered to all parts of the county, and these are in constant use to supply the demand.

Mr. Deakyne has been an active worker in the Republican party since attaining majority, and has served as a member of the Chester city council from the seventh ward for eight years; he was also appointed chairman of the finance committee, which position he retained for four years. Mr. Deakyne was the president of the Business Men's Association for many years, a prominent Mason and Knight Templar, past commander of the Knights of Malta, and a member of the Royal Arcanum.

In 1889 Mr. Deakyne married Miss Hannah N. Booth, daughter of Captain James Booth, of Chester, and their children are: Bertha B. and Henry C. Deakyne. The family are prominent members of Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, of Chester, in which Mr. Deakyne has acted in the capacity of secretary for thirteen years and his wife also takes an active part in all the societies connected with it.

Dean J. Deakyne, brother and partner of David W. Deakyne, received his education in the public schools of his native town, and, prior to his connection with his brother in the candy trade, was engaged in the milk business. He is prominently identified with the Order of the Red Men, and also with various Masonic bodies.

CHESTER SPRINGS SOLDIER'S ORPHAN SCHOOL. On February 29, 1868, the Soldier's Orphan School at Chester Springs, Chester county, Pennsylvania, was established. The school has been maintained there ever since with the exception of eight months in the year 1869, during which time the school was closed.

During the thirty-five years of the school's existence, from 1868 until the year ending May 31, 1903, there have been admitted 2,802 children, and of this number 2,394 have been discharged upon reaching the age of sixteen years. In the entire history of the institution, there have been twenty-nine deaths among the pupils. The twenty-nine removed by reason of death, together with the 2,394 discharged upon age, leaves upon the roll 379 boys and girls to be cared for by the state.

The property upon which the school is located was bought by a stock company, and the school was managed by a board of trustees, of which Isaac Sulgar was president, and William C. Deans secretary and treasurer. Mr. M. S. McCullough was the remaining member. William C. Deans continued as secretary and treasurer until 1873, when he died, and was succeeded by Professor William E. Caveny; during the school's first year, William C. Deans was also steward. In 1869 Mr. John L. Smith became steward, and filled the position until 1890, when the school passed under the management of the Soldier's Orphan School Commission.

Prior to the year 1890, this school, as well as all the other soldier's orphan schools in the state, was during its early history under the supervision of a state superintendent of Soldier's Orphan Schools. At a later period, however, it came under the direction of the state superintendent of public instruction.

The first commission appointed was composed of the following members: Governor James A. Beaver, J. P. S. Gobin, John E. Reyburn, William F. Stuart, George W. Skinner, G. Harry Davis, Thomas G. Sample, C. C. Kauffman, Frank J. Magee, George G. Boyer, Thomas J. Stewart.

The commission now in charge is as follows: Governor Samuel W. Pennypacker, Major Levi G. McCauley, Colonel Thomas G. Sample, James F. Morrison, Colonel R. H. Holgate, Hon. Thad. M. Mahon, Hon. Andrew G. Williams, Hon. J. C. Stineman, Hon. Thomas V. Cooper, Hon. Ira F. Mansfield, and Hon. J. H. Reibel.

The superintendents of this school prior to the year 1890 were as follows: William C. Deans, Professor William E. Caveny, Dr. J. H. MacCreary, the Rev. F. C. Pearson, Mrs. Eleanor H. Moore, Professor Richard Macnamee, James L. Paul, R. H. Vanhorn, John H. Hunter, George W. Wright.

Under the state commission these have been the superintendents: J. H. Smith, Colonel Austin Curtin, John M. Major, Professor M. L. Thornhurst, Dr. Thomas E. Wilson and Professor Ira D. McCord.

IRA DWIGHT McCORD, principal and superintendent of the Soldier's Orphan School situated in Chester Springs, Chester county, Pennsylvania, was born October 7, 1875, in Reading, Pennsylvania. He is a son of Heber and Sarah (Hampshire) McCord, the former named having been born in Springfield, Pennsylvania, in 1843. Mr. McCord, Sr., was a plasterer by trade and conducted an extensive business for many years, after which he retired to a farm in East Nantmeal township, where he spent his declining years. He married Sarah Hampshire, daughter of David Hampshire, a prominent resident of Warwick township, Chester county, and their children were Sidney Pearson and Ira Dwight McCord.

The educational advantages enjoyed by Ira D. McCord were obtained at the public schools of East and West Nantmeal, Chester county, and the State Normal School of West Chester, which institution was opened in the fall of 1871, with Ezekial H. Cook, a graduate of Bowdoin College, as principal, and a strong faculty of teachers. Mr. McCord was graduated from this institution of learning, in 1897, the school being then under the principalship of Professor George Morris Philips, Ph. D. Having chosen the occupation of teaching for his life work, Mr. McCord accepted a position as teacher in the schools of West Nantmeal, later became principal of the high school, and after his resignation from this office he removed to Chester Springs, Chester county, where he is now serving in the capacity of principal and superintendent of the Soldier's Orphan School, succeeding Professor Thomas E. Wilson, in 1902. His brother Sidney served as clerk, in the census department, at Washington, D. C.

In politics Mr. McCord is a loyal supporter of the principles and candidates of the Republican party, and in fraternal matters his affiliations are with the Masonic fraternity, being a past master of Mt. Pickering Lodge, No. 446, Free and Accepted Masons, a member of Pottstown Chapter, No. 271, Royal Arch Masons, Phoenix Council No. 8, Nativity Commandery, No. 71, and Rajah Temple, of Reading, Pennsylvania.

GILPIN. The Gilpins trace their descent from Richard de Gylpyn, to whom in 1206, during the reign of King John, the Baron of Kendal gave the Manor of Kentmere for his valor in slaying a wild boar which infested the forests of Westmoreland and Cumberland. From this circumstance a boar appears on the family arms. Generations:

Second.—A son whose name is not given.

Third.—Richard de Gylpyn flourished in the time of Henry III, from 1216 to 1272. Peter de Bruys, who married the heiress of the last Baron of Kendal, gave to him the Manor of Ulwithwaite.

Fourth.—Richard de Gylpyn, living in 1333.

Fifth.—Richard de Gylpyn was possessed of Kentmere and Ulwithwaite and is erroneously supposed by some to have been the first owner.

Sixth.—William de Gylpyn married a daughter of Thomas Airy, Bailiff of Kentmere.

Seventh.—Richard de Gylpyn married A. Fleming, of Cornestone, and had five children.

Eighth.—William de Gylpyn married R. Lancaster, in the reign of Edward IV, and had seven children.

Ninth.—Richard Gilpin married D. Thornborough in the reign of Richard III, and had seven children, of whom the eldest, William, a captain in the Civil war, was killed in the battle of Bosworth Field, August 22, 1485, leaving no issue.

Tenth.—Edwin Gilpin married Margaret Laton, of Dalemaine, and had ten children. Their son George was distinguished in letters and became very eminent, being minister for Queen Elizabeth at The Hague. Another son, Bernard Gilpin, born at Kentmere in 1517, was rector of Houghton, and having accepted the doctrines of the Reformation a short time before the death of Queen Mary, only escaped martyrdom by an accident. He was called the Apostle of the North, and wandered unharmed amid the incessant strife and confusion of the times.

Eleventh.—William Gilpin married Eliza Washington and had twelve children, of whom George inherited the Manor of Kentmere, but it was lost to the family during the parliamentary civil wars.

Twelfth.—Martin Gilpin had ten children and died at Kendal in 1634. His grandson, Richard Gilpin, D. D., son of Isaac, born October 15, 1625, was eminent for his piety and learning. He first studied medicine and afterwards divinity, and was made rector of Greystock in Cumberland. He subsequently purchased Scaleby Castle, in Cumberland, a fortress of much notoriety, situated on the confines of England and Scotland, and erected by the English to repel the invasions of the Scots.

Thirteenth.—Bernard Gilpin, eldest son and heir of Martin, married Dorothy Ayrey, and is said to have had eleven children, of whom we have the names of William, Martin, Francis, Samuel, Arthur, Randolph, Allen and Thomas.

Fourteenth.—Thomas Gilpin, of Mill Hill, of the parish of Eaton, near the town of Lancaster, or of a parish of that name in Westmoreland, near Lancashire, had five sons and five daughters, but we have only the names of Thomas and Ann. The latter married Thomas West, of Long Crandon, in Buckinghamshire, and was ancestor of Benjamin West, the celebrated painter.

Fifteenth.—Thomas Gilpin, of Warborough, in Oxfordshire, the youngest son of Thomas Gilpin, of Mill Hill, was born in 1622, and died February 3, 1682. He married, about 1645, Joan Bartholomew, and had three sons, Joseph, Isaac and Thomas. He was a colonel in the parliamentary army and was at the battle of Worcester, September 3, 1651, where the royal army of Charles I was overthrown by Cromwell. Thomas West, who had married his sister Ann, was a major in the same army, and both of them soon after became convinced of the principles of the Society of Friends and united with them. Thomas Gilpin was a preacher in that society for many years, and suffered imprisonment and other persecutions for his religious principles.

Thus far the historian of the family, Joshua Gilpin, of Kentmere, near Wilmington, Delaware, who died in 1841.

The children of Thomas and Joane Gilpin, of Warborough, according to the Friends' Record in England, were these: Mary, born 7 mo., 10, 1651; Thomas, born 9 mo., 13, 1653; Isaac, born 1 mo., 9, 1656; Sarah, born 2 mo., 8, 1658; Rachel, born 2 mo., 14, 1660; Joseph, born 4 mo., 8, 1663; Richard, born 1 mo., 2, 1666.

"Joseph Gilpin, of Dorchester in the County of Oxon, Weaver by trade, son of Thomas Gilpin of Warborough in the County aforesaid, Tallow chandler by trade, and of Joan his wife, and Hannah Glover of Ichingswell in y^e parish of Kingscleare and County of Southton, spinster, Daughter of [George Glover of] the same place, deceased, and of Alice Glover his wife, him surviving," were married on the "three and twentieth Day of the Twelfth Month, call'd february in the year according to the English account One Thousand six hundred ninety and one . . . in publick assembly of the aforesaid people and others met together for that purpose in their publick Meeting place at Baghurst and County of Southton aforesaid."

The marriage certificate was entered on the records of Concord Monthly Meeting, Pennsylvania, and shows that among the witnesses were Thomas Gilpin, senior and junior, so that the date of his father's death, given as 1682, is probably incorrect. At Concord Monthly Meeting, 12 mo., 10, 1695, "Joseph Gilpin produced a Certificate from friends in England And friends was satisfied therewith."

William Lamboll, of Reading, in Berkshire, purchased from William Penn, by deeds of 29th and 30th June, 1683, 625 acres of land in Pennsylvania. This was surveyed to John Brunsden, for William Lamboll, in Birmingham township, a short distance south from the present Dilworthtown. William Lamboll had a sister Alice, who married George Glover, of Ichingswell and had two daughters: Alice, who married John Brunsden, of Bucklebury, 10 mo., 19, 1680, and Hannah, who married Joseph Gilpin. By deed of August 2, 1684, William Lamboll conveyed to John Brunsden, of Bucklebury, 100 acres of his purchase, and the latter appears to have come over very soon after this date. He left three children—John, who died in his minority; Hannah, who married John Buckingham; and Alice, who married and had a son who died, and she died soon after. John and Hannah Buckingham, of Birmingham, as heirs to the land, conveyed it to Samuel Painter, December 5, 1711. John Brunsden's widow married William Vestal, about 1692, and they lived on the east side and at the forks of Brandywine.

William Lamboll also conveyed, October 12, 1694, 100 acres more of the land to Alice Glover, of Dorchester, in the county of Oxon (Oxford), widow, and Joseph and Hannah Gilpin, for the use of his sister the said Alice Glover, during life, and then to her daughter Hannah Gilpin. By another deed, dated December 9, 1704, he conveyed seventy-five acres more to Joseph Gilpin, and a further addition of 250 acres on May 18, 1716. This, with 100 acres sold to Jonathan Thatcher, made up his quantity of 625 acres. He died at Reading, 8 mo., 3, 1720, aged nearly eighty-six years.

Joseph and Hannah Gilpin, with two children, came over to Pennsylvania in 1695 and settled on the Lamboll tract in Birmingham, where, in a cave by the side of a rock, it is said their other thirteen children were born. A pair of silver candlesticks brought over by them are still preserved. He died 9 mo., 9, 1739, at which time thirteen of his children were married, and the grandchildren numbered forty-five. The other two children married soon after, and when their mother died, 1 mo., 12, 1757, aged eighty-two years, there were twelve children and sixty-two grandchildren living. The parents were active members of Concord Meeting, of which they were appointed overseers in 1727.

Children of Joseph and Hannah Gilpin:

1. Hannah, born 12 mo., 15, 1692; married 8 mo., 31, 1718, William Seal of Birmingham. They had children, Rachel, Joseph, Hannah, William, Joshua and Caleb. She died in the 7th month, 1746.

2. Samuel, born 4 mo., 7, 1694; died 12 mo., 7, 1767; married 11 mo., 25, 1722, Jane Parker, born 1 mo., 24, 1701; died 8 mo., 9, 1775; daughter of John and Mary (Doe) Parker, of Philadelphia. They settled in Concord township for a time, but in 1733 removed to Cecil county, Maryland. Both were buried at their son Joseph's burying place, near the head of Elk river. Their children were Mary, Joseph, Thomas, Hannah, Samuel, Rachel and George. Of these, Thomas settled in Philadelphia, from which place, in 1777, he and several other Friends were exiled to Winchester, Virginia, because they were supposed to be inimical to the cause of independence. His brother George was at that time colonel of the Fairfax militia, and vainly endeavored to secure his release. Thomas died there, 3 mo., 2, 1778. His sons Thomas and Joshua erected paper mills on the Brandywine, two miles above Wilmington, and were the first to manufacture the continuous sheets in America. Joshua visited England and collected the history of the family prior to their emigration.

3. Rachel, born 12 mo., 12, 1695, in Birmingham; died 5 mo., 20, 1776; married 9 mo., 15, 1722, at Concord Meeting, Joshua Peirce, of Kennett, as his second wife. They had children, Joshua, Joseph and Caleb.

4. Ruth, born 6 mo., 28, 1697; married 8 mo., 30, 1718, at Concord Meeting, Joseph Mendenhall. They settled in Kennett and had children, Isaac, Hannah, Joseph, Benjamin, Ann, Stephen and Jesse.

5. Lydia, born 11 mo., 11, 1698; died 10 mo., 2, 1750; married 9 mo., 15, 1722, at Concord Meeting, William Dean, from England.

They settled in Birmingham, on land adjoining that of William Seal, but in 1749 removed to Wilmington. She was a minister among Friends for twenty-two years. Her children were Isaac, Caleb, Hannah and perhaps others.

6. Thomas, born 5 mo., 23, 1700; died 10 mo., 25, 1766; married 2 mo., 21, 1726, at Concord Meeting, Rebecca Mendenhall, daughter of Benjamin and Ann Mendenhall, of Concord. She died soon after and in 1728 he removed to Philadelphia, where he married, 7 mo., 26, 1728, Hannah Knowles. They returned to Concord in 1730, to Philadelphia in 1740, to Concord again in 1743, and to Wilmington in 1746, where he was married the third time, 5 mo., 19, 1757, to Ann Caldwell, daughter of Vincent and Betty (Peirce) Caldwell, of Chester county.

7. Ann, born 5 mo., 11, 1702; died 9 mo., 15, 1759; married 10 mo., 31, 1724, at Concord Meeting, Joseph Miller, of Newgarden township. He died 7 mo., 30, 1734, and she married again, 3 mo., 10, 1739, Richard Hallett, of Newtown, Long Island, a preacher among Friends. By the first she had Joseph and Isaac Miller, and by the second, Thomas, Lydia and Israel Hallett.

8. Joseph, born 1 mo., 21, 1703; died 12 mo., 31, 1792; married 10 mo., 17, 1729, Mary Caldwell, daughter of Vincent and Betty (Peirce) Caldwell, of East Marlborough. They settled on a farm in Birmingham, but about 1761 removed to Christiana Hundred, Delaware. Mary Gilpin was appointed an elder for Concord Meeting 8 mo., 2, 1756. Joseph was buried at Wilmington, Delaware.

9. Sarah, born 4 mo., 2, 1706; died 6 mo., 7, 1783; married 9 mo., 26, 1730, at Concord Meeting, Peter Cook, of London Grove. They removed to Warrington, York county, Pennsylvania, about 1745, and there died. They had children, Joseph, Ruth, Lydia, Hannah, Samuel, Ann, George, Jesse, Sarah and Peter.

10. George, born 2 mo., 16, 1708; died 10 mo., 15, 1773; married 2 mo., 7, 1737, at Kennett Meeting, Ruth Caldwell, daughter of Vincent and Betty (Peirce) Caldwell, of East Marlborough. He married again 4 mo., 9, 1760, Sarah Woodward, of Middletown, daughter of James Sharpless and widow of Edward Woodward. George Gilpin continued to reside in Birmingham, where he became the owner of the site of the cave dwelling and three hundred and fifty acres of land. He left three children—George; Betty, who married John Dickinson; and Isaac Glover Gilpin. The last named was married, 12 mo., 11, 1794, at Birmingham Meeting, to Hannah Darlington, daughter of Thomas and Hannah (Brinton) Darlington, of East Bradford. They had children, George Fox, Thomas C., Ruth C., Hannah Glover and John Dickinson Gilpin. The last named owned the site of the cave dwelling and the silver candlesticks already mentioned. The land is now owned by Alban Harvey, and is in Delaware county.

11. Isaac, born 1 mo., 23, 1709; died 1745; married 8 mo., 21, 1736, at Concord Meeting, Mary Painter, born 10 mo., 22, 1717; daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Buxcey) Painter, of Birmingham. They settled on a farm in Birmingham, and had two sons who died young, and a daughter Hannah, born 6 mo., 20, 1741, who married James Bennett. The widow was married 2 mo., 20, 1748, to Benjamin Way, who appears to have settled on the land of her first husband until 1758, when they went to Kemett and both died soon after.

12. Moses, born 1 mo., 8, 1711; married 9 mo., 10, 1742, at Concord Meeting, Ann Buffington, widow of Thomas Buffington, of East Caln. It is thought they had no children.

13. Alice, born 10 mo., 7, 1714; married 2 mo., 11, 1739, at Concord Meeting, Richard Eavenson, born 3 mo., 3, 1718, son of Richard and Jemima (Newlin) Eavenson, of Thornbury. They resided for ten years in Goshen and then returned to Thornbury. Their children were Esther, Enoch, Hannah, Thomas and Isaac.

14. Mary, born 11 mo., 16, 1716; died 4 mo., 17, 1806; married 8 mo., 27, 1736, at Concord Meeting, Philip Taylor, son of Philip and Ann (Conway) Taylor, of Thornbury. About 1739 they settled in Newlin township, but about 1760 returned to Thornbury, where he died 3 mo., 1762. They had children, Philip, Stephen, Hannah, John, Ann, Phebe, Lydia, Mary, Ruth and Rachel. The widow married a second husband, George Stroke, of East Bradford, about 1768, and ten years later was again left a widow.

15. Esther, born 1 mo., 9, 1718; died 1 mo., 10, 1795; married 6 mo., 5, 1741, Samuel Painter, son of Samuel and Elizabeth Painter, of Birmingham. They settled in East Bradford (now Birmingham) and had children, James, George, Joseph, Samuel, Thomas, Hannah and Lydia.

Children of Joseph (8) and Mary Gilpin.

16. Ruth, born 10 mo., 23, 1730; married 1 mo., 20, 1751, Daniel Stubbs, and had twelve children.

17. Vincent, born 10 mo., 8, 1732; died 8 mo., 5, 1810; married 12 mo., 6, 1758, Abigail Woodward, born 6 mo., 29, 1738; died 11 mo., 10, 1815; daughter of Edward and Sarah (Sharpless) Woodward, of Middletown. Soon after marriage they settled on the Brandywine, above Wilmington, now a part of the Dupont estate, and built or enlarged a flour mill, where he remained many years, sending flour to Wilmington and shipping considerable quantities to the West Indies. He was at different times part owner of several of the vessels trading from Wilmington. The brig "Nancy," which was the first vessel to hoist the American flag in the West Indies, and possibly in any foreign port, was partly owned by Vincent Gilpin and named for his daughter Ann. For an account of this and her being chased ashore by English cruisers and blown up, see "Reminiscences of Wilmington," by Elizabeth Montgomery. A rather amusing story is told at his expense. The vessels in which he was interested, taking out flour, etc., brought back, among other products of the West Indies, considerable quantities of molasses and rum. He had a large invoice of the latter stored in Wilmington during the war, at the time the British forces began their march from the Chesapeake toward Philadelphia. Fully expecting them to come by way of Wilmington, he sent his rum for safe keeping to Chester county, and stored it at the old family place, then perhaps in possession of his brother Israel Gilpin, in the very house which was the headquarters of the British commander, General Howe, after the battle of Brandywine.

The children of Vincent and Abigail Gilpin were Edward, the grandfather of John R. Gilpin, of West Chester; Ann, married to John Ferris; Hannah, William, James, Aratus, William (2d), and Gertrude.

18. Orpha, born 7 mo., 15, 1734; married 10 mo., 23, 1754, Joseph Shallcross, and settled in Wilmington.

19. Nun, born 9 mo., 10, 1736; died in childhood.

20. Gideon, born 10 mo., 4, 1738; died 8 mo., 20, 1825; married 12 mo., 1, 1762, at Centre Meeting, Sarah Gregg, born 1743; died 11 mo., 21, 1801; daughter of Samuel and Ann Gregg, of Christiana Hundred. They settled in Birmingham, near Chadds' Ford, where he kept tavern from 1778 to 1789. He was disowned by Friends, 1 mo., 6, 1779, for taking the test of allegiance to the Revolutionary government and setting up a tavern. For these he made an acknowledgment and was admitted again into membership, 7 mo., 9, 1788. He married a second wife, Susanna Hoopes, a widow, 11 mo., 11, 1807, who died 10 mo., 14, 1823. Just before the battle of Brandywine his house was used as headquarters by Lafayette, who, upon a visit to the scene in 1825, found the old man upon his death-bed and greeted him with affectionate sympathy. By his first wife Gideon Gilpin had children, Bernard, Samuel, Alban, Hannah, Joshua, Lydia, Joseph and Ann.

21. Israel, born 8 mo., 1, 1740; died 7 mo., 4, 1834; married January 12, 1765, Elizabeth Hannum, and removed to Boone county, Kentucky.

22. Betty, born 8 mo., 3, 1742; married October 25, 1764, at the Swedes' church, Wilmington, to William Cleaney. They had ten children.

23. William, born 9 mo., 1, 1744; perhaps died unmarried.

24. Hannah, born 2 mo., 14, 1746; married 11 mo., 23, 1769, at Centre Meeting, John Grubb, and had seven children. She died 12 mo., 4, 1823.

25. Joseph, born 1 mo., 23, 1748; died 1826; married a widowed daughter of Captain Giles, and removed to Boone county, Kentucky.

26. Thomas, born 1 mo., 11, 1750; died 1802; married September 12, 1772, at Swedes' church, Lydia Rice; married again, August 29, 1777, to Sarah (or Mercy) Gray, and a third time, 1802, to Sarah Council. He had thirteen children.

27. Mary, born 4 mo., 12, 1752; died 10 mo., 2, 1821; married 10 mo., 19, 1774, at Centre Meeting, Adam Williamson, of Brandywine Hundred, and had eight children.

OGDEN FAMILY. David Ogden came from England as an unmarried man, in company with William Penn, on the "Welcome," which arrived at New Castle, on the Delaware, 10 mo., 27, 1682. He brought a certificate from Friends in London, dated 21st of 11th month, 1681-2, of which a memorandum was kept by Friends in Philadelphia, though it is supposed by some that his residence had been in some other part of England,—perhaps in Lancashire. He settled for a time in Philadelphia, but having removed to Chester county and found one whom he wished to make his lifelong companion, he requested a certificate of his clearness from other engagements from his friends in that city.

"At a mo'ths meeting at Chesty^e 4th of 11 moth 1685: David Ogden of y^e afores^d County & Martha Holston of y^e same proposed their intencons of marriage before y^e mens & womens meeting it being y^e first time John Boiter and Robert Burrow are desired by y^e meeting to inquire conc: his clearnes & Elizabeth Malin & frances Barnett to inquire conc: her clearnes & so to report to y^e next months meeting."

They appeared the second time, 1st mo., 1, 1685-6, and were given liberty to accomplish their marriage, which was doubtless done in the same month. She was the daughter of John and Ann Houlston, of Edgmont. David and Martha settled in Middletown on a tract of two hundred acres, surveyed 27th of 4 mo., 1684, by virtue of a warrant dated 29th of 12 mo., 1683. It was adjoining lands of John Hodskinson and Oswin Musgrave, and immediately south of the Friends' Meeting House. David died 8 mo., 22, 1705, and his widow married a second husband, James Thomas, of Whiteland, in 1710. David and Martha Ogden had nine children:

1. Jonathan, b. 2 mo., 19, 1687; d. 1727; m. Ann Robinson.

2. Martha, b. 5 mo., 23, 1689; probably died unmarried.

3. Sarah, b. 9 mo., 3, 1691; m. Evan Howell and William Surman.

4. Nehemiah, b. 10 mo., 15, 1693; d. 4 mo., 14, 1781.

5. Samuel, b. 10 mo., 30, 1695; d. 11 mo., 14, 1748; m. Esther Lownes.

6. John, b. 5 mo., 4, 1698; d. 2 mo., 6, 1742; m. Hannah Davis.

7. Aaron, b. 3 mo., 31, 1700. No further record.

8. Hannah, b. 6 mo., 22, 1702; m. Joseph Hayes, 1724.

9. Stephen, b. 11 mo., 12, 1705; d. 9 mo., 16, 1760. See below.

Stephen Ogden, last named, was married "by a priest" about 1743, to Hannah Surman, born 2 mo., 5, 1722; died 10 mo., 10, 1783; daughter of William and Mary (Barnes) Surman. They resided in Springfield township, and had nine children:

10. Nehemiah, b. 2 mo., 12, 1744; d. 8 mo., 28, 1752.

11. John, b. 12 mo., 31, 1746; d. 5 mo., 23, 1825; m. Sarah Crozer.

12. Stephen, b. 9 mo., 8, 1748; d. 10 mo., 13, 1776, unmarried.

13. Mary, b. 10 mo., 11, 1750; d. 9 mo., 5, 1809; m. Edward Horne.

14. Hannah, b. 8 mo., 21, 1752; d. 4 mo., 17, 1822; m. Philip Bonsall.

15. Aaron, b. 7 mo., 9, 1754; m. Esther Preston.

16. Martha, b. 10 mo., 20, 1756; m. James Arnold.

17. Jonathan.

18. Abigail, b. 10 mo., 27, 1760; d. 6 mo., 15, 1842; m. Seth Pancoast and Israel Roberts.

John Ogden (11) was married 4 mo., 15, 1773, at Springfield Meeting, to Sarah Crozer, born 11 mo., 9, 1747; d. 8 mo., 23, 1822; daughter of James Crozer and Mary Gleave his wife, of Springfield. They resided in Springfield, near the present Swarthmore, where he was a farmer, and had seven children:

19. Elizabeth, b. 1 mo., 17, 1774; d. 7 mo., 30, 1828; m. Jacob Jackson.

20. Mary, b. 8 mo., 28, 1775; d. 11 mo., 23, 1842, unmarried.

21. James, b. 1 mo., 29, 1778; d. 1862, unmarried.

22. Eliza, b. 10 mo., 31, 1779; d. 2 mo., 16, 1865, unmarried.

23. Hannah, b. 12 mo., 5, 1781; d. 9 mo., 2, 1863, unmarried.

24. Martha, b. 10 mo., 12, 1783; d. 1874; m. David Longstreth.

John Ogden

25. John, b. 7 mo., 27, 1788; d. 9 mo., 30, 1877; m. Hannah Worrall.

John Ogden (25) was born in Springfield township, reared to agricultural pursuits, received a good education in the schools of that day, and for a time taught school in what is known as the Home School House. He was married 10 mo., 8, 1813, at Providence Meeting, to Hannah Worrall, born 5 mo., 14, 1794; died 4 mo., 7, 1874; daughter of John and Hannah (Thatcher) Worrall, of Middletown. In 1814 he came into possession of a farm of one hundred and twenty acres, purchased by his father from Captain Gardiner, 3 mo., 26, 1806, with an old stone dwelling thereon, and followed farming the remainder of his life. He added to his landed possessions by purchasing adjoining property as opportunity offered, until he owned five hundred acres of valuable land. He and his wife lived together on this farm for sixty-one years, and his death occurred at the age of eighty-nine years. He had ten children:

26. James Henry, b. 8 mo., 15, 1814; d. 8 mo., 4, 1888; m. Martha Humphreys Lewis.

27. William, b. 9 mo., 25, 1816; d. 9 mo., 1881; m. Mary H. Rhoads.

28. John W., b. 9 mo., 9, 1818; m. Susanna H. Rhoads.

29. Samuel C., b. 12 mo., 27, 1820; d. 7 mo., 23, 1862; m. Mary Ann Beatty.

30. Stephen, b. 11 mo., 28, 1822; d. 4 mo., 27, 1864; m. Hannah Palmer Bartram.

31. Sarah Crozer, b. 4 mo., 20, 1825; d. 10 mo., 1827.

32. Richard T., b. 10 mo., 27, 1827. See below.

33. Mary Elizabeth, b. 5 mo., 4, 1829; living in Media, Pennsylvania, unmarried.

34. Charles Gleave, b. 4 mo., 19, 1831; d. 4 mo., 21, 1900; m. Anna Margaret Taylor.

35. Clement, b. 9 mo., 14, 1832; d. 3 mo., 12, 1886, unmarried.

Richard Thatcher Ogden (32) was born at the old homestead, in Springfield, purchased by his grandfather from Captain Gardiner, and completed his education at Joseph Strode's Boarding School in East Bradford township. After leaving school he engaged in the milling business for his uncle George Lewis for one year, and then entered the mercantile business with his brother William, under the firm name of W. & R. T. Ogden. This firm continued in business for ten years, when William retired, and Richard T. carried it on for fifteen years longer, when he sold out and engaged in the manufacture of woolen and cotton goods in West Philadelphia, in which he continued for a quarter of a century. In 1885 he settled at the old homestead, Swarthmore, after an absence of thirty-seven years, where he still resides. He has served as a director of the First National Bank of Media, and of the Media Building Association; is a stockholder in the Charter National Bank of Media, and a life member and trustee of the Springfield Free Drinking Fountain Association; was postmaster of Oakdale from 1860 to 1880; a member of the first borough council of Swarthmore, and one of the organizers of the West Hill Land Company. He has been an earnest and active Prohibitionist.

He was married, 10 mo., 24, 1882, to Ellen Cadwallader Hoopes, daughter of Mifflin and Ellen (Sharpless) Cadwalader, of Columbiana county, Ohio, and widow of Samuel Gibbons Hoopes, of New Brighton, Pennsylvania, by whom she has a daughter Jessie Lydia Hoopes, but no children by her present husband.

JOHN HERBERT OGDEN, a member of the firm of the Sharpless Dyewood and Extract Company, of Philadelphia, with offices in the Bourse building, was born in Philadelphia, January 28, 1858, his parents being John Worrall and Hannah (Rhoads) Ogden. His paternal grandfather was John Ogden, in whose honor he was named.

John Herbert Ogden attained his early education in the public schools, and later became a student in the Friends' School in Providence, Rhode Island, which was then under the superintendence of Professor Albert Smiley, a noted educator. Subsequently Mr. Ogden was sent to a business college in Philadelphia, where he received complete training for commercial life, and was graduated with honors. In 1876, after the completion of his education, he entered the service of the Sharpless Dyewood and Extract Company in the capacity of entry clerk, and filled the position so satisfactorily and capably that when a vacancy occurred in the office staff he was promoted from time to time, and has been advanced until at the present he is one of the directors of the company and a stockholder in the enterprise.

In politics Mr. Ogden has always been a Republican, recognized as a leading representative of the party, and in 1900 he was one of the delegates to the national convention which was held in Philadelphia, and which nominated William McKinley for the presidency.

On the 20th of October, 1886, Mr. Ogden was united in marriage to Louise Passmore, born 12 mo., 14, 1860, of Paschallville, Chester county, Pennsylvania, a daughter of John and Mary Passmore, and unto them have been born four children: Harold P., born 9 mo., 27, 1887; Susanna R., born 11 mo., 24, 1890; Mary L., born 1 mo., 3, 1893; H. Raymond, born 8 mo., 28, 1895.

HOMER E. HOOPES. The Hoopes family, which numbers among its members some of the most highly respected citizens of Pennsylvania, has been for more than a century and a half represented in Delaware county. The family history may be traced through the following generations:

Abraham Hoopes (1), who was probably the emigrant ancestor, married Mary Williamson. The name of Hoopes would seem to indicate an English origin, and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary in regard to the founder of the family in America it appears safe to assume that England was his native land.

Isaac Hoopes (2), son of Abraham (1) and Mary (Williamson) Hoopes, was born 4 mo., 15, 1744, in Edgmont township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, and in 1769 married Mary, born 10 mo., 21, 1751, daughter of Nathan and Rachel (Williamson) Griffith, of Goshen. They were second cousins and both members of Friends' Meeting, but for some reason were married by a magistrate. Their children were: Eli, Phœbe, Sarah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Rachel, Mary, Debe, and Sidney. In 1787 Isaac Hoopes was assessed in Edgmont with eighty-three acres of land, and then or later resided on what is known as the Baldwin-Howard farm. In 1807 Isaac and his son Abraham purchased from William Hayman a farm of one hundred and twelve acres in East Goshen, half a mile east of Milltown, and, by division, Isaac owned sixty-two acres at the time of his death. This event took place in East Goshen, 3 mo., 4, 1815, his wife having passed away a few days before, 2 mo., 26, 1815.

Abraham Hoopes (3), son of Isaac (2) and Mary (Griffith) Hoopes, was born 12 mo., 13, 1775, in Edgmont, and was a chairmaker by trade. He also engaged in farming, and in addition to fifty acres of the tract bought in conjunction with his father he subsequently obtained thirty acres more. His health failing, he sold this property, in 1820, to Jacob Minster, and retired to a small place in Westtown, adjoining the north-west corner of the Boarding School property, where he passed the remainder of his life. He married Sidney, born 11 mo., 13, 1792, in Westtown, daughter of Benjamin and Rebecca (Ravenson) Jones, of that place. They had five children: Lydia Ann, who died young; Mary Ann, who married David Garrett; Rachel, who married Joshua Jefferis; Walker Yarnall; and John J. Abraham Hoopes died in Westtown, 8 mo., 19, 1823, and in 1834 his widow married Benjamin Sharpless, of Birmingham, and died in that place 2 mo., 24, 1877.

Walker Yarnall Hoopes (4), son of Abraham (3) and Sidney (Jones) Hoopes, was born in East Goshen, 4 mo., 22, 1816. He opened a store at Lima, in Middletown township, which he conducted for more than thirty years. About 1858 he became a member of the banking house of Broomall, Fairlamb & Hoopes, of Media. Later the house became that of Fairlamb & Hoopes, then for a short time of Hoopes alone, and finally of Hoopes & Newbold. About 1889 he withdrew from this firm and became a director of the First National Bank of Media, in which he continued to take a great interest. After his removal to Media he was a regular attendant of Providence Meeting. He married, 9 mo., 26, 1839, Hannah G., born 6 mo., 9, 1816, daughter of Homer and Lydia (Green) Eachus, of Edgmont. They were the parents of five children:

1. Mary Elizabeth, born 4 mo., 22, 1841; died 2 mo., 1, 1844.

2. Hannah E., born 1 mo., 23, 1843; died 9 mo., 27, 1886, unmarried.

3. Mary Emma, born 1 mo., 30, 1847; died 1 mo., 2, 1857.

4. Homer Eachus, born at Lima, 6 mo., 13, 1848. In 1863 he succeeded his father in the store at Lima, which he conducted till 1871, when he gave up business there and located in Media. Shortly afterward he opened a store which he sold in 1876, and in the fall of that year entered business in Philadelphia under the name of Green & Hoopes, which he continued until 1888. He then retired and at once became connected with the First National Bank of Media, in which he held almost all the positions and was the cashier for two years. He is still connected with the bank, but is practically retired from business in an active way. He is an amateur photographer of rare skill, and with his wife has traveled extensively throughout the United States. He married 2 mo., 6, 1873, in Philadelphia, Ida, born in that city, 7 mo., 29, 1851, daughter of Abel and Mary Margaret (DeHart) Lodge, of Philadelphia. They have no children.

5. Sidney, born at Lima, 1 mo., 12, 1853, married in Philadelphia, 3 mo., 1, 1887, John Henry, born in West Chester, 3 mo., 30, 1848, son of Samuel Watson and Rebecca (Entriken) Evans, of Philadelphia, where for several years he was engaged in business as a druggist. They reside in Media, at 310 South Orange street, the late home of her father, and have one child: Homer Hoopes Evans, born in Philadelphia, 11 mo., 25, 1889.

Mrs. Hoopes, the mother of these children, died in Media, 2 mo., 24, 1885, and her husband passed away at the same place, 12 mo., 2, 1895.

JOHN HENRY EVANS, a prominent citizen of Media, Pennsylvania, is a worthy representative of a family that claims for its immigrant ancestor, Nathan Evans, great-grandfather of John H. Evans, who reared a family of children among whom was a son named Septimus Evans, grandfather of John H. Evans.

Septimus Evans, a descendant of the Celtic race of ancient Britons, married Catherine Haupt, a member of an honorable German family, residents of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Their first child was Jacob, deceased; Henry S., second child, was born in Doylestown, Pennsylvania, April 1, 1813. He was apprenticed to Hon. Charles Miner, at the early age of thirteen to learn the printing trade. In 1834 he became the proprietor of the "Village Record," published at West Chester, which was formerly the property of Hon. Charles Miner, and under the efficient management of Mr. Evans the paper grew in circulation and influence until it became the leading country paper of the state. In 1846 he was elected by the Whigs to represent Chester county in the house of representatives of Pennsylvania, and was re-elected the succeeding two years. In the session of 1849 he was the Whig candidate for speaker, the house being composed of forty-seven Whigs, fifty Democrats, and three "Native Americans." In 1851 he was elected state senator from the district composed of Chester and Delaware counties, and at the expiration of his term was renominated by the Whigs of Chester county, but owing to certain reasons withdrew his name from the list of candidates. In 1854 he was a prominent candidate for the Whig nomination for governor. While serving in the house and senate he was a member of several of the most important committees, serving as chairman of the house committee on printing and education. As a citizen he took a prominent part in every public enterprise, and was the incumbent of several minor public offices, such as chief Burgess of West Chester, guardian, and trustee. In 1841 he married Jane Darlington, daughter of Dr. William Darlington, the celebrated botanist, by whom he had the following named children: Henry, deceased; Barton D., married Fanny D. Bemis, and they are the parents of one child, Betty Evans; Catherine, deceased; William D., married Lucy Messersmith, and their two children are Henry S. and Georgina Messersmith; Florence L., unmarried; Henrietta, wife of Joseph Borden, and mother of one child, and Septimus Evans, deceased. Henry S. Evans, father of these children, died February 9, 1872, during his term of state senator, to which office he was elected in 1870, from the district composed of Chester, Delaware and Montgomery counties. The other children of Septimus Evans were: 3. Palmyra C., deceased; 4. Eliza, deceased; 5. Sarah, wife of Dr. William Newton; 6. Samuel W., father of John Henry Evans; 7. Mary S., wife of Charles Pennock, and they are the parents of five children; 8. Columbus Penn, born in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, September 6, 1824.

The father of these children died when Columbus Penn was about nine years of age, and two years later he accompanied his widowed mother, Mrs. Catherine (Haupt) Evans, to West Chester, where at an early age he was apprenticed to his brother, Henry S. Evans, to learn the printing business in the office of the "Village Record," having for his associates Bayard Taylor, Enos Prizer, George W. Vernon, Charles Cook, Hiram Brower, and Frederick E. Foster. In January, 1844, Columbus P. Evans removed to Wilmington, Delaware, where in partnership with George W. Vernon he assumed control of the Republican newspaper. In the spring of 1847 he engaged in the contest with Mexico, was commissioned a second lieutenant, being promoted to a first lieutenant the following February, and on August 20, 1847, received the brevet of captain for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco. He served in the Eleventh Regiment, United States Infantry, in General Cadwallader's brigade. On February 20, 1849, Captain Evans was presented by the Legislature of his adopted state with a handsome sword, accompanied by a letter from Governor Tharp in recognition of his services in the war with Mexico. In 1851 he was elected to the position of mayor of Wilmington, but declined to allow his name to be used as a candidate the following year. His death occurred February 19, 1854, in the thirtieth year of his age, at the residence of his sisters in West Chester. His remains were interred in Oakland cemetery, the service being conducted with military honors by the National Guards of West Chester.

Samuel W. Evans, father of John H. Evans, was united in marriage to Rebecca Entriken, a native of Coatesville, Pennsylvania. Their children were: Howard, who married Emma Gaston Guest, and they are the parents of two children: Catherine; John Henry, who married Sidney Hoopes, and one child has been born to them, Homer Evans; Edward P., deceased; Sarah A., unmarried; William W., unmarried, and Rebecca E., unmarried. Samuel S. Evans married Lizzie E. Miller, and they are the parents of one child, Dorothy Evans.

JOAQUIN BISHOP MATLACK, proprietor of the J. Bishop Company Platinum Manufacturing business men of Chester county, Pennsylvania, was born in the township of Willistown, November 19, 1868, a descendant of an old and honored English ancestry.

Joel Matlack, great-grandfather of Joaquin B. Matlack, as far as could be ascertained was a native of East Goshen township, and was an active participant in the war of 1812, being stationed at Camp Marcus Hook. He married and reared a family. One of his sons, John K. Matlack, was born in West Goshen township, March 2, 1814. He followed the occupation of farming in West Chester, and continued this line of industry up to two years prior to his death, which occurred in the year 1892. He was survived by three sons and one daughter.

Wilson M. Matlack, son of John K. and Hannah (Miles) Matlack, was born December 16, 1840, and his education was acquired in the common and private schools of West Chester. On June 9, 1861, he enlisted for the defence of the Union as a member of Company A, First Pennsylvania Reserves, and served in the Army of the Potomac until June 13, 1864, when he received an honorable discharge. He participated in some of the most terrific battles and arduous campaigns, and in all displayed the qualities of the true soldier and patriot. In 1873 he enlisted in the National Guard of Pennsylvania, and served five years in that organization. In his political affiliations he is a staunch Republican, has served several terms as justice of the peace in Willistown township, and has been frequently chosen as a member of the Republican county committee.

Mr. Matlack was united in marriage to Angelina Bishop, and three sons and three daughters were born to them. Mrs. Matlack is one of four daughters born to Joaquin and Susannah (O'Neil) Bishop, the former named being born in Portugal, where his father was then director of the royal fabrics, in 1806. The French war drove his father from Portugal, and he then settled in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where the son learned the trade of brass finisher. Later he was employed as an instrument maker at the University of Pennsylvania. In 1839 he commenced to work in platinum, and six years later was awarded the first premium for platinum work done in this country, at the exhibition of the Franklin Institute. In 1858 he removed to Radnor, Delaware county, but eight years later he located his plant at Sugartown, and continued business under the firm name of J. Bishop & Company up to the time of his decease, which occurred August 4, 1886. Mr. Bishop was the founder of the platinum working industry in the United States, and in 1876 he was the only exhibitor of platinum work at the Centennial International Exhibition, and received the first premium for manufactured platinum vessels and apparatus.

Joaquin B. Matlack, son of Wilson M. and Angelina Matlack, attended the public and Friends' Schools in Sugartown, and at an early age was employed in connection with the platinum manufacturing business of the firm of J. Bishop & Company. He retained his association with this enterprise, and on the death of his maternal grandfather, Joaquin Bishop, he inherited his interest in the business, and from 1886 to May, 1902, he had for his partner Edwin T. Cox, who was a member of the firm until the time of his decease, on May 20, 1902. The platinum plant of the firm was then at Sugartown, in Willistown township, six miles from West Chester, and three miles from Malvern Station, on the Pennsylvania Railroad. On January 30, 1903, the works were destroyed by fire, and the firm moved to Malvern, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where they erected a new and modern plant with improved facilities for carrying on their works. On January 1, 1903, a new partnership was formed, consisting of Joaquin B. Matlack, Charles H. Kerk, and William W. Matlack. Their operations cover the refining of gold and silver, and the manufacture of platinum apparatus, comprising dishes, crucibles, capsules, stills, wire, foil, cones, tubes, bottles, and in fact all platinum appliances for chemical laboratory use. Their products are also used extensively in the electrical and dental trade. The platinum wares manufactured by this firm are the best it is possible to produce, and rank with the best wares of European makers.

Politically Mr. Matlack is a Republican, and has served his township in the capacity of school director. He is prominently identified with the Sons of America. On May 20, 1891, Mr. Matlack married Kate Dutton, a daughter of Henry Dutton, of East Goshen township. Their children are: Erma R., Elma D., and Miriam B. Matlack. The family are regular attendants at the Methodist Episcopal church, in which Mr. Matlack served as steward.

"Mary Thompson daughter of John Thompson by Jane his wife was borne in Ireland in the County and parrish Afforesaid the 25th day of the 10th month 1675.

"In the yeare 1677 the said John Thompson transported himselfe with wife and his Afforesaid four Children and one man servant named William Hall, from Ireland to the Province of West new Jersey in America; they set saile on the 16 day of the 9 month in the ship called the Mary of dublin, John Wall being master, and landed at Elsinburgh in the Province of west new Jersey in America the 22 of the 12 month following."

The foregoing is entered on the records of Salem Meeting, New Jersey, where there is a similar statement in behalf of Andrew Thompson, born 1637, a brother to John Thompson, who on the 11th of the 7th month, 1664, took to wife Isabel Marshall, daughter of Humphrey Marshall, born in Sielby, in Leicestershire. Andrew and Isabel, with their children, Elizabeth, William and Andrew, accompanied his brother John in the voyage to this country.

John Thompson appears to have married a second wife, Sarah, widow of Robert Fairbanks, in 1679, but there is no evidence that he had any children by her. His will was made at "Elsenborough in the County of Salem in the Western Division of new Jersey," on the 24th of 6th month, 1715. Of his children by his first wife, Thomas married Rebecca Brassey, 1690; Ann married John Mason, 1693, and Mary married Richard Woodmutt.

James Thompson, son of John, was married about the 8th month (October) 1700, to Ann Hollingsworth, daughter of Valentine and Ann (Calvert) Hollingsworth, of Brandywine Hundred, New Castle county, on the Delaware. She was born at Belleniskerannell, county Armagh, Ireland, 10 mo., 28, 1680. James died about the beginning of the year 1712, at Elsinborough, while his father was yet living. He had five children: Jane, b. 9 mo., 28, 1702; Ann, b. 1 mo., 5, 1704-5; John, b. 8 mo., 18, 1707; Elizabeth, b. 12 mo., 3, 1709; James, b. 8 mo., 26, 1712. Their grandfather devised to John the homestead of two hundred and twenty acres, but if the latter died in his minority it was to become the property of his younger brother, James.

James Thompson, last named, when of age removed to Leacock township, Lancaster county, for a short time. He was married 3 mo., 22, 1735, at New Garden Meeting, to Sarah Worsley, born 4 mo., 3, 1717; daughter of Daniel and Sarah Worsley, of New Castle county. He now changed his residence to Mill Creek Hundred, and after the death of his first wife was married 4 mo., 10, 1742, to Elizabeth Hadley, daughter of Joseph and Amy (Gregg) Hadley, of Mill Creek. By his first wife he had three and by the second seven children, as follows:

Grace, b. 3 mo., 9, 1736; m. Moses Pennoek, 1 mo., 17, 1765.

Daniel, b. 11 mo., 16, 1737; see forward.

Ann, b. 10 mo., 7, 1739; died young.

James, b. 1 mo., 10, 1743; m. Martha Chambers, 11 mo., 6, 1766.

Sarah, b. 9 mo., 29, 1744; m. Samuel Chambers, 5 mo., 21, 1766.

Amy, b. 2 mo., 8, 1746; m. Joseph Chambers, 5 mo., 21, 1767.

John, b. 4 mo., 29, 1752; probably died unmarried.

Ann, b. 12 mo., 13, 1754; m. Caleb Pennoek, 5 mo., 9, 1776.

Joseph, b. 10 mo., 13, 1756; m. Hannah Hutton, 3 mo., 19, 1778.

Elizabeth, b. 6 mo., 14, 1760; m. Evan Thomas.

Three of these, James, Sarah and Joseph, removed with their families to North Carolina.

Daniel Thompson, the oldest son, was married 10 mo., 25, 1764, at New Garden Meeting, to Elizabeth Chambers, born 5 mo., 14, 1743; daughter of William and Elizabeth (Miller) Chambers, of White Clay Creek Hundred, New Castle county. They continued to reside in Mill Creek and had nine children:

William, b. 8 mo., 22, 1765; d. 1 mo., 20, 1844; m. Hannah Hadley and Mary Barnard; settled in New Garden township.

James, b. 7 mo., 10, 1768; d. 7 mo., 29, 1846; m. Mary Scarlett.

Eli, b. 10 mo., 14, 1770; d. 4 mo., 19, 1840; see below.

Deborah, b. 1 mo., 24, 1773; died unmarried.

Sarah, b. 2 mo., 18, 1775; m. Amos Greenfield and Caleb Wickersham.

John, b. 5 mo., 17, 1777; m. Elizabeth Reed.

Elizabeth, b. 11 mo., 5, 1779; m. Thomas Gawthrop.

Daniel, b. 3 mo., 10, 1782; m. Jane Gawthrop.

Joshua, b. 5 mo., 20, 1786; m. Mary Wilson and Phebe Hadley.

Eli Thompson, son of Daniel and Elizabeth, of Mill Creek, was married 4 mo., 11, 1798, at Londongrove Meeting, to Elizabeth Wilson, born 7 mo., 16, 1777; died 3 mo., 11, 1803; daughter of Ephraim and Elizabeth (Johnson) Wilson, of Londongrove. They settled in White Clay Creek and after her death he married, 6 mo., 19, 1806, at New Garden Meeting, Sarah Scarlett, daughter of John and Mary (Dixon) Scarlett, of New Garden. By his first wife he had two children:

Joel, b. 6 mo., 2, 1799; d. 7 mo., 20, 1874; see below.

Daniel, b. 3 mo., 13, 1801; d. 7 mo., 25, 1868; m. Beulah C. Hughes.

By his second wife, Eli had a daughter Mary, b. 5 mo., 15, 1810, who married Jeremiah Starr, of New Garden.

Joel Thompson, son of Eli and Elizabeth, was married 3 mo., 11, 1824, at what was known as Spencer's Meeting, in New London, to Rachel Spencer, born 6 mo., 14, 1803; died 2 mo., 24, 1851; daughter of Joseph and Rebecca (Good) Spencer, of New London township. They settled in New Garden township, but after the death of his first wife he married Mary (Hickman) Matlack, a widow, and resided in West Chester, where he died. By his first wife he had five children: Eli, mentioned hereinafter; Sarah, born 5 mo., 21, 1827, married Francis Good; Rebecca S., born 5 mo., 1, 1830; married Mordecai Taylor; Spencer, born 1 mo., 19, 1833, married Annie Craft; Wilson, born 9 mo., 30, 1837; married Clara Baird.

Eli Thompson, eldest son of Joel Thompson, was born 4 mo., 15, 1825, on the farm now the property of I. Frank Chandler, near Toughkenamon, and after completing his education at the Friends' Boarding School, in Westtown, he followed farming at the home place for several years, then took what is now the Bartram farm in West Marlborough, and later spent eleven years on the Benjamin Swayne estate, beautifully located in the vicinity of London Grove Meeting-house. About twenty years ago he purchased eight acres of land in Kennett Square, erected a substantial home thereon, and became identified with the public life of the town. He served for six years in the borough council, and for some time as street commissioner. While a resident of London Grove he served a number of years as a school director, always manifested a keen interest in the moral and intellectual improvement of his neighborhood, and was a constant attendant at the services of the Society of Friends. Upon his removal to Kennett Square he was observant of that advice of the discipline of the Friends' meeting, which recommends that the members should early request the removal of their right of membership to the meeting they regularly attend, that they may be of service in filling the positions required. He was appointed to the eldership of the Kennett Square Meeting and filled it with feeling; his quiet words of encouragement were helpful and comforting, falling at times as the rain on the dry earth, and a genial and kindly spirit characterized his intercourse with his neighbors and acquaintances.

Eli Thompson married, 10 mo., 29, 1846, Deborah V. Taylor, a daughter of William and Mary (Vernon) Taylor, and they were the parents of a son, Joshua Thompson, born 1 mo., 19, 1848, married, 10 mo., 13, 1870, Annie L. Stackhouse, born 8 mo., 15, 1849, a daughter of Harvey S. and Alice M. (Spencer) Stackhouse, and the issue of this marriage was the following named children: 1. Ella M., born 6 mo., 19, 1871, married, 4 mo., 9, 1892, James Walter, and their children are: Helen F., born 1 mo., 5, 1893; Mary W., born 8 mo., 21, 1895; Joseph H., born 7 mo., 14, 1897; Anna C., born 3 mo., 9, 1899; J. Thompson, born 7 mo., 19, 1901; John Phillips, born 7 mo., 8, 1903; 2. Harvey E., born 4 mo., 21, 1873. 3. Mary D., born 6 mo., 23, 1875, married, 3 mo., 10, 1897, Martin B. Yarnall, and their children are: J. Thompson and William M., twins, born 3 mo., 29, 1898; the mother of these children, Mary D. (Thompson) Yarnall, died 4 mo., 29, 1899. 4. Walter J., born 8 mo., 19, 1877, married, 10 mo., 19, 1899, Emma Whitford, and one child, Louise Walter, born 7 mo., 1903, has brightened their home. 5. Alice N., born 8 mo., 24, 1879. 6. Arthur G., born 9 mo., 30, 1881; 7. Lydia C., born 6 mo., 22, 1889. Deborah V. (Taylor) Thompson died 4 mo., 18, 1848.

On 2 mo., 18, 1852, Mr. Thompson married for his second wife Deborah Swayne, born 8 mo., 13, 1830, a daughter of Enoch and Elizabeth (Chambers) Swayne, and one daughter was the issue of this union: Mary Anna, born 3 mo., 27, 1855; she married William Swayne on 10 mo., 13, 1875, and they were the parents of the following named children: J. Bancroft, born 11 mo., 11, 1877; Thompson E., born 7 mo., 13, 1879; Margaret B., born 7 mo., 9, 1881, who became the wife of Samuel C. Palmer, 8 mo., 6, 1902; Lawrence B., born 1 mo., 6, 1884; and Mary Anna, born 11 mo., 30, 1886, died 1 mo., 1887. Mary Anna (Thompson) Swayne, the mother of the latter named children, died 12 mo., 4, 1884. Eli Thompson died 2 mo., 8, 1903, in his seventy-eighth year. He bore with Christian fortitude and patience his long and suffering illness, and his faithful wife, who has striven to smooth the rough places of his pathway, may truly feel that she has lived up to the spirit of that vow spoken in youth, "Loving and faithful, until death shall separate us."

JOSHUA SHARPLESS, a man of great business ability and one of the most successful agriculturists of London Grove township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a direct lineal descendant of John Sharples, the pioneer ancestor of the family. John Sharples was baptized at Wybunbury, Cheshire, England, August 15, 1624, and married, April 27, 1662, Jane Moor, who was born in the year 1638. In 1682 the family removed to the United States, settling at Chester, Pennsylvania, more than two months prior to the arrival of William Penn. John Sharples had purchased one thousand acres from William Penn, by lease and release of April 4 and 5, 1682, part of which they took up on Ridley Creek, part in Middletown, and part in Nether Providence. Their children were: Phebe, John, Thomas, James, Caleb, Jane and Joseph Sharples. The father of these children died at his home near Chester, Pennsylvania, June 11, 1685, survived by his wife, whose death occurred November 1, 1722.

Joseph Sharples, youngest son of John and Jane Sharples, was born at Hatherton, Cheshire, England, November 28, 1678; was united in marriage at Haverford Meeting, May 31, 1704, to Lydia Lewis, who was born in Glamorganshire, Wales, May 8, 1683. Their children were: Susanna, Joseph, Benjamin, Samuel, Lydia, Nathan, Jane, Abraham, Jacob and William Sharples. Of these the first four were born in Nether Providence and the others in Middletown township, as appears by the family Bible. Joseph Sharples, father of this family, died in Middletown, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, in the spring of 1757, and his widow passed away in the year 1763.

Benjamin Sharples, second son of Joseph and Lydia Sharples, was born in Nether Providence, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, January 26, 1709. By lease and release, dated August 5 and 6, 1734, he purchased three hundred and eighty-seven acres in West Caln township from his uncle Samuel Lewis, to whom it had been patented June 18, 1734. On April 27, 1737, at Concord Meeting, Benjamin Sharples married Edith Broome, a daughter of James Broome, and three children were the issue of this marriage. Mrs. Sharples died August 13, 1744, in the twenty-sixth year of her age, and her remains were interred at Middletown. On May 21, 1746, at Concord Meeting, Mr. Sharples married Martha Mendenhall, who was born February 8, 1724, a daughter of Benjamin and Lydia Mendenhall, of Concord. The following named children were born to Benjamin Sharples by his two marriages: Joseph, Benjamin, Edith, Joshua, Isaac, Rebecca, Martha, Ann, Aaron, Amy, Enoch, Hannah, Esther, Sarah and Samuel. Benjamin Sharples died in Middletown, May 16, 1785, and the death of his widow occurred December 20, 1812.

Joshua Sharples, eldest son of Benjamin and Martha Sharples, was born in Middletown township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, February 28, 1746 or 1747. By deed of May 20, 1769, he purchased one hundred and thirty acres of land in Kennett township; later he purchased a farm of two hundred acres in East Bradford, now Birmingham, and twenty-three acres in Westtown. On February 15, 1768, at Middletown Meeting, Mr. Sharples married Edith Yarnall, who was born May 13, 1743, a daughter of Nathan and Rachel Yarnall, of Edgemont. After her death, which occurred March 18, 1787, he was united in marriage, July 20, 1789, at Concord Meeting, to Ann Trimble, who was born March 19, 1752, and died October 30, 1837. Their children were: Benjamin, Rachel, Nathan, Martha, Edith, Joshua, Isaac, Eli, William and Phebe Sharples. Joshua Sharples and his wives were active and useful members of the Society of Friends, and he was one of the founders of the Birmingham Library, which was organized in 1795. His death occurred in East Bradford, November 21, 1826.

Joshua Sharpless, third son of Joshua and Edith Sharpless, was born in Pennsylvania, August 12, 1779. In the city of Philadelphia, in 1808, he was united in marriage to Philadelphia Drinker, a daughter of Joseph and Hannah Drinker, residents of that city. In early life Joshua Sharpless learned the carpenter trade and settled in what is now West Philadelphia, but about the year 1823 removed to Chester county, and six years later settled on a farm in London Britain township, where his death occurred December 21, 1860. His widow died at the home of her daughter, Hannah, wife of Caleb B. Cope, near Willow Grove, Montgomery county, and both husband and wife were buried at London Britain Meeting. Their children were: George, Edward, Hannah, Mary, Benjamin, and Charles Sharpless.

George Sharpless, eldest son of Joshua and Philadelphia Sharpless, and father of Joshua Sharpless, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, May 5, 1809, was educated in the Westtown Boarding School, and subsequently served a three years apprenticeship at the tanner's trade with Benjamin Swane, of London Grove township. He established a tannery on the old homestead, which he conducted for several years, and in 1853 he removed to the vicinity of Newark, Newcastle county, Delaware, where he conducted agricultural pursuits until 1867, when he turned his time and attention to the management of an extensive creamery. He was a member of the Society of Friends, in which organization he served in the capacity of overseer for many years. On October 13, 1841, at New Garden Meeting, Mr. Sharpless married Amy Chambers, born near Stanton, Delaware, September 5, 1811, a daughter of Joseph and Deborah (Phillips) Chambers, of New Garden township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Their children are: Deborah, Joshua, Lydia, Mary, Joseph C., Edith, and John P. Sharpless. Mr. Sharpless, father of these children, died December 12, 1897, his wife having passed away March 11, 1888.

Joshua Sharpless, eldest son of George and Amy Sharpless, was born in London Britain township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, November 11, 1843. He attended the public schools of Westtown and the private school under the personal supervision of Samuel Harper, and after completing his education he settled on the old tanyard property where he remained for three years. In 1867 he located in Manchester, Delaware, engaged in farming pursuits, but after a three years' residence in that state, he returned to the old homestead in Chester county, Pennsylvania, and remained until 1894. In that year he purchased the old Wilson property in London Grove township, and up to the present time (1903) has conducted extensive operations thereon, making a specialty of dairying. His dairy is well equipped with all modern and improved machinery and appliances and his products, being of a superior quality, find a ready market and prove a very profitable source of income. In politics Mr. Sharpless is an Independent, and in religion a member of the London Grove Friends' Meeting, of which he is overseer.

On June 2, 1875, Mr. Sharpless married Mary Ellen Brown, who was born in New Garden township, Chester county, March 23, 1844, a daughter of Evan and Joanna R. (Taylor) Brown, the former named having been born in New Garden township, April 19, 1808, a son of Thomas Brown, and the latter named was born June 22, 1812, a daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Taylor. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sharpless: Evan B., born June 6, 1876; Bertha, born December 2, 1877; George Walter, born July 27, 1879, and Rowland E., born June 14, 1885.

THE MATTSON FAMILY.—The first ancestor of this family of whom there is any authentic information was Morris Mattson, who settled in what was formerly Chester county, Pennsylvania. His death occurred June 5, 1776, in the sixtieth year of his age, and his remains were interred in the graveyard at St. David's church, near Devon Station, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, and upon his tombstone appears this inscription:

Remember man as you pass by;
As you are now so once was I;
As I am now so you must be;
Therefore think on Eternity.

Mary Mattson, wife of Morris Mattson, died December 18, 1759, in the forty-fifth year of her age, and upon her tombstone appears the following inscription:

My race is run; my life is done;
And I lay under ground;
Entombed in clay until the day,
I hear the trumpet sound.

The children of Morris and Mary Mattson were: Moses, born 5 mo., 9, 1741; Margaret, born 8 mo., 12, 1743; Aaron, born 6 mo., 7, 1745; Elizabeth, born 3 mo., 19, 1747; Levi, born 11 mo., 13, 1749; Sarah, born 9 mo., 24, 1750; Mary, born 5 mo., 6, 1753; Nehemiah, born 5 mo., 6, 1755; Enoch, born 4 mo., 11, 1757; and Rachel, born 7 mo., 4, 1759. The following is a copy of the will of Morris Mattson, made in 1776:

In the name of God, Amen, I, Morris Mattson, of the township of Aston, in the county of Chester, in the province of Pennsylvania, yeoman. Although weak in body, yet of a sound and disposing mind and memory, blessed be God for his infinite mercies and goodness; do think proper to make this my last will and testament in manner and form following:

That is to say principally and first in mind and will is that all my just debts and funeral expenses be paid by my executors hereafter named.

I give unto my dear and loving wife, Margaret, the sum of one hundred pounds money of Pennsylvania to be paid unto her by my executors hereafter named in one year after my decease, also I give unto her my said wife for term of life my lodging room and the bed, bedstead and bedding therein, also the cellar beneath the same, together with my large Bible, with the keeping of one Cow and Horse, both winter and summer, also for to have her firewood cut and hauled to the door, likewise to have the just quantity of ten bushels of wheat yearly and every year during her natural life, and further, to have one peck of flax seed sowed, also six apple trees, such as she shall choose in my orchard, and $\frac{1}{4}$ of my garden, together with the privilege of the well and oven, all which is to arise from my plantation that I now live on, and it is my will and I positive order it, that these last bequests is to be taken by her in lieu of her dower or thirds of all my estate, both real and personal, further I give and bequeath unto my son Levi Mattson all this farm, plantation or tract of land, whereon I now dwell to him and to his heirs and assigns forever, he paying unto my three grandchildren, Mary, Phebe and William, children of my son Moses Mattson, the sum of thirty pounds when they arrive at a mature age, to be equally divided among them share and share alike, and also for to pay unto his brother Moses Mattson the sum of seventy pounds of like money aforesaid in one year after my death and further, he, the said Levi, is for to pay unto his brother Aaron Mattson out of said land the sum of one hundred pounds money of Pennsylvania in one full year after my decease, moreover my mind and will is that my son Levi Mattson is to pay unto his two other brothers, Nehemiah and Enoch Mattson, out of said land aforesaid, the sum of one hundred pounds of like money aforesaid in one year after my decease to be equally divided between them. I give unto my son Nehemiah Mattson all that tenement or lot of land where Hugh Kerigan now dwells, containing about ten acres which formerly belonged unto Joseph McCloskey, together with one acre of Meadow ground out of my meadow to hold unto him the said Nehemiah and to his heirs and assigns forever.

I give unto my other son Enoch Mattson all that piece or parcel of land where John Mattson now dwells, containing about sixty acres whom I purchased of George Pierce, together with two acres of meadow ground to be taken out of my own meadow by the creek, which three acres I desire may be taken out together to hold to him my said son Enoch and to his heirs and assigns forever.

My will is and I order it that all my wearing apparel be equally divided among my five sons, that is to say, Moses, Aaron, Levi, Nehemiah and Enoch, share and share alike.

I give unto my five daughters, that is to say; Margaret Vernon, Elizabeth Patterson, Sarah Mattson, Mary Rattew and Rachel Mattson, the sum of one hundred and fifty-five pounds, money of Pennsylvania which I allow to be equally divided among my said five daughters aforesaid, share and share alike, excepting the sum of five pounds which I give unto my daughter Margaret Vernon for her former tenderness and kindness to me, these last legacies I give unto my said daughter and to their heirs forever to be paid in one full year after my death out of my estate.

The reversion and remainder of my estate, if any there be, my will is that it be equally divided among all my children.

I nominate, constitute and appoint my dear and loving sons Aaron and Levi Mattson, both of the township of Aston, in the county of Chester, to be my whole and sole executors of this, my last will and testament, making void all other former wills or testaments made by me.

As witness my hand this 21st day of May, 1776.

MORRIS MATTSON, [SEAL.]

Signed, sealed, pronounced and declared by the said Morris Mattson as his last will in the presence of us

JAMES LINDSEY,
JOHN BARNET.

(Wrote before signed, my will is that my clock may not be moved but stand and remain in the house.)

Levi Mattson, fifth child and third son of Morris and Mary Mattson, born 11 mo., 13, 1749, died 12 mo., 12, 1835; he married Sarah Worrall, who was born in 1760 and died 6 mo., 26, 1810. They resided for a number of years in Aston township, Delaware county, where he pursued farming; subsequently he removed to Concord, where he spent the remaining years of his life, his death occurring there 12 mo., 12, 1835. The following named children were born to Levi and Sarah (Worrall) Mattson: Abigail, born 2 mo., 22, 1778; Peter Worrall, born 7 mo., 21, 1779; Hannah, born 7 mo., 5, 1781; she was twice married, her first husband having been Mr. Massey, by whom she had two children, namely: Mary, wife of Thomas Smelker, and Rebecca, wife of Mr. Carothers, of Bardstown, Kentucky. For her second husband Hannah Massey married Reuben Griffith; they removed to Salem, Ohio, where her death occurred; Caleb, born 6 mo., 25, 1784, emigrated to the west and died unmarried; Levi, mentioned at length hereinafter; Emanuel, born 5 mo., 4, 1791; Worrall, born 8 mo., 23, 1793, lost his life while at sea; Sarah, born 5 mo., 25, 1795; Abraham, born 10 mo., 15, 1797; and Thomas, born 1 mo., 26, 1800. In the union of Reuben Griffith and Hannah Massey two children were born to them: Emeline, who died after arriving at womanhood, and Rachel, who also arrived at womanhood.

Levi Mattson (2) was born in Aston township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, 4 mo., 2, 1788. He was educated in the schools of the neighborhood. He first carried on shoemaking, before taking up farming for his life work at his home in Concord, Pennsylvania. He was a just and conscientious man in all his affairs and was very successful in the various enterprises in which he engaged. He was united in marriage to Rebecca Hewes, a daughter of John and Hannah Hewes, prominent residents of New Jersey. Their children were: William, who died in childhood; Peter Worrall, father of William H. Mattson, of Chester Heights, Aston township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, born 3 mo., 24, 1813; Samuel Hewes, born 11 mo., 10, 1814; Hannah, born 8 mo., 27, 1816; Sarah, born 10 mo., 1817; Rebecca, born 5 mo., 8, 1819; Levi, Jr., born 8 mo., 3, 1821; Charles Henry, born 6 mo., 10, 1824; Elizabeth Ann, who died in childhood. Levi Mattson, father of these children, died at Concord, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, 10 mo., 10, 1839, and his wife, Rebecca (Hewes) Mattson, died 2 mo., 12, 1837.

Samuel Hewes Mattson, son of Levi and Rebecca (Hewes) Mattson, was born 11 mo., 10, 1814, on the homestead in Concord, Delaware county, and there acquired his educational training in the schools of the neighborhood. During early manhood years he went to Philadelphia where he later engaged in mercantile business and was very successful as a cloth merchant. He became well and favorably known for his probity and uprightness of character and in all his business transactions his name was regarded as synonymous with integrity and honesty. He purchased a farm at Sharon Hill, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, on which he built a substantial and comfortable home, and resided there until his death. He married Tacy Roberts, born 8 mo., 20, 1820, a daughter of John and Sarah (Jones) Roberts. Mr. and Mrs. Mattson were the parents of one child, W. Harry Mattson.

W. Harry Mattson, only child of Samuel Hewes and Tacy (Roberts) Mattson, was born 6 mo., 30, 1843, in Philadelphia, and was educated in the Friends Central School. When a young man he engaged in business as a manufacturer, and established a firm known as The Stewart & Mattson Manufacturing Company. For twenty-five years they conducted a successful business as brass manufacturers, their dealings being on a most extensive scale. After an active career of a quarter of a century, Mr. Mattson retired from business, and sought the seclusion and relaxation of his home at Sharon Hill. His religious affiliations are with the Hicksite Friends, to a belief in whose tenets he was trained from his earliest childhood. He married, 4 mo., 29, 1873, Julia A. Maynard, daughter of James A. and Naomi (Gemeny) Maynard, and they are the parents of one child, Samuel Hewes Mattson.

Samuel Hewes Mattson was born 1 mo., 3, 1875, in Philadelphia, and was educated at Swarthmore, Delaware county. He subsequently took a special course at Princeton University. Shortly after leaving the University he was sent abroad by a Philadelphia firm, who commissioned him to investigate the different methods employed in their line of manufacturing pursuits.

The Roberts family was founded in America by John Roberts, who, in 1683, emigrated with a party of friends, from Llyn, parish of Llangin, Carnarvonshire, Wales. By a grant from William Penn, they took up a tract of land in Merion township, subsequently naming the settlement Pen Coyd. The place is now a great iron center, the factory being operated by president Percival Roberts, a descendant of the brother of the emigrant ancestor. It is worthy of remark that the Roberts family were staunch members of the Society of Friends, and established the old Merion Meeting House in Merion township, Montgomery county, and in this venerable structure the members of the society still assemble in large numbers.

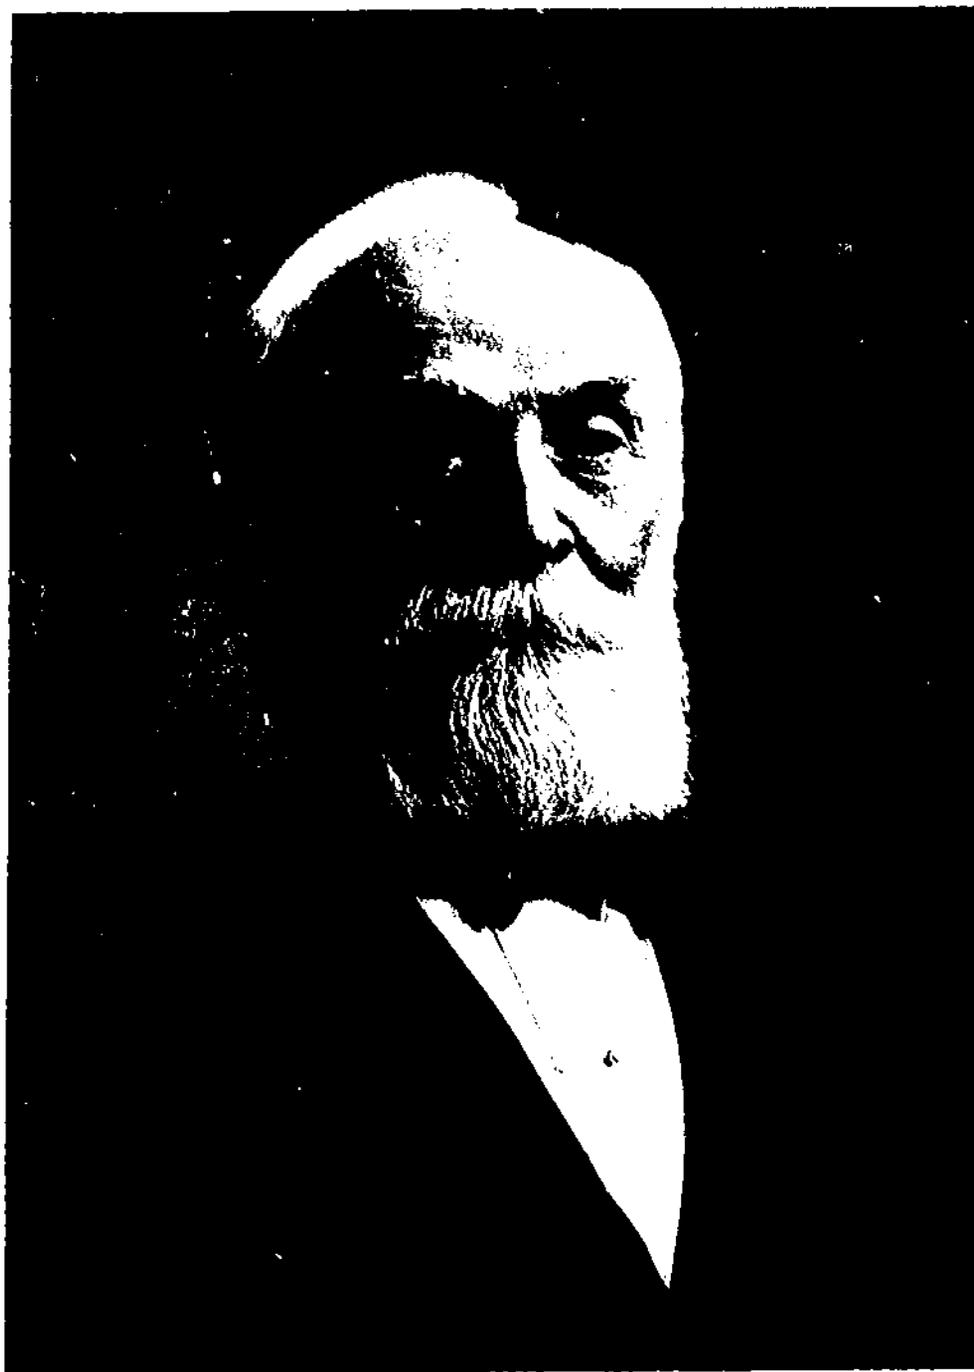

"John Roberts, formerly of Llyn, being Son of Richard Roberts and Grandson of Robert Thomas Morris, who lived at Cowyn, in the Parish of Llancangan and County of Carnarvon; my mother being Margaret Evans, daughter of Richard Evans, of Llangian and county aforesaid.

"Being convinced of God's everlasting worth about the year One thousand six hundred and seventy seven, not by man nor through man, but by the Revelation of Jesus Christ, in my own heart, Being about thirty miles from any Friends Meeting in that time when I was convinced but coming into acquaintance with Friends near Dalgelle and near Balla in Merionethshire I frequented their Meetings while I abode in those parts but by the Providence of God in the year One thousand six hundred and eighty three, I transported Myself with many of my Friends for Pennsylvania where I and they arrived the sixteenth day of the Ninth month One thousand six hundred and Eighty three being then Thirty five years old, and settled myself in the place where afterwards I called Pwencoid in the Township of Merion which was afterwards called by them being the first settlers of it, having brought with me one servant man from my Native Land and fixed my settling here, I took to Wife Gainor Roberts, Daughter of Robert Pugh from Llywyndedwydd near Balla in Merionethshire her Mother being Elizabeth William Owen one of the first that was convinced of the Truth in that Neighborhood. So leaving this account for our offspring and others that desire to know from whence we came and who we descended from and when we came to settle unto this place where we now abide being then a Wilderness, but now by God's Blessing upon our endeavors is become a fruitful field, To Gods name be the Praise, Honor and Glory who is worthy of it for ever and for ever more."

Mrs. Mattson, wife of W. Harry Mattson, was a daughter of James A. Maynard, a prominent citizen of Baltimore, Maryland, who in early life established a tanning business, which he conducted successfully for many years. He married Naomi Gemeny, and the following children were born to them: Foster; Tillie, who married the Rev. Harrison Holliday, of Baltimore; Mollie B., who became the wife of Nicholas H. Huppman, of Baltimore; James A., Jr., who is now deceased; Olin H.; and Julia A., mentioned above as the wife of W. Harry Mattson. Mr. Maynard died 4 mo., 6, 1886, aged seventy-three years, and his wife passed away in 1899, at the age of eighty-three years.

LEVI MATTSON (3), son of Levi (2) and Rebecca (Hewes) Mattson, was born at the family homestead in Concord, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, and in the common schools of the neighborhood he acquired a practical education. He remained under the parental roof until he had attained manhood, and, shortly after the death of his father, Levi Mattson, he sold his interest in the homestead to his brother, Peter Worrall Mattson, having decided to begin a business career for himself. His first employment was at Port Carbon, Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania, where he accepted a clerical position. This, however, did not furnish the business training he had sought for and he removed to Philadelphia; he entered the grocery establishment of Walter & Hiram Patterson, which was located at the southwest corner of Twelfth and Market streets, and after a short space of time, by exercising diligence and perseverance, he succeeded in acquiring a sufficient knowledge of the details of the trade. He then returned to Port Carbon, where he established a general mercantile store in partnership with John Hewes and Charles Baber, under the firm name of L. Mattson & Co. This business was continued under the careful and well directed efforts of Mr. Mattson for three years, and at the expiration of this period of time Mr. Hewes withdrew, and the two remaining partners continued under the style of Mattson & Baber, until 1863, when Mr. Mattson disposed of his interest in the firm. In 1870 he removed to Philadelphia, and by his capable and conservative management of all business interests, he has won for himself a prominent position in the commercial circles of that city, and, at the same time, has thoroughly demonstrated the fact that industry and perseverance, associated with honorable business principles, lead up to ultimate success.

Mr. Mattson was united in marriage, 10 mo., 16, 1849, to Anna Leonard, a daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Leonard. Their children were: 1. Rebecca Augusta, who died in childhood; born 9 mo., 10, 1850; she died 3 mo., 5, 1855; 2. Thomas Levi, born 11 mo., 13, 1854, married Catherine Tenbrook, and their children are: Florence and Philip Tenbrook; 3. Frank Howard, born 9 mo., 11, 1856, married Marion Norcross, and they are the parents of one daughter, Dorothy Mattson.

WILLIAM HENRY MATTSON, D. V. S., actively engaged in the practice of his chosen profession in Chester Heights, Aston township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, where he is regarded as an enterprising and progressive citizen, is a worthy representative of a family whose history has been fully written up in the preceding pages of this work.

Peter Worall Mattson, father of Dr. Mattson, was born 3 mo., 24, 1813, a son of Levi (2) and Rebecca (Hewes) Mattson. He was united in marriage to Evalina Hannum, of Concord township, who was born February 14, 1815, a daughter of William and Elizabeth D. Hannum. Their children were: 1. Edwin, born 5 mo., 17, 1839; 2. Ann Eliza, born 9 mo., 18, 1840; 3. Samuel H., born 6 mo., 27, 1842; 4. Rebecca, born 11 mo., 3, 1843; 5. Elizabeth M., born 1 mo., 7, 1846, and was educated at the Richard Darlington Ercildoum Seminary; she was first married, November 18, 1868, to Hugh J. Nyce, and of this marriage was born one son, Hugh J. Nyce, Jr., whose birth occurred 10 mo., 11, 1869, and he was united in marriage to Theodora Adelheid Theibagh. The father, Hugh J. Nyce, Sr., died 3 mo., 16, 1870, and the son, Hugh J. Nyce, Jr., died 1 mo., 6, 1899. Elizabeth M. (Mattson) Nyce married secondly, 11 mo., 7, 1880, the Rev. Lawrence Fletcher Clark, and by this marriage has one daughter, Lillian Mattson Clark, born 11 mo., 26, 1884. About the year 1890 Mrs. Clark entered the medical department of the Woman's Medical College of Philadelphia, and graduated from that institution in 1893, since which time she has successfully practiced her profession in Philadelphia. Dr. Clark is a member of the Woman's College Alumni Association and the Obstetrical Society. 6. William Henry, born 12 mo., 5, 1849; 7. Laura T., born 11 mo., 19, 1860. Peter W. Mattson, the father of these children, died 1 mo., 18, 1881.

William H. Mattson, third son and sixth child of Peter W. and Evalina (Hannum) Mattson, was born 12 mo., 5, 1849. He received his early educational training in the schools adjacent to his home; he then became a student at the academy of Professor Joseph Shortlidge at Concordville and the academy of Professor Swithin C. Shortlidge at Kennett Square, and this knowledge was supplemented by a commercial course in the Bryant & Stratton Business College of Philadelphia. His tastes and inclinations led him to adopt a professional life, and accordingly in 1885 he entered upon a three years' course in the veterinary department of the University of Pennsylvania, graduating from that noted institution on June 10, 1889. He at once established an office for the active practice of his profession, and during the intervening years has met with a marked degree of success. He is an important and potent factor in the material advancement and growth of the neighborhood in which he resides, contributing liberally both of his time and money to all worthy enterprises.

Dr. Mattson was united in marriage, 5 mo., 5, 1875, to Ida Coates, born September 27, 1856, a daughter of Isaac Gilbert and Emma S. (Pierce) Coates, and the issue of this union is the following named children: Gilbert W., born 2 mo., 3, 1876, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work; Harry H., born 7 mo., 28, 1879; Levi L., born 6 mo., 4, 1881; Norman B., born 2 mo., 16, 1883; and Francis C., born 11 mo., 16, 1884.

GILBERT W. MATTSON, an enterprising and successful business man of Aston township, was born February 3, 1876, in the township of Concord, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, the son of Dr. William H. Mattson and Ida (Coates) Mattson, a well known and prominent veterinarian, who has followed these pursuits with a large degree of success for many years.

Gilbert W. Mattson enjoyed the educational advantages afforded by the public schools of his native township and the Williamson Free Trade School in Delaware county, graduating from the first class of that institution in 1894, as a mechanical engineer. His first business experience was gained in the capacity of electrician for the Philadelphia Traction Company at their plant in the city of Philadelphia, and later he filled a similar position in the city of Chester, Pennsylvania. Subsequently he returned to the old homestead where he devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits and the management of extensive greenhouses which he erected on the homestead property, and which are widely known over the entire state as being thoroughly equipped with all modern improvements and appliances. Recently he has added mushrooms to his stock, being very successful in their cultivation, and these together with the majority of his products find a ready sale in the markets of Philadelphia and New York. He has made a close study of this industry, and his thorough understanding of the needs of plants has enabled him to produce some of the finest specimens.

Politically Mr. Mattson is a strong supporter of the men and measures advocated by the Republican party, and he has been chosen by his fellow-townsmen to serve in several local offices. In fraternal matters he is affiliated with the Knights of Malta, and in his religious views he adheres to the doctrines of the Society of Friends.

On July 18, 1900, Mr. Mattson married Lydia Booth, a native of Chester, Pennsylvania, and was born October 30, 1873, daughter of Samuel and Matilda (Caldwell) Booth, who is engaged in the occupation of cloth printing. The issue of this marriage has been two children, Dorothy, born April 23, 1901, and Gilbert Booth, born March 23, 1903. Mr. Mattson is genial and kindly in manner, and easily wins and retains the friendship and good fellowship of all with whom he is brought in contact, either in business or social life.

SAMUEL E. WORTH. Among the earliest settlers in Chester county, Pennsylvania, was Thomas Worth, who, as appears in the records of the Bible, printed in 1636, which he brought with him to this country, was born in England in 1649, resided at Oxtou, in the county of Nottingham, sailed from that country the 21st of the 2nd mo. (April, O. S.) 1682, and landed in Pennsylvania about the beginning of the sixth month following, before William Penn had sailed for his young Colony.

Thomas Worth, the pioneer ancestor, settled in Darbytown immediately after his arrival, and in due course of time became a prosperous and influential citizen of the community. In 1685 he married Isabella Davidson, who emigrated from the county of Darby, England, probably came in the same ship with her future husband, and she brought with her a certificate of good character which she fully sustained during her active and useful life. Their children were—John, born 6 mo., 9, 1686, died 9 mo., 23, 1718; Thomas, born 1 mo., 4, 1688, died 12 mo., 19, 1778; and Sarah, born 7 mo., 23, 1691, died 10 mo., 8, 1696. Thomas Worth, the father of these children, died in the year 1731; his wife, Isabella (Davidson) Worth, died in 1709, in the fifty-fifth year of her age.

Thomas Worth, Jr., second son of Thomas and Isabella (Davidson) Worth, married Mary Faucett, who was born 9 mo., 25, 1697, daughter of Walter and Rebecca (Fearne) Faucett, of Ridley, Pennsylvania. Their children were—Samuel, born 1 mo., 25, 1718; died in 1781; Susanna, born 1 mo., 12, 1720, died 3 mo., 13, 1777; Lydia, born 9 mo., 22, 1721, died 9 mo., 20, 1780; Rebecca, born 4 mo., 23, 1723; Hannah, born 11 mo., 12, 1724, died 4 mo., 13, 1776; Ebenezer, born 6 mo., 8, 1726, died 1 mo., 12, 1808; Joseph, born 7 mo., 18, 1728, died 7 mo., 29, 1728, Mary, born 9 mo., 17, 1729, died 6 mo., 22, 1812.

Samuel Worth, eldest son of Thomas and Mary (Faucett) Worth, married Elizabeth Carter, daughter of George and Elizabeth Carter, of East Bradford, Pennsylvania, the ceremony being performed at Birmingham Meeting, 10 mo., 27, 1744. Their children were—John, born 10 mo., 5, 1745, died 10 mo., 17, 1790; Thomas, born 12 mo., 11, 1747, died 2 mo., 2, 1828; Joseph, born 3 mo., 2, 1755, died 9 mo., 9, 1775; Elizabeth, born 2 mo., 13, 1759, died in early life.

John Worth, eldest son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Carter) Worth, married Mary Bentley, who was born 12 mo., 15, 1754, died 12 mo., 20, 1830, a daughter of George and Jane Bentley. Their children were—Thomas, born 4 mo., 28, 1774, died 10 mo., 6, 1821; Elizabeth, born 5 mo., 20, 1776, died 5 mo., 21, 1861; Ebenezer, born 4 mo., 10, 1778, died 8 mo., 5, 1845; Samuel, born 12 mo., 6, 1779, died 8 mo., 20, 1862; John, born 6 mo., 25, 1782, died 1 mo., 16, 1878; George, born 1 mo., 13, 1785, died 3 mo., 16, 1833; Eunor, born 3 mo., 1, 1787, died 4 mo., 1, 1877; Benjamin, born 8 mo., 5, 1789, died 6 mo., 17, 1831.

John Worth, fourth son of John and Mary (Bentley) Worth, was born at what is now the village of Mortonville, in the southern portion of Chester county, Pennsylvania. He received the educational advantages afforded by the common schools of that day, and learned the trade of carpenter, but devoted his attention principally to agricultural pursuits. He resided about a half mile south of the town of Marshallton, served as county commissioner for a number of terms, and as justice of the peace for a period of twenty-five years. He was upright and conscientious in all his business transactions, and performed the duties of husband, father and citizen in a highly commendable manner. He married Lydia Carpenter, who was born 2 mo., 10, 1785, died 10 mo., 15, 1866, a daughter of William and Rachel (Carter) Carpenter, the former named having been a prosperous farmer of Chester county. Their children were—William C., born 12 mo., 14, 1805, died 12 mo., 3, 1874; Sheshabazzer B., born 12 mo., 14, 1807, died 11 mo., 18, 1874; Richard J., born 12 mo., 20, 1809, died 9 mo., 9, 1858; Samuel A., born 11 mo., 20, 1811, died October 19, 1899. Rachel Ann, born 2 mo., 28, 1814, died 11 mo., 11, 1864; John D., born 3 mo., 16, 1816; Lydia Maria, born 6 mo., 26, 1818, died 8 mo., 10, 1832; Elizabeth M., born 8 mo., 11, 1822.

William C. Worth, eldest son of John and Lydia (Carpenter) Worth, was born in West Bradford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, December 14, 1805. He attended the common schools of the neighborhood and there acquired a good English education which prepared him for his active career. He served an apprenticeship at the carriage building trade, and this line of industry he followed at Romansville, Chester county, until 1836, when he removed to Colerain township, Lancaster county, where he engaged in farming up to the year 1861, when he removed to Oxford, Chester county, where he was engaged for six years in the grain, hay and feed trade. About the year 1868 he settled in Mt. Vernon, Chester county, achieved a large degree of success in general merchandising and the manufacture of cardboard, and in 1872 removed to Northumberland county, Virginia, where he continued in business until a few years prior to his death, when he returned home to Colerain township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where he died. He was an active and zealous supporter of the principles of Republicanism; he served one term as commissioner of Lancaster county while a resident there, and also served two terms as burgess of the borough of Oxford.

William C. Worth (father) was united in marriage to Phœbe H. Romans, daughter of John and Mary (Smith) Romans, of Romansville, West Bradford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Their children were—1. John Carpenter, born October 14, 1830, died in February, 1901; he married Mary Galloway, and they were the parents of three children—Jesse, deceased; Mason G., and Elmer Worth; 2. George, born July 14, 1832, died July 15, 1832; 3. Charles M., born July 17, 1833; died in October, 1854; 4. Henry Smith, born March 3, 1836, married Phœbe Brinton, who died in 1861, and his second wife, Emeline (Wilson) Worth, bore him two children—Helen and Marion W. Worth; 5. Lydia Maria, born August 18, 1838, became the wife of Samuel Holmes and their children are Charles M. and Jennie Holmes; 6. William Harrison, born December 19, 1841, married Mary Boyce, and after her decease married Louisa Petite, and two children were the issue of this union—Frank and Bessie Worth; 7. Albert B., born September 18, 1843, married Letitia Byers and they were the parents of seven children—Lydia, William, Davis, Della, Alberta, and twins who died in infancy; 8. Davis R., born June 22, 1846, died December 12, 1870, 9. Samuel E., mentioned at length hereinafter. William C. Worth, father of these children, died December 2, 1874, and his wife, Phœbe H. (Romans) Worth, died August 31, 1879.

Samuel E. Worth, youngest son of William C. and Phœbe H. (Romans) Worth, was born in Colerain township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, August 4, 1849. He received his education at the Oxford Academy, and after completing the regular course of instruction there he took a trip south in order to recuperate his impaired health. The change of climate benefited him greatly, and upon being restored to his former health and spirits he returned to Oxford, Pennsylvania, and accepted a position as manager of an extensive hardware store, in which capacity he served until 1898. During that year he was appointed postmaster of the borough of Oxford, Chester county, and by faithfully and efficiently discharging the duties of that onerous position he has been continued as the incumbent of the office ever since, having been reappointed in the year 1902. He has served as a member of the borough council of Oxford for several terms, and chairman of the Republican county committee for thirteen consecutive years. He takes a deep and intelligent interest in all questions that affect the welfare and material growth of the community in which he resides, and is one of its most active, public-spirited and influential citizens. His political views are in accord with the principles advocated by the Republican party, and his fraternal affiliations are with the Knights of the Golden Eagle and the Improved Order of Red Men.

On May 5, 1888, Mr. Worth married Jennie Smith, a daughter of James Smith, a representative agriculturist of Elk township, Chester county, and Nancy C. (Carlisle) Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Worth hold membership in the Presbyterian church of Oxford borough, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

JOSEPH SHALLCROSS, a veteran farmer and highly respected citizen of Delaware county, Pennsylvania, is a representative of a family which was founded in America by David Morris, who emigrated from Wales, England, about 1683, and in 1695 he purchased three hundred and thirty-four acres of land from Daniel Humphries in Marple township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, where he made his residence. He was a consistent member of the Society of Friends, and took an active part in the civic affairs of his day. He married, March 4, 1685, Mary Phillipin, by whom he was the father of a son, Jonathan, who married Catherine Moore, daughter of Richard and Phœbe Moore, the latter named coming to America with William Penn in 1682. David Morris died in 1720.

Jonathan Morris, son of Jonathan and Catherine (Moore) Morris, was born in Marple township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, March 17, 1729. He took up the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. John Bard, of Philadelphia, later of New York city, and upon concluding his studies Dr. Morris returned to his native county and took up the practice of his profession at Newtown Square, Delaware county. While a resident of that locality, he met the celebrated artist, Benjamin West, who was then in his childhood. Having noticed the artistic tendencies of young West, he furnished the boy with an outfit of colors and other necessary articles, also assisted him in his tuition, and after the young artist had become master of his profession he executed a portrait of his benefactor. Dr. Morris was a man of literary tastes, a thoroughly polished gentleman, a member of the Society of Friends, and morally opposed to aggression and civil strife. He personally aided and assisted in the care and treatment of the wounded and suffering patriots at the battle of the Brandywine. He married, December 15, 1757, at the Middletown Whiting Horse, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, Ailsa Evans, a woman of much character and great intelligence, daughter of Cadwalader and Ann Garrett (Pennell) Evans, and their children were: Ailsa, who became the wife of Joel Jackson; Mary, who became the wife of Samuel Lynn; Evan; Samuel; John; and Catherine, who became the wife of Dr. Joseph Shallcross, and they became the parents of the following named children: Eliza, who became the wife of Thomas Wickersham, of Chester county; Morris Cadwalader, mentioned at length herein-after; Hannah, who became the wife of Robert McCalla, of New Jersey; and Joseph, who became a physician and settled in Ohio.

Morris Cadwalader Shallcross, son of Dr. Joseph and Catherine (Morris) Shallcross, was born August 8, 1791, at White Clay Creek, New Castle county, Delaware. He attended and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, and in 1720, Dr. Joseph Shallcross moved with his family to Darby, where they lived until about 1801 or 1802, when they moved to a farm called Poplar Hall, which Dr. Shallcross had received from his first wife, Hannah Knowles. This farm, which was about one and a half miles from Darby, on the Chester pike, was the property now called Glenolden, lately owned by Mr. George G. Knowles. While living there Morris Cadwalader was sent to a school at Calcon Hook, which was situated on the site now occupied by the Southern public school of Darby township, an elevated situation, commanding a view of the Delaware river for many miles. The school at that time was taught by Master Johnson, a man who tradition says was a thorough teacher, and very severe with the boys under his charge. In the spring of 1809 young Morris Cadwalader went to Philadelphia, where he was employed as a clerk in the drug store of Dr. B. Brown, at the corner of Christian and Second streets. He received his board as compensation for his services. In writing to his sister, at that time, he says: "My study is a small room up two pairs of stairs, all the furniture of which is half a dozen chairs, and one large, easy chair covered with green baize. In this place, philosopher-like, I look down from my two-story window upon the people as they pass—not only upon them, but into them—and view with scorn and pity their ridiculous follies which they are so proud of. I study pretty hard, and from this circumstance think I improve, or, at least, my head has become susceptible of receiving knowledge. I can now sit down and think seriously, without discord, of ideas upon every subject whatever, good or bad." Dr. Brown was one of the physicians at the almshouse, and through him Morris Cadwalader applied for admission as a student to the medical department of the institution, but was disappointed in his hopes. Not long after one of the students was about to be married and wished to go to New Orleans; he had not paid his initiation fee, and Morris Cadwalader applied to fill the vacancy, and was accepted on condition that he discharge the indebtedness of the retiring student. That he agreed to the condition is proved by the following receipt which was found among his papers: "Received, almshouse, May 3rd, 18—, from Mr. Morris C. Shallcross, eighty dollars in full, for his admission as a student in the medical department of this institution.—J. McKill Steward." The student whose debt was thus discharged never repaid it to Dr. Shallcross, but on the death of the debtor, when his estate was settled, the sum was refunded by his heirs.

Dr. Jonathan Morris was much interested in his grandson, who in return was devoted to him. Eight hundred dollars, the amount necessary for the medical education of Morris Cadwalader Shallcross was advanced by his grandfather, and was in the course of time fully refunded by the object of his beneficence. During the time when the young man was studying in the almshouse, his fellow students not being very ambitious or very attentive in their wards, the opportunity was afforded him of attending in their place, an opportunity of which he gladly availed himself. While engaged in these arduous labors at the almshouse, he attended the lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, among his instructors being Drs. Dorsey, Chapman, Rush and James, the last named of whom became his life-long friend. In April, 1813, he graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and the same year began practice in Darby. He had not long been engaged in the active duties of his profession when he was called to attend a case in which amputation of the leg was decided to be necessary. When Dr. Shallercross performed the operation he was accompanied by his grandfather, Dr. Morris, who was so pleased and satisfied with the manner in which it was done, that he declared himself fully repaid for all that he had ever done for his grandson. Dr. Shallercross soon acquired an extensive practice. He was at this time, with one exception, the only physician for many miles around, his practice extending for at least five miles in almost every direction from Darby. Dr. Shallercross had a very trustworthy old servant, Archy Dougherty, who was so faithful to every duty that his master was accustomed to say that to Archy he owed much freedom from home cares. Dr. Shallercross, while absent from home, was relieved from anxiety about his wife and children, knowing that they were perfectly safe under Archy's protection. In the summer of 1823 Dr. Shallercross bought the Buck House, and in March, 1824, the family took up their abode there. In 1827 he had a severe illness, and during this period Dr. George Smith, then a young man, took charge of his practice. The friendship thus formed lasted throughout Dr. Shallercross's life.

About 1834, on account of his arduous duties, his health failed and he went with his family to Philadelphia, where he bought a house on Walnut street, near Eighth, and again began to practice his profession. He associated himself with Dr. J. P. Stakes, and for some time continued, although residing in Philadelphia, to practice in Delaware county. About 1854, owing to the illness of his daughter Harriet, he retired from active professional life.

Dr. Shallercross married, in March, 1816, Eliza, daughter of Richard Fair and Sarah (Allardice) Sparks, of Philadelphia. He first saw her when she was only about thirteen, observing her as a little girl jumping the rope in the yard of the house next to the one in which he was boarding. The news of his grandson's engagement was a cause of great anxiety to old Dr. Morris. The first time he met Miss Sparks he went home and said, "Eliza will do." It happened that the lady had accidentally burned a hole in her shoe, and had had it mended. Dr. Morris had seen the patch, which he assigned as the reason of his satisfaction with his grandson's future wife. Dr. and Mrs. Shallercross were the parents of the following children: 1. Joseph, mentioned at length hereinafter; 2. Sarah; 3. Harriet; 4. Catherine. Mrs. Shallercross died in 1857, and during his latter years Dr. Shallercross led a very quiet life, surrounded by his family and friends. He was loved and honored by all his patients, rich or poor, not only as their medical adviser, but their friend. He was remarkable for his humility and reticence, a deep thinker, and in all things a quiet, unpretending man. The learned in all professions, physicians, lawyers and clergymen, came to converse with him. He was always ready to help and encourage those who were beginning life. He was very fond of his three grandchildren, and on his birthday would always go to their home, carrying a basket well filled with good things, to have a little celebration with them. Having been brought up under the influence of the Society of Friends, he never united with any church. He was orthodox in his belief, and gave to the world the best of all proofs of being a Christian—that of living a Christ-like life. He died at his home in Philadelphia, November 30, 1871, in the eighty-first year of his age, lamented by the whole community, as one who both as a physician and a man had gained the love and respect of all.

Joseph Shallercross, son of Morris Cadwalader and Eliza (Sparks) Shallercross, was born December 16, 1816, in Darby, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. He received his early education in the schools of his native place and in the Friends' School, and at the age of fourteen he went to Wilmington to receive the instructions of Samuel Smith, and thence returned to Darby, where he was engaged on a farm until reaching the age of twenty-one. He then entered into partnership with a farmer named Jabez Bunting, and worked for five years on the farm on Tincum Island, Delaware county. When twenty-six years of age he was presented by his father with a farm near the borough of Glenolden, where he resided until 1875, when he removed to Sharon Hill, Delaware county, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Shallercross married, May 22, 1856, Mary C. Caldwell, daughter of David and Margaret (Comer) Caldwell, of Delaware county, both of whom were of Huguenot ancestry. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Shallercross: Eliza S., who married J. B. Phillips, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and their children are: Morris Shalleross, Henry Ormsby and Patty; Ann K., who is living at home, and Harriet S., who married Dr. Walter Webb, and their children are: Joseph Shalleross and W. Caldwell Webb.

SELLERS FAMILY. The progenitor of the Sellers family in Chester and Delaware counties was Samuel Sellers, a member of the Society of Friends, who came from Belper, Derbyshire, England, and was among the early settlers of Darby township in 1682.

He appears to have been the first of the name in America, and, while others came to Pennsylvania subsequently, no connection between them has been established, and in fact some were of German origin and doubtless Anglicized their name after their arrival.

Samuel Sellers was of an old and well connected family in Derbyshire, where his progenitors can be traced for several centuries, and his baptism is recorded in the parish register of Duffield church among the children of Thomas and Elizabeth Sellers, of Belper, as follows:

1. Jno. bapt.	20 Aug. 1648
bur.	28 Apr. 1664
2. Elizabeth	13 Jan. 1649
3. Mary	7 Sept. 1651
4. George	13 Feb. 1652
5. Samuel	3 Feb. 1655
6. Sarah	20 June 1663

George Sellers, the eldest surviving son, is said to have emigrated to America with his brother, but he is not mentioned among the early settlers of Darby in the Township Book, nor does his name appear in the records of Darby Meeting. He was certainly settled here, however, prior to 1686, when his death occurred, and his estate, including his house, fifty acres of land, live stock, etc., passed to his brother. Among the various traditions concerning him, it is stated that he and Samuel Sellers built the original or kitchen part of the homestead known later as "Sellers Hall," but, contemplating marriage, he was engaged at the time of his death in building a house for himself on what was known as Walnut Hill, close by the original dwelling. The site was marked by the foundations until well within the nineteenth century, when his namesake, George Sellers, removed the stone to build the present terrace wall between the garden and meadow in front of the homestead.

I. Samuel Sellers, youngest son of Thomas and Elizabeth Sellers, of Belper, baptized February 3, 1655, was one of the first settlers of Darby township, and of those who established the Darby Meeting of Friends in 1682. He was a weaver, and carried on that trade after his arrival in the province. In 1699 he acquired by patent one hundred acres of land lying south of the present West Chester road, with Mill (now Cobb's) Creek as its eastern boundary, and the following year purchased seventy-five acres, making his plantation one hundred and seventy-five acres in all. He was a respected member of the Society of Friends, and in the affairs of the township he served as constable 1688, supervisor 1692, and fence viewer for several terms from 1693 to 1716. He married at Darby Meeting, 6 mo., 13, 1684, Anna Gibbons, of Darby township, their intention of marriage, 5 mo., 2, 1684, being the first entry made in the minute books of Darby Monthly Meeting. She was a daughter of Henry and Eleanor Gibbons, who were from Parwich, Derbyshire, England, and as her name alone appears with that of her father in the certificate of removal from Friends' Meeting in England in 1682, it is possible that her mother, sister and brother were among the later arrivals in the settlement.

Samuel Sellers died in Upper Darby, 9 mo., 22, 1732; Anna Sellers, his wife, died 11 mo., 19, 1742. As recorded at Darby, they had issue as follows:

1. Sarah, born 5 mo., 13, 1685, died 4 mo., 3, 1766. She married, 8 mo., 1703, John Ashmead, son of John and Mary (Courier) Ashmead, of Cheltenham (now a suburb of Philadelphia), born in England about 1648, died at Germantown, 6 mo., 7, 1742.

2. Mary, born 10 mo., 13, 1687. She married (1st) William Marshall, 3 mo., 1711; son of John and Sarah (Smith) Marshall. William Marshall and Mary (Sellers) Marshall settled in Chester county, near the forks of the Brandywine, where in 1727 he lost his life by drowning. In 1730 Mary, his widow, married (2d) Isaac Vernon, son of Robert and Elinor (Minshall) Vernon, of Bradford, she being his second wife.

3. Samuel, Jr., born 3 mo., 12, 1690, died 6 mo., 3, 1773; married 8 mo., 28, 1712, Sarah Smith, daughter of John and Eleanor (Dolby) Smith, born 3 mo., 30, 1689.

4. Anna, born 2 mo., 1, 1693; she married a Pritchett, for in Samuel Sellers's will he makes a bequest to his daughter, Anna Pritchett. They had a son Samuel.

5. George, born 8 mo., 1695, and died 7 mo., 6, 1711.

6. Elizabeth, born 11 mo., 22, 1699; died 7 mo., 8, 1711.

II. Samuel Sellers, Jr., eldest son of Samuel and Anna (Gibbons) Sellers, born in Darby (now Upper Darby) township, 3 mo., 12, 1690. He succeeded his father in the business of weaving, and is credited with the invention of an ingenious machine for twisting worsteds. In 1714 his parents conveyed to him their entire farm of one hundred and seventy-five acres, subject to a life interest for themselves. On 8 mo., 28, 1712, he married, at Darby Meeting, Sarah, daughter of John and Eleanor (Dolby) Smith, born at Darby, 3 mo., 30, 1689. Her father was from Croxton, in Leicestershire, England, and married Eleanor Dolby, of Harborough, in that county, 3 mo.; 4, 1669. He came to America in 1684, and both he and his wife were in the ministry of the Society of Friends. She died at Darby, 7 mo., 10, 1708, and he 11 mo., 12, 1714.

Samuel Sellers, Jr., served in Darby township as supervisor, 1725, and again in 1730. He was a constable for Upper Darby, 1748, and supervisor, 1752. He died 6 mo., 3, 1773, and was buried in the Friends' grounds at Darby. The Pennsylvania Gazette, of June 9th of that year, concluding a notice of his decease, states that he "left sixty-four children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren," adding that "he was a kind husband, a tender parent, a good neighbor and above all an honest man."

Sarah (Smith) Sellers, his widow, died at Upper Darby, 5 mo., 24, 1778. They had issue as follows:

1. Samuel, born 5 mo., 1715; his will, dated 12 mo., 26, 1785, was proved 1 mo., 14, 1786; married, 7 mo., 28, 1737, Jane, daughter of George and Hannah Wood, of Darby, born 9 mo., 5, 1716. Samuel Sellers shortly after his marriage established himself at West Bradford, near the forks of the Brandywine, in Chester county. They had two sons, Samuel and Jonathan, and four daughters, Ann, Hannah, Sarah and Mary, who married respectively into the families of Pierce, Wickersham, Trimble and Taylor, whose descendants present this line.

2. Hannah, born 12 mo., 10, 1717; died 4 mo., 12, 1810; married (1) Richard Lloyd, son of Robert and Lowry (Jones) Lloyd; died 8 mo., 9, 1755. They had issue, Hugh and Isaac. She married (2) 11 mo., 30, 1757, Lewis Davis, of Haverford.

3. Elizabeth, born 7 mo., 15, 1719; died 10 mo., 30, 1794. Married, 9 mo., 22, 1738, John Hunt, son of James and Rebecca (Faucet) Hunt, of Kingsess, born 4 mo., 6, 1716, died 1 mo., 6, 1791. They had: Sarah, Rebecca, James, Hannah, John, Jr., and Ann.

4. John, born 9 mo., 11, 1721; died 4 mo., 22, 1727.

5. Mary, born 10 mo., 6, 1723, died 5 mo., 16, 1777; married 12 mo., 27, 1744, David Gibson, son of Nathan and Ann (Hunt) Blunston Gibson, of Kingsess, born 9 mo., 30, 1721. They had Sarah, Jonathan, Nathan, David, Jr., Anna, and Samuel.

6. Joseph, born 4 mo., 15, 1726, died 12 mo., 12, 1790; married 1 mo., 13, 1751, Hannah, daughter of William and ——— Paschall. They had Joseph, Jr., and Sarah.

7. John, born 9 mo., 19, 1728; died 2 mo., 2, 1804, of whom as follows:

III. John Sellers, youngest son of Samuel and Sarah (Smith) Sellers, was born in Upper Darby township, 9 mo., 19, 1728. In 1752 his father conveyed to him the homestead, "Sellers Hall," and one hundred and thirty-four acres of land which he subsequently enlarged by purchase of adjoining property. He improved the estate by developing the water power to operate a saw mill, flint mill and grist mill, and instead of continuing the business of weaving worsteds he undertook weaving and working wire, being so far as known the first to establish that industry in America. He acquired a high reputation as a surveyor, and possessed scientific tastes and attainments. He was an original member of the American Philosophical Society, and in 1769 served with David Rittenhouse, Dr. W. Smith and John Lukens, as a committee to observe the transit of Venus. He was a public spirited citizen and throughout his life took an active part in county and state affairs. In 1764 he was fence viewer in Upper Darby, and supervisor in 1784. He represented Chester county as a member of the Provincial Assembly from 1767 to 1771, and in 1770 was a commissioner to lay out the road from the "Middle-ferry" to Strasburg. In 1774 he was appointed on the Boston Port Bill Committee, and was subsequently a deputy to the Provincial Convention held at Philadelphia, July 15th of that year. His active sympathy with the cause of the colonies led to his disownment by the Society of Friends, the testimony against him dealing especially with his having signed paper currency for carrying on the war, and "sawing stuff for military services." From the proceedings in his case, as recorded in the minutes, it is quite evident that he resented the Meeting's criticism of his course, and, when waited upon by the overseers appointed to deal with him, he seems to have expressed himself strongly and doubtless to the point. Believing that the exigencies of the times justified his actions, it was eminently characteristic of him to firmly stand by them.

He was elected a member of the first assembly after the close of the war, but declined to serve. In 1780 he was one of the commissioners appointed to build a new court house and prison in Chester county, and in 1783 served as a commissioner to consider opening canal communication between the Schuylkill and Susquehanna rivers. He was one of the committee appointed in 1786 to consider the erection of the first Market street bridge, and in 1789 was a commissioner to run and mark the line between Chester and Delaware counties. He represented Delaware county in the convention of 1790 that adopted the state constitution, and in that year was elected a state senator for Delaware county, and served his full term as such. He married, at Darby Meeting, 2 mo., 26, 1749, Ann, daughter of Nathan and Ann (Hunt) Gibson, of Kingsess, born 11 mo., 22, 1729.

Nathan Gibson came to America in 1713, bringing a certificate of removal from Kendall Monthly Meeting, in Westmoreland, England. He was married at Gloucester, New Jersey, December 7, 1719, to Ann (Hunt) Blunston, widow of John Blunston, Jr., of Darby, and daughter of James and Elizabeth (Wood) Bonsall Hunt, of Kingsess, born 12 mo., 14, 1688.

John and Ann (Gibson) Sellers had issue, born in Upper Darby township:

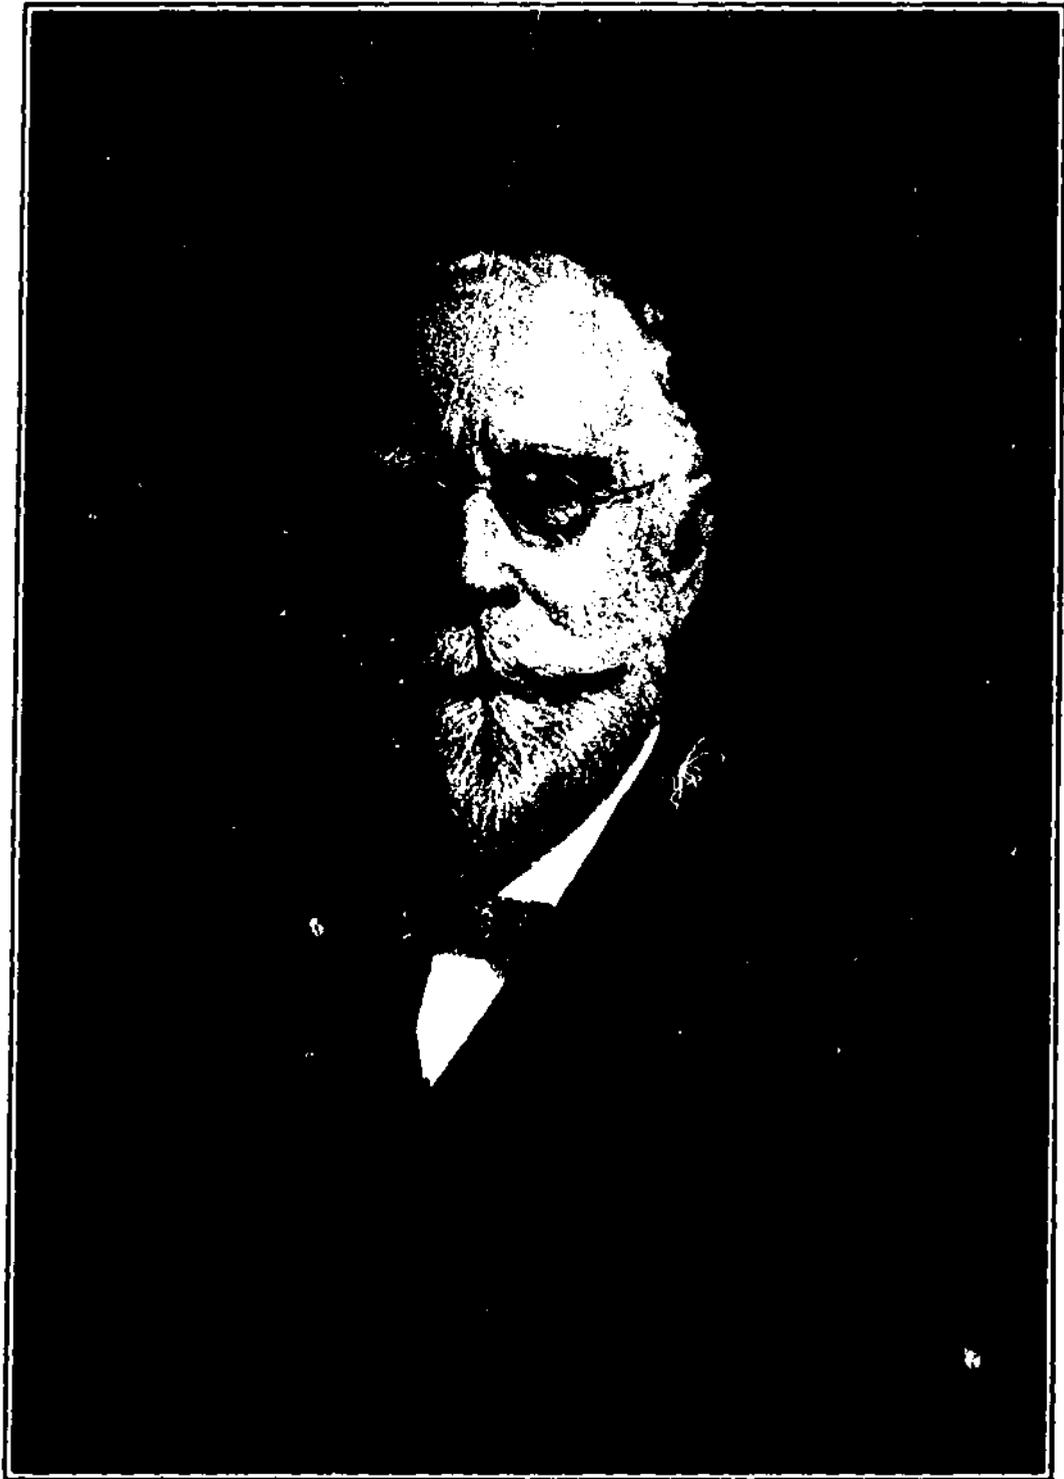

1. Elizabeth, born Upper Darby, 11 mo., 4, 1749; died 3 mo., 23, 1774; married, 6 mo., 9, 1768, Nathan, son of Nathan and Ann Garrett of Darby, born 3 mo., 18, 1745; had Ann, Sarah, and Samuel.
2. Nathan, born 9 mo., 15, 1751, of whom hereafter.
3. Samuel, born 12 mo., 30, 1753, died 12 mo., 10, 1776.
4. David, born 4 mo., 1, 1757; of whom hereafter.
5. Sarah, born 12 mo., 10, 1759; died 4 mo., 3, 1766.
6. John, born 12 mo., 1, 1762, of whom hereafter.
7. James, born 9 mo., 21, 1765; died 11 mo., 12, 1776.
8. George, born 2 mo., 12, 1768; of whom hereafter.
9. Joshua, born 3 mo., 13, 1770; died 3 mo., 14, 1770.
10. Ann, born 12 mo., 31, 1774; died 10 mo., 24, 1775.

John Sellers died at Sellers Hall, Upper Darby, 2 mo., 2, 1804; Ann Gibson Sellers, his widow, died 4 mo., 6, 1805. Both were buried at Darby.

IV. Nathan Sellers, eldest son of John and Ann Gibson Sellers, born in Upper Darby, 9 mo., 15, 1751, o. s. After receiving a common school education he was apprenticed to Henry Hale Graham, Esq., of the borough of Chester, Scrivener, "to be taught the said trade, science and occupation of a scrivener," as his indenture reads. While thus engaged, it seems from his diary and account books that he devoted much of his leisure time to mechanical pursuits, especially in connection with wire working, and in 1773 he made the wire guards for the book cases for the Library Company of Philadelphia. He also records active work in and about the mills operated by his father, where he assisted his younger brother, Samuel Sellers, and eventually abandoned his intention of practicing law, devoting himself exclusively to surveying and the mechanical pursuits in which his father was engaged. In 1775 he was active in the formation of a militia company, and was accordingly disowned by the Society of Friends. He served as ensign in Colonel Jonathan Paschell's Regiment, Pennsylvania Associators, but was recalled from the front in August, 1776, by a special resolution of Congress, to undertake the preparation of paper moulds for the government. He was assisted in this work by his brother, Samuel Sellers, until the latter's death in December, 1776, and, as the supplies for mould making had previously been imported, he had to devise not only the methods but the appliances for preparing the necessary materials. He is credited as the result of his experiments at this time with being the first to anneal wire in closed vessels, while his appliances for drawing and straightening wire were such an improvement over the former methods that, after the close of the war, some were adopted by manufacturers of Europe.

In 1777 he was commissioned by the Council of Safety to make a military survey along the Delaware river preparatory to the defenses of Philadelphia, and he was among those commissioned by Congress to sign the paper currency emitted for carrying on the war. About this time (1777) he was proposed for the office of prothonotary and clerk of quarter sessions, and in one of the letters recommending him to the Council of State he is described as having "wrote a considerable time in Graham's office at Chester, and is a very sensible young man and ready clerk, and himself a warm Whig, as is his father also." His future, however, lay in the direction of the work to which Congress had called him, and he continued to be actively employed in making paper moulds until the close of the war, by which time he had established a reputation in the business that was the foundation of his future success and fortune. He subsequently formed a partnership with his younger brother, David Sellers, under the firm name of Nathan & David Sellers, and in due course he was ably assisted by his son Coleman, who had marked ability as a mechanical engineer, and jointly they invented important improvements in paper making machinery, and added the manufacture of carding machinery to the business. Nathan Sellers served on many important improvements for canal and other state improvements, and in city affairs he was for several terms a member of common councils, being jointly nominated and elected to office by both political parties.

In 1817 he removed from Philadelphia to his country place, "Millbank," in Upper Darby, and, while he retained his interest in the business of Nathan & David Sellers, he entrusted the active management to his son, Coleman Sellers, and associates, including James and Samuel, sons of David Sellers, who had succeeded to their father's interest upon his death in 1813.

Nathan Sellers married, at Philadelphia, May 4, 1779, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Joseph and Mary (Johnson) Coleman, born at Philadelphia, October 2, 1756. Her father was the son of Dr. Joseph and Mary (Thomas) Coleman, of Prince George's county, Maryland, and a grandson of Thomas Coleman, of Scituate, Massachusetts, where the family settled in 1638, and were among the early Quakers who suffered persecution in New England.

Nathan and Elizabeth (Coleman) Sellers had issue as follows:

1. Coleman, born in Darby, Delaware county, 11 mo., 7, 1781, of whom presently.

2. Ann, born in Philadelphia, 4, mo., 20, 1783; died at Millbank, Upper Darby, 4, mo., 4, 1870.

3. Hannah, born in Philadelphia, 12 mo., 12, 1785; died at Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, 6 mo., 4, 1877; married 7 mo., 7, 1824, Peter Hill, born 4 mo., 5, 1783, died at Lenni, October 5, 1857; Issue: Nathan Sellers Hill, born 8 mo., 4, 1826; Elizabeth Sellers Hill, born 10 mo., 12, 1829.

4. Nathan, Jr., born in Philadelphia, 10 mo., 19, 1788, died in Burlington county, New Jersey, 12 mo., 23, 1867; married Euphrosie Sontag, born in 1790; died in Upper Darby, 6 mo., 7, 1856. He built the Wild Orchard place on Marshall road, adjoining his father's Millbank residence in Upper Darby, and after the death of his wife he removed in 1857 to Burlington county, New Jersey, having built the place known as Earl Hall, where he spent the remainder of his life.

V. Coleman Sellers, eldest son of Nathan and Elizabeth (Coleman) Sellers, born at Darby, 11 mo., 27, 1781. He was educated at private schools in Philadelphia, but spent much of his boyhood at the home of his grandparents in Upper Darby, where his lifelong fondness for outdoor sports and athletics was developed. He was an accomplished horseman, and his skill as a skater always attracted attention when he appeared on the river during the skating season. He received his early business training in the employ of his father, and his ingenuity resulted in a number of useful patents in connection with his business, and also in other directions. On his father's retirement, and the subsequent dissolution of the firm of Nathan & David Sellers, he acquired as his interest the paper and carding machinery business, which he subsequently reorganized under the firm name of Coleman Sellers & Sons. In 1828 he built a shop in Upper Darby, on Cobb's Creek, near the Marshall road, for the manufacture of carding machinery, and later established his entire manufacturing business at this place, with dwellings for his employees, and gave to the settlement the name of Cardington. The improved equipment of these shops led the State railroad commissioners to call upon Coleman Sellers & Sons to undertake a contract for building locomotives for the Columbia Railroad. At the suggestion of the firm certain radical and important improvements in the design were accepted by the commissioners, which marked a radical change towards the locomotive construction with which we are familiar to-day, and included the substitute of iron in place of wooden frames for the running gear, the placing of the connecting rods and cylinders outside of the frame, and the introduction of the pivoted forward truck. Owing to the Cardington works being so far removed from railway transportation, Coleman Sellers did not encourage this departure from the regular business of the firm, nor did he see the contract completed, his death occurring May 7, 1834, at his residence, No. 10 North Sixth street, Philadelphia. Mr. Sellers was distinguished for his clearness and strength of judgment, which, joined with the kindly interest that he manifested in all his relations of life, made his influence felt and his counsel sought by those in his employ, as well as by his kinsmen and friends. While public spirited as a citizen, he had no taste for public life, and declined to allow his name to be proposed for Congress when solicited by the nominating committees of both parties at a time, too, when political excitement was tending to narrowing the party lines. The only office that he consented to accept was that of a commissioner appointed by the state legislature in 1821 for the erection of the Eastern Penitentiary. In Upper Darby he donated the land for the Union School, on Marshall road, and it was largely through his financial aid that the New Jerusalem Chapel was erected in the township.

He married September 23, 1805, at the residence of Henry Moore, Esq., in Montgomery county, Sophonisba, daughter of Charles Willson and Rachel (Brewer) Peale, who was born in Philadelphia, April 24, 1786, and died at Millbank, Upper Darby, October 26, 1859. They had issue:

1. Charles, b. October 25, 1806.
2. George Escol, b. November 26, 1808.
3. Elizabeth Coleman, b. October 24, 1810.

4. Harvey Lewis, b. February 25, 1813.
5. Anna, b. September 30, 1824.
6. Coleman, b. January 27, 1827.

VI. Charles Sellers, eldest son of Coleman and Sophonisba (Peale) Sellers, born in Philadelphia, October 25, 1806, was a mechanical engineer by profession, and from 1829 to 1841 was a member of the firm of Coleman Sellers & Sons. He subsequently engaged in the management of rolling mills and iron works in the west, and for a time was superintendent of motive power of the Indianapolis Railway. He died at Woodstock, Illinois, June 12, 1898. He married, at Philadelphia, December 10, 1829, Elizabeth, daughter of John and Olivia (Symes) Morris, born in Philadelphia, April 31, 1810, died at Woodstock, Illinois, April 21, 1895.

They had issue:

1. Sophonisba Peale, born September 28, 1830; died at Marion, Ohio, March 18, 1862.
2. Morris, born November 14, 1833.
3. Emilie, born June 28, 1835.
4. Louisa, born October 5, 1836; died July 7, 1837.
5. Alfred Harrold, born October 15, 1844; died July 17, 1878.
6. Charles, born October 15, 1844; died July 17, 1878.

VI. George Escol Sellers, son of Coleman and Sophonisba (Peale) Sellers, was born in Philadelphia, November 26, 1808, and by profession a mechanical engineer. From 1829-1841 he was an active member of the firm of Coleman Sellers & Sons, where he largely developed his skill as an engineer. He had considerable talent as an artist, and with Sully, Darley and others organized one of the earliest social organizations of artists in Philadelphia. He was deeply interested in archeological research pertaining to the American Indians, and formed an interesting collection of pottery and implements of the prehistoric tribes of the Ohio valley. He was an able engineer and mechanic, and took out many patents relating to the various arts in which he was from time to time engaged, including improvements in locomotives, particularly the type he built for the Panama Railway; the manufacture of lead pipe, and processes for making paper from vegetable fibre. While engaged in the business established by his father, he lived in Cardington, in Upper Darby, but after the dissolution of the partnership in 1839 he resided first at Cincinnati and subsequently in southern Illinois. After retiring from active business he removed to Chattanooga, Tennessee, where he died January 1, 1899. He married, at Philadelphia, March 6, 1833, Rachel Brooks, daughter of Robert A. and Eleanor Parrish, born July 18, 1812, died at

Sellers Landing, Hardin county, Illinois, September 14, 1860. They had issue:

1. Frederick Harold, born February 26, 1834.
2. Eleanor Parrish, born November 23, 1835, died August 21, 1855.
3. Lucy, born April 3, 1837, died September 21, 1860.
4. Charles Henry, born August 26, 1838, died December 29, 1858.
5. Edward Parrish, born June 26, 1842, died in infancy.
6. Anna Francis, born May 12, 1852, died in infancy.

VI. Elizabeth Coleman, daughter of Coleman and Sophonisba (Peale) Sellers, was born in Philadelphia, October 24, 1810; and died February 20, 1841; she married, at Philadelphia, November 27, 1832, Alfred Harrold, son of William and Charlotte Harrold, of Birmingham, England, who died January 1, 1844. They had issue:

1. William, born September 25, 1833, died January 1, 1837.
2. Charlotte Sellers, born July 30, 1835, died December 15, 1875; married at Birmingham, England, Rev. Robert William Simpson.
3. Frances Elizabeth, born October 26, 1837, married at Birmingham, England, November 7, 1860, Joseph Colvin Randall.
4. George, born August 4, 1840, died March 10, 1841.

VI. Harvey Lewis Sellers, son of Coleman and Sophonisba (Peale) Sellers, was born at Philadelphia, February 25, 1813, and died at Natchez, Mississippi, August 12, 1892. He was a dentist by profession, and continued in active practice until his death. He married (1) Sarah Ann, daughter of Dr. Nathan and Frances Shoemaker, of Philadelphia, who died May 1, 1845. He married (2) Annie Littler, and had one child, Edward, who died in infancy. He spent much of his life abroad, but finally established himself in the south where he married (3) November 14, 1866, Ellen Corrinne Miller, daughter of Daniel and Eliza (Bracken) Miller, of Natchez, Mississippi, born March, 1838, died April 1, 1893. Issue:

1. Frances Miller Sellers, born December 6, 1867.
2. Corrinne, born September 16, 1869, died December 18, 1895; married September 28, 1895, Martin L. French, of Chattanooga, Tennessee.

VI. Coleman Sellers, youngest son of Coleman and Sophonisba (Peale) Sellers, born at Philadelphia, January 27, 1827. He was educated at private schools in Philadelphia and at Bolmar's Academy at West Chester.

In his early manhood his limited opportunities for recreation were devoted to study of electricity, conchology, microscopy and photography, each undertaken with thoroughness, and often on lines of original research. Thus, in 1860, when experimenting with photography, he devised and patented an apparatus that he termed a "Kinetoscope," by which figures in stereoscopic pictures could be represented in motion, and which may be considered the parent of the several devices which have since been perfected through the subsequent development of instantaneous photography. About this time he noticed in the course of his experiments with gun cotton the properties which led him to suggest for the first time the use of absorbent cotton for surgical uses.

At the age of seventeen, he joined his elder brother, George Escal Sellers, who was engaged in engineering work in Cincinnati, and it was there that his professional career began. For several years he was engaged as surveyor on railroad work in Kentucky, and in 1846 he accepted employment in the Globe Rolling Mill, at Cincinnati, where he was advanced to the position of superintendent when but twenty-one years of age. He met with like success when employed by the Niles Locomotive Works, where he had many opportunities to develop his ingenuity and mechanical skill.

In 1856 he was induced to return to Philadelphia to take charge of the drawing room of the machine tool works of William Sellers & Company, and was subsequently admitted to an interest in the business.

In 1885 he retired from the firm and entered upon an independent practice of consulting engineer, in which he is now actively engaged. Of his notable work in this field, perhaps that of the greatest public interest is the development of water power at Niagara Falls. In 1889 he was retained by New York financiers to investigate and report upon the project, and when the work was undertaken he was made consulting engineer. In 1890 he served in London as a member of the International Niagara Commission, of which Lord Kelvin was chairman, the purpose of which was to determine the best method of generating power by water, and its transmission. Upon the adoption of the general plan of operation, Dr. Sellers was made chairman of the board of engineers employed to direct the work preparatory to the installation of its machinery, and when that stage of the development arrived the board was dissolved and Dr. Sellers appointed chief engineer of the Niagara Falls Power Company.

For some years Dr. Sellers has been a non-resident member of the faculty of Stevens Institute of Technology, holding the chair of Engineering Practice, and from this institution he has received the degree of Doctor of Engineering. In 1890 the University of Pennsylvania conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Science, and in recognition of his improvements in mechanic arts the King of Sweden conferred upon him the Royal Norwegian Order of St. Olaf.

He is a member of the American Philosophical Society; past president of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers; director and past president of the Franklin Institute; member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers of Great Britain; past president of the Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art, of which he was one of the founders; honorary member of the engineers of Philadelphia, and a member of various other scientific and engineering societies.

Dr. Sellers has contributed many papers to the proceedings of the engineering and scientific societies of which he is a member. He was for many years the American correspondent of the British Journal of Photography, and is one of the publication committee that edits the "Journal of the Franklin Institute." His well known antagonism to the enforced use of the metric system has resulted in many pointed articles from his pen on the subject.

Coleman Sellers married October 8, 1851, at Cincinnati, Ohio, Cornelia, daughter of Horace and Sarah Hewes (Whipple) Wells, born December 9, 1832. Issue:

1. Coleman Sellers, Jr., born in Cincinnati, September 5, 1852; married, 6 mo., 3, 1880, at Brooklyn, New York, Helen Graham, daughter of Joseph and Mary (Beach) Jackson, born at Troy, New York, November 22, 1852. Issue:

2. Lester Hoadley, born September 11, 1901.
3. Charles Coleman, born March 16, 1903.

IV. John Sellers, son of John and Ann (Gibson) Sellers, born in Upper Darby, 12 mo., 1, 1762. He was taught the trade of tanning and currying leather at the tannery owned by his father at the place known as "Wayside," on the West Chester road. In 1779, when seventeen years of age, he was permitted to tan calf skins on his own account, and several years later he removed to Philadelphia, where he built a tannery on Dock creek, and established himself at his trade. In 1795 he formed a partnership with Joseph Keen, a currier, under the firm name of Keen & Sellers, and for many years carried on the business at their place on Chestnut street below Fourth, opposite Carpenter's Hall. In 1808 the partnership was dissolved, John Sellers retiring to Upper Darby where he had purchased the farm known as Hoodland, adjoining his father's estate, and for some years he made his home at the old Wayside place where he had learned his trade. For a time he operated the tannery adjoining the house, at least to the extent of preparing card leathers for the firm of N. & D. Sellers. His chief occupation, however, was the care and improvement of his farm, which extended by purchase, and of the grist and merchant mills that comprised his share of his father's estate. In 1821 he began the erection of the dwelling house since known as "Hoodland," to which he removed his family on its completion in 1824.

John Sellers married, at Philadelphia, 4 mo., 27, 1786, Mary Coleman, born 9 mo., 9, 1761, daughter of Joseph and Mary (Johnson) Coleman, of Philadelphia. They had issue as follows:

1. Charles, born 8 mo., 14, 1787. Died 11 mo., 10, 1787.
2. John, born 10 mo., 7, 1788. Died 10 mo., 19, 1788.
3. John (2), born 9 mo., 29, 1789.
4. Elizabeth, born 8 mo., 26, 1791, married at Darby Meeting 5 mo., 3, 1810, Abraham L. Pennock.
5. Ann, born 9 mo., 27, 1793; died 6 mo., 11, 1815.

V. John Sellers, son of John and Mary (Coleman) Sellers, was born at Philadelphia, 9 mo., 29, 1789. Upon the death of his mother, when he was about five years of age, he was placed in the care of his grandparents in Upper Darby, and received his education at the common schools of the neighborhood. He learned the trade of a miller under Thomas Steel, who operated the grist mill owned by his father, and in 1814 he assisted in the building of a new mill near where the West Chester road crosses Cobb's creek, on the Millbourne place. Here he was established in business on his own account, and laid the foundation for the extensive milling enterprise now conducted by the Millbourne Mills Company on the site of the original buildings.

He married, at Friends' Meeting in Wilmington, Delaware, 4 mo., 10, 1817, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of William and Sarah (Sharpless) Poole, born 4 mo., 28, 1792, by whom he had issue as follows:

1. Mary, b. 6 mo., 2, 1818; d. 12 mo., 15, 1894.
2. Sarah Poole, b. 2 mo., 18, 1820; died in infancy.
3. William Poole, b. 4 mo., 13, 1822; died in infancy.
4. John (1) b. 9 mo., 5, 1823; died in infancy.
5. William, b. 9 mo., 19, 1824, of whom following.
6. John (2) b. 7 mo., 27, 1826.
7. George H., b. 8 mo., 21, 1828; died 6 mo., 7, 1897.
8. Sarah A., b. 8 mo., 21, 1828.
9. Martha, b. 10 mo., 2, 1830; died 12 mo., 11, 1899.
10. Francis, b. 9 mo., 23, 1833.
11. Nathan, b. 7 mo., 18, 1836.

From the time of his marriage until 1858, John Sellers lived in the old Millbourne house adjoining the mill. In that year he removed to the new residence that he built on higher ground to the west of the original dwelling, and here his wife died 1 mo., 3, 1859. He was a much respected member of the Society of Friends, and throughout his life a regular attendant at Darby Meeting. He was an earnest but conservative abolitionist in the anti-slavery days, and a delegate to the Free Soil convention at Buffalo in 1848. He was much interested in the cause of education, and was one of those who founded and helped maintain the Union School on the Marshall road in Upper Darby. He served as treasurer and a director of the Upper Darby school district from the establishment of the township until the latter years of his life, and in many other offices and positions of trust. He was treasurer of the West Chester Turnpike Company.

He died at his Millbourne place, 7 mo., 20, 1878, and was buried at Darby.

VI. William Sellers, eldest surviving son of John and Elizabeth (Poole) Sellers, was born in Upper Darby township, 9 mo., 19, 1824. He was educated at a private school in the neighborhood of his home, and on completing his studies he entered as an apprentice the works of his uncle, J. Morton Poole, near Wilmington, Delaware, where he remained about seven years, and until he was twenty-one years of age. In 1845 he removed to Providence, Rhode Island, having been engaged by Fairbanks, Bancroft & Company to take charge of their machine shop.

After remaining with them about two years he returned to Pennsylvania, and began the same department of manufacturing on his own account, in a location in West Philadelphia, near Thirtieth and Chestnut streets. In less than a year Mr. Bancroft, the former head of the Providence firm, determined to come to Philadelphia, and he and Mr. Sellers joined forces, going into partnership in 1848, on Beach street, Kensington, opposite the Treaty Tree, to manufacture machine tools and mill gearing, under the firm name of Bancroft & Sellers.

In 1855 Mr. Bancroft's death occurred, and the business, then established at Sixteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, was continued under the name of William Sellers & Company.

The mechanical skill and ingenuity of Mr. Sellers and his associates soon placed this establishment in a leading position among the machine tool builders of the country, with an international reputation for the originality and high standard of perfection in the design and construction of its products. At the Paris exposition of 1867 the firm's exhibit received a gold medal, and in 1873, at Vienna, it was awarded five gold medals besides the Grand Diploma of Honor. Similar recognition was obtained at Philadelphia in 1876 and in Paris in 1889, where, besides the Grand Prix awarded to William Sellers, incorporated, Mr. Sellers was made a chevalier de la Legion d' Honneur.

Mr. Sellers took an active interest in the Franklin Institute at a time when it needed support, and his efforts contributed largely to placing it in the prominent position it has since maintained. In 1864 he was elected to its presidency, and in the same year read before the institute his important paper on screw threads, in which he gave the first formula ever offered for proportioning them. This formula has since been adopted as the standard for the United States, and in 1900 the truncated form and angle proposed for screw threads by Mr. Sellers in this paper were adopted abroad by the International Congress for "L'Unification des Filetages et des Tauges," held at Zurich.

During the war of the Rebellion, Mr. Sellers took a prominent and active part in various duties that fell to patriotic citizens. He was one of the members of the Union Club (the forerunner of the Union League), and as a member of the League he rendered substantial service in organizing colored troops. He has subsequently taken an active interest in the cause of municipal reform, and while in principle a staunch Republican, his name is generally found connected with reform movements when occasion calls for public spirited action, irrespective of party lines.

He has also rendered important service to the public in other fields. Having made a study of the English limited liability laws, and recognizing the advantages that would result from their application here, he had a bill prepared, and, after much effort, finally enacted by the state legislature. The greater part of the expense involved was borne by Mr. Sellers personally. He was also instrumental in obtaining the legislation by which boiler insurance companies were permitted to extend their business into Pennsylvania.

In 1866 Mr. Sellers was elected a trustee of the University of Pennsylvania. In 1868 he was appointed a member of the first Fairmount Park Commission, at the time when the enlargement of the park was under consideration, and when the work of the commission involved the determination of the boundaries, the purchase of the large tracts of land to be acquired, the preparation of plans for its improvement, and the adoption of the rules and regulations to govern its use as a public pleasure ground. Mr. Sellers served for a time as a director of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company. In 1868 he was elected a director of the Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore Railroad Company, and was annually thereafter re-elected until the re-organization of the company as the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Company, of which he is to-day a director. In 1868 he was elected president of the Edge Moor Iron Company, and under his direction its extensive plant near Wilmington, Delaware, was established. Upon the reorganization of the William Butcher Steel Works at Nicetown, Philadelphia, as the Midvale Steel Company, Mr. Sellers was elected its president in 1873, continuing in that office until 1887, and is now its largest individual stockholder.

In 1873 he was elected a member of the National Academy of Sciences in Washington, and in the same year, when the Centennial Board of Finance was created by Act of Congress, to undertake the management of the Centennial Exhibition of 1876, Mr. Sellers was elected one of the two vice-presidents, and in this capacity, as in all similar duties to which he has been called, he rendered valuable service. In 1875 he was appointed a corresponding member of the Societe d'Encouragement pour L'Industrie National of Paris, and he is a member also of the Institution of Mechanical and Civil Engineers of Great Britain, the American Society of Civil Engineers, the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, the Academy of National Science, etc.

He married (second) 8 mo., 21, 1873, Ameila, daughter of Daniel F. and Charlotte Haasz.

Issue: Alexander, born 12 mo., 24, 1875; Richard, born 3 mo., 9, 1881; Christine, born 11 mo., 12, 1882, died 2 mo., 25, 1884.

JOHN SELLERS, JR., was born at Upper Darby, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, July 27, 1826, a son of John and Elizabeth (Poole) Sellers, and a descendant of Samuel Sellers, the pioneer American ancestor of the family, who in 1682 purchased from William Penn a tract of land in the vicinity of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, known at that time as Chester county, a portion of this property embracing the ground upon which stands Millbourne, the handsome and commodious home of John Sellers, Jr., which is adorned with masterpieces of ancient and modern art, and is still in the possession of the Sellers family. John Sellers (father) was born in 1789, was for many years the owner and operator of a nextensive milling plant which was one of the leading industries of the county. He married Elizabeth Poole, a daughter of William and Sarah (Sharpless) Poole, of Wilmington, Delaware, and his death occurred in 1878, in the ninetieth year of his age.

John Sellers, Jr., enjoyed the advantages of a practical education which was obtained in the common schools adjacent to his home. In early life he directed his attention to the milling business, which he pursued for a number of years in partnership with his father on the site of the present Millbourne Mills. In 1848, being possessed of a desire to view the beauties and wonders of nature throughout other sections of this great Union, he started on a trip across the continent, and, traveling by stage-coach and river steamer, he arrived at Cincinnati, Ohio, and entered the employ of a prominent mill operator, later being appointed clerk in the Lafayette Bank in that city. During his subsequent journeys he explored many interesting sections of the far west, which at that time was uncultivated and almost unpeopled. He returned to Philadelphia in 1849, and for a number of years successfully conducted an iron foundry there, which he established upon his return from the west. In 1853 he became a member of the firm of Bancroft & Sellers, which consisted of his brother, William Sellers, and his brother-in-law, Edward Bancroft, and aided materially in building up an extensive business in the manufacture of machine tools. In 1885 he became president of the Millbourne Mills Company, incorporated in that year, this being the enterprise that was organized in 1757, and for many years was known as Sellers Mill. In 1902 he tendered his resignation of the office. At the formation of the new company of "William Sellers & Co., Incorporated," in 1886, Mr. Sellers was appointed vice-president and treasurer, and still holds the incumbency of these offices.

Mr. Sellers was one of the incorporators of the Edge Moor Iron Company in 1869, and from that year until his resignation, October 2, 1901, he served as its vice-president, and still retains a large pecuniary interest in the company. He is also a director and extensive stockholder of the Midvale Steel Company. He was also an active factor in founding and establishing the Nation, a popular weekly periodical published in New York city, and has now in his possession all the volumes of the journal issued since 1865, the year of its establishment; they are handsomely bound and occupy a conspicuous place in the library of his home. He is one of the few surviving organizers of the Union League of Philadelphia, and enjoys the distinction of having been chosen to prepare a portion of the sketch included in a history of the League which was published in 1902; he also holds membership in the Franklin Institute.

In Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, October 6, 1853, Mr. Sellers married Ann Caroline Keen, daughter of Joseph Swift Keen, of Philadelphia, and one son and four daughters have been the issue of this union.

VII. Morris Sellers, eldest son of Charles and Elizabeth (Morris) Sellers, was born at Cardington, Upper Darby township, November 14, 1833. Most of his early life was devoted to railway engineering in the west. He was associated with George Westinghouse in the introduction of the airbrake, and subsequently established a successful business in Chicago, selling and manufacturing railway supplies. He married (1st) Amanda Patterson, at Cincinnati, Ohio, February 2, 1854, and had Lulu, born December 25, 1854; Alfred H., born May 9, 1862, died August 7, following.

His wife died at Keokuk, Iowa, May 27, 1862, and on November 15, 1864, he married (2d) Rose McCune, daughter of John and Catherine McCune, of Keokuk, born at Beverly, Ohio, March 27, 1844, by whom he had: John, born August 12, 1865; Blanch, born April 2, 1870; Henry Escol, November 5, 1874, died June 15, 1875; Elizabeth Morris.

VII. Alfred Harrold Sellers, second son of Charles and Elizabeth (Morris) Sellers, was born at Cardington, Upper Darby, in 1838, and upon the removal of his family to Chicago he became interested in the real estate business, and, acquiring a competence, he has since become prominently connected with financial institutions in Chicago.

He married (first) at Woodstock, Illinois, Josephine, daughter of Charles and Elizabeth Patterson, of that place, by whom he had: Frank Harrold, born at Chicago, January 30, 1864. His wife died at Chicago, February 3, 1884, and on March 2, 1885, he married (second), Clara Fay, daughter of John Lane and Emeline (Philbrick) Hancock, born in New York city, in 1845.

KEEN FAMILY. Ann Caroline Keen (wife of John Sellers, Jr.) was the daughter of Joseph Swift and Ann (Longstreth) Keen. Her father was born in the Northern Liberties, Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania, July 31, 1789, and removed to West Philadelphia in 1816. Here he followed the business of lumber merchant and acquired a considerable amount of real estate. He lived from 1830 to 1874 at the northeast corner of Chestnut and Mansion (afterward Thirty-second) streets, which property was sold after his death to Mr. Anthony J. Drexel, to become the site of the Drexel Institute. Among other properties owned by him was one on Market street, west of ~~Ninety~~th third street, now occupied by the power-house of the Philadelphia Traction Company, and wharves on the Schuylkill river, embracing the site of the Chestnut street bridge and that of the Philadelphia Market Company. He was a commissioner of the ~~borough~~^{du} of West Philadelphia, and took a lively interest in all matters relating to the improvement of that portion of Philadelphia. Baptized and confirmed by Bishop William White, at Christ church, Philadelphia, he was an active member of the Protestant Episcopal church. He was one of the founders of St. Mary's church, in West Philadelphia, drawing the plans for and superintending the construction of the first building used by that congregation. He was a vestryman of that church, and also of St. Mark's (now St. Andrew's) church, West Philadelphia, and a deputy to the diocesan convention which elected Alonzo Potter bishop of Pennsylvania. He died February 4, 1883, at a house at the northeast corner of Chestnut street and Woodland avenue, Philadelphia, which he had built in 1841 as a residence for his eldest son, and where he had lived since 1874.

He was descended from Joran Kyn, the principal colonist of Upland (now Chester), Pennsylvania, who accompanied Governor Johan Printz from Sweden in 1643, and resided some years with him on Tinicum Island. (A biographical and genealogical account of the family occurs in the "Pennsylvania Magazine of History and Biography," volumes ii-vii, published by the Historical Society of Pennsylvania.)

Ann Longstreth, mother of Ann Caroline Keen, was the daughter of Benjamin Longstreth, founder of Phoenixville, Pennsylvania, son of Bartholomew Longstreth of Longstroth Dale, Deanery of Craven, Yorkshire, England, who emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1698.

DAVID SELLERS (Senior) of the firm of N. & D. Sellers. David Sellers, third son of John and Ann (Gibson) Sellers, and father of Samuel and James, was born at Sellers Hall, Upper Darby township, Delaware county, 4 mo., 1, 1757, and died 12 mo., 2, 1813, at his home, Sixth street, above Market, Philadelphia.

David Sellers was a person of fine moral and intellectual characteristics. An unusually well balanced individual. He was of a philosophical cast of mind, and was remarkable for the equanimity of his temper. He was conscientious and imbued with deep religious feeling. He governed the acts of his life by the simple rule of doing unto others as he would have others do unto him. This he considered the essence of true religion. His brother Nathan said of him, at the time of his death and before the assembled children and elders of the two families, "Brother David and I were in business together nigh unto thirty years. In all that time he spoke not a harsh word to me, nor do I think he had as much as a hard thought." A remarkable utterance.

In an old diary of David Sellers, among numerous references to personal friends and others, the following occurs relative to the death of his old "Master" David Bacon, to whom he was at an early age apprenticed to learn the hating business: "June 5, 1809. This afternoon my ancient friend David Bacon departed this life, I have no doubt in exchange for a better, about three o'clock in the afternoon. Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head to-day," and he said, 'Yea, I know it, hold your peace.' Under date of June 7, 1809, we find the following brief comment: "David Bacon's funeral. Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

It was said by a grandson of David Bacon, a prominent and cultured minister in the Society of Friends, that David Sellers through life always spoke of David Bacon as "Master." That was the usual mode of address by the young apprentice of the day to the one under whom he was receiving instruction. David Sellers' respect for David Bacon was so great he simply continued that form of address until death separated them.

Under date of September 22, 1810, he makes in his modest diary the following note: "This mullin must not grow upon my father's grave. It is plucked off." A grandson, in copying for another some extracts from this diary, comments upon the above short entry as follows: "What a picture these few words present to us. Grandfather has gone out to the old graveyard on the hill, where he finds a coarse weed growing upon his father's grave. He is feelingly annoyed, and he stoops to pull it up. How clearly we see him in the kindly act. His father was a positive man, but his children respected and loved him well."

David Sellers' talent did not run, perhaps, as much in the direction of mechanics as did that of his brother Nathan, and yet he was not at all deficient in mechanical ability, and his business judgment was excellent. In a word, he was a man of sound business judgment, good mechanical ability, and possessed of a rare moral and religious nature. He was a person of proper humility, with a decent respect for himself and a rightful deference to the opinion and rights of others. He was an unassuming yet self-contained and just man, one respected by those knowing him for the good qualities of both head and heart. Through unobtrusive example and quiet utterance of his views, he was an influence in the community in which he lived. He was loyal to the cause of American liberty, and quietly active in philanthropic work. He was a feeling yet practical man, who believed in honest government and an honest life.

David Sellers was married, 12 mo., 23, 1779, to Rachel Coleman, who was born in Philadelphia, 12 mo., 17, 1757, and died at what had long been her and her husband's home, Sixth street, above Market, Philadelphia, 6 mo., 15, 1826. She was a daughter of Joseph and Mary (Johnson) Coleman. The married life of David and Rachel Sellers was a happy one, he and his estimable wife working together to relieve the distressed, the sick and the needy. They were zealous in this direction. He was a father of ten children, six of whom lived to grow up to manhood and womanhood, and to call their parents blessed. Their children were:

1. Samuel, born in Philadelphia, 9 mo., 16, 1780, died 6 mo., 1, 1850, at Wild Orchard, Upper Darby township.

2-3. Mary, born in Philadelphia, 5 mo., 2, 1782, died 2 mo., 9, 1863, at Oak Hall, Upper Darby; Joshua, born 5 mo., 2, 1782, in Philadelphia, where he died, 5 mo., 5, 1782.

4. James, born in Philadelphia, 10 mo., 15, 1783, died 4 mo., 6, 1857, at Springton, Upper Darby.

5. Elizabeth, born 4 mo., 3, 1786, in Philadelphia, where she died 6 mo., 3, 1835.

6. Sarah, born 9 mo., 26, 1788, in Philadelphia, died at Darby 1 mo., 29, 1850.

7. David (1), born 9 mo., 1, 1790, in Philadelphia, where he died 7 mo., 17, 1795.

8. Joseph, born 6 mo., 23, 1794, in Philadelphia, where he died 7 mo., 14, 1794.

9. Rachel, born in Philadelphia, 11 mo., 16, 1795, and died 3 mo., 15, 1842, at Oak Hall, Upper Darby.

10. David (2), born 12 mo., 20, 1802, in Philadelphia, where he died 4 mo., 28, 1812.

Nathan and David Sellers held their real estate, which was very considerable, in common, until the death of David. They were very congenial brothers. Even as that of David and Jonathan of old, was their affection for each other. The little two-story brick house in which the two brothers started business, on Sixth street, between Market and Arch, opposite the large block of ground then known as "Hudson's Apple Orchard," on which they afterward built, is still standing. The brothers were married within a few months of each other, and it is thought the two couples occupied at first the small dwelling in common. It is related of them that because of their moderate means they at the first ate their meals off their tool chests. If this be an error as to the married couples, doubtless it is true as to the young men before marriage. It is supposed the house in which they first lived was the one in which they transacted business. Those were the days of small things with many. This occupancy of one small dwelling lasted possibly a short time. But in after years it is known the two families occupied a summer residence in the "Neck." This was near to the Stephen Girard farm, west of Broad street. It is said that on this Stephen Girard place the luscious Sickel or Sackel pear originated.

David Sellers had never worked, presumably, on his father's farm excepting as a boy doing light work and the "chores." After going to Philadelphia to learn the trade of hatting, that city was his home. He was, however, greatly interested in agricultural matters, and was a member of the Philadelphia Society for the Promotion of Agriculture, of which Judge Peters was president, George Clymer vice-president, Samuel Hodgdon treasurer, and James Mease, M. D., secretary, during the time of his membership. Many prominent citizens of the city, state and country were members of this public-spirited and useful society, the object of which was to diffuse agricultural intelligence. Practical farmers and other citizens of intelligence, interested in the welfare of the state, prepared papers which were read before the society and published. Among its members were numbered the following prominent citizens of that time, namely: Charles Biddle, Edward Drinker, John Vaughan, Charles Thompson, William Hamilton, Cooper Wistar, M. D., John Dickinson, John Jay, Timothy Pickering, Philip Price, Thomas Leiper, Israel Morris, Stephen Girard, William Rawle, Paul Beck, Joseph Cloud, J. A. Eckfeldt, and others. A majority of the members of the society were citizens of Philadelphia and its immediate vicinity. Some were residents of other parts of the state and country, holding honorary membership. The society was formed in the year 1785. In the "Memoirs of the Society," published in the year 1808, and printed by Jane Aitkin, No. 71 North Third street, Philadelphia, appears a "Statistical Account of the Schuylkill Permanent Bridge."

David Sellers, in his private diary, criticises the management of the directors having charge of the erection of this famous structure. Supposing, with others, that there was a weakness in the western abutment, he outlines a plan for strengthening it which indicates mechanical and engineering knowledge. Commenting on the great cost and wasteful expenditures of money, he says, "Tomorrow, I have been informed by advertisement, the new bridge over the Schuylkill is to be opened for general traveling, and that it is free for foot passengers. As I have been made to hope by the terms of the incorporating act that it would after a short time be free altogether, I have been down to see it this evening (and to realize that hope in some small measure) walked over it. Because the expenditure has been so wild, so extravagantly expensive, I never expect to cross it free again."

This extract would seem to be under date of October 19, 1804. The bridge was opened for travel apparently, January 1, 1805. The first stone of the eastern pier was laid September 1, 1801, that of the western pier December 25, 1802. David Sellers died December 19, 1813, so he probably never again passed over it free of toll, it remaining a toll bridge until after the year 1834, the toll for foot passengers being one cent.

The erection of the "Permanent Bridge" was a great event of that day. The name of Nathan Sellers, brother of David, appears among those of the first board of directors. In the board at the finish, his name along with others is absent, they possibly not approving of the management. Judge Richard Peters seems to have been a leading spirit in the company, and in all probability the project would have been a failure only for his indomitable will and public spirit. Beyond doubt, unforeseen difficulties were met with, and to overcome these modern mechanical and engineering appliances were then unknown. It is to the credit, however, of the builders of the pier and abutments of this early structure, that they are the same which have supported the several subsequent superstructures at that spot, including the present heavy cantilever bridge which accommodates the enormous traffic of today.

The expense attending the erection of the "Permanent Bridge" was certainly very great, seemingly "wild and extravagant," to the regret of the many stockholders of the company, but those piers and abutments have stood the test of time, and with but little inexpensive strengthening have answered more than the purpose originally intended. All is well that ends well. Thousands upon thousands were the footsteps over the old-time bridge, after David Sellers and others were invited to walk over it at its opening. How many dollars those footsteps brought into the company, one cent to the individual until toll was abandoned, we do not know. We know, however, that the toll exacted became a burden to those using the bridge, before it was discontinued.

The building of the "Permanent Bridge," (there had been several temporary bridges before it) attracted universal attention. The citizens of Delaware and Chester counties were particularly interested. A long, minute and exceedingly interesting "statistical account" of its conception and building appears as a supplement to the "Memoirs of the Philadelphia Agricultural Society," Vol. I, published in the year 1808, to be found, probably, at the Philadelphia Library.

GEORGE SELLERS, of Sellers Hall, the last of the generations who lived their long lives there—in his day a well known citizen of Upper Darby—was an interesting character. He was the youngest son to live of John and Ann (Gibson) Sellers, and inherited from his father this rich farm which had passed from father to son for four generations.

Samuel, the emigrant, taking up the land by patent when a young man, spent the remainder of his life here, dying after long years of industry and influence, at an advanced age. The successive owners, each representing a generation of the family, were Samuel (2), John (1), and George, the subject of this sketch. Each was born at the homestead, and spent his entire life there, all living to a ripe old age. Each married and became the head of a large family. Their children in turn married, and settled for the most part in the immediate neighborhood, or at a not far off locality. Many years passed before the descendants of the original settler began to scatter. Rather clannishly they had clung together. The old neighborhood was good enough for them, especially as they had prospered in it. They were surrounded by neighbors of respect, ability and worth, why leave it? A change came at last, however, and now the descendants of the Quaker emigrant from Derbyshire, England, to the Province of Pennsylvania, are to be found in many of the states of the Union. At the time of the arrival of the first of the name—the two unmarried brothers, Samuel and George—there was but a fringe of population along the Atlantic coast. Now, two hundred years and more later, the country, under a more liberal form of government, has rapidly filled up. State governments have been formed, the union of these states established, great cities sprung into existence, and the then almost unknown and unpeopled Pacific coast has more than a scattered population of Indians and Mexicans, the western shore of the great Republic vieing with that of the original and eastern, as to its enterprise, wealth and intelligence.

George Sellers was in his day a well known farmer citizen of his native county. Energetic, industrious, economical and intelligently alert, he brought the fertile acres of his ancestors to a higher state of cultivation than they before had known, although under the personal care and watchfulness of the several preceding generations the land had become quite productive. There is probably no better dairy farm in the state today, the writer recently counting over seventy-five head of milk cows feeding in the great meadow before the ancient home. Invited to look into the old time spring-house, now greatly enlarged, he noticed with interest the modern appliances for rapidly cooling and bottling the rich milk as it came from the hands of the busy milkers, also the complete hot water arrangements for cleaning effectively the milky bottles. It was a different scene from that which he remembered seeing at the same spot when a boy. At that time the daughters of the house did the milking—as then was the custom—pouring the white contents of their pails into the bright well-cleaned pans which were immediately placed in the cool water of the neverfailing spring. The modern mode is more effective, but in the old-time way there was more of poetry. Although this fertile farm is no longer in the Sellers family, he who now rents and carries it on so successfully, it may not be amiss to say, is a descendant of the original Sellers settler.

George Sellers was the brother of Nathan, David and John, memoirs of whom appear in this work. He received an education such as was furnished by the country schools of his time. He was a person of excellent moral and mental qualities. While of a poetical nature, writing interesting verse, he was yet very practical. Through a long life of industry and economy he made himself pecuniarily comfortable, being at his death what was at that time considered a rich man. The rich man of that day, however, was not the wealthy one of today.

George Sellers was of a very tender nature, a genial unassuming man who in his intercourse with others endeavored in a remarkable degree to act justly. He governed his actions more by the demand of equity than by the bare word of the law. The writer recalls an incident of his life showing this characteristic. He was the owner of stock in a bank which had failed. He was sent for, and a proposition made to him by the officials which he deemed dishonorable. Upon meeting a friend as he left the bank, who knew of the failure and his relation to it, he was rallied upon his troubled looks and told to cheer up, that his loss was a small one which he could well bear. His reply was, "It is not the loss of the money which troubles me; it is the dishonorable proposition, as I consider it, just made to me." He was of a sensitive nature, and had a high sense of honor. In his dealings with men it could be said of him as it was said of his ancestor, the emigrant, that he was "upright and just."

He was not only industrious himself and attentive to business, but he liked all about him to be the same. He thought the world had no use for idlers. He kept his farm, when personally working it, free from weeds, and in his old age, when it was under the management of others, he was frequently seen working over the fields with his hoe upon his shoulder, ready to uproot any noxious weed his sharp eye might detect. There was a saw mill upon the place built by his father, John Sellers, previous to the Revolution, at which the latter sawed some material for the army, which act brought him into conflict with the religious society of which he was a member. In addition to his farming, George Sellers operated this mill, which often times ran at night as well as in the day. It was followed by an oil mill, and this by a mill for the manufacture of coarse paper, operated by Casper S. Garrett. That in turn has gone, nothing showing at the old mill site save the green hillside shaded by great oak trees. The water right or power was purchased by Mr. Garrett, and a large mill erected further up stream on land bought by him for the purpose. The water for these old mills was brought to them through a long tortuous "head race," being taken from Cobbs' Creek at a point more than a mile from the mill, following the course of said race. This was done because there was no suitable place for a dam near to the mill. A small breast-work of loose stones across the stream was all that was necessary to direct the water into the mill race.

George Sellers was a man of great muscular strength, although a "puny infant," he was used to say, at the time of birth, and not expected to live. So uncertain was his life, he was not at the first named. "But," he used to gleefully remark, "I lived to disappoint them all." In connection with this he sometimes related the following incident. A number of men had gathered upon one occasion at the old mill, and as was not unusual, were boasting each of his superior strength, etc. They finally challenged each other to a test—the test to be the lifting one end of a heavy log or butt which lay, in some measure, balanced across the stump of a tree. Each tried his hand without success, the owner of the mill, standing amusedly by, not having entered into the contest, he not being much of a boaster. Called upon by the others to show what he could do, he told one of them to stand upon the log. This brought forth derisive laughter, but nevertheless one did as requested, when George Sellers lifted log and man with but little effort.

The verse of this farmer poet related generally to subjects religious and pastoral. From a long poem entitled "Cobb's Creek," written in 1802, the following extracts are taken: This creek in the early time was known as Mill Creek, that name having been given it by the Swedes or early English settlers in Kingsessing. It bordered a portion of the old Sellers Hall farm, and is the present boundary line between Philadelphia and Delaware county. The Indian name of this creek was Karakung.

EXTRACTS.

Dear Cobbs, how long thy beauteous winding stream
Has flowed unsung thro' lay sequestered shades,
Each rural poet sought some nobler theme
Than thy clear waves and murmuring cascades.

Oft as I ramble on thy flowry side
And thoughtful view the havoc art has made,
I retrospect thee in thy sylvan pride
When through thy vale the happy natives strayed.

Oft have I found in Silence a rich bliss
Pervade my mind, as by thy winding stream
I've stood in quiet thoughtfulness
Pursuing some instructive moral theme.

For oft the common scenes which round us lie
May give instruction man cannot impart;
Their silent language fills the quiet eye,
And gently steals upon the yielding heart.

Hence, will the sober thinking mind obtain
A foretaste of that blissful state so dear
To thinking minds, when time and space and pain
And all corporeal things shall disappear.

My native stream, upon thy flowing side
I learned to think connectedly on man,
And human life, and often vainly tried
With effort weak to trace the mighty plan.

Near twenty years have I in solitude
Upon the lonely bank of Cobbs, apart
From the gay world industriously pursued
The Sawyer's laborious useful art.

Here through the whirling wheel thy waters pour,
Diffusive 'round the dancing spray is spread,
The mangled stream sends up a hollow roar,
Impatient hastening to its native bed.

But most I love thy woodland silent shades
Where quiet nature does her work alone.
Here no rude sound the sacred haunt pervades,
But the brown thrush sweet chants his varied tune.

Here oft alone, or with a friend, I've strayed,
Listening to the wood-robin's melodious note
Soft mingling with the murmuring cascade
Which sweetly on the evening breezes float.

* * * * *

Much of their time my long lived sires have spent Upon thy bank, and in succession knew
 Those youthful sports—here each in calm content
 Did peacefully his rural tale pursue.

It may perhaps be said that the "friend" he speaks of was she who after a long courtship became his happy and congenial wife. Her parents lived for many years beside the romantic stream of which her husband sang. Doubtless many were the walks of the young couple beside the dashing waters of the rocky stream as it pursued its noisy way through the inviting woods which shaded its romantic banks. When the proper time came, she then living in Philadelphia near the old Swede church, upon the banks of the Delaware, the two were married there, unaccompanied by any one.

A daughter writing to a friend, telling of her parents' long delayed marriage says: "My parents were married 9th of 8th month, 1808, at the old Swedes church, Southwark. The certificate is in my possession. They had only to cross the churchyard from my grandmother's residence to gain the church, and my father not being a member (presumably of meeting) and both being of a romantic disposition, it pleased them to be married that way, so after their summer tea, as the sun was sinking, they strolled across the graves to secure the services of the old parson (Dr. Nicholas Collin or Coleyn) who remarked to them in his broken language, 'It is a fitting place to be married, where Almighty God is worshipped,' and so they returned by moonlight." It is recorded that Dr. Collin married 3,375 couples at this old historic church.

George Sellers wrote numerous poetical pieces. In one, under the head of "Local Attainment and Filial Affection," he alludes to his mother in the following lines:

My mother's warm heart is soft sympathy's seat,
 Her hands its kind dictates obey;
 If the poor friendless wanderers enter her gate
 They always go smiling away.

The wretch whom false virtue's harsh pride has forsaken,
 Stirs pity's soft glow in her breast;
 Their sorrows do all her kind feelings awaken
 To relieve and not judge the distressed.

He concludes with the following verse:

And now if this heritage shall be mine,
 May I guard it with sedulous care;
 And practice that tender compassion divine
 Which long has been prevalent here.

That heritage did become his, and he did guard it with the most sedulous care. There is a room in the old Sellers Hall (the house stands today, over two hundred years old), which is shown as the one in which the poor travelling stranger of George Sellers' time and that of his ancestors was lodged and fed.

George Sellers was a Friend, and with his wife worshipped the latter years of his life at the Upper Darby Meeting House—then in the country, surrounded by woods and fields, now in the borough of growing Lansdowne, surrounded by beautiful gardens and inviting houses. It is a settlement of quietness and pleasant homes.

Ann E. Sellers, daughter of Joshua and Abigail Evans Ash, and wife of George Sellers, was a woman of quiet but great mental force. Like her husband she was of a romantic and poetical nature, yet very practical withal. She ventured not into verse, but was a writer of beautiful letters. Not demonstrative, she was yet a person of true feeling and great sensibility—this manifesting itself more in acts than in words. She was very industrious, attending to the manifold duties of a farmer's wife with energy and exactitude. She endeavored to be strictly just, and was attentive to the comfort of all about her. She was a loving and conscientious mother, requiring of her children strict obedience to parental authority, but permitting them proper liberty and youthful enjoyment when the lessons were over and household duties performed. She was resolute and not easily discouraged. She had a brave heart. She permitted not imposition upon her, nor would she impose upon others intentionally. Interesting incidents could be named showing her quiet force and native independence of character. She probably inherited her forceful and independent characteristics from her mother. Of this person the following interesting incident is related. When General Howe occupied Philadelphia, she upon one occasion was on her way to town for salt, it being scarce, when the valuable horse upon which she was mounted was taken from her by some British troopers. She returned to her home, procured another mount, rode directly to the General's headquarters in the city, and demanded the return of the stolen horse. The General at first denied having possession of the animal. She persisting, he finally said she might have her horse if she could pick him out and prove ownership, he secretly knowing the horse was in camp, but so changed or disguised, he believed, as to defy detection. Ordering the horses of the camp to be drawn into line, she rode along it on her later mount, in company with himself. They had not gone far when a whinny from the ranks answered that of the horse she rode. The horses recognized each other. The General, convinced but disconcerted, ordered the horse returned to her.

Upon another occasion some troopers rode up to her husband's house hoping to catch "the rebel." He secreting himself, she boldly awaited events. The single trooper who came forward attempted entrance through the door, but finding it barred, hoisted the unfastened window sash and soon was partly through. While in this helpless attitude, Mrs. Ash courageously and indignantly seized him by the neckcloth, and, vigorously twisting it, courage and affection giving her strength, nearly strangled him. Situated as he was, he could neither advance nor retreat. She ordered her servant woman to seize his sword and throw it upon the fire in the open fireplace, which she did. Acting with decision, she compelled the trooper to promise to withdraw himself and his men as a condition of release. He not knowing how many men might be in the house, consented and kept his word. There are quick-witted, courageous women as well as men. The house still stands near Church Lane, Upper Darby, where this interesting incident happened. The wife of George Sellers in her quiet way was just as resolute as her mother. Fortunately she was never called upon to assert herself under the same circumstances. She was known, however, to have uncomplainingly manifested in early life great patience and resolute endurance.

The children of this interesting and valued couple were:

Abigail, born 1809, died 6 mo., 25, 1890; married Edward Garrett 11 mo., 9, 1837.

Samuel, born 12 mo., 29, 1810; married (first) Mary C. Sellers, 2 mo., 5, 1835; (second) Sarah Abbott, 10 mo., 20, 1851.

Sarah, born 8 mo., 31, 1812; died 6 mo., 12, 1892; married George Pennock, 11 mo., 5, 1835.

Ann, born 3 mo., 23, 1814; died 7 mo., 27, 1844; married Stephen Paschall.

Jane, born 2 mo., 22, 1816; died 12 mo., 13, 1841; never married.

Alice, born 5 mo., 1, 1818; died 1 mo., 19, 1842; married Professor James Rhoads.

Margaret, born 8 mo., 18, 1822; married Joseph Powell 5 mo., 20, 1847.

Note: George Sellers, born 2 mo., 12, 1768, died 4 mo., 3, 1853. Ann E. Sellers, born 7 mo., 23, died 11 mo., 4, 1856. They were married 9 mo., 8, 1808. Margaret (Sellers) Powell, of Philadelphia, is the only surviving child of this interesting couple.

The only son, Samuel, who married (first) Mary C. Sellers, daughter of James and Elizabeth Cadwalader Sellers, of Philadelphia, and (secondly) Sarah Abbott, daughter of Stephen and Nancy Abbott, of Schenectady, New York, found his way to California in the early history of the state, where for a time he was engaged with General Fremont in mining operations. He finally settled down to farming there, raising a family of interesting children, all of whom married save one, a son of the first wife, who accompanied his father to the land of gold and turmoil when a child of eleven years. It was through the golden gates of the bay of San Francisco they entered the young city, after a long voyage around stormy Cape Horn.

This only son of George Sellers was well known in Delaware county in his early life as an intelligent farmer, interested in the pursuits of the county, in his agricultural work, and the reform measures of his day. He was active along with his younger cousins, J. Lidden Pennock, James Sellers, Jr., and his friend James Lewis, of Marple, and others, in creating anti-slavery sentiment in the section of the county in which they lived. They fearlessly braved the pro-slavery feeling prevalent at the time, and were instrumental in changing public opinion as to the propriety of restricting and eventually abolishing as a national evil human slavery. Sellers Hall farm, the home of Samuel Sellers and his father, was one of the stations on the "underground railroad" antedating the great Civil war. It is known that upon one occasion as many as thirty persons, men, women and children, were secreted in the spacious barns of the place, where they were fed and cared for before being, in squads or detachments, passed further on.

Samuel Sellers, son of George, was the first to carry the name to California. The descendants of Samuel the emigrant and Anna Gibbons, his wife are many. They are to be found as before said, throughout the states from the Atlantic to the Pacific, engaged in agricultural, mechanical, professional and scientific pursuits.

It may be said in connection with the name of George Sellers, that a large part of the tract which he inherited from his father, John Sellers, (1), is likely to be soon divided by streets and cut up into lots for improvements, it lying contiguous to the city line at Sixty-third and Market streets. It is distant half an hour by trolley to the Delaware river at the foot of the latter street, and from West Chester one hour by the Philadelphia & West Chester trolley line, which runs through it. The service on the latter line is unsurpassed. Trolley cars to Ardmore, on the Pennsylvania Railroad, also pass the property, and by trolley the towns of Darby, Media and Chester, in Delaware county, can quickly be reached. Thus, after the passing of two hundred years and more, the city of religious freedom founded by Penn has grown out to the land which Samuel Sellers, his friend and fellow emigrant, took up by patent under him. Penn frequently traveled the roads leading from his loved city to Darby, Merion, Haverford, Radnor, and other meeting localities. At Merion and Haverford he is known to have preached, perhaps at Darby and Radnor also. It is related of him that upon one occasion, when on his way to Haverford Meeting, on horseback, he overtook a little barefoot girl, Rebecca Wood, a resident of Darby, going to the same place. Bringing his horse to a convenient spot, he took her on behind him, and so she rode away bareback, her bare legs and feet dangling beside the good Governor's horse. As they entered the meeting house enclosure, they must have attracted attention. But that was a day of simplicity. A man as great as Penn could afford to act so independently and so kindly.

George Sellers and his good wife, Ann E. Ash, greatly endeared themselves to their appreciative relatives, as also to the residents of the neighborhood, by their simplicity, sincerity and unobtrusiveness. By their own descendants, as well as by those of their cotemporaneous neighbors, their names are revered and their worth acknowledged. Their home was one of industry, frugality, practicability and interesting intelligence.

SAMUEL SELLERS, elder brother of James Sellers, and son of David and Rachel (Coleman) Sellers, was born in Philadelphia, 9 mo., 10, 1780, near Sixth and Market streets, and, with his brother James, and cousin Coleman, entered the wire establishment of N. & D. Sellers at an early age, succeeding to the business along with them, withdrawing therefrom about middle life, with what he thought a competency. He married, soon after, Louisa Sonntag, daughter of William and Hannah Sonntag, of Philadelphia, and moved to Wild Orchard, Upper Darby, Delaware county. He died there 6 mo., 1, 1850, his wife surviving him. She was born 10 mo., 5, 1792, and died at Wild Orchard, 7 mo., 18, 1857. Louisa Sonntag was a most lovable woman. All knowing her respected and admired her for her simplicity and many excellent qualities.

Samuel Sellers was a person of unusually fine characteristics. He was interested in all matters of state, philanthropy and religion. He held no public position, but was interested in the schools of Philadelphia and her civic institutions. He was during many years of his life a share holder in the Philadelphia Library, and was greatly interested in its welfare. He became early in life interested in the Apprentices' Library of Philadelphia, and was for many years one of its active managers. He had an active mind, and was a reader of solid literature. He was fond of mathematics, and was greatly interested in the science of astronomy, possessing much knowledge in regard to it. He made many astronomical observations and calculations. In this, as in other lines, his work was very accurate. In all he did, he was painstaking and conscientious.

He was a broadminded, genial, just man—an individual of unblemished character, who was greatly respected by all knowing him, and much loved by his relatives and intimates. After marrying and moving to Upper Darby, building his house upon a part of what had been the land of his ancestor, Samuel Sellers, the emigrant of 1682, he settled down to a life of quietude, giving himself up to his books, his church, and astronomical thought and observation. His sister, Mrs. Harvey Lewis, of Philadelphia, having died comparatively young, her death soon followed by that of her husband, he became guardian for their daughters, to whom he was a loving uncle, acting the part of a true and solicitous father. Childless himself, these daughters of his deceased sister, with his many other admiring nieces and nephews, who visited him often, were as children unto him. His bachelor days had been much given to them.

He was an influential member of the New Jerusalem church of Upper Darby, being one of the founders of the Delaware county organization. In politics he affiliated with the Whig party, the precursor of the present Republican party. He was a strict temperance man, and opposed to the institution of human slavery, feeling keenly the wrong done the black man of the south. He was of a reflective mind, being interested in serious subjects and in everything tending to the advancement of humanity. Until middle life he was actively engaged in business, prosecuting that on honest principles. His business judgment was excellent, as it also was as to all the affairs of life. In small matters as well as large, he was careful to act honorably and justly. While well settled in his views, he was always open to conviction, never through prejudicial narrowness holding aloof from a new presentation of any subject. He was not vacillating, but ready always to listen to sincere and conscientious reasoning. Of him it can be truly said he was an excellent citizen.

Wild Orchard, the home of his later life, overlooked the valley of Naylor's Run, and had been a part of the original land taken up by his ancestors. The few acres of ground included in it is covered principally with majestic tulip trees, or the American poplar. At one time there had existed an orchard of some kind upon a portion of the ground, which, being somewhat remote from the buildings of the Sellers Hall homestead, was not much cared for, and hence the name Wild Orchard. The daughters of George Sellers, he who sold these few acres from the original patrimony were prone to gather here in their youth to enjoy its shade and retirement, and they rather resented their father's act, but as they came to years of maturity, married and left the old homestead, that feeling wore off. It had not gone into the hands of a stranger, but into those of a relative whom they loved and respected.

Strung along the Marshall road, one of the earliest leading out from the city, and adjoining each other, were many of the homes of the Sellers family, namely: Springton, Fernbrook, Mill Bank, Wild Orchard, Edgefield, Hill Side, Cardington and Oak Hall. Along the old West Chester road were located, adjoining the others, Millbourne, Sellers Hall—the original homestead—it touching also on the Marshall road—Wayside and Hoodland. The present Fernbrook and Bywood properties were originally parts of the Springton farm.

It is interesting to note how many of those who have left the old nest to battle with the world, drifted back to it or its immediate neighborhood, as they could afford to do so. Contact with the world had not destroyed their love for the home of their early ancestors.

In connection with this Samuel Sellers, it may be fittingly said, perhaps, that it is related of his ancestor, Samuel Sellers the second (son of the emigrant), that upon the occasion of his marriage to Sarah Smith, at Darby Meeting, a committee was appointed—as is usual with Friends—to oversee the marriage ceremony, it being the duty of that committee to see that all was orderly and conducted according to the good order of the society, both at the meeting house and the home. The committee, in this instance, upon arriving at the home of the groom's parents, which was to be the future home of the newly married couple, found the latter busily occupied in the clearing near the house, gathering brush-wood preparatory to its burning. Those composing the committee, surprised at the unusual circumstance, concluded there was no occasion for further oversight upon their part, and so left for their own homes.

Staid were the early settlers of Delaware and Chester counties—a plain people with settled ways. Prompt their courtings, plain their marriages, simple their weddings; no marriage trips, or extended tours theirs. Another Samuel (there were many of the family who bore the Scriptural name), a third as to generation, married his wife (good Jane Wood) at Darby Meeting, taking her immediately to the far borders of the county among the aborigines who still lingered there. The "forks of the Brandywine" at that time was a sparsely settled country. Many are the descendants of this worthy couple. At that early date (1737), it took a day, perhaps longer, to travel from Philadelphia to the limit of Chester county, over such roads as then existed. Now, by trolley, "the forks" are reached in less than two hours. Then a letter would be as long on its way, or longer. Now, by telegraph, communication is almost instantaneous. The President of the country has just sent a telegram around the world in eight minutes. Owen Biddle, in the fall of 1797, sixty years after Samuel and Jane Wood Sellers emigrated to Chester county, describes the road from Concord to Westtown Boarding School as being "rough, stony and hilly." This their condition then, what their condition half a century before?

It is related of a couple married at Goslen Meeting that, the ceremony over, and the farewells said, they mounted their horses to go to their new home in the "wilds" of the country, those "wilds" being where the "Bird-in-Hand," Lancaster county, is now located. Some of the young women marvelled that the bride was willing to go so far from home, saying not for the best man in the Province would they be willing to. Some of these may have changed their minds, that being their privilege.

Samuel Sellers (son of David), whose life we briefly sketch, was highly esteemed by the members of the religious society to which he belonged. He was greatly revered, and his voice in the council of the church was potential. His opinion had great weight, and his advice was eagerly sought, both young and old acknowledging his strong and lovable character. Dignitaries of the church, as well as lay members of education and prominence, oft tarried at his country home to enjoy his society, and have the benefit of his wise counsel.

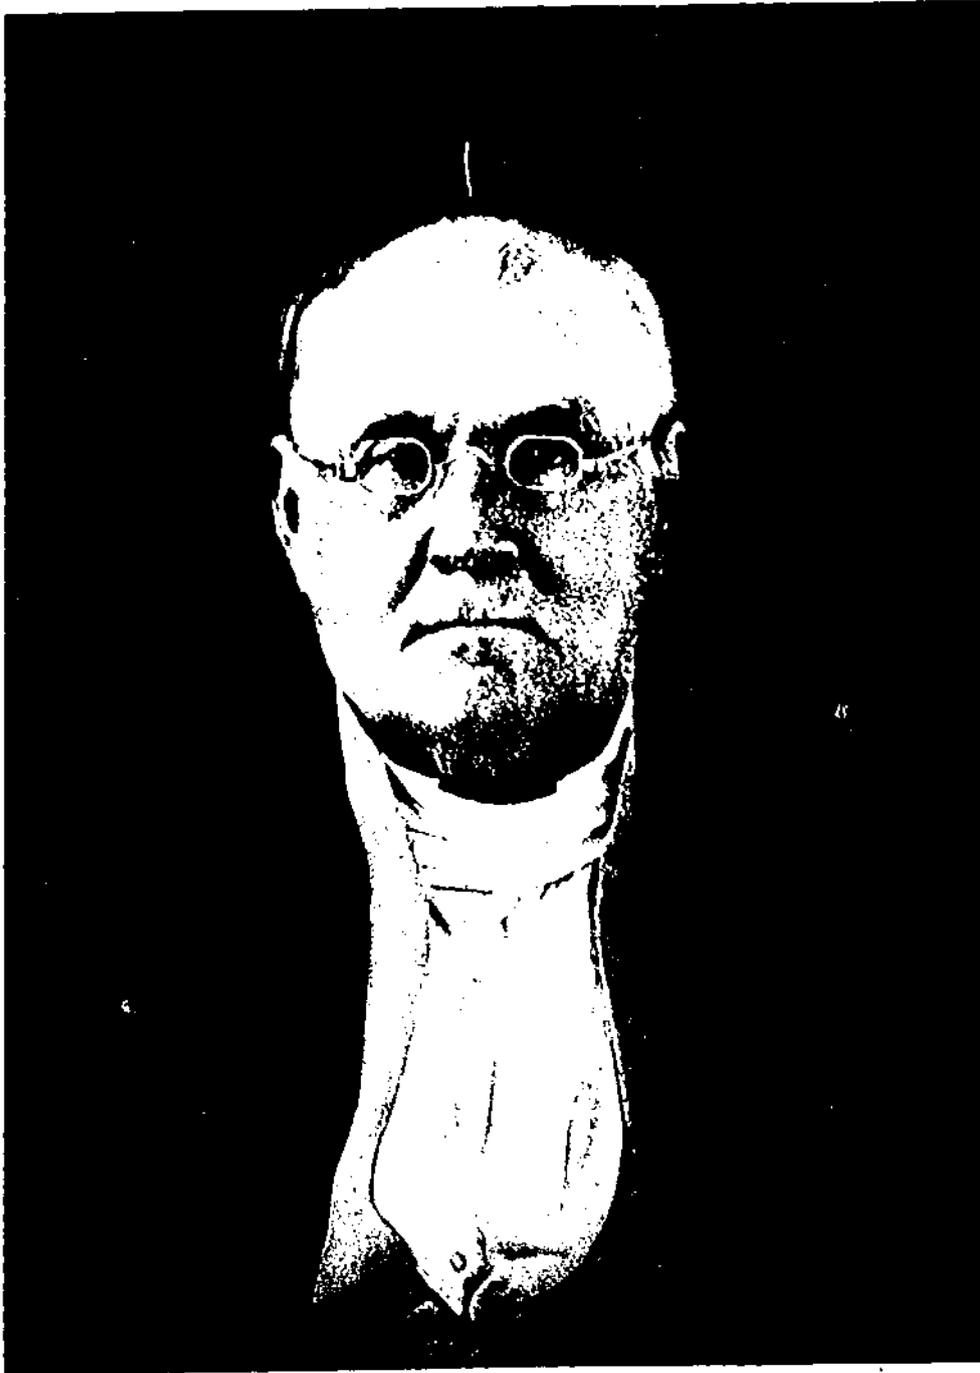

The best of men are thus found living lives of retirement, unknown to the great world and to extended fame. Their influence is, however, not lost to the world. In every community they are to be found. They are the backbone of society. Their absence would be calamitous.

In his early manhood Samuel Sellers, although a small man, was an athletic one. It is related of him that he would oftentimes go up the hatchway rope at his father's store, hand over hand, to the third story of the building in preference to groping his way up the dark and narrow stairway which circled round a central post. Also, that he in early life would leave his father's store in harvest time to lead (on the old homestead farm) a long row of seasoned farmers when reaping wheat. The farmer of that day used the sickle, and it was customary for them to turn in on a given day or days to help each other gather the crop. This little city man was sinewy, and had the "knack." Brain and muscle oft go together in happy combination.

JAMES SELLERS. The subject of this sketch was the son of David and Rachel Coleman Sellers, of Philadelphia, the father being noted among his business and social acquaintances for his sterling integrity and great simplicity, and the mother for her loving attention to the sick and the poor. David Sellers, father of James, was of the old wire firm of N. & D. Sellers, whose business had been established at Sixth and Market streets, Philadelphia, during or before the Revolutionary war. For many years the old "wire shop" of the two brothers with the above modest sign over the door was a landmark in the city. No other sign ever ornamented the front of the establishment as long as under the exclusive control of the brothers, Nathan and David. The writer of this sketch recalls distinctly that little sign, five feet by twelve inches or less, which for so many years had served to direct the attention of citizens to the establishment of the American pioneers in the wire business. Not now placed over the street door, as formerly, but over the counting house desk at the rear of the store, beside the one wide window looking out upon a yard which was once bright and sunny, but in the later years of the establishment was a very dark one, made so by the erection of high buildings at the sides and rear.

ELIZABETH C. SELLERS.

JAMES SELLERS.

James Sellers was born in Philadelphia, 10 mo., 15, 1783, and after having received the ordinary school education of that day, presumably at Friends' School, was introduced at an early age into the store and factory of his father and uncle to learn the business. In after years he, with his elder brother, Samuel, and his cousin Coleman, son of Nathan, succeeded to the business of their fathers, which they conducted to their mutual satisfaction, until Coleman Sellers withdrew to carry on one branch of the original business in connection with a general machine business and the building of locomotives. The works were located at Cardington, Delaware county, with an office in Philadelphia.

James, with his brother Samuel, in connection with Abraham L. Pennock, continued the other branch of the original business, which was the manufacture of wire goods of every description, and the building of hand fire engines. To this was added the making of "hydraulions," a form of engine for forcing water, as also the manufacture of riveted leather, fire hose and machine belting. James Sellers and Abraham L. Pennock having been the inventors of this valuable process. This firm also supplied the government for many years with patent riveted leather mail bags. The first riveted leather belt put into public use was made by the inventors for Abraham L. Pennock's grist mill on the Pennypack creek below Holmsburg. This is the mill Lydia Darrall went to for meal when she disclosed the contemplated attack of the British on Gen. Washington, she having overheard the British general's conversation at her house in Philadelphia. The walls only of the old mill stand today, it having been destroyed by fire years since, and never rebuilt.

Samuel Sellers and Abraham L. Pennock eventually withdrawing from the firm, James

Sellers associated with him George Pennock, the eldest son of Abraham L. Pennock. George Pennock subsequently withdrawing to carry on the lumber, saw and grist mill business at Holmsburg, in partnership with his younger brothers, Joseph L. and Abraham, David Sellers, son of James, took his place in the firm, becoming the active partner under his father. He giving with great energy and good judgment his undivided attention to the business, his father was enabled to withdraw from the active management and move to the farm in Upper Darby, Delaware county, which he had inherited from his father, David Sellers, Senior.

He here entered upon the work of improving the farm, which had greatly run down under long years of rental. He introduced scientific modes of cultivation, which at first were not approved of by many, but as improved crops followed these modes they finally became the adopted way of the neighborhood.

James Sellers was, with those who knew him, noted for the thoroughness of his investigation. He matured his thought as to all matters with great care and accuracy, not only as to business and governmental matters, but as to all social and moral questions. He was broad in his views and very tolerant, asking only of another that that other should be interested to reach the truth and to hold his particular views or beliefs conscientiously. In politics he had been through earlier life an adherent of the Whig party. Later, when that party had become very pro-slavery, he united himself with the little Liberty party, which was the nucleus out of which came the present Republican party. He continued to act with this party until his death, which occurred at Springton, Upper Darby, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, 4 mo., 6, 1857. He was spared witnessing the great Civil war of horror and destruction. It would have been horror to him, for he was eminently a man of peace. His high thought and tender nature made him that, as well as his natural judgment. Had he lived until this time he would have been an ardent advocate of the principle of arbitration. Indeed, that mode of settling international and other difficulties was not a new thought to him. He was greatly averse to litigation, and endeavored to settle all personal and business difficulties, which were few with him, through a reasonable and conciliatory consideration of the matter in dispute. He shrank from angry contest, and would rather suffer at the hands of another than enter into contentious controversy. His aim was to avoid causing another to unnecessarily suffer. Yet there was a point beyond which he did not think it right to go. His love of justice was so intense he thought a great wrong should under the law be righted—that publicity and wrongful judgment of motive must at times he faced, that wrong should not prevail—not only in the interest of the individual, but in that of the community.

He was of a retiring disposition. This, with his manifold business and family duties (he had a large family of sons and daughters, and the care at times of other children than his own) kept him from seeking or accepting public position. He was a great reader, a keen observer, a close thinker. He was a great lover of the country. It was this love of the country which induced him to retire from an active city life at a comparatively early period, in connection with the fact that he had many sons to start in life. At that time it was thought that farming was a desirable occupation. There was attached to it a reasonable amount of profit to the industrious and economical worker, and an independence connected with it not to be found in many other businesses. Some of his sons he gave opportunity to learn the business in which he was reared, to others the opportunity of learning that of the farmer. There is no business requiring greater judgment. It was his thought not to rear his sons in unnecessary and unprofitable luxury. He believed it not well to start them in life with much money or too high an idea of the importance of great wealth. His thought was that it was better for each generation to start moderately in the line of everyday living. He believed in industry, prudence, sobriety and sincerity, in conscientious application to business upon the part of young men in their making good character for themselves rather than making great wealth.

At the time he moved onto his Upper Darby farm, that particular place, as well as the surrounding country, was overrun with the pestilent and unprofitable daisy. The flower which William Hamilton had imported from Europe as rare and beautiful, proved to be a noxious weed which forced its way at the expense of the nutritious grasses. He was the first in his neighborhood by vigorous effort to get rid in a large measure of this, the farmer's enemy. Others, following his methods, succeeded in ridding their farms of their white fields—pretty, perhaps, to the eye of the artist, but ugly to the tiller of the soil, and an enemy to his pocket.

The subject of this sketch was a person of very considerable mechanical ability. This talent he made available in his farming operations. His knowledge of chemistry was considerable, and this knowledge he made useful to him in his treatment of the soil and the raising of crops. Chemistry enters into all things. Knowing this, he made a study of different soils, and the action of lime, animal manures, and prepared fertilizers. In his day the modern fertilizers were just beginning to be introduced. Barn yard manure was the principal fertilizer then used, along with guano in moderation, and the application of lime—the latter not a fertilizer of itself, but a loosener of the soil, through which a new combination of chemical elements was brought about to the advantage of the crops. Having a stream of water running through his farm, he built an inexpensive dam (all his arrangements were simple and inexpensive, but fully answered intended purposes) and set up a water wheel and pump of his own arrangement to force the water from a neverfailing spring to house and barn. He was the first in the country round about him to utilize the water—to the saving of labor—in this satisfactory way. Finding his farm fences were very poor and rotten, he introduced as an emergency, a very simple moveable fence well calculated to turn horses and cattle. This was constructed from timber from his own woods. It was in sections of considerable length, light enough to be readily picked up by two men, thrown upon wheels, and carted to any part of the farm where it could be quickly set up again. The old fence rails found their way to the great arched oven, opening into the capacious fireplace of the old-time kitchen. He set up strong but inexpensive balance gates of his own design and construction, made on the place from his own timber, which served a better purpose than the unhandy bars. He designed a hay wagon with body set low, making it handy to load, which by a simple self-acting contrivance would turn within a very small circle. This wagon had resting on its sides a movable rack. When this was lifted off, which was readily done, it was admirably adapted for hauling manures or other material. He fitted up his cow stables with swinging or movable stanchions, or "bosses," as called by some, the first seen about Philadelphia, and the idea probably his own. By this plan the animal has sufficient freedom of movement and is kept clean. Partitions are made unnecessary, while hooking is prevented.

His contrivance for heading the daisy tops before maturing was simple and expeditious. Beside this, he resorted to the cultivation of the soil to destroy the roots. He was the first in Delaware or Chester county, it is believed, to plow under red clover as a valuable manure. It was thought a strange idea, but experience has proven its utility.

Being in the wire business, it was natural for him to adopt the wire fence at a very early period. He was probably the first to introduce it to his neighborhood. He used it as an inside fence only. The dangerous barbed wire fence was not in use in his time. He would not, however, have adopted it, the writer of this believes, or any other form of fence so dangerous in its character. He secured all agricultural machinery that met his ideas of usefulness, upon their first coming into the market. With him the "Prouty plow," as originally made, supplanted the old time form, and the threshing machine of that day took the place of flail or the tramping of the horses upon the barn floor. All farm tools or contrivances that recommended themselves to his mechanical and practical mind he adopted at such time as his judgment dictated. Lead pipe at that time being expensive, and galvanized iron pipe not in use, to convey spring water from a distance to his water wheel and pump he laid wooden pipes of his own contrivance (simple and inexpensive) which pipe was in use long after his death and possibly yet.

The farm which he inherited from his father and moved upon about middle life, worn out as it was and comparatively unproductive, became before his death one of the most productive in the neighborhood. He was a citizen farmer, but a successful one. Upon first going to this worn-out farm he utilized the water from an old mill on the adjoining property, the use of which he had three days in the week, to enrich the meadow land of the place, it being carried over his own land through a long tortuous race course. But this practice he finally discontinued. It was one much in vogue in early times, and doubtless had its advantages. The upland of the early day was not depended upon for patronage formerly as now. The introduction of red clover and other grasses, along with improved cultivation and new fertilizers, has made of the upland fields good pasture ground.

Springton Farm was, as its name indicates, one of many springs. There are on it today, besides the stream of water running through it, five in active and continuous flow—formerly there were others. Over one of these, (the water being both plentiful and cold) he built his dairyman's house. The butter made here commanded the highest market price. It was the "gilt-edge" butter of that day. When butter of average quality brought fifteen to twenty cents a pound, this Springton butter brought double that price. When that of ordinary quality brought twenty-five to thirty cents, the gilt-edge of Springton, made by a New Jersey Friend, sold for fifty cents per pound. It was sold in the street "sheds" of Market street, as they were of later time called, but which sheds of pleasing construction filled on "market day," with farmers, truckers and butchers, their butter, vegetables and meat well displayed, were very attractive. The butter from Springton Farm was undoubtedly good. But Friend Brown's clean white stall cover, his well scoured butter tub with its broad bands of shining brass, and his immaculate apron and sleeve coverings of white muslin, reaching from wrist to elbow, and his linen neckcloth just as clean and white, might have had something to do with the high price his butter brought. Friend Brown's wife, Margaretta, is to be given the credit, beyond doubt, for this white immaculateness—as also, in a good measure, for the excellence of her husband's butter. The wealthy citizens of Chestnut, Walnut, Spruce and Pine streets, residing at that time between Third and Tenth streets, became willing customers of Friend Brown, as did the goodly Friends of Arch, Race and Vine. A tidy appearance is helpful to any business. "Joseph, the butter man from Springton Farm," came home always with a well filled purse.

James Sellers was much interested in the laying out of new roads and the relaying of old ones where it could be done to advantage. The old plan of laying out roads regardless of the hills, subjecting man, beast and wagon to unnecessary wear and tear, did not meet with his approval. He would avoid the steep hills as much as possible, securing an easier grade at the expense of increased distance, but not of time, by working around them. In his own neighborhood there were roads laid out going up one steep hill to almost immediately descend another. This practice was not peculiar to his locality. When he could, he secured the abandonment of the old for a better route. Were he living today he would be an ardent good roads advocate.

He was greatly interested in the public school question, advocating free schools with earnestness as he had private opportunity. He saw clearly that the young were entitled to reasonable education, and that it would be to the advantage of the state that her children should have it, the poor as well as the rich. He was interested in all public improvements, advocating those which seemed to be necessary, when the state or nation was in a position to carry them out without a too burdensome taxation of the people. He was not an advocate of the excessive governmental loans that the officials who handled the money might personally profit. He was for conducting public affairs with the strictest economy and honesty.

While a resident of the city, he was quick to perceive that as soon as the tolls of the "permanent bridge" over the Schuylkill at Market street were abolished property in West Philadelphia, then Hamilton and Mantua villages, would advance in value, and consequently he invested in improved and unimproved property there, which he held during life, the rentals more than covering expenses of the whole, and yielding considerable income. This property he held more particularly for the future benefit of his children. The growth of these green country villages, after the abolishment of the bridge tolls, was reasonably rapid, and in time property there became very valuable. There were causes operating to retard their growth somewhat, but as the direct road from Philadelphia to Lancaster and the state capital ran directly through or between these comparatively sequestered settlements, and they were contiguous to the old "city proper," progress was inevitable. At the time James Sellers invested in Hamilton village property, the dwellings were much scattered, and numbered at the most, between the Schuylkill river and the present Fortieth street and Haverford and Darby roads, not over two hundred. Now, West Philadelphia has a population between the Schuylkill river and Cobb's creek, the latter its present western limit, of nearly two hundred thousand. Soon after he purchased, the new almshouse was built; new then, but old now. Old enough to be removed to a more rural locality. As an illustration of the growth of Philadelphia, Market street, in the days of James Sellers' youth, was not, he was heard to say, paved west of Ninth street. A copy of Hintzelheimer's Diary having come under the notice of the writer recently, it was interesting to note an entry speaking of his ploughing (as street commissioner) Sixth street from Market to Chestnut, preparatory to paving it with the "boother stones" taken from the Delaware at Trenton. This square was contiguous to the old "wire store" of "N. & D. Sellers," the founders of the wire business in Philadelphia. Mr. Hintzelheimer was an interesting character. He was a person of considerable local note, who occupied several positions of importance in the city government. His diary is quaintly written.

The wife of James Sellers, Elizabeth Cadwalader, was born 12 mo., 4, 1792. She was married at Makefield Meeting, Bucks county, 11 mo., 15, 1810, and she died at Thirty-seventh and Chestnut streets, West Philadelphia, 6 mo., 18, 1871. She was a daughter of Cyrus and Mary (Taylor) Cadwalader, of Bucks county, Pennsylvania. Cyrus Cadwalader was a descendant of John Cadwalader, of Warminster, Bucks county, an early Welsh emigrant and an eminent minister in the Society of Friends. He died on the island of Tortola, one of the Bermuda group, and was buried there beside his friends Thomas Chalkley and John Estaugh, both eminent ministers in the same society, the three having been carried off by a malignant fever when on a religious visit there. Of Thomas Chalkley, Whittier writes—he having visited him at "Chalkley Hall" at Frankford, near to Philadelphia—and many know of the interesting and unusual courtship of Elizabeth Hadden and John Estaugh. Abel James, the noted shipping merchant of Philadelphia, was an after owner and resident of "Chalkley Hall," and possibly died there. He married a daughter of Thomas Chalkley. Cyrus Cadwalader was a prominent Friend, a man of affairs who stood high in the community in which he lived. He was at one time a state senator at Harrisburg, where he served his state with credit and ability.

He had a fine bearing, a manly physique and attractive manners. Doubtless his Friendly garb attracted attention and had its quiet influence, along with his integrity, intelligence and business ability. In the earlier time Friends were active in the councils of the state. But it is probable that at the time Cyrus Cadwalader, a Whig, was sent to Harrisburg from a Democratic county, because of his integrity and popularity, no other than he represented his constituency dressed in Friendly garb.

Mary Taylor, wife of Cyrus Cadwalader, was a descendant of Philip and Juliana Taylor, of Oxford township, Philadelphia county. Philip Taylor died in Oxford township, the present Taconey, his son Benjamin having previously emigrated to Bucks county, where he took up land in close proximity to that taken up previously by Christopher Taylor, scholar and legislator, who became the owner of the island of Tinicum (Delaware county) where he set up a "college" for instruction in "higher mathematics," and where he died, leaving the island to his son Israel. Christopher is said to have been related to John Taylor, who occupied a portion of Tinicum island during Christopher's life, John, with his family, moving to Thornbury, Delaware county, then Chester county, after Christopher's death. Philip Taylor of Oxford township, Philadelphia county, was possibly related to the early Taylor settlers in Delaware county. Mary Taylor, wife of Cyrus Cadwalader, was a notable woman, of excellent qualities of both mind and heart.

Elizabeth Cadwalader Sellers, the second child and only daughter of this happy union, and wife of James Sellers, inherited from her parents many of their interesting characteristics. She was a woman of many rare qualities. Beautiful and attractive, a fine conversationalist, and kindly considerate always for others, she was greatly esteemed and beloved by all knowing her. She was a helpmate, indeed, to her husband through a long and harmonious life. Spirited and energetic, yet of a conciliatory temper, her management of her household affairs was truly admirable, whilst her loving attention to her large family of sons and daughters and many guests was beyond praise. Recognizing her husband's strong character, she relied much upon his good judgment, and was ever ready to render that deference his years and worth demanded. It was a deference sincere and true, and very beautiful. Quiet strength—unselfish and dignified—always has its good influence. The latchstring of this interesting of irregular construction, having undergone Stranger as well as friend met a hearty welcome.

The Springton house so long the home of James and Elizabeth Sellers was a quaint building of irregular construction having undergone numerous alterations and additions. The original house was probably built by Robert Naylor, who took up this land in 1683, living at first, tradition says, in a cave in the hill side, near the stream of water flowing through the place bearing his name. He and his wife Elizabeth were married a short time before leaving England, and the children, so far as known, were John and Elizabeth. Nothing is known by the writer of any descendants. Lewis Thomas was an early and subsequent owner of the property in the lifetime of Samuel Sellers (second), son of Samuel the emigrant.

On the hill across the creek, on land adjoining the old home of James Sellers, which land formerly belonged to the Garrett and Levis families, stands the New Jerusalem church of which Samuel and Coleman Sellers and others of the name were members. These, with others of that name, as also other prominent citizens of the neighborhood, lie buried there. Samuel and Coleman Sellers had formerly worshipped with Friends. James, their brother and cousin, and business partner, continued in membership with Friends. After the death of James Sellers, "Springton" Farm went by partition to his children. These, in time, parted with their respective shares, his son Samuel having first built upon the acres coming to him what is known as Fernbrook Cottage, now owned by his relative, Miss Mary Lewis, of Upper Darby. The Springton house, with about twelve acres of diversified land, is now owned by Richard L. Jones, a descendant of Samuel Sellers, the emigrant. The balance of the farm is owned by the estate of Thomas Powers, and by Miss Mary Lewis, also a descendant of the early Sellers settler, in separate parts. The bulk of the land is still worked as a farm, milk being the principal product. The neighborhood is still very rural, although in close proximity to the rapidly growing city and the improving borough of Lansdowne, East Lansdowne, recently laid out on farm land bought of the heirs of Dr. George Smith, deceased, is within ten minutes walk. Soon this whole neighborhood, including Springton farm, the home of James Sellers, and Sellers Hall, the home of several generations of his long lived ancestors, will be opened up to improvement. Nothing can stay the hand of progress. When Samuel Sellers, the emigrant, with his brother George, who died soon, and unmarried, settled on the rich land of Sellers Hall, Philadelphia was not. It was in embryo, but not fully laid out. Why the weaver and the cooper settled in the wilds of the country instead of the city which was expected to become a great commercial emporium, the writer does not know. But it proved a successful venture. Of James Sellers it can rightfully be said, that he was an upright man. He was a successful manufacturer, merchant and farmer citizen. Clear headed, broad-minded, eminently just and thoroughly practical, he was an exemplary and highly respected citizen.

Of the children born to James and Elizabeth Cadwalader Sellers, those reaching manhood and womanhood inherited in marked measure the characteristics of their parents. They are with their issue (four only of the fourteen surviving) as follows:

I. Benjamin Sellers, born in Philadelphia, 9 mo., 29, 1811, died 10 mo., 13, 1811, two weeks after birth. Laid in the old burial ground of Friends at Fourth and Arch streets, Philadelphia, "Near the eastern fence," says the diary of his grandfather, David Sellers, and doubtless near the meeting house. The only one bearing the name resting undisturbed in the ancient cemetery. No stone marks the place, Friends not being given to the practice at that time.

II. Mary Cadwalader Sellers, beautiful in person and in character, "worth her weight in gold" said an appreciative teacher, was born in Philadelphia, 3 mo., 26, 1813, and married 2 mo., 5, 1835, at the residence of Ann Sellers, Mill Bank, Upper Darby, to Samuel, son of George and Ann E. Sellers, of Sellers Hall. She died 1 mo., 17, 1842, and was laid in Friends' burial ground at Darby.

Issue—(1) Annie Sellers, born at Springton, Upper Darby, 1 mo., 10, 1836, died in California, 6 mo., 17, 1869; married, 1 mo., 1, 1860, Isaac B. Rumford, of that state, formerly of Chester county, Pennsylvania, their children being, William Sellers, born in California, 6 mo., 21, 1864, and Edward Garrett Sellers, born in same state, 1 mo., 12, 1867, died, 7 mo., 22, 1875. (2) Joseph James Sellers, born at Sellers Hall, Upper Darby, 7 mo., 25, 1839; married (first) 1 mo., 13, 1863, Mary Bunting, of Darby. Their children being Annie Rumford Sellers, born December, 1864, died July, 1865; married (second) Elizabeth K. Linton, 9 mo., 3, 1873, daughter of Penquite and Ellen Buckman Linton, of Newtown, Bucks county, Pennsylvania. The children of this marriage being Ellen Linton Sellers, born 5 mo., 19, 1874, and Agnes Penquite Sellers, born 7 mo., 10, 1877. (3) William Garrett Sellers, born at Sellers Hall, Upper Darby, 3 mo., 7, 1841, for many years a resident of California.

III. Rachel Coleman Sellers, bright, imaginative, interesting and womanly, was born in Philadelphia, 12 mo., 16, 1814, died 2 mo., 5, 1879, at New London, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Married, 1 mo., 7, 1841, at Friends' Meeting, Upper Darby, William Garrett, son of Samuel and Hannah Davis Garrett, of Thornfield, same township.

Issue—(1) Elizabeth Sellers Garrett, born at Thornfield, Upper Darby, 8 mo., 4, 1843, died at West Philadelphia, 1 mo., 27, 1899. (2) Margaret Levis Garrett, born at Thornfield, Upper Darby, 11 mo., 29, 1847, died at Mount Hope, Chester county, Pennsylvania, 4 mo., 12, 1872. (3) Walter R. Garrett, born at Thornfield, Upper Darby, 3 mo., 5, 1849, died at West Philadelphia, 7 mo., 19, 1889. Married Sarah Duffield Strawbridge, of New London, Chester county, Pennsylvania, 6 mo., 22, 1881. This family of father, mother and children, lie buried in the pleasant grounds of the Presbyterian church at New London, Pennsylvania.

IV. David Sellers, merchant and farmer (see memorial) was born in Philadelphia 7 mo., 5, 1816, died at Hoodland, Upper Darby, 4 mo., 13, 1887. Laid at Friends' ground, Darby. He married at Friends' Meeting, Upper Darby, Mary Coleman Pennock, daughter of Abraham Liddon and Elizabeth Sellers Pennock, of Haverford township, 4 mo., 25, 1844.

Issue—(1) Abraham Liddon Sellers, born in Philadelphia, 2 mo., 11, 1845, died 2 mo., 12, 1845. Laid in Friends' ground at Sixteenth and Race streets, Philadelphia. (2) Mary Cadwalader Sellers, born in Philadelphia, 6 mo., 7, 1846. (3) Sarah Pennock Sellers, born in Philadelphia, 11 mo., 9, 1848. Garrett, of Swarthmore.

DAVID SELLERS, a late well known resident of Delaware county, was a son of James and Elizabeth Cadwalader Sellers, of Upper Darby township, said county.

He was a person of many excellent characteristics. He was of a genial nature, with a fine vein of humor, an interesting conversationalist, a man of many solid acquirements, and great solidity of character. He was unusually observing, and having a good memory he had always a rare fund of incidents to draw upon to interest his friends or to illustrate his expression of opinion upon subjects under consideration. His fund of incidents, his humor and general practical knowledge, made him an interesting companion to the young as well as the older. He was interested in all religious, scientific and philanthropic matters. He was an ardent believer in the theory of self-government, and a sincere and conscientious upholder of the free institutions of the country. He was of a liberal mind, yet sufficiently conservative. In a word, he was a law-abiding citizen and an upholder of honest government. In politics he had been in early life an adherent of the old Whig party. In later life he attached himself to the Republican party, continuing in fellowship with that party until the time of his death, yet not approving of any of the corrupt practices of its politicians. Through his long and useful life many were those who sought his advice and interested help. He never turned away from any one. By neighbor and friend he was thoroughly respected. It was truly said of him by one of the ministers at his funeral, "He was one who called every man his brother."

He was born in the city of Philadelphia, 7 mo. 5, 1816, in the vicinity of Sixth and Market streets, and died at Hoodland, Upper Darby, 4 mo. 13, 1887.

He married, 4 mo. 25, 1844, at Upper Darby Meeting, Mary Coleman Pennock, daughter of Abraham Liddon and Elizabeth (Sellers) Pennock. The children were: 1. Abraham Liddon Sellers, born 2 mo. 11, 1845, in Philadelphia, died 2 mo. 12, 1845; 2. Mary Cadwalader Sellers, born 6 mo. 7, 1846, in Philadelphia; 3. Sarah Pennock Sellers, born 11 mo. 9, 1848, in Philadelphia; 4. Elizabeth Sellers, born 4 mo. 28, 1851, in Philadelphia, died 12 mo. 13, 1877, at Brookfield, Upper Darby; 5. Annabella Sellers, born, 9 mo. 8, 1853, at Hillside, Upper Darby; 6. Rachel Coleman Sellers, born, 8 mo. 26, 1857, in Philadelphia, died, 9 mo. 2, 1863, in Philadelphia.

Mary Pennock Sellers, in the year 1870, came into possession of a portion of land upon which stands the mansion which Elizabeth Sellers Pennock inherited from her father, John Sellers the second. This John was meant by his father to be a school teacher, but unexpected circumstances made of him a tanner and currier. After a limited time at his father's tannery in the country, he, in a spirit of commendable enterprise, established himself as tanner and currier on the banks of Dock Creek, below Chestnut street, Philadelphia. This at that time was an open stream of water. It now runs through a culvert beneath the wide and crooked thoroughfare of that name.

John Sellers (2) was one of the three brothers (Nathan, David and John), who married the sisters Elizabeth, Rachel and Mary; daughters of Joseph and Mary Johnson Coleman, of Water street, Philadelphia. This was when the best families of the Quaker city dwelt in this now exclusively business locality. The Coleman family were near neighbors to those of Judge Allen, of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, Edward Drinker, Stephen Girard and others. Edward Drinker was the husband of Elizabeth Drinker, whose highly interesting diary is so well known to old Philadelphians. Edward Drinker was a friend, and the business partner of Abel James, in his day the most famous of Philadelphia's shipping merchants. Mr. Drinker was one of those members of the Society of Friends who were sent inland by the revolutionary opponents of George III as a "Suspect." He had, however, with such other Friends as it was thought proper to send with him, taken no part against the mother country. He was only opposed to war. His feelings may have caused him to lean toward the land of his ancestors, as did those of many others. They were loath to sever the connection.

The subject of this sketch was in his early business career a great sufferer from the almost unprecedented and devastating fire which occurred May 1, 1856, at Sixth and Market streets, when almost a quarter of the block of compact stores and buildings embraced within Market, Arch, Fifth and Sixth streets, was in a few hours swept out of existence. The devastation was complete. Along with many other business establishments of long standing, that of which David Sellers was a member, dating its founding to the time of the Revolution, was completely destroyed. In the case of this particular business firm, not a vestige of the oaken floors and joists and heavy girders of the old time building, many of which had been hewed and sawed at the little mill on the old Delaware county farm of David Seller's ancestors, was found among the rubbish of the cellar. Nothing was found of the old heavy wooden looms, on one of which, dark with age, his father and grandfather had worked, and other relatives, himself not excepted—nothing of the iron machinery in the building save a mass of bent, twisted and broken rods and plates which lay with fallen bricks and mortar in promiscuous confusion. Of a pile of heavy leather in the cellar for hose and belting purposes, reaching from floor to ceiling almost, a mass of ashes only remained, so intense was the heat.

The fireproof safe containing the books and business papers was run toward the front of the building where it was abandoned, those handling it being obliged to leave it to escape the hot pursuing flames. To the credit of the old Philadelphia manufacturing firm of Evans & Watson, the first, or among the first, makers of fireproof safes in the country, the contents of the safe remained uninjured. Mr. Evans, of this fireproof firm, was a descendant of Oliver Evans, the well known mechanic and inventor of steam carriages for ordinary roads (passenger and freight) which antedated the introduction of the locomotive. The automobile of to-day is but a modification of Evans' steam carriage. At this intensely hot fire of 1856, the firemen were obliged to play upon the mass of brick and mortar in proximity to and covering the safe for nearly two days before it could be handled for removal. The writer is the owner of a receipt book taken from the safe, every letter and figure of which is as distinctly visible as the day they were made. With the exception of a slight discolorment of the backs, the account books were perfect. Bank notes and paper memoranda in a pocket book were uninjured.

It seems fitting to name this fireproof firm in this connection, for the firm of which David Sellers was a member dealt heavily with most of Philadelphia's mechanics and manufacturers of his day. He was an interested observer of all that was taking place in the mechanical line in his native city, and was personally acquainted not only with many of the mechanical and manufacturing business men of the city, but with many of the prominent merchants thereof, who, with himself, have passed away. He was intelligently alive to the business and other conditions of the time and community, as well as interested in the men and affairs of the past. He was very familiar with the business and political history of his native city, and his reminiscent facts and conversation were highly interesting. He was deeply attached to Philadelphia, knowing its history so well, and being possessed of the acumen to fully understand and appreciate its importance.

Subsequently to the destructive fire spoken of, the firm of which David Sellers at that time was a prominent member resumed business, but eventually he severed his connection with it and moved to a farm which he had purchased, adjoining that of his father's, in Delaware county, known as the Springton Farm, which latter farm was in the immediate vicinity of the ancestral Sellers home. After David Sellers became the owner of the old Samuel Levis farm it was known as Brookfield.

Samuel and Charles Sellers, brothers of David

Sellers, succeeded to the business of their ancestors upon the withdrawal of David. Their brother, Edward Sellers, a present resident of Swarthmore, and their nephew, Joseph James Sellers, of Philadelphia, were subsequently admitted to the firm.

Samuel Levis was a descendant of Samuel Levis, the emigrant from England, who had purchased before emigration, along with his friend William Garrett, a large tract of land in what is now Upper Darby and Springfield townships. Upon arriving in the Province, the two separated their interests, Levis settling on the west side of Darby Creek, and Garrett on the east side of that beautiful stream. The Garrett tract included originally, or by subsequent purchase, the David Sellers, or Brookfield farm, the Springton Farm having at one time belonged to some of the descendants of William Garrett. There were intermarriages between the Levis and Garrett descendants of the Garrett and Sellers families. George Sellers Garrett, who married Mary W. Maris, daughter of Jesse J. and Mary (West) Maris, of Chester, was a descendant of Samuel Sellers, the emigrant from Derbyshire, England, in 1682. Mary Levis, daughter of Samuel Levis, the emigrant, who settled in Springfield, married Joseph Pennock, of East Marlborough, Chester county, who was an ancestor of Mary Coleman Pennock, who married David Sellers.

Mary Pennock Sellers, wife of David Sellers, the subject of this short sketch, has lived a life, it may be truthfully said, of usefulness and devotion to her family and the community. In early life she gave much time and thought to the anti-slavery cause. She has always been interested in suffering humanity, anxious for the amelioration of the condition of the downtrodden and oppressed everywhere. A member of the Society of Friends, she has always been a believer in the doctrines of peace, and is a strong advocate of the principle of arbitration for the settling of governmental differences. Conscientiously decided in her convictions, and ever ready to respectfully advocate them, she has always commanded the respect of those knowing her. Of remarkably even temperament, and of quick intelligence, she has been through life well equipped for the advocacy of unpopular measures. Being singularly sincere in her opinions, advancing them with open hearted earnestness and grace, she has had an influence through life for good, more than ordinary.

Eminently practical, yet poetical withal, she has written many pieces of feeling and of beauty, a few of which have been published. In the quietude of country life and advancing years she feelingly retains her interest in the affairs of men, contending as sincerely as ever for the cause of truth and the doing away of all strife and oppression.

PROFESSOR JAMES RHOADS, the son of Joseph and Naomi T. Rhoads, was born 4 mo. 1, 1811, at 1709 Market street, Philadelphia, and was educated at private schools in the city, and at Westtown Boarding School in 1823, his father having moved out to the country to the old homestead, still in the family, on Haverford road, west of Haddington, in Blockley township, Philadelphia county, afterwards known as "Indian Creek Farm," and late as "The Maples," being the one hundred acres of "Liberty Land," conveyed to Adam Rhoads about the year 1700.

His education was finished at Merion Academy. He was in business in Philadelphia for some years, and in 1835 he began to teach school at the Union School, Upper Darby, where he taught for three years, and was then elected principal of the North West Public Grammar School on Race street, above Broad street, Philadelphia, in 1838. He remained principal of that school till 1845, when he was elected Professor of Belles-Lettres and History in the Central High School, his title being afterwards changed to Professor of Belles-Lettres and Elocution. Shortly after his election to the professorship, he received diplomas conferring on him the degree of Master of Arts (M. A.) from both Princeton College and Harvard University.

On 9 mo. 17, 1840, at Sellers Hall, Upper Darby, Delaware county, he was married by Friends' ceremony to Alice Sellers, daughter of George and Ann A. Sellers, and went to live in Philadelphia, where his only son Joseph R. Rhoads was born, 8 mo. 6, 1841, and his wife, died 1 mo. 19, 1842. He thereupon removed with his infant son to his father's residence at the old homestead at Indian Creek Farm, and resided there with his aged father, Joseph Rhoads, and his sisters Mary, Zillah and Naomi, and his brother Daniel Rhoads, who afterwards removed to Bellefonte, Centre county, Pennsylvania, where he afterwards became lay judge of the court of common pleas of that county.

At the sale of his father's estate in 1853, he purchased the homestead and twenty-three acres of the Indian Creek Farm tract. Here he resided until the death of his sister Mary, in 1873, when he removed for the winters to the residence of his son, at 442 Marshall street, Philadelphia, the family moving to the old homestead each summer until his death, in 1886, in his seventy-sixth year. He was a regular attendant of Friends' meeting at Haverford, and of Green street meeting in Philadelphia, and an active teacher in the First Day Schools of both meetings. During the war of the Rebellion he was an earnest Union man, and devoted much time to attendance upon the sick and wounded soldiers in the Government hospital at Sixty-fifth and Vine streets, West Philadelphia. He was an earnest anti-slavery man all his life, and took great delight in the stirring lyrics of freedom of Whittier, Lowell and others. In his younger days he wrote much, and was a regular contributor to Sartain's, Godey's and the older magazines of Philadelphia, and was a member of the Wistar Club, the Franklin Institute, the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, etc. After his wife's death and his removal to the country, his activity in these matters largely ceased. He was for many years one of the directors of the West Philadelphia Passenger Railway, and retained considerable interest in politics, being an active member of the Republican party until it became boss-ridden. He took great interest in the work of the Committee of One Hundred, and in the election of his son to Select Council from the Thirteenth Ward in 1877. He always took great interest in neighborhood matters, and was one of the commissioners appointed by the courts to lay out the State road from Media to Fairmount Park, and was frequently appointed by the judges of the courts in Philadelphia in his later years one of the jurors to assess damages for the opening of streets and condemnation of property for public use.

Professor Rhoads died at Atlantic City, May 13, 1886, and was buried from his son's residence in Marshall street, in the Friends' burying ground at Darby, by the side of his wife, who had died more than forty years before. A memorial service was held at the Central High School, Broad and Green streets, Philadelphia, on the 13th of June, 1888, on the occasion of the presentation of his portrait to that institution, when addresses were made by Samuel B. Huey, Esq., ex-Governor Pattison, Judge Astman and others.

He was a man of unblemished integrity, great natural force of character, unusual educational ability (as nearly four thousand of his students bear witness in every walk in life), a true Christian man, a devoted parent, an active and useful citizen.

JOSEPH R. RHOADS, a well known member of the Philadelphia bar, is the only child of Professor James Rhoads and Alice Sellers Rhoads, a daughter of George Sellers, Esq., of Sellers Hall, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, and was born in Philadelphia, August 6, 1841.

His ancestors are among the oldest settlers in the State of Pennsylvania. Five of them came over from England in the same vessel, in company with several other settlers in 1681, as appears by Smith's History of Delaware county. Adam Rhoads, his paternal ancestor in the sixth generation, appears on Reed's "Atlas of Philadelphia" in 1701 as the owner of one hundred acres of "liberty land" near Haddington, West Philadelphia, part of which, with the old homestead, is now owned by Mr. Rhoads, having come down from father to son for about two hundred years. His mother having died when he was about five months old, he was brought up by his paternal aunts, Mary Ann, Zillah and Naomi, at the old homestead near Haddington, known as "The Maples." He attended a private school near by at "The Firs," the residence of his father's first cousin, Samuel Rhoads. At the age of twelve he entered the Northwest Grammar School, Race street, above Broad, then in charge of Aaron B. Ivius. The following year he entered the Central High School, and graduated as Bachelor of Arts in 1859, and in 1864 took his degree of Master of Arts. In September of the same year he began reading law in the office of Edward Hopper, Esq., and also entered as a student in the Law Department of the University of Pennsylvania, then on Ninth street, above Chestnut, where the new post-office is now located. The professors then in charge of that department were Judge Sharswood, Judge Hare, Peter McCall, Esq., and E. Spencer Miller, Esq. In July, 1862, he graduated at the University, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and in September, 1862, he was admitted to the bar.

At this time, upon the occasion of the threatened invasion of Pennsylvania by the Confederate forces when Governor Curtin called for volunteers, he enlisted for the emergency in Biddle's Battery, commanded by Captain Landis. The company was ordered to Chambersburg and Hagerstown, Maryland. In the ranks of this company, among others, were George W. Biddle, Esq., William Henry Rawle, Esq., Clement B. Penrose, Esq., now Judge Penrose, and many other prominent lawyers. The Union forces having been successful at the battle of Antietam, the emergency men were honorably discharged and sent home.

Joseph R. Rhoads remained with his preceptor, Edward Hopper, until 1866, when he opened an office for himself, and since then has been actively engaged in the practice of the law. He has a large and varied practice in the civil courts of Pennsylvania, but has never practiced to any great extent in the criminal courts.

In 1866 Mr. Rhoads was elected a director of Girard College by the council of Philadelphia, and served for three years, and at the end of his term, in 1869, he was re-elected for another term. In 1866 he was elected a manager of the Apprentices Library Company of which he is now president. In 1869 he was elected a manager of the Pennsylvania Training School for Feeble-Minded Children at Media, the duties of which position he continues to fulfill. In 1877 he was elected from the Thirteenth Ward, succeeding John L. Shoemaker, Esq., deceased, as a member of the Select Council for the city of Philadelphia, where he served for nearly three years, and was chairman of the law committee. He has always been an active Republican in politics, but independent in feeling. He was a member of the Horticultural Hall Independent Convention which nominated Hon. John Stewart for Governor against General Beaver, and took the stump in that campaign. In the struggle for reform in the municipal government of Philadelphia, he has taken an active part, having been president of the Independent Citizens' Association of the Thirteenth ward, and actively assisted the Committee of One Hundred in their contests against corruption and fraud.

In 1869 Mr. Rhoads joined the Episcopal Church St. Philip's, on Vine street, near Eighth, and for a period of over ten years was teacher of the male Bible class of that church and a member of its vestry. In 1882 he removed to Grace church, Twelfth and Cherry streets, and in 1884 he was elected a member of the vestry, which position he still holds. In 1888 he became a vestryman in the new Church of St. Asaph, at Bala Station, Montgomery county, and is now one of the wardens of that church.

For a number of years he was solicitor of the West Philadelphia Passenger Railway Company, and in 1877, 1878 and 1879 he represented, with Mr. John G. Johnson, the railway company in the extended and interesting litigation arising out of the over issue of stock and defalcation of John S. Morton, its late president. Mr. Rhoads was solicitor for the Philadelphia Sanitarium Association and obtained for it its charter, and is counsel for other charities, among others the Woman's Hospital of Philadelphia. Upon the founding of the Jane D. Kent Day Nursery, one of the most successfully conducted and active charities of Philadelphia, he was elected president of the Association, which position he still fills. In 1888 he was appointed by Judge Simon-ton, of Dauphin county, receiver of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Philadelphia, upon request of the policy-holders assessed. He was also elected solicitor for the Home Missionary Society of Philadelphia, and corporator of the Hayes Mechanics' Home. He was for some years one of the directors of the Northern Saving Fund, Safe Deposit and Trust Company at Sixth and Spring Garden streets, and is one of the directors of the Delaware Mutual Fire Insurance Company. Since 1890 he has been president of the Merchants Trust Company of Philadelphia. He is a member of the State Bar Association of Pennsylvania, the Grand Army of the Republic, the Union League, Art Club, Penn Club, Philadelphia Board of Trade, Alumni Association of the University of Pennsylvania, the Church Club, and other clubs and associations, among others being a life member of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society and of the Academy of Natural Science.

On the 22d of November, 1866, Mr. Rhoads was married, by the Rev. Charles D. Cooper, rector of St. Philip's church, to Amanda Seal, daughter of Joseph H. Seal, Esq., of Philadelphia, at her father's residence on Marshall street, Philadelphia.

WILLIAM GARRETT, descendant of William Garrett the emigrant, born in Leicester, England, in 1643, was the son of Samuel and Hannah (Davis) Garrett, of Upper Darby, Delaware county. Samuel Garrett was the son of Thomas and Margaret Levis Garrett, of the same place, and was for years engaged in the manufacturing business with his father on Darby Creek.

William Garrett, at an early age, was placed with his uncle, George Malin, in the Chester Valley to learn the art of tanning and currying leather. From here, when of age, he went to Philadelphia to become more proficient in his trade, under instruction, in the establishment of George Robinson, a noted tanner and currier of that city, who had been associated with William's uncle, Isaac Davis, then retired. Here he became a thorough master of the art, and he set up in the business at Garrettsford, Upper Darby, finding sale for his product in Philadelphia principally. In addition to this business he managed a farm of fifty acres, upon which he resided, keeping thereon a profitable milk dairy. Shortly before the Civil war he removed to Philadelphia to give his children the advantages of the city schools. While here he did a flourishing business in finished harness and shoe leather, the product of his establishment being sought for by the most prominent of those engaged in this line of business. His children having completed their schooling, he sold his Upper Darby farm, purchasing a larger one in New London, Chester county, to which he removed. Upon the death of his wife and a daughter here, he returned, with his remaining daughter, to Philadelphia, where he died, 4 mo. 13, 1891, aged eighty-one years.

He was a person of pleasing manners, having a fine presence and was possessed of good business ability. Being of a practical turn, and of a feeling mind, he was a good citizen and neighbor. He was a member of that branch of Friends termed Orthodox, although never an active one. He valued his right of membership, was a regular attendant of meeting until the infirmities of advanced life overtook him, and was desirous that his children should do the same.

He married Rachel Coleman Sellers, daughter of James and Elizabeth Cadwalader Sellers, 1 mo., 7, 1841. She was born, 12 mo., 15, 1814, and died 2 mo., 5, 1879. She was a woman of fine mental qualities was of a quick wit, and an exceedingly interesting companion. Her active mind made note of all transpiring about her, and the world's affairs, material, moral and intellectual, claimed her interested attention. She was a notable housewife, and nothing suffered at her home because of her interest in the affairs of humanity.

Their children were: Elizabeth Sellers Garrett, born 8 mo. 4, 1843, died 1 mo. 27, 1899; Margaret Levis Garrett, born 11 mo. 29, 1849, died 4 mo. 12, 1872; and Walter R. Garrett, died 7 mo. 19, 1889. Walter married, 6 mo. 22, 1881, Sarah D. Strawbridge, of Chester county, near New London. Of this union there was no issue. William Garrett, his wife and children all lie buried in the peaceful burying ground of the Presbyterian church, near to their Chester county home. The widow of Walter alone survives. Mrs. William Garrett was one loved and admired by all, and was the joy of a good husband's life. The parents of William Garrett, Samuel and Hannah Davis Garrett, died at Thornfield, Upper Darby, which had been their home, as it had been of their son William—so many happy and useful years. Their son Samuel died a young man; their daughter Mary married Dr. Joshua Ash, of Philadelphia; and their only other daughter, Margaret Levis Garrett, never married. Being unusually attractive because of her gentle manners and mental qualifications, she was generally loved. Mary Garrett Ash, possessed of strong mental characteristics, was a notable woman of force and character, having many admiring friends. Her husband, Dr. Joshua Ash, was for many years resident physician at the old Philadelphia Dispensary, time honored, and still open for the benefit of the ailing poor, and was for a considerable time, resident physician at the Lazaretto, Tinicum Island.

JAMES CADWALADER SELLERS, of West Chester, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a son of Dr. James, Jr., and Emmeline B. (Smith) Sellers, and was born in South Orange, Essex county, New Jersey, 5 mo., 4, 1854.

He received his early educational training in the famous old West Chester Academy, in West Chester, Pennsylvania, and at the age of sixteen entered Yale College, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1874. He at once took up the study of the law in the office and under the preceptorship of Henry Wharton, Esq., in Philadelphia, and was admitted to the bar of that city in December, 1876, and was subsequently admitted to practice before the bar of Chester county, and entered upon a successful professional career in the various courts of the cities named, in which he has represented many important cases on all sides of the civil law. He is known as a logical reasoner, and a forceful speaker, and is of recognized ability before both bench and jury.

Mr. Sellers was married, 4 mo. 25, 1878, to Miss Elma A. Townsend, born 12 mo. 22, 1855, a daughter of the late Hon. Washington and Elizabeth (Gibbons) Townsend, of West Chester. To this marriage was born a son, James Cadwalader Sellers, Jr., August 26, 1880. He is a graduate of Lehigh University, class of 1902, and is at present engaged with the Mexican Central Railway Company in the capacity of inspecting engineer. Mrs. Sellers died 4 mo. 5, 1881.

Mr. Sellers was married, (secondly), 6 mo. 18, 1889, to Miss Eleanor C. Barber, born 7 mo. 20, 1867, a daughter of William E. and Lydia C. (Stiles) Barber, and of this marriage were born the following named children: Marie, 6 mo. 10, 1890, and Elizabeth, 8 mo. 14, 1896.

NATHAN SELLERS, son of John and Elizabeth Poole Sellers, of Millbourne, Upper Darby, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, was the youngest of eleven children, three of whom died in infancy in the years 1820-22-23, no death occurring among the other eight children for over seventy years thereafter.

He was born at the old homestead, July 18, 1836, and died at his home, 3308 Race street, February 17, 1904. His early education was at the special schools in the neighborhood, and later at Haverford College. His early business life was in connection with his father, at the flour mill now known as Millbourne Mills, built by his grandfather in 1814. When the business became an incorporated company in 1885, under its present title, Millbourne Mills Company, he became active in its management as secretary and treasurer. He retired in the spring of 1902, up to which time he represented its interests on the floor of the Commercial Exchange. He served as vice-president of the latter for several years, and continued to hold the position of treasurer of that organization until his death. He was connected with several business enterprises, and was a member of the Powelton Club.

He married, June 30, 1863, Mary H., daughter of J. Sidney Keen, of West Philadelphia, by whom he had three sons, all of whom died before reaching manhood. His wife survives him.

MATTHEW EVANS SIMPSON. One of the extensive and highly cultivated farms of Chester county, Pennsylvania, which is located in Uwchlan township, is the property of Matthew E. Simpson, a native of Chester county, the date of his birth being August 19, 1867.

Robert Simpson, father of Matthew E. Simpson, was an old and highly respected citizen of Chester county, and during the active years of his long and useful career earned a livelihood for his family by following the occupation of a laborer. He was noted in the community for his industry and integrity, fulfilled all the duties that pertain to good citizenship, and in fact all the obligations that fall to the common lot of man were performed by him in a highly creditable and commendable manner. He was united in marriage to Hannah Newgen, and the issue of this union was three children—1. James, who follows the same occupation as his father, that of laborer, married Mary Stadlon, a native of Charlestown township, Chester county, and they are the parents of three children—Eva, Hannah and Sadie Simpson. 2. Annie, wife of Edgar Mood, a wheelwright by trade, but now employed in the famous Sharples Separator Works at West Chester, their business being principally the manufacture of agricultural implements; their family consisted of five children—Bertha, Robert, Fannie, Samuel, deceased, and Clara Ward. 3. Matthew Evans, mentioned at length hereinafter.

The public schools of Charlestown township, Chester county, afforded Matthew E. Simpson an excellent English education, and after completing the regular course of instruction he began his active career as a farmer. This occupation proved so congenial to his tastes and inclinations that he has followed it up to the present time (1903), being now the owner of a one-hundred-and-twenty-five-acre farm in Uwchlan township, where he conducts a general line of farming and dairying. His land is highly cultivated and improved; he produces a large quantity of the staple articles for which Chester county is noted, and the proceeds from his dairy of eighteen head of cattle are readily disposed of at the Malvern Creamery at Hires. Mr. Simpson gives his political allegiance to the Republican party, and takes a keen and intelligent interest in all township affairs.

Mr. Simpson married Emma Mood, daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Bennett) Mood, the former named being a wheelwright by trade. They have an adopted son, Harry Simpson, who was formerly an inmate of the County Home. Mr. Simpson and his family are consistent members of the German Reformed church, taking an active and leading part in the work of the various societies connected with it. The grandparents of Mrs. Simpson were natives of Chester county, and were the parents of two children. Samuel and Rebecca Mood, parents of Mrs. Simpson, had a family of four children: Edgar, who married Miss Simpson, a sister of Matthew E. Simpson; they reside in West Chester; Clara, wife of George Hammil, of Philadelphia; Emma, wife of Matthew E. Simpson; and May, wife of George Nixon, of Philadelphia.

HON. ALFRED P. REID. Among the many learned and eminent members of the Chester county bar who are conducting a legal practice in the town of West Chester, Pennsylvania, none are more prominent than the Hon. Alfred P. Reid, who was born on a farm in Highland township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, September 3, 1842, a son of James and Hannah (McCaughy) Reid, and a descendant of an old and honored Scotch-Irish lineage.

Adam Reid (grandfather) was a native of Ireland and resided in that country until the trying and troublous period of the Revolution in 1794, when he decided to test the advantages of the new world, and after his arrival settled in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he soon became a successful and prominent grocery merchant. By active participation in all measures calculated to benefit the community and materially aid in its welfare and upbuilding, he became well known and was up to the time of his demise recognized as an influential and public-spirited citizen. He was a loyal member of the Presbyterian church, the doctrines of that faith having been thoroughly inculcated into him during his early life.

James Reid (father) was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1810, and during his young manhood he removed to Highland township, Chester county, and then went to Fallowfield township, where he followed agricultural pursuits. He was a well known man in the vicinity, and was chosen to serve as school director in addition to other local offices, the duties of which were performed in a creditable and conscientious manner. He was an ardent supporter of the principles of Democracy up to the year 1858, when he changed his allegiance to the Republican party and thereafter worked to advance its interests. Mr. Reid married Hannah McCaughy, who was born in Sadsbury township, Chester county, in 1817, a daughter of Nantmeal and Jeannette (Stewart) McCaughy; her father had emigrated from Londonderry, Ireland, in 1797, and settled in West Sadsbury township, where he followed the occupation of farming, and her mother was a granddaughter of Walter and Margaret (Andrew) Stewart, who were residents of Chester county as early as 1720. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Reid, six of whom are living at the present time (1903)—Alfred P., mentioned hereinafter; Adam P., a resident of Parkesburg, Chester county; Rebecca J., unmarried; J. Edwin, a resident of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Samuel Stewart, also a resident of Philadelphia; Robert A., a prominent citizen of Highland township, Chester county; the deceased members of the family were—John Nathaniel, died at the age of nine years; and Hannah Mary, who died in her first year. James Reid, father of these children, died in 1877, and his wife survived him until the year 1888.

Alfred P. Reid acquired his preliminary education in the schools of Highland township, and this was supplemented by attendance at the Parkesburg Academy, Wyer's Academy at West Chester, and Lafayette College, graduating from the latter named institution in the class of 1864, he having been one of the honor men and winner of the Fowler prize. He then pursued a course of legal study with the late Judge J. Smith Futhy, of West Chester, and after passing a successful examination was admitted to the membership of the bar on August 14, 1866. For a period of eight years he practiced his profession in company with Hon. Washington Townsend, who was then a member of Congress, and since the dissolution of this connection has conducted his practice alone in the town of West Chester. He has now the most extensive clientele in the county, and in fact it is surpassed by few in the eastern portion of the state. Although his professional work demands the greater part of his time, Mr. Reid devotes considerable attention to educational and political affairs and has also gained distinction as a financier of ability.

He has served as president of the board of trustees of the West Chester State Normal School and the Penn Mutual Fire Insurance Company, the latter named having been incorporated in 1867, and now conducts its operations in Chester and adjoining counties. He was instrumental in the organization and incorporation of the Dime Savings Bank of West Chester, and has always been the incumbent of the office of president. This is purely a benevolent organization for the benefit of thousands whose small savings at the end of the week would not be acceptable as deposits at most of the banks; it has branches at Phoenixville and other important towns, loans its money on real estate and is in the most flourishing condition. He is the president of the First National Bank of West Chester, president of the Dingee & Conard Company, extensive florists, one of the organizers and a director of the Chester County Trust Company, a director in the Downingtown Paper Manufacturing Company, a director in the Young Men's Christian Association of West Chester, and a member of the Rho Chapter and the D. K. E. fraternity of Lafayette College. Mr. Reid is most progressive and conservative in his management of financial matters and while neglecting no point that will prove of advantage to the institutions, yet he carefully guards the interests of the depositors. He was formerly a member of and from 1872 an elder in the First Presbyterian church of West Chester, and in 1892 aided in organizing and has since been a member and served as elder in the Westminster Presbyterian church of the same borough. He is also prominent in the Sunday school, serving as teacher and superintendent. From 1879 to 1880 he served as chairman of the Chester county Republican central committee.

Mr. Reid married, June 15, 1870, Emma Bowman, a daughter of John and Ann (Comly) Bowman, and granddaughter of John Comly, the author of the celebrated Comly spelling book that was so popular in its day in Pennsylvania. Their children are—Arthur Park, born January 10, 1877, a graduate from Lafayette College in the class of 1899, now an attorney and engaged in practice with his father; Edith Comly, born August 4, 1892; and Laura Bowman, born March 11, 1897. The family reside in a handsome and commodious home located at 131 West Chestnut street, West Chester, Pennsylvania.

GEORGE W. STINE, whose name is familiar to the residents of Uwchlan township, Chester county, as that of a leading builder and highly esteemed citizen, is a grandson of Adam Stine, who was a native of Philadelphia, whence he moved to Chester county, settling in East Pikeland township. Later he removed to West Pikeland, where he led for many years the life of a farmer. He married Elizabeth Friday, whose ancestors were old settlers in the county.

Christian Stine, son of Adam and Elizabeth (Friday) Stine, was born in Chester county, and combined with the labors of a farmer the business of a contractor and stone mason. The latter portion of his life was passed in Charlestown township, where he devoted himself exclusively to farming. He was the owner of considerable property in the township. Mr. Stine took an active part in public affairs, and served during a number of years in various offices in the township and county, among them those of constable and tax collector. He married Emily, who was born in Chester county, daughter of Peter and Elizabeth Shimer, whose other children were: Barbara, who married David A. Emery, of East Pikeland; Sarah, who became the wife of Levi Miller, a mason in Philadelphia; William, a pump-maker; and Peter, a laborer, both living in East Pikeland; also Jackson, a joiner, who lost his life while serving, during the Civil war, in the Union army, both his brothers being soldiers also. Mr. and Mrs. Stine were the parents of eight children.

The father of this family died July 4, 1888, in Charlestown township, and is remembered by all who knew him as a man of sound judgment, strict integrity and genuine kindness of heart.

George Stine, son of Christian and Emily (Shimer) Stine, was born December 8, 1850, in East Vincent township, and received his education in the schools of Charlestown township. After leaving school he served an apprenticeship to the mason's trade, which he followed for a number of years, at one time being associated with Richard Pearson. Mr. Stine's ability and faithfulness were such that his advancement was steady, and he has for a considerable period conducted an independent business as a builder, many of the most prominent buildings in Chester county having been erected under his supervision. Among the most noteworthy are the public school on Main street, West Chester, the State Normal School, the Williamson School and the Baptist church. He has also worked in Lancaster county, and now has under construction one of the largest church buildings ever erected in Lancaster city, the St. Paul's Reformed church. He has always been, and is still, largely engaged in the lumber business in connection with his work as a stone mason, having cut an immense amount of lumber in Chester county. Mr. Stine is a member of Mount Pickering Lodge, No. 446, Free and Accepted Masons, and also of Lionville Lodge, No. 455, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Notwithstanding the pressing demands of his calling, and the readiness and thoroughness with which he has responded to them, his duties as a citizen have never been neglected, and his townsmen have manifested their confidence in him by electing him to the offices of school director and tax collector. In politics he is an Independent. He and his family are members of St. Paul's Reformed church.

Mr. Stine married Ella, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Hartman) Gumkle. The former, who was descended from old settlers of the county, was a miller, conducting for many years the mill known as the "Tower Mill." His wife was a daughter of Peter and Margaret (Fetters) Hartman, both of whom belonged to old Chester county families. After the death of his wife, Mr. Stine married his sister-in-law, Mary E. Gumkle, and the following children have been born to them: John Fetters, who is now in the West Chester Normal School; Emma Elizabeth; William Gumkle, died in infancy; Anna Beitler; and Lewis Prizer. These children are attending the same school, and will soon be prepared to enter the Normal School.

DAVID FRANCIS TARTER, an intelligent, successful and highly respected farmer residing in East Nantmeal township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and a representative of a worthy family whose history dates back to the Revolutionary period, is the only surviving son of Peter and Elizabeth (Brownhultz) Tarter, and grandson of David Tarter, who was born in the vicinity of Roxborough, Pennsylvania.

Peter Tarter (father) was born at Roxborough, Pennsylvania, obtained his education in the common schools, and began his business career as a lime burner. Later he devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits, in which enterprise he met with marked success, and subsequently he became the proprietor of the Howellville Hotel, located in Chester county, Pennsylvania, which he continued to manage successfully up to the time of his decease. He was united in marriage to Elizabeth Brownhultz, daughter of David Brownhultz, of Chestnut Hill, Pennsylvania. The following named children were the issue of this union: Wesley, died in early life; David Francis; and Ida, wife of Harry C. Bardin, who is engaged as overseer at the Atlantic Oil Company Plant in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Harry C. Bardin is the son of Dr. Bardin, of Philadelphia, a member of a family who have resided in Coatesville, Pennsylvania.

David F. Tarter was born at Roxborough, Pennsylvania, January 18, 1856, and his educational advantages were obtained in the public school at Howellville, Chester county. He gained his first business experience as a driver, after which he was employed for several years as a lime burner, and since then he has followed farming as a means of livelihood. His farm of two hundred and thirty acres, known as the Sholl farm, is situated in East Nantmeal township, in close proximity to the village of Nantmeal, and here he conducts a general line of farming in addition to the management of a dairy of thirty-five head of cows. Politically he is a Democrat, and while taking no active part in politics, is always deeply interested in every movement of public importance. He is a staunch adherent of the doctrines that are set forth in the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he has held membership for many years.

Mr. Tarter married Kate Moore Kirkner, daughter of Henry and Jane Kirkner, of East Whiteland township. They are the parents of seven children, all of whom reside at home with their parents: Ida, born July 4, 1879; Harry, born November 4, 1881; Jennie, born April 7, 1884; George, born October 23, 1886; Lizzie, born April 24, 1889, and Ella, born October 16, 1900. There were two other children born to Mr. and Mrs. Tarter, they having died in early life.

Henry Kirkner, father of Mrs. Tarter, was a resident of East Whiteland township, Pennsylvania, and was employed in the quarries at Cedar Hollow. He was united in marriage to Jane Moore, daughter of Christian Moore, of East Whiteland township, and eight children were born to them, namely: George; Kate Moore, wife of David F. Tarter; William, deceased; Jacob, engaged in farming in the township of Uwchlan; Lydia, wife of Isaac Douglas, an agriculturist of East Whiteland township; Joseph, a farmer in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania; Eber, a lime worker at Cedar Hollow quarries, and Leonard Kirkner, who is engaged in farming with his brother, Jacob Kirkner. Mr. Tarter is known in the neighborhood as a man of integrity and honor, whose influence has always been for the good of the community.

ISAAC ALBRIGHT, a veteran of the Civil war, and a representative of the class of men known as independent farmers, is a descendant of a family that dates back to the early period of the history of this country. He was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, September 21, 1845, the son of Daniel L. and Annie (Arthur) Albright, the latter named being also descended from an old and prominent family who took up their residence in this country in the early colonial days.

Daniel L. Albright (father) was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, was a forgerman by trade, which line of industry he followed for many years, then turned his attention to farming, which proved a successful enterprise, and the latter years of his life were spent in the capacity of merchant and hotel keeper in Berks county, Pennsylvania, where he resided up to the time of his decease. He married Annie Arthur, daughter of Jonathan Arthur, who was engaged as a farmer by Harry Graham, of East Vincent township. The following named children were the issue of this union: Mary, wife of Amos Van Pelt, of Gibraltar, Berks county, Pennsylvania. John, engaged in farming pursuits and also a lock tender on the canal. Sophia, wife of John Hawes, of Reading, Pennsylvania, employed as a heater in the iron works of that place. Daniel Webster, for many years a conductor on the railroad, but at the present time (1903) engaged in the capacity of instructor of engineers for the Reading Railroad. Simon, deceased. Margaret, deceased. Sarah, deceased. Annie, wife of William Sands, a hatter by trade, and a resident of Reading, Pennsylvania. Isaac, mentioned hereinafter.

Isaac Albright, son of Daniel L. and Annie Albright, was a student in the public schools of Berks county, Pennsylvania, and acquired a good English education. He began his business career in the capacity of boatman on the Schuylkill Canal, which position he retained for four years, or until the breaking out of the Civil war, when he enlisted as a private for three months in the Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers. When this period of time had expired, Mr. Albright enlisted in Company H, Two Hundred and Fifth Pennsylvania Regiment, with whom he served for three years, first as a private, then orderly, and then sergeant. The most noted battles in which he participated were Fort Stedman, Petersburg and Fair Oaks, and during one engagement he received a wound in the left leg, below the knee, which incapacitated him for active service for about three months. He was honorably discharged from the service of the United States in 1865, and now receives a pension of eight dollars per month.

After his return home Mr. Albright learned the forge trade with his father, followed this occupation for almost four years, and then turned his attention to farming, which he has conducted with eminent success up to the present time. He was the owner of a farm of one hundred acres of rich and productive land in East Nantmeal township, situated near Coventryville, where his extensive operations consisted of general farming and dairying; his dairy being equipped with about fifteen head of select cows and the products of this industry, being of a superior quality, were readily disposed of to the Warwick Creamery. Mr. Albright has sold his farm and will soon sell stock and machinery. He will then retire from farming and is expecting to engage in another department of business. Politically, Mr. Albright is a Republican, and gives an intelligent support to his party on all political issues, either local, state or national. He is an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic, Post No. 595, of Pottstown, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Albright was united in marriage to Sarah Ann Wamsher, daughter of Jonathan and Margaret Wamsher, the former named being a farmer and wood chopper, and during the winter season was employed as a miner at St. Mary's Iron and Ore Mines. The two brothers of Mrs. Albright, Robert and Daniel Wamsher, were active participants in the rebellion of 1861; Daniel was killed while in service at Fort Stedman, and Robert returned home without an injury. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Albright: Daniel, an agriculturist in Uwchlan township. Emma, wife of Wesley Murray, a farmer in East Nantmeal township. Wilmar, deceased. Anna, wife of William Brown, a farmer in West Vincent township, who is working the farm of the late William Ralston. John, an engineer at the old mine in Chester Spring. Sarah, resides at home with parents. Laura, resides at home. Mary, resides at home. Lulu, deceased. Ida, deceased. Frederick, engaged in farming on the old homestead. Howard, deceased. William, deceased. Mr. Albright and his family are members of the Coventryville Methodist Episcopal church, Mr. Albright being one of the board of trustees (1903).

Mrs. Albright died December 10, 1901, and Mr. Albright married for his second wife Miss Pauline Arnold, a daughter of Martin and Matilda (Ogden) Arnold, natives of New York state, both of whom are now deceased. There were but two children in the family, the other child being Erskine, now a resident of California.

EDWIN MORRIS GUEST. Among the thoroughgoing and practical agriculturists of East Nantmeal township, whose lives of energy, enterprise and thrift have been the means of bringing to them financial success, may be mentioned the name of Edwin M. Guest, born November 12, 1851, at Guest Hollow, where the Guest family, whose history dates back to the Revolutionary days, settled after their arrival in this country from Wales, at the time of the arrival of William Penn.

Thomas Guest, grandfather of Edwin M. Guest, was born in Guest Hollow, attended the common schools of the neighborhood, and after attaining man's estate learned the trade of stone mason. He was united in marriage to Ann Broadbent, daughter of Thomas and Agnes (Fallis) Broadbent, and they were the parents of the following named children: George, a stone mason by trade, which occupation he followed during the greater part of his life. Hannah, wife of Thomas Guest. Nellie Ann, wife of John Ray; he was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania. Fallese Guest, Thomas Broadbent, father of Mrs. Guest, was born in Scotland, and came to this country prior to the Revolutionary war; he was a refiner of iron and was engaged at this industry for many years. He resided at Valley Forge, Chester county, Pennsylvania, during the period of the war of the Revolution. He was an Episcopalian in religion, and a Whig in politics.

Fallese Guest, father of Edwin M. Guest, was a native of Guest Hollow, a stone mason by trade, but after following this line of industry for many years, he turned his attention to farming and conducted his operations on an extensive scale. Mr. Guest was one of the school directors of Guest Hollow for many years, and he was also the incumbent of several other offices of trust and responsibility. In religion he was an honored member of the Society of Friends, and in politics was formerly a Whig, but later a Republican. Mr. Guest married Ann Strickland, first cousin of Judge Strickland, and a member of one of the old and prominent families of Chester county. Their children were: Thomas Broadbent, who was a private in Company F, Ninety-seventh Regiment, Captain Dewitt Lewis, commander, and lost his life during the battle of Green Plain, Virginia. Hannah Mary, died in childhood. Edwin Morris Guest. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Guest married Lydia J. Corl, daughter of Abner Corl, who was a manufacturer of clocks and conducted his business at or near the place where Edwin M. Guest now resides. Fallese Guest was a leading member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Pugh Lodge, and was a past commander in the order. His death occurred in 1883.

Edwin M. Guest, only surviving child of Fallese and Ann Guest, received his early education at the Murray school house in East Nantmeal township, and this was supplemented by attendance at the West Chester State Normal School, where he was thoroughly qualified for the position of teacher, in which capacity he served for eight years. After the death of his father, Mr. Guest changed his occupation to that of farming, which he has successfully pursued up to the present time. His farm consists of seventy-two acres of rich and productive land, whereon he conducts a general line of farming with a dairy of eight head of cows, and the products of the latter branch of the business are readily disposed of to the Pughtown Creamery. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles of the Republican party.

Mr. Guest was united in marriage to Mary D. Eggline, who was born in what is now known as Bucktown, a daughter of Lewis and Elizabeth Eggline, the former named having been a bureau maker by trade, conducting his business at the time when that class of furniture was all made by hand. Eight children were the issue of this union—Nora Eggline, born June 17, 1885; Strickland, born January 22, 1887, has passed the junior grade in the school he attended; Anna Lydia, born September 22, 1888; Debbie Elizabeth, born May 18, 1890; Sallie Broadbent, born February 18, 1892; Ruth Stephens, born February 26, 1895. Mr. Guest and his family are members and regular attendants at the services of the Methodist Episcopal church.

JOHN EVANS FORSYTHE, of Upper Providence, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, for a number of years widely known as a leading educator of Philadelphia, was born in Thorndale, Pennsylvania, and is the son of James and Emily (Evans) Forsythe.

Mr. Forsythe received his preparatory education in the Westtown Boarding School and at Haverford College, and taking the senior year in 1879, at Harvard University. After a brief experience in teaching he went abroad, visiting most of the countries of Europe. After his return home he accepted a position as teacher of classics and Latin at Westtown. In this position his ability as an educator speedily became evident. His class, when he took charge of it, consisted of thirty pupils, but the third winter thereafter it numbered one hundred and forty-three. In response to an urgent call he then went to Philadelphia, and became principal of the Friends' Select School. Resigning this position after a time he was for three years connected with Henry Hobart Brown's School, preparing pupils for college. In 1884 he established the Forsythe School in Rittenhouse Square, Philadelphia. The enterprise began with three boys, and at the end of ten years his pupils numbered one hundred and fifty, coming from the wealthy families of the country. The exceptional ability and assiduous devotion which had obtained for Mr. Forsythe this signal success in his chosen calling finally impaired his health, and in 1894, having transferred his school to other management, he retired to the farm in Upper Providence where he has since resided.

Mr. Forsythe married, in 1894, Helen Lucretia, daughter of David H. and Grace (Ridgely) MacDonald. They have had four children: Gratia, now deceased; Alice Harwood, Naomi, and Florence Evelyn. Mrs. Forsythe, who was before her marriage a teacher in the Forsythe School, is a native of Baltimore, Maryland, and comes of Scotch and English ancestry, being a descendant of the Harwoods of Maryland, of Revolutionary fame.

WILLIAM T. WYNN, one of the representative farmers of East Nantmeal township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he has the reputation of being a man of great energy and thorough business experience, was born in Pottstown, Pennsylvania, December 20, 1873, the son of Samuel and Annie J. Wynn, and grandson, on the paternal side of Thomas Wynn, who was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, and on the maternal side he is a grandson of William Neeley, who was born in the vicinity of the old homestead on which William T. Wynn now resides.

Samuel Wynn (father) was born in West Vincent township, Chester county, obtained a practical education in the common schools, and during his early life was employed as a heater in the Iron Works of the Pottstown Mills. In 1878 he located in East Nantmeal township, purchased a tract of land whereon he conducted general farming, and being a man of clear judgment and unwavering integrity, he was alike prominent and useful in the community. During the war of the rebellion he enlisted for three years in Company F, Ninety-seventh Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, participated in the battles of Cold Harbor, Fort Wagner and Petersburg, and during his three years of war life was never indisposed for a single day and never received any wounds. Mr. Wynn was united in marriage to Annie J. Neeley, daughter of William Neeley, a prosperous agriculturist of East Nantmeal township. Their children are: Mary, wife of Bentley Prizer, of Coatesville, Pennsylvania; William; Morris, a conductor on the West Chester Trolley Line, married Alda Pennepacker, a daughter of Albert Pennepacker, a successful and enterprising farmer of East Nantmeal township. Samuel Wynn, father of these children, was a member of the Nantmeal Methodist Episcopal church, in which he filled the office of trustee. In politics he was a Republican. He died July 26, 1897, survived by his wife and children, the former named now residing on the old homestead with her son, William T. Wynn.

The educational advantages enjoyed by William T. Wynn were obtained at the Neeley School, and upon the completion of his studies he devoted his entire time and attention to farming, conducting his operations on the home farm, which is situated in the northern section of the township. The farm consists of eighty-one acres of rich and arable land, on which he produces a superior grade of general farm truck, and the products of the dairy of eight head of cows find a ready sale at the creamery. Mr. Wynn is a loyal supporter of the principles of Republicanism, and was elected by that party to the office of constable of the township, the duties of which position he performed with credit and distinction; he was also inspector of elections and has held various other offices of less importance. Mr. Wynn is unmarried and resides with his widowed mother. The family hold membership in the Nantmeal Methodist Episcopal church, and are esteemed and respected by the residents of the community.

WILLIAM TEMPLIN, for many years prominently and actively identified with the agricultural, political and social interests of East Nantmeal township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he is now serving in the capacity of supervisor, having been elected on the Democratic ticket at the spring election, was born in Warwick township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, March 1, 1840, a son of James and Martha Templin.

James Templin, father of William Templin, was both prominent and useful as a man and citizen, and his labors in his own particular line of business were crowned with marked success. He was united in marriage to Martha Morrison, and the following named children were born to them: Elizabeth, deceased; Sarah, wife of Wilson Greer, for a number of years engaged in the carpentering work at Concordville, and later a contractor and builder; Susan, wife of Pennell Smith, a farmer of Delaware county, Pennsylvania; Lewis, formerly a carpenter, but later an agriculturist; he married Elizabeth Wynn, daughter of Jonathan Wynn, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume; Mary, wife of John Wynn, formerly the proprietor of a hotel, but now engaged in the occupation of shoemaking at Pottstown, Pennsylvania; Rebecca, wife of Davis Amo, a collier by trade, and a resident of Warwick township; George (1) died in early life; George (2) also died in early life; Martha, deceased; and William Templin.

William Templin acquired a good English education in the public schools of East Nantmeal, and his first business experience was gained at the moulding trade, in which line of industry he was engaged for six years; he then devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits, working by the month for one year, after which he served three years as an apprentice at the carpenter trade. He then followed this occupation for eighteen years, and at the expiration of this period of time purchased his present farm in East Nantmeal township, Chester county, consisting of fifty-five acres, where he conducts a general line of farming with a dairy attached. Mr. Templin has always taken a deep interest in the advancement and progress of the township, and has held all the offices, including that of school director, which he filled for many years, from supervisor down to the least important position. He is now the incumbent of the office of supervisor, having been elected at the spring election. During the progress of the Civil war, Mr. Templin was drafted and served for nine months in Company D, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth Regiment, in the capacity of first sergeant. The company was not called upon to participate in any regular battles, therefore Mr. Templin did not receive any wounds, but he contracted the measles and this disease left him severely impaired in health.

Mr. Templin married Annie Cochran, daughter of James and Sidney (Davis) Cochran, of East Nantmeal township, where Mr. Cochran was engaged in agricultural pursuits, and in this vicinity they reared a family of four children—Margaret, wife of Josiah Keeley, a farmer of East Vincent township; Elizabeth, wife of Thomas A. Wynn, an agriculturist of East Nantmeal township; William Franklyn Cochran, a widower, and a farmer by occupation; and Annie, wife of William Templin. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Templin—1. James, is a carpenter by trade, which occupation he followed for several years, but of late years he has engaged in farming; he served as town clerk for the township of East Nantmeal, and for the past three years has filled the office of auditor. He is a member of the Patriotic Order of Sons of America, of A Camp, No. 335, Nantmeal Village. He married Lizzie Loomis, daughter of the late Allen Loomis, of East Nantmeal township. 2. Frank, resides at home with his parents and assists with the work on the home farm; he has held some of the minor offices of the township, being elected on the Democratic ticket. Mr. Templin and his family hold membership in the Baptist church, in the work of which they take a keen and active interest. One brother of Mr. Templin resides with him at East Nantmeal township, James K. Templin, and another brother, John M. Templin, was formerly a contractor, but is now a carpenter and builder at Reading, Pennsylvania. He married Elizabeth Diffendofer, of Chester county, Pennsylvania, and they have reared a family of six children.

ALFRED SHARPLESS. John Sharpless, the American ancestor of the branch of the family named of which Alfred Sharpless, of London Britain township, Chester county, is a lineal descendant in the seventh generation, was a native of England, born at Wyburnbury, in Chester county, where he was baptized August 15, 1624. He married Jane Moor, and he died April 11, 1685.

Joseph (2), son of John and Jane (Moor) Sharpless, was born at Middletown, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, September 28, 1678, and died in 1757. He married Lydia Lewis, March 31, 1704; she was born March 8, 1683, and died in 1763.

Benjamin (3), son of Joseph and Lydia (Lewis) Sharpless, was born November 26, 1709, and died at Middletown, March 16, 1785. He married Edith Broome, at Concord Meeting, February 27, 1737. She died June 13, 1744, aged twenty-six years, and Benjamin Sharpless married (second) on March 21, 1746, Martha Mendenhall, who was born December 8, 1724, and died October 20, 1812.

Joshua (4), son of Benjamin and Martha (Mendenhall) Sharpless, was born at Middletown, December 28, 1746-7, and died in East Bradford township, September 21, 1826. He married, December 15, 1768, Edith Yarnall, who was born March 3, 1743, and died January 18, 1787. He married (second), May 20, 1789, at Concord Meeting, Ann Trimble, who was born January 19, and died August 30, 1837.

Joshua (5), son of Joshua and Edith (Yarnall) Sharpless, was born August 12, 1779, and died December 21, 1860. He was a carpenter, and he located in Philadelphia, where he followed his trade. In 1823 he moved to Chester county, and in 1829 he located in London Britain township, where he purchased about three hundred acres of land; his grandson, Alfred Sharpless, now resides upon a portion of this tract, and his son, Charles Sharpless, on the original homestead. He married, in Philadelphia, in 1808, a daughter of Joseph and Hannah Drinker, and their children were 1. George, born May 5, 1809, deceased; 2. Edward, born January 3, 1811, died August 31, 1857; 3. Hannah, born November 9, 1812, deceased; 4. Mary, born January 10, 1815, deceased; 5. Benjamin, born February 3, 1817, who resides in Bucks county, Pennsylvania; 6. Charles, born February 23, 1819, who resides on the old homestead.

Edward (6), son of Joshua and Philadelphia (Drinker) Sharpless, was born in Philadelphia, January 3, 1811. He was educated at the Friends' School in his native city and in the Friends' Boarding School in Westtown. He followed farming on the farm whereon his son Alfred now resides, in London Britain township. He also owned a lime kiln and quarry, and dealt to some extent in real estate. He was a man of most exemplary character and a member of the Society of Friends. In politics he was originally a Whig, and afterwards a Republican. He married, November 11, 1841, Ella Paxson, a daughter of Charles and Mercy Paxson, born in Buckingham, Bucks county, Pennsylvania, September 27, 1813. The children born of this marriage were: 1. Anna, born March 10, 1844; 2. Nathan, born September 4, 1846, died July 26, 1862; 3. Alfred, to be written of further; 4. Sarah, born September 3, 1852, died September 30, 1883; 5. Ellen, born November 6, 1856, deceased; Edward Sharpless, the father of this family, died August 31, 1857, and was long survived by his widow, who died January 19, 1888.

Alfred Sharpless, third child and second son of Edward and Ella (Paxson) Sharpless, was born on the old homestead where he now resides, February 4, 1849. He was educated in the public schools and in the Westtown Boarding School. From the time of his coming to manhood he has been engaged in farming on the old place where was his father's home, and is known as one of the most enterprising and successful agriculturists in the township. In 1887 he also built a creamery, which he has since conducted after the most modern and approved style, and which enjoys wide repute as a model of its kind. Mr. Sharpless is a warm advocate of education, and of whatever will promote the moral and material well-being of the community, and his influence is widely and usefully exerted along these lines. He has held the office of township auditor. He is a member of the Society of Friends, of Franklin Grange, No. 141, Patrons of Husbandry, and his political affiliations are with the Republican party.

Mr. Sharpless was married, at New Garden Meeting, March 10, 1875, to Miss Zilla M. Cope, born April 28, 1850, a daughter of Jonathan Cope, of East Goshen township, Chester county. The children born of this marriage were: 1. Alice C., born April 12, 1876, who was educated in a private school; 2. Anna M., born December 4, 1877, who was educated at the Westtown Boarding School; 3. Nathan E., born May 27, 1879, who was educated at the Westtown Boarding School; 4. Evelyn, born May 17, 1882, who was educated in the public school; 5. Howard, born February 14, 1884, who was educated in a private school; 6. Clarence P., born August 3, 1887, who was educated at the Westtown Boarding School; 7. Sarah M., born April 23, 1891, who is a student in the public school.

JACOB MACFEE, residing in East Nantmeal township, about one mile from the village, is a splendid representative of that class of men known as independent farmers, who by the exercise of energy, perseverance and keen forethought are enabled to live comfortably and at the same time acquire a competence which will prove of lasting benefit to them in their declining years. He was born in West Vincent township, Pennsylvania, February 2, 1847, the son of Isaac and Catherine Macfee.

Isaac Macfee, father of Jacob Macfee, was a shoemaker by trade and conducted his operations along that line in West Vincent township. He was an upright, conscientious man, and faithfully performed all the duties and obligations which fall to the lot of every man. He married Catherine Smith, daughter of John and Mary Smith, and through this union ten children were born, seven of whom are living at the present time (1903). Jonah, a farmer in West Vincent township; William, engaged in agricultural pursuits in the town of Birchrunville; G. W. Powell, a farmer in East Nantmeal township; Margaret, wife of Levi Shoffner, a prosperous agriculturist of West Pikeland township; Hannah, wife of William H. Walleigh, a farmer of Chester Springs; Amanda, widow of John Eaches, who during his life time was engaged in farming in East Nantmeal township; and Jacob Macfee.

The public schools of West Vincent township afforded Jacob Macfee a good English education, which is an important and essential requisite in the life and career of every individual. He chose for his life work the occupation of farmer, conducted extensive operations on a tract of land which he rented for that purpose, and in the year 1891, having accumulated sufficient funds from his many years of labor, he purchased a farm situated in East Nantmeal township, about one mile from the village, which was formerly the property of Joseph Phipps. His farm consists of ninety-four acres of rich and arable land, sixty acres of which is under cultivation, whereon he raises a general line of farm and garden produce. He also has a dairy of twelve head of cows, some of the finest specimens of Jersey cattle in Chester county, having devoted considerable attention to the breeding of this species for the past twenty years. Ever since attaining his majority Mr. Macfee has voted the Democratic ticket, and with the exception of one year has been the incumbent of the township offices, among which have been the positions of constable, assessor and collector.

Mr. Macfee was united in marriage to Martha Hoffecker, daughter of Jacob and Rebecca (Ramstine) Hoffecker, the farmer named having been a prosperous farmer in East Nantmeal township, in the vicinity of East Nant Post Office. Their children are: 1. John A., a farmer in East Nantmeal township, married Ada Christman, of East Nantmeal township, daughter of George Christman, the old veteran fox hunter of Chester county. The Christman family date back to the Revolutionary period, as do also the Macfee family, who are of Irish parentage, and came to this country in the early days, settling near the town of Phoenixville, Chester county, Pennsylvania. 2. Emma, wife of William T. Miller, a farmer of West Vincent township. 3. Walter, engaged in farming pursuits in East Nantmeal township, married Carrie E. Eyrich, daughter of Wellington Eyrich, a member of one of the old families of East Nantmeal township. 4. Maggie. 5. Jacob, Jr. 6. Laura. 7. Florence. The four latter named reside at home with their parents. Mr. Macfee and family hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal church of East Nantmeal township.

GEORGE BROWN MELLOR, a prominent and enterprising agriculturist of East Bradford township, Chester county, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, December 25, 1843, a son of Thomas Mellor, who was born in Manchester, England, in 1808, a son of William Mellor.

Thomas Mellor attended the public schools of Manchester, England, where he acquired a good classical education, and later he interested himself in mercantile pursuits in his native town. In 1822 he emigrated to this country and located in Philadelphia, where he established an importing dry goods business which he followed successfully for half a century. He was most reliable in all business transactions and his efficiency in his chosen calling, combined with his honorable methods of conducting trade, secured to him a large and constantly increasing patronage from which he derived a goodly profit. Mr. Mellor was a member of the Church of England, to the support of which he contributed liberally both of his time and means. He married Martha Bancroft, who was born near Manchester, England, a daughter of John and Elizabeth Bancroft, who came to this country in 1820. Their children were: John Bancroft, William, Elizabeth, Alfred, Martha, George Brown, Rebecca B., Sarah, Thomas, Edward, and Charles Mellor. The father of these children died in 1882, his wife having died two years previously.

RESIDENCE OF GEORGE B. MELLOR.
Old Cope Homestead, and Birthplace of Gilbert Cope.

Geor. B. Bellor.

The early educational advantages enjoyed by Mr. Mellor were obtained in the schools of Philadelphia, and this was supplemented by a thorough course in Haverford College from which he was graduated in 1862. Two years later he located on the old Cope homestead in East Bradford township, and since that date has given his attention exclusively to his farming interests, whereby he has provided his family with a comfortable home and supplied them with all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life. His place is kept in first-class condition and his progressive farming methods have brought to him very desirable returns for his labor. Mr. Mellor is prominent and active in all matters pertaining to the interest and welfare of the community in which he resides, and has served in the capacity of school director for many years. He is an adherent of the Republican party, being deeply interested in its success and progress, believing that it contains the best elements of good government.

On December 17, 1868, Mr. Mellor married Miss Sarah Savery, eldest daughter of the late Thomas Savery, of Chester county. Their children are: Thomas Savery, born October 10, 1869, acquired his education at the Westtown Friends' Boarding School and is now engaged in farming; Elizabeth, wife of Dr. Joseph Bringham of West Chester; Hannah Savery, and George Brown Mellor, Jr.

JESSE ALLEN JAMES, for many years a sterling citizen of West Nantmeal, Chester county, Pennsylvania, was born in that township, and is the second of the name to be identified with the agricultural interests of the community and prominently active in its public life.

Jesse James, the father, was also born in West Nantmeal township, December 5, 1794, on the farm now owned and worked by Christian Amole. He was a man of energy and integrity, and he brought these qualities of mind to the conduct of his farm. In public affairs he was always to be found on the side of the forces that make for the betterment of human condition. He was an active anti-slavery man in those trying years leading up to the war of the rebellion. Later in life he gave himself to the temperance reform movement and in his public career paid the penalty of standing for an unpopular cause. For nine years he served the town as justice of the peace, and in 1830 was elected to the legislature. Because of his temperance principles he was defeated for a second term. He was again nominated in 1850 on the Whig ticket and was elected. He served in 1850 and 1851, but his advocacy of temperance defeated him for a third term. He married Margaret Allen, born in November, 1798, a daughter of Captain Ephraim and Sally (Erwin) Allen. Captain Allen, a cabinet maker by trade, came to West Nantmeal township from Carlisle, Cumberland county, and settled on the farm now owned and occupied by his grandson, Clarence Allen James. Jesse and Margaret (Allen) James were the parents of eight children, as follows:

1. Hannah, who became the wife of James S. Phipps, of West Chester. Mr. Phipps was a farmer and school teacher. They had two children, Margaret and Jesse (deceased). Margaret married Joseph Armstrong, an oil broker of Petrolia, Canada.
2. Ephraim, who was a farmer in early life, but began speculation in oil and lumber in 1864. Later he operated a line of boats on the Allegheny river. He was twice married, first to Susanna Russell, who left one daughter, Annie, who became the wife of Charles Henderson, of Glen Moore, a bookkeeper in the Honeybrook First National Bank. She has two children, Sarah Jane and Benjamin Reed Henderson. The second wife of Ephraim James was Florence Bump, of Syracuse, New York.
3. Abner, a mechanic and coal and lumber dealer at Isabella, Pennsylvania. He married Margaret Lincoln, of Lancaster county, daughter of Samuel Lincoln. From this marriage came three children: Edward, who died at the age of four years; Clarence Allen James, married to Lizzie Millard, daughter of Jonathan Millard, and father of two children, Helen and Edward; Elizabeth Lincoln, wife of Trago McFarland, a merchant of Wagontown, Chester county; she has no children.
4. Sarah Elizabeth, wife of William Templeton, a farmer.
5. Rachel, wife of James Butler, of Upper Uwchlan township. (For children of this union, see sketch of James Butler elsewhere in this work.)
6. Jesse Allen, whose career is fully treated elsewhere in this article.
7. Isaac, who died at seventeen years of age.
8. Ruth Anna, wife of Dr. Richard Matlack, of Brooklyn, Chester county. Dr. Matlack died, leaving his widow with three children—Bessie, Francis and Richard. Francis is a bookkeeper and stenographer at the University of Pennsylvania.

Jesse Allen James, sixth child and third son of Jesse and Margaret (Allen) James, was born on the old homestead farm, about one-half mile from his present home, December 1, 1838. He was educated at Pughtown and Millersville, and taught for two years after leaving school. During his young manhood he served in the state militia and was called to the regular army during the Civil war, where he gave the full measure of a soldier's duty in the cause so dear to his father. After the restoration of peace, he became connected with an engineering corps for the surveying of government lands. Still later, he joined the rush to the oil fields, where he found employment as bookkeeper and clerk. Thus, after a life of many and varied experiences, he returned to his native town and took up farming. He now owns a farm of one hundred acres, which he supervises, giving most of his attention to dealing in cattle, his operations extending to the west as well as to the east. The church affiliations of the family are with the Presbyterian denomination. In politics Mr. James is an independent Republican.

Mr. James was married, in 1881, to Martha Williams, daughter of Joseph and Jane (Wilson) Williams, a woman of Scotch-Irish descent, and the eldest of a family of ten children, the others being as follows: 2. Margaret, who cares for her parents; 3. Ella W., a graduate of a private school in Philadelphia, now teaching at Stratford; 4. James Wilson, who after graduating at Princeton was made assistant to the Rev. Dr. Cady at Dinsmore and is now pastor of the Second Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, which position he has held for five years. 5. May Elizabeth, who became the wife of Dr. Wayne Baugh, of Paoli, and to whom was born one daughter, Marion; 6. John Alexander, a clerk and bookkeeper at Berwyn, Chester county; he married Nellie Worrilow, a daughter of John Worrilow, and a sister of Lieutenant Worrilow, now in the United States Navy; the children of John A. and Nellie Williams are Chester, Roy and Edith; 7. Joseph, who was at one time a clerk and is now a farmer in Chester Valley; he is unmarried; 8. Jennie, unmarried, who is a bookkeeper in the Berwyn National Bank; 9. George Henry, a druggist at Camden, New Jersey, who is unmarried; 10. Della Hannah, a graduate of the West Chester Normal School, who is now a teacher at Paoli. Jesse Allen and Martha (Williams) James are the parents of one son, Jesse Evans James, born August 31, 1882. After finishing a course at the West Chester Normal School, he entered the University of Pennsylvania, where he is preparing himself for a civil engineer.

GEORGE OLIVER LLOYD. The Lloyd family in America, of which there are many contemporary branches, is of Welsh origin. It has been known in Chester county, Pennsylvania, for several generations, but as to the date of its appearance there is no record. George Oliver Lloyd, of Warwick township, well represents this line, being a progressive farmer, and one of the substantial men of the section.

Thomas Lloyd, grandfather of George Oliver, was a farmer, and his wife was Margaret Hudson. David, a son of this couple, married Catherine Sands, daughter of Othner and Catherine (Rittenhouse) Sands. Catherine (Sands) Lloyd was born in Berks county, as were her parents, and died at the age of forty-six. The children of her marriage with David Lloyd were as follows: Elizabeth, who married John Harrison, both deceased;

Margaret, who married John Leggett, both deceased; Edith, deceased, was the wife of Jonathan Keim; Reese, deceased; Maria, widow of William Harbold; Jane, deceased, formerly the wife of the Rev. W. H. H. Marsh of Philadelphia; John, deceased; Enoch, now living at Sterling, Kansas; Mark, deceased; George Oliver, of whom a more detailed notice follows:

George Oliver Lloyd was born in Warwick township, Chester county, July 21, 1841. He grew up on his father's farm, and attended the local schools. He then went to farming on his own account, near the place where he now lives. Altogether he has been farming in Chester county for forty years, and all but ten of them have been spent continuously on the present homestead. His work has prospered, and for experience and sound judgment he ranks with the best farmers of the county. With his family, he attends the Baptist church. In public issues he is on the side of the Republican party.

He married Annie Irwin, December 11, 1862. She was born January 20, 1842, in Chester county, a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Irwin. The children of George Oliver and Annie (Irwin) Lloyd were as follows: 1. Harry, born September 8, 1863, now living in Sterling, Kansas, where he is engaged in the coal business, and the owner of a grain elevator; 2. Bertia, born July 16, 1865, is the wife of James Bingham; 3. Charles, born July 25, 1869, who conducts a general store at Harmonyville, Pennsylvania, married Laura Quinter, and has one child, George; 4. Ernest, born November 13, 1873, was a graduate of a business college in Philadelphia, is engaged in business in the latter named city; but resides in Rosedale, New Jersey; he married Anna Dolan, and two children have been born to them; 5. Edgar, born March 23, 1876, was a graduate of a business college in Philadelphia, married Mary Stager, and resides on the old homestead near Hopewell; 6. Arthur, born April 26, 1881, a graduate of a business college in Philadelphia; 7. Earl, born September 15, 1883, also attends Banks' Business College in Philadelphia.

CHRISTIAN AMOLE, a worthy representative on both the paternal and maternal side of old and prominent families who were among the pioneer settlers of Chester county, Pennsylvania, and took an active and personal interest in Revolutionary affairs, was born in Warwick township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, April 3, 1830, a son of William and Elizabeth (Swinehart) Amole, and grandson of Christian Amole, who for many years engaged extensively in farming pursuits in that vicinity of the state.

William Amole (father) was also a native of Warwick township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, the date of his birth being July 18, 1805.

J. H. Lloyd

He spent the early years of his life in the neighborhood of his birthplace and later located at Loag's Corner in West Nantmeal township, where he resided for upwards of sixty years. He was a farmer by occupation and followed this line of trade throughout his entire active career; was an upright, conscientious citizen, and during his long and useful life won and retained the confidence and esteem of a large circle of friends. Mr. Amole was united in marriage to Elizabeth Swinehart, born November 2, 1801, the place of birth supposed to have been Warwick township, a daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Swinehart, the former named having been a life-long resident of Warwick township, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Amole: Catherine, born June 3, 1828, now deceased, was the wife of James Leggit, of Burdsborough, Bucks county; he was engaged in mercantile pursuits, but is now retired from active business; Christian, mentioned at length hereinafter; Henry, born in Warwick township, August 7, 1832, was engaged in farming in West Nantmeal township, where his death occurred in 1900; he was unmarried; George, born in West Nantmeal township, May 30, 1835, also followed the occupation of farmer, was unmarried, and died September 24, 1867; William, died in infancy. Mr. Amole, father of these children, served his township in the capacity of school director for many years. He died April 9, 1893; his wife passed away May 29, 1874.

Christian Amole, eldest son of William and Elizabeth Amole, acquired his preliminary education at the Allen school house, and later was a student at the schools of Rockville, where he completed his studies. He then chose the vocation of farming for his life work, subsequently purchased a one-hundred-acre farm in West Nantmeal, which he successfully operated until the year 1873, and since that date he has rented his farm to outside parties. He is now leading a retired life and enjoying to the full the ease and comfort which is a fitting sequel to years of toil and activity.

Mr. Amole was united in marriage to Mary Parker, daughter of James and Elizabeth Parker of Wallace township. Mr. Parker was a local minister of the Methodist Episcopal church, and both he and his wife were born, lived and died in Wallace township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, being representatives of families whose history was closely interwoven with that of the early days of the county. Mr. Amole and his wife are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church. In every relation of life Mr. Amole has sustained a high character, and he has always been regarded as one of the useful and influential citizens of the community.

JOHN BLACK LAMMY, one of the old and highly respected residents of West Nantmeal township, where he has been successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits for over half a century, was born two miles distant from Downingtown, in the vicinity known as the Brick, March 5, 1819, a son of Edward and Lydia Lammy, and grandson of Edward Lammy, who was the proprietor of the well known Bucks Tavern, and he also operated a small farm in connection with this enterprise.

Edward Lammy (father) was a native of Chester county, Pennsylvania, and during his entire business career followed the occupation of farmer, first in the neighborhood of Downingtown and later in West Nantmeal township, where he located near the farm owned and operated by his son, John B. Lammy. He was united in marriage to Lydia Black, daughter of John and Jane Black, who were among the early settlers of Chester county. Their children were: Abbie, wife of Joseph Ray, who followed the occupation of farmer throughout his active career. Jane, wife of James Rigg, a blacksmith at Buck Run, who successfully conducted his business there up to within a few years of his death. Mary Ann, wife of Silas Carr, who was a farmer in Honeybrook township. Lydia, wife of Charles Burley, who was employed in the different factories of the county. Joseph, who followed the occupation of commercial traveler during the greater part of his life, and John Black Lammy, mentioned at length hereinafter. The supposition is that the Lammy family emigrated to this country from Ireland during the early colonial days and settled in Chester county, Pennsylvania.

John B. Lammy attended the public schools of West Nantmeal township, where he obtained a good English education which thoroughly qualified him to meet and cope with the duties and responsibilities of life. After laying aside his school books he engaged in farming and has continued in the same line of industry up to the present time (1903). He is now the owner of a farm of fifty-five acres situated in the vicinity of Loag's Corners and near the town of Barneston, with a dairy of ten head of well selected cattle, and the product from this branch of the business is disposed of to the Barneston Creamery. He has been a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal church for many years, and has always been active in support of the various religious and material interests of his denomination. In his political affiliations he is an ardent Republican, having been connected with that party since its organization.

Mr. Lammy was united in marriage to Phebe Ann Meredith, daughter of Isaiah and Hannah Meredith, both of whom were representatives of old and prominent families of Chester county; Mr. Meredith was a stove manufacturer and farmer by occupation. Their children were: William, engaged in farming pursuits in the vicinity of Bulltown, married Miss Layton, and they were the parents of the following named children—Charles, John, William, Leonard and several others; 2. Jane, wife of Benjamin Sliter, supervisor of West Nantmeal township; their children are: Leonard, John, Charles and Edward Sliter; 3. John, a carpenter by trade but now engaged as a contractor in West Nantmeal township; he married Mary Bigler, daughter of George Bigler, of West Nantmeal township, and they are the parents of four daughters; 4. Edward, a prosperous farmer of Uwehlan township, married Bertha Buckwalter, and three sons have been the issue of this union; 5. Jacob, a farmer in Upper Uwehlan township, married Lizzie Moore, and they are the parents of three children, one son and two daughters; 6. Mary, wife of David Miller, a farmer in West Nantmeal township, and eight children have been born to them, four sons and four daughters; 7. James, engaged in farming in West Nantmeal township, married Maggie Whiteman, and six children have been the issue of this union.

JOHN H. MORRIS, a member of a prominent family of West Nantmeal township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, has been successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits for the greater part of his active life.

His father was John S. Morris, born in Berks county, while that country was yet new and covered with primeval forest. He adopted the trade of a shoemaker, which was his occupation for many years. He then purchased the farm in West Nantmeal township now owned by his son, Isaac J. Morris. This farm he cultivated until a few years before his death, when he gave the management of it into younger hands. He married Rachel Allen, daughter of William Allen, a man of prominence in his community. William Allen was a farmer whose interests took him for many years to the markets at Philadelphia. He served as justice of the peace and as constable in his township. From the marriage of John S. and Rachel (Allen) Morris came the following children:

1. William, who was by trade a tailor, commenced business at Cambridge, Chester county, but died at the early age of twenty-one years.
2. Abigail, who became the wife of Henry Syphard, a farmer.
3. Mortica, third child and second son of John S. and Rachel (Allen) Morris, has an honorable record as a soldier of the war of the rebellion. He enlisted under Colonel Harry R. Guss, of West Chester, in Company C, Ninety-seventh Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, in which he served for nine months, when for physical disability he received honorable discharge and returned home. On recovery of his health, he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, serving with this command until he was called home to be made lieutenant of Company E, Forty-second Regiment, the emergency corps called out by Governor Curtin to repel the invasion of the state by General R. E. Lee. He filled this position with distinction, and was later made lieutenant of the Berks County Regiment, in which he served up to the close of the war. He was for some time in the marine service of the United States. At present he is engaged in mining interests in Arizona.

4. John H., mentioned hereinafter.
5. Isaac J. Morris now lives on the old homestead property in West Nantmeal township, near Isabella Furnace. A farmer all his life, he has taken an active interest in state and local politics. He has filled the office of tax collector for his town and has been mercantile appraiser in Chester county. He is an active political friend of Senator Matthew S. Quay, and for many years has led the township for that wing of the Republican party.

John H. Morris, fourth child and third son of John and Rachel (Allen) Morris, was born near Barneston, called the Old Jackson, July 17, 1842. He began his school days in the old Allen school house and later attended the Franklin and Goodwill schools. He began his life work as a farmer, and with the exception of three years has always followed that occupation. Those years he spent in Reading and Elverson, conducting, at Reading, a gentlemen's furnishing establishment. The religious interests of the family are with the Methodist church. Although a Republican, unlike his brother, Mr. Morris has never taken an active part in political affairs.

He was married to Clara Rancel, daughter of Robert and Mary Ann Rancel, and four children were born to him as follows: 1. Adella, who became the wife of Jacob Curley, a saddler of Morgantown; 2. Mary Florence, who is the wife of Howard Foreman, a dealer in gentlemen's furnishing goods in Reading, Pennsylvania, and she is the mother of one child, Edith; 3. Laura, who is at home with her parents; 4. Robert, the only son, who is now a resident of Reading, Pennsylvania, where he is employed as hat finisher with Charles Hendle, a position he has held for eight years. Robert Rancel, father of Clara (Rancel) Morris, was a native of Virginia. At the age of only four years he and another young boy ran away from home. The experience of the first night, which was passed in a dry goods box outside a store, sufficed for Robert's companion, who returned home. Robert, however, kept on until he reached Philadelphia, where he was put in a home for children. From this institution he was taken by Mr. McClees of Warwick township, and brought up on the farm of Mr. McClees among his own sons as one of them. Though he formed these family ties in the home of his adoption, by leaving Virginia he forfeited his birthright in a large estate.

JASPER HOOPES, deceased, for many years a representative citizen and leading agriculturist of Chester county, Pennsylvania, where his entire life was spent, was born March 19, 1814. He was a great-grandson of Thomas Hoopes (born 10 mo., 22, 1714), who was married, 9 mo., 13, 1741, to Susanna, daughter of David and Jane Davics of Goshen. They had two sons, David and Jesse; Jesse was born 3 mo., 29, 1749; he married Rachel Yarnall, and their children were: Elizabeth, born 5 mo., 16, 1776; Albina, born 4 mo., 20, 1779; Jane, born 7 mo., 25, 1781; David, born 2 mo., 9, 1785, died 6 mo., 25, 1836.

David Hoopes, father of Jasper Hoopes, was born in West Goshen township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, February 9, 1785. In his youth he attended the district school of the neighborhood, acquiring such education as the school system of that day afforded. Later he assisted in the cultivation and improvement of the home farm, on which he resided all his life devoting his attention to agricultural pursuits, and being also engaged for many years in the occupation of teaching school. On April 14, 1813, Mr. Hoopes married Miss Ann Pim, who was born December 8, 1789, a daughter of Isaac and Hannah Pim, of East Cain township. Their children were: Jasper, born March 17, 1814, died September 29, 1865; Edward, born July 12, 1816, died December 31, 1890; Alfred, born July 26, 1818, died in 1820; Alfred (2), born June 6, 1820, died February 7, 1870; and Barton, born July 10, 1827, died November 15, 1895. The father of these children died June 25, 1836, survived by his widow, who passed away October 3, 1854.

Edward Hoopes, second son of David and Ann Hoopes, married Gulielma M., daughter of David and Rebecca Townsend, and the following named children were born to them: Anne T., born July 8, 1846; David T., born August 28, 1849, died September 2, 1852, and Herman, born June 29, 1854, married Margard G. Warfield, of Howard county, Maryland, a sister of Edwin Warfield, governor of that state; their children are: Marion, born January 20, 1882, Edward, born April 8, 1883, and Albert, born May 26, 1892. Edward Hoopes was a member of the firm of Hoopes & Townsend of Philadelphia, and served in the capacity of president of the West Chester & Philadelphia Railroad, vice president of the Philadelphia Mortgage and Trust Company, and director in a number of Philadelphia financial institutions.

Jasper Hoopes, deceased, eldest son of David and Ann Hoopes, obtained his literary education at the Westtown Friends' Boarding School, and after completing his studies settled on a portion of the old homestead. Here he was interested for a long period of time in general farming, an industry that has laid the foundation for the fortune of more than one far-seeing and conservative business man. He was always a loyal and progressive citizen, deeply interested in everything pertaining to the welfare of his community and its progress along material, social, intellectual and moral lines. He was a consistent member of the Society of Friends, and in his political affiliations was an adherent of the Republican party.

On March 6, 1839, Mr. Hoopes married Hannah Hoopes, who was born July 14, 1816, daughter of Abner and Hannah (Pierce) Hoopes. Their children were: Elma, born December 5, 1839, and Amy A., born January 15, 1842, died June 29, 1882. The death of Mr. Hoopes occurred September 29, 1865; his wife died March 6, 1845.

The following named children were born to Abner and Hannah Hoopes, parents of Mrs. Jasper Hoopes: Pierce, born October 25, 1801; Margaret, born April 24, 1804; Sarah P., born November 22, 1806; ———, born December 12, 1808; Lewis P., born December 13, 1811; Abner, born January 18, 1814, died November 13, 1837; Hannah, born July 14, 1816, died March 6, 1845, and Ann Hoopes, born May 25, 1818.

LEWIS C. BROWNBACK. The pioneer ancestor of the Brownback family, represented in the present generation by Lewis C. Brownback, a representative agriculturist of East Vincent township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, was Garrett Brownback, originally written Gerhard Brumback, a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, who sailed on the vessel "Concord" from Amsterdam, October 6, 1683, and settled in Germantown, Pennsylvania; he assisted in the erection of the first house in that locality. In 1734 he changed his place of residence to the vicinity of Bethel church, Chester county, was the proprietor of the first tavern on the north side of the Lancaster pike, and in 1736 purchased one thousand acres of land partly in Vincent and partly in Coventry townships. He was the founder of Brownback's German Reformed church, which was built by him of logs in 1741 on a portion of his property. He married Mary Pepen, daughter of Howard and Elizabeth (Rittenhouse) Pepen, and they reared a family of six children, two sons—Benjamin and Henry—and four daughters. Garrett Brownback died at the advanced age of ninety-six years, and his remains were interred in the cemetery connected with the church he founded.

The line of descent from the immigrant aucestor is as follows: Benjamin Brownback (great-great-grandfather) succeeded his father as proprietor of the tavern; he was twice married, his first wife having been Mary (Paul) Brownback, who bore him three sons—Hem, John and Edward. His second wife was Rachel (Parker) Brownback, who, after his death, which occurred April 15, 1837, was robbed and murdered but no clue to the assassin was ever obtained.

Henry Brownback (great-grandfather) was born in East Coventry township, Chester county, about 1733, resided there throughout the many years of his useful life and his death occurred July 30, 1804, in the seventy-second year of his age. He followed the occupation of a farmer, was a public-spirited and influential citizen of the community, and a member of the German Reformed church. Henry Brownback and his wife, Magdalena (Paul) Brownback, daughter of John Paul, who died in 1766, were the parents of five children—John, Peter, Benjamin, Annie Snyder and Susanna Prizer Brownback.

Peter Brownback (grandfather) was a native of East Coventry township, the date of his birth having been October 3, 1764. He followed the same vocation as his father, that of farming, was a member of the state militia for a number of years and served during the great "whisky insurrection" in western Pennsylvania. He married Susannah De Frain, a daughter of Peter De Frain, and their children were: Peter, Jesse and John Brownback. Mr. Brownback died July 9, 1834; his wife died December 12, 1853.

Jesse Brownback (father) was born March 18, 1807, in East Coventry township, Chester county, and was reared, educated and passed his entire life-time in that section of the state. His church relations were with the German Reformed denomination, and his political affiliations were with the Democratic party. On December 27, 1832, he married Elizabeth Christman, daughter of Jacob Christman, and they were the parents of the following named children—Theodore, died December 7, 1842; Edith, who married Nathan Yager; Jacob C.; Penrose Wyle; Garrett E.; Clementine, who became the wife of Samuel Stauffer; Annie, who became the wife of Franklin Stauffer; Martha, who became the wife of Penrose Beerbower; they reside in Nebraska; Frederick H., a resident of Montana; Margaret C., who became the wife of Washington Setzler, and four children were born to them; and Lewis C. Brownback. The father of these children died August 3, 1899, aged ninety-two years, and the mother passed away June 21, 1853, aged forty-one years.

Lewis C. Brownback was born in East Coventry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, January 29, 1837. After acquiring a common school education he assisted his father with the management of the family estate, working on shares for six years, and on May 12, 1874, he removed to a farm in East Vincent township which was the property of his father-in-law, George Grubb. After the death of Mr. Grubb, which occurred August 31, 1874, the farm which consists of eighty-one acres of rich and arable land, all highly improved and cultivated, became the property of Mrs. Brownback. Here he conducted extensive operations which proved very successful and remunerative. He is an active member of the German Reformed church, and a Republican in politics.

On April 30, 1868, Mr. Brownback married Myra M. Grubb, who was born in East Coventry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, February 13, 1843, daughter of George and Mariah Grubb, of Frederick township, Montgomery county. Four children were born of this union—George G., born in Chester county, July 23, 1872, resides at home and is a farmer by occupation; Jennie Manola, born in Chester county, August 26, 1874, died February 6, 1875; Emma E., born in Chester county, November 6, 1876, unmarried; and Louis Marvin, born in Chester county, January 6, 1880, a farmer by occupation.

The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Brownback were George and Barbara (Schettler) Moore, both natives of Montgomery county. Myra M. Brownback, wife of Lewis C. Brownback, attended the township schools until she was thirteen years of age, the following two years was a student at the Frederick Institute, Montgomery county, and then entered the Oakdale Seminary of Pughtown, Chester county, where she remained until she was seventeen years of age. The following year she returned to Frederick Institute and then went to Philadelphia, and for three and a half years was engaged in dressmaking, millinery and fancy work, after which she returned to her home in Chester county, where she now resides faithfully fulfilling the duties of wife and mother.

JOHN H. DUNWOODY. The pioneer ancestor of the Dunwoody family, members of which have been prominent and active in the various enterprises of Chester county, Pennsylvania, since its earliest settlement, have performed heroic service during the Revolutionary period and some of their number were members of the army of General Washington, participated at the battle of the Brandywine and Trenton and also crossed the Delaware on that memorable night, was John Dunwoody. About the year 1730 he accompanied quite a colony of Scotch-Irish emigrants, who after their arrival in this country settled in Londonderry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. In 1737 his name appears on the records of Chester county as being a school teacher at Fagg's Manor. He married Susanna Cresswell, daughter of William Cresswell, and eight children were the issue of this union; this couple are also the ancestors of Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States.

George Washington Dunwoody (father), an ancestor of John and Susanna (Cresswell) Dunwoody, was born in West Nantmeal township, May 14, 1821. Throughout the active years of his life he engaged in the cultivation of the soil, was upright and conscientious in the discharge of all the duties which befall to the lot of man, and his death which occurred in 1890 was sincerely mourned by a wide circle of friends. George W. Dunwoody and his wife, Dorothy (Benner) Dunwoody, were the parents of the following children—Elmer Benner, who married Susan Uxley, and of this union was born a daughter, Emma Florence, in 1888; Emma F., who became the wife of Joseph Talbot; John H., mentioned in the following paragraph; Philip Lessig, a farmer of West Nantmeal township; Annie M., deceased, who was the wife of James Essiek.

John H. Dunwoody, second son of George W. and Mariah Dorothy Dunwoody, was born July 9, 1861, in West Nantmeal township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. After gaining a practical education at the Allen school house in his native township, he began his active career as a farmer and conducted this line of industry with success until 1896, in the meantime learning the trade of painter and paper hanger. From that date to the present time (1903) he has devoted his attention principally to the latter named occupation, conducting a general line of work at Loags, West Nantmeal township, where he commands a large and constantly increasing trade and enjoys the reputation of being a practical and honorable business man. In addition to this enterprise, Mr. Dunwoody serves in the capacity of mail carrier between Loags and Barneston, being appointed to that position during the administration of Grover Cleveland as President of the United States.

Mr. Dunwoody married Annie Louisa Ames, daughter of Henry and Margaret (Barton) Ames, and of this union was born one son, Leroy Washington, who is now pursuing his studies in West Nantmeal township, in the same school where his ancestors acquired their education. Mr. Dunwoody and his wife are members of the Goodwill Methodist Episcopal church.

Henry Ames, father of Mrs. Dunwoody, was born in Lancaster county, three miles north of what is known as the "Gap," December 26, 1836, a son of Henry and Sarah (McCauliffe) Ames, who were the parents of eleven children, five of whom are now deceased—1. Morris, deceased, was a blacksmith by trade, married Helen Guiney, also deceased, who was born and reared in Chester county near Rockville; they were the parents of two children, one of whom resides in Honey-brook and the other in Sunbury. 2. George, whose death occurred in Harrisburg of consumption, this being the same disease that caused the death of his three brothers; he married Mary A. Spencer, also deceased, a daughter of Preston Spencer, a resident of Hyberna; he was an iron worker and was employed in the rolling mills at Harrisburg. 3. Ann, deceased, who was the wife of the late David Martin, son of Jacob Martin of Lancaster county; they reared a family of six children, who reside at the present time in Lancaster county; Mr. Martin was a farmer by occupation. 4. Elizabeth, wife of Joseph Grubb, son of Jacob Grubb of Chester county; Mr. Grubb is engaged in agricultural pursuits on a farm in Berks county; their family consisted of four children, one of whom is now deceased. 5. Isaac, a blacksmith by trade and is now conducting a shop at Willow Glen, near Morgantown; he married Annie Whitman, daughter of Samuel Whitman of Berks county, and the issue of this union was nine children, three of whom are now deceased; two of the children are married—Kate, who resides in Reading, Pennsylvania, and Sanford, employed as a blacksmith at Honeybrook; after the decease of his first wife he married Mary Byler, daughter of David Byler, of Morgantown, and they are the parents of one child. 6. Hayes, deceased, was a blacksmith by trade and conducted a shop at Saucemanville, Montgomery county; he married Mary Foreman, daughter of Absolem Foreman, who also conducted a blacksmith establishment in Lancaster county, and their family consisted of six children. 7. Jane, who resides in Berks county, is the widow of Christian Bixler and they were the parents of one child. 8. Howard, who conducts an extensive blacksmith establishment in Morgantown, married Annie Waters, daughter of Robert Waters of Berks county; their family consisted of two children, one of whom is now deceased. 9. Kate, deceased. 10. Emma, wife of John Rutherford, son of Milton Rutherford of Union county; John Rutherford conducts a general merchandise store at Laurelton, Union county; their family consists of three children. 11. Henry, father of Mrs. Dunwoody, attended the common schools of Lancaster county until he attained the age of seventeen, then removed with his father to Morgantown, Berks county, where he learned the trade of blacksmith. In the spring of 1870 he returned to Lancaster county and established a blacksmith shop which he has conducted ever since. During the Civil war he was a member of the militia for a short period of time. He is a regular attendant at the services of the Methodist church, and takes a deep and earnest interest in the affairs of the Republican party. On March 8, 1864, Mr. Ames married Margaret Barton, daughter of John Barton of Berks county, a furnace-man by trade. Their children were—1.

Annie Louisa, wife of John H. Dunwoody; 2. Sarah, wife of Charles Platt, son of Jeramiah Platt; he is a farmer and resides in East Nantmeal township; they are the parents of five children; 3. Alice, wife of Harvey Harple, son of David Harple; he learned the trade of blacksmith with his father-in-law, Mr. Ames, and is employed in Worth's Iron Works in Coatesville; 4. Laura, died in 1899, in the twenty-fifth year of her age, after a five weeks' illness of heart trouble.

ISAAC PASCHALL was born in Media, Pennsylvania, May 30, 1836, and is a son of Abram Johnson and Ann (Lincoln) Paschall, the latter a distant relative of President Lincoln. In the parents' family were ten children, all of whom are now deceased with the exception of our subject and his sister Martha, who resides on one of her brother's farms in Newtown.

Isaac Paschall enjoyed only such educational privileges as the public schools afforded. He had no opportunity to attend academy or college, and in fact was only permitted to attend the common schools when his services were not needed in the work of the home farm. He remained upon the old home place until his father's death which occurred in 1858. Some time afterward with his mother he removed to Chester Valley, where he remained for three years, when, the country having become involved in Civil war, he offered his services to the government, enlisting in September, 1861, as a member of Company C, Ninety-seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, for three years' service. He came naturally by his desire to fight for his country, for his father and three of his uncles were active participants in the war of 1812, and thus there was a commendable example of military bravery before him. During the war Mr. Paschall's regiment was attached to the Army of the South, and he was one of the first in all of the battles in which he engaged to respond to the call of duty. Among the most noticeable engagements in which he participated were the siege of Charleston and the bombardment of Fort Sumter. He was very fortunate in that he always escaped capture, wounds and death, even though he was often times in the thickest of the fight and exposed to great danger. At the end of two years' service, however, physical disability incapacitated him for further duty and he received an honorable discharge and was returned to his home.

In the fall of 1863 he once more located in Newtown and lived with his mother and sisters until the death of the former, in the year 1864. At that time, accompanied by his two sisters, Mr. Paschall took up his abode upon the Isaiah Fox farm, of fifty acres, where they lived for one year, on the expiration of which period Mr. Paschall removed to a larger farm owned by Mr. Fox, and continued to rent this until 1868, when he purchased it. For nineteen years he made his home thereon, and in 1887 sold it to the Penn Hospital. In the meantime he had purchased the Jacob Horton place of forty-seven acres, which is now occupied and managed by his sister, and in 1888 Mr. Paschall bought the Paist property of one hundred and fifty-one acres in Chester county, continuing the cultivation and improvement of that farm for nine years. In 1893 he became the owner of the Davis-Beaumont place of ten acres at Newtown, and upon this he is now residing.

In his political views Mr. Paschall has always been a staunch Republican, giving his support to the men and measures of the party, and doing everything in his power to promote its growth and insure its success. He has been elected and served as supervisor, and for three terms he has served as a member of the board of education. His religious faith is indicated by his attendance at the services of the Friends Society.

On the 23d of February, 1888, Mr. Paschall was united in marriage to Miss Mary Amelia Acker, of Chester county, a daughter of Cunard and Leah (Keeley) Acker, the former a son of Peter and Elizabeth Acker, while Mrs. Leah Acker was a daughter of Cunard and Margaret Keeley. Unto the parents of Mrs. Paschall were born eight children: John and William, both deceased; Margaret, who married Frank Van Keyser; Joseph, who was killed while fighting for the Union in the Civil war; Elizabeth, the wife of Charles C. Duckert; Mary Amelia, the wife of Isaac Paschall; Elmira, deceased; and Amanda, the wife of Benjamin Stauffer.

J. SCHRACK SHEARER, deceased, for many years successfully engaged in farming pursuits in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, was born November 2, 1837, in that county, where he was educated in the public schools. After attaining young manhood he taught school for several years, an occupation he was well qualified for, and later he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, which he found both pleasant and profitable. He was one of the active and prominent citizens of the township, held the office of school director for many years, and for six years served in the capacity of deputy register of wills for Montgomery county.

On February 10, 1859, Mr. Shearer married Martha W. Ambler, who was born in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, January 18, 1837, a daughter of Malin and Alice W. (Williams) Ambler, the latter named being a native of White Marsh, Plymouth. Mr. Ambler followed agricultural pursuits on a farm situated on the Schuylkill river at the mouth of the Perkiomen, opposite the farm where Miss Alice Shearer resides. This property consisting of one hundred and eighty-one acres, was formerly owned by

Isaac Basenall

Joseph Williams, grandfather of Mrs. Shearer, who was reared at White Marsh, and came to this farm in early life. The family have resided on this property for three generations. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Shearer: Malin A., engaged as a fireman and farmer at Norristown, Pennsylvania; Alice W., residing on the farm at Pawling, which was purchased by her mother in 1863; Eunice N., a resident of Philadelphia; Augustus W., who holds a public office in the city of Philadelphia, and Charles W., engaged in farming pursuits in Jeffersonville, Pennsylvania. Mr. Shearer, father of these children, died in March, 1896, and the death of his wife occurred November 6, 1894.

The old home farm at Pawling, Chester county, Pennsylvania, has been rented for many years, but in 1900 Miss Alice W. Shearer, eldest daughter of J. Schrack and Martha W. Shearer, a woman of bright mind and excellent business ability, removed to the homestead. She engaged Mr. George L. Garrigues as manager of the estate, and they are now conducting general farming; they raise large quantities of garden truck and farm produce, have twenty-four head of cattle, raise a large number of swine of the Chester White breed, and also conduct a fine and extensive dairy.

ISAAC JAMES MORRIS. Among the many large and highly cultivated farms for which Chester county, Pennsylvania, is widely noted, is one located near the postoffice of Weybrooke, West Nantmeal township, the property of Isaac J. Morris, a representative of an old and prominent Chester county family. His birth occurred March 23, 1847, in the section known as "Little Jackson" in West Nantmeal township, a son of John S. and Rachel (Allen) Morris.

John S. Morris (father) was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, January 30, 1808, the section in which he was born being at that time a wilderness of trees and shrubs, which have now given place to extensive farms and comfortable residences. He spent the early years of his life in obtaining a common school education and assisting his father with the work of the farm, and then learned the trade of shoemaker, which was his means of livelihood up to the year 1856, when he purchased a tract of land in West Nantmeal township, which is now the property of his son, Isaac J. Morris. This he cultivated, improved and conducted extensive operations thereon until a few years prior to his death, when he retired from active pursuits and enjoyed a season of quiet and rest. He was a man of integrity and honor, true to all the duties of public and private life, and he exerted an influence for good throughout the community.

Mr. Morris was united in marriage to Rachel Allen, born November 3, 1806, a daughter of Squire William Allen, who was an extensive agriculturist, and for many years attended the markets of Philadelphia, where he disposed of the products of his farm; he also served his township in the capacity of justice of the peace and constable for a number of years, and was a prominent and influential citizen of the community. Their children were—1. William, who died at the age of twenty-one years; he was a tailor by trade and conducted a business at Cambridge, Chester county. 2. Abigail, deceased, was the wife of Henry Syphard, who followed agricultural pursuits for a number of years. 3. Mortica, a veteran of the Civil war, and at present engaged in mining interests in the state of Arizona; at the outbreak of the rebellion he enlisted in Company C, Ninety-seventh Regiment, which was under the command of Colonel Harry R. Guss, of West Chester, and after nine months' service he was honorably discharged on account of physical disability and returned to his home. When he recovered his health and strength he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served with that command for several months. After his return home he received the appointment of lieutenant of the Emergency Corps of Company F, Forty-second Regiment, and subsequently held a similar rank in the Berks county regiment, in which he served until the close of hostilities between the north and south. For a number of years he was a member of the marine service of the United States. 4. Isaac James, mentioned at length hereinafter. 5. John H., who married Clara Rancel, and they are the parents of four children—Adella, Mary Florence, Laura and Robert Morris.

Isaac J. Morris, third son of John S. and Rachel Morris, pursued his studies in the public schools of West Nantmeal township, and since the completion of his education has conducted farming on the old homestead which he now owns. The farm consists of one hundred and eight acres of rich and arable land, well cultivated and improved, devoted to the production of a general line of farm products and in addition he conducts a flourishing dairy of twenty head of cattle, disposing of the products of both branches of the business in the Philadelphia markets. He is energetic and industrious, conducts his affairs in a practical and business-like manner, and therefore has gained considerable financial success in his undertaking. Mr. Morris is a staunch adherent of the principles of Republicanism, is recognized as a leader of the Quay faction in the community, for many years held the positions of assessor and school director, and in 1901 was ap-joined by the county commissioners as mercantile appraisers, in which capacity he served with credit and distinction for one term.

Mr. Morris married Isabella Josephine Handwork, daughter of Samuel P. and Julia Handwork, representatives of a family who were among the pioneer settlers of Chester county, Pennsylvania. Mr. Handwork was engaged in farming pursuits in West Nantmeal township, and in addition to this enterprise was in partnership with A. E. James at Conestoga in a coal, lumber and feed business, which they successfully conducted for a number of years. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Morris: 1. Charles H., a prosperous farmer of Honeybrook township; he married Minnie Benner, a daughter of David H. and Hannah (Pierce) Benner, the former named being a representative farmer of West Nantmeal township, and the children born of this union were: Minnie, Verda, deceased, and David Clare, now living. 2. Rachel, deceased. 3. William Hayes, employed as a clerk in the Frazer office of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, his duties being to assist the agent in charge. 4. Julia, resides at home with her parents, is engaged as a teacher at the Franklin school in West Nantmeal township and she has also filled a similar position in several schools in this and other townships. The church affiliations of the family are with the Methodist Episcopal denomination.

THOMAS EDWARD MONTGOMERY, a man of varied experience, and an esteemed farmer and citizen of Uwchlan township Chester county, is descended from Scotch-Irish ancestry, his father, John Montgomery, having been a native of Londonderry, Ireland, whence he emigrated to the United States in 1844 in company with his uncle, Isaac Montgomery.

On his arrival in this country John Montgomery found employment in the cotton mills in Philadelphia, and after a time entered the employ of Dr. Dodd, who was one of the surgeons in the service of the government during the Civil war. Mr. Montgomery married Elvira, daughter of William Smith, who was a carpenter and contractor, and was accidentally killed while engaged at his work in Ardmore, Pennsylvania. Among the nine children born to Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery were: Robert, who was a farmer, and married Sarah, daughter of Robert Kirkpatrick, the noted furnace builder of Coatesville, Pennsylvania; and Thomas Edward, mentioned at length hereinafter.

Thomas Edward Montgomery, son of John and Elvira (Smith) Montgomery, was born January 27, 1863, in Ardmore, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. He received his education in the Pencoid schools and academy, and on completing his course of study applied himself for a time to farming, but soon went to the west, where he remained ten years. Six of these years he spent in working in the gold mines, and the residue of four in gaining an experience of ranch life, with the exception of six months, during which he conducted a barber's shop in Denver, Colorado. In 1896 he returned to Pennsylvania, settled in Guthreville, and resumed his occupation of farming. For one year he was in business as a butcher in Philadelphia. Four years ago he took up his abode in Uwchlan township, where his standing may be readily inferred from the fact that in that short space of time he has filled various township offices. In his political sentiments and affiliations he is a Republican. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Montgomery married Emma, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ladley, of White Plains, New York. Mr. Ladley combines with the labors of a farmer the business of a contractor, in which he is extensively engaged. Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery have no children.

AMBROSE QUAY, a well known business man of West Vincent township, Chester county, is a son of William Quay, a native of West Pikeland township, who married Adrie Ann Irvin, by whom he was the father of the following children: 1. John, who served in the army during the Civil war, and later enlisted in the regular army, serving his full term of five years. Since 1870 he has been a farmer in the state of Washington. 2. Ambrose, mentioned at length hereinafter; 3. Sarah, who married John Garber, a carpenter, in Germantown, Pennsylvania. 4. Margaret, who became the wife of Edward McDonough, who is employed by the Phoenix Iron Company, at Phoenixville. 5. William, who was until recently a blacksmith in the service of the Phoenix Iron Company, but is now a farmer in East Pikeland. 6. Thomas J., who is a pattern-maker for the Phoenix Iron Company. 7. Mary, who married Samuel S. Marshall, of Phoenixville, and is now a widow. 8. Catharine, who became the wife of Allen Pickles, a heater in the Phoenix Iron Works. 9. George, who is a pattern-maker in the same shop. In 1874, when about fifty-four years of age, Mr. Quay was accidentally killed on the Pickering Valley Railroad, leaving a widow and the children mentioned above.

Ambrose Quay, son of William and Adrie Ann (Irvin) Quay, was born April 19, 1844, in West Vincent, and received his education in the Birchrunville school house. In 1860 he was apprenticed to learn the harness-making business, but not long after, in consequence of the outbreak of the Civil war, deserted the shop in order to respond to the call to arms. September 16, 1861, he enlisted in Company C, Ninety-seventh Regiment, and participated in the sieges of Fort Sumter, Fort Pulaski and several noted engagements. He was mustered out November 7, 1864, his discharge dating from the 16th of the preceding September, the anniversary of his enlistment. During his term of service he was twice wounded, in consequence of which he now draws a government pension.

After his return home Mr. Quay, who had hitherto served but eighteen months of his apprenticeship, applied himself for two years to the acquisition of his trade, after which he worked for two years more as a journeyman for Adam Staley, of Lionville. He then went to Pughtown, where he worked for eighteen months for Joseph Sheeler. In 1869 he engaged in business for himself at Birchrunville, where he prospered for nine years, and at the end of that time established himself in the building where he has since conducted a flourishing business. He has received from his neighbors repeated proofs of the high esteem in which they hold him, having been chosen by them to fill various township offices, among them that of assessor, which he has filled for nineteen years. His politics are Democratic.

Mr. Quay married Henrietta M. Poley, and they were the parents of three children, one of whom, Anna B., became the wife of W. Ellis Pennepacker, a farmer of West Vincent township, and is the mother of the following children: Retta, Margaret, Grace, Mabel, Ambrose, Allen, Clara and Ethel. All these children are at home with their parents, with the exception of Retta, who resides with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Quay. The family to which the latter belongs is one well known in Chester county. She is a daughter of John and Caroline Poley, the former a farmer of West Vincent. He and his wife were the parents of the following children: 1. Henrietta M., mentioned above as the wife of Ambrose Quay. 2. Samuel S., who is a farmer in Montgomery county. 3. Sarah, who married Harrison Neimen, who was a miller by trade, and died in 1886. His widow subsequently became the wife of Benjamin F. Major, a fireman on the Pickering Valley Railroad.

JOHN C. RHODES. Among the successful young business men of Delaware county, Pennsylvania, the name of John C. Rhodes stands out prominent in trade circles. He is a descendant of John Rhodes, who emigrated from Yorkshire, England, in 1827, and settled in Aston township, where his death by drowning, together with that of his two daughters, occurred during the great freshet of August, 1843. William Rhodes, son of John Rhodes, came to this country from England in 1828, and also located in Aston township, where he was employed for the remainder of his life in a factory devoted to the manufacture of cotton fabrics. He was a firm believer in the measures adopted by the Democratic party, was a member of the Episcopal church, and for a number of years was connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married, prior to his emigration to America, Miss Hannah Kay, and their children were: 1. John B., for many years prominently identified with the commercial and political interests of Aston Mills, Pennsylvania; 2. William, mentioned hereinafter; 3. Samuel; 4. Thomas; 5. Ann; 6. Susanna, all of whom were born in the United States.

William Rhodes, father of John C. Rhodes, was born at Rockdale, Delaware county, and obtained a good practical education in the public schools of the vicinity. After completing his studies he learned the trade of bricklayer, and for a number of years followed this line of industry. He then began contracting for brick work and conducted that enterprise for several years, and the following eight years he was engaged in the contracting and building business in Chester. He then removed to Knowlton, Delaware county, and embarked in the manufacture of cotton and woolen jeans, which he successfully conducted from 1866 to 1880, when he became associated with his brother, John B. Rhodes, in his cotton mills, at Llewellyn, now Aston Mills, Delaware county, where he remained in the capacity of superintendent up to the time of his death. The early part of his life was spent in Rockdale, but about the year 1852 he removed to Wilmington, Delaware, where he resided for six years, after which he settled in Chester and later in Knowlton, Delaware county. He took an active part in local affairs, casting his vote with the Democratic party, and in his religious belief he adhered to the tenets of the Episcopalian church. He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Improved Order of Red Men. Mr. Rhodes served as recruiting agent for Delaware county during the Civil war, and faithfully performed all the duties required of him. He was united in marriage to Lydia Cummings, daughter of John Cummings, and four children were born to them: Hannah, Samuel B., John C., and Harry W. Rhodes.

John C. Rhodes was born in Chester, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, October 20, 1861, and acquired a liberal education in the famous institution presided over by Professor Gilbert, graduating in 1878, at the age of seventeen years. His first business experience was in a general store at Llewellyn where he was employed as clerk at a salary of one dollar a week, but at the end of six months his pay was increased to $10 a month. After working for more than three years for this small amount of money, he was promoted manager of the business and retained this position during a period of eight years. Mr. Rhodes then went to Colorado and entered the employ of the Milliron Cattle Company at Denver, but after spending two years in the west he returned to Chester Heights, formed a partnership with William Carson, under the firm name of Rhodes & Carson, and established a coal and lumber business. This connection continued until November, 1892, when it was dissolved by mutual consent, and Mr. Rhodes then entered into active association with Thomas C. Wilcox, continuing the same line of industry under the style of Rhodes & Wilcox. The success and reputation which this house has attained in this community is largely due to their integrity and honorable, straightforward method of conducting trade, and in consequence they have been awarded several large contracts for lumber. In addition to this enterprise Mr. Rhodes is engaged in general merchandising in Chester Heights. In his political tenets Mr. Rhodes is a staunch Democrat, and has served for a number of years as school director. He is a prominent member of Concord Lodge No. 625, Free and Accepted Masons, and Benevolent Lodge, No. 40, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On January 10, 1895, Mr. Rhodes married Florence Hinkson, daughter of John and Sarah (Booth) Hinkson. Their children are: George D., born June 19, 1896, and Sarah Rhodes, born September 11, 1899. Mr. Rhodes is a member of the Episcopal church, and his wife holds membership in the Methodist church.

PAUL DE MOLL, attorney at law, of Philadelphia, was born in that city, May 2, 1870. His grandparents, Adam Joseph and Monica de Moll, were natives of France and came to the United States about 1850. During and after the Civil war, Adam de Moll was engaged in the treasury department under his cousin, General Francis E. Spinner, United States treasurer. He died in Washington city in 1870, and was long survived by his widow, who died, also in that city, in 1899.

Charles Gustave de Moll, son of Adam Joseph and Monica de Moll, was born in New York city, March 26, 1843, and died in Philadelphia in 1883. He was a man of high intelligence, persistency and ambition, and made for himself an excellent reputation in the news world. He was superintendent of the Franklin Telegraph Company of New York city, and was the first agent in Philadelphia for the first Press Association, out of which developed the Associated Press with its wonderful completeness of organization and comprehensiveness of scope. Mr. de Moll was also the first city editor of the "Philadelphia Record," upon its founding by William Swain, son of William Swain, who sold the "Ledger" to Mr. George W. Childs. He married Josephine Margareta Bower, a daughter of John O. Bower, who died in Philadelphia between 1850 and 1860. The children born of this marriage were: 1. Carl de Moll, who married Mary Price, a daughter of James and Sarah (Lightfoot) Price. 2. Paul de Moll.

Paul de Moll was educated in the public schools of Philadelphia and in Temple College. On completing his literary studies he prepared for his profession, and was admitted to the Philadelphia bar in 1893 and at once entered upon the practice which now engages his attention, maintaining offices at No. 1003 Arcade Building.

Mr. de Moll was married, April 27, 1898, to Miss Bessie Brinton Rupert, and of this marriage have been born two children—Pauline, born January 27, 1902, and Rupert Brinton de Moll, born July 25, 1903.

Mrs. de Moll is a descendant of John Harris and Robert Maclay, the first named the founder of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and the latter one of the first United States senators from Pennsylvania, whose colleague was Robert Maris. Her parents were Major George M. and Anne B. (Brinton) Rupert, both of old Chester county families. She is a descendant of William Rupert, who was born and reared in Philadelphia county, and whose son, William, also born in Philadelphia, in 1808, was a resident of Upper Oxford township, Chester county, after his twelfth year. There was born his son, Major George M. Rupert, October 12, 1835, who became a distinguished member of the bar. Major Rupert married Miss Anne B. Brinton, daughter of John B. Brinton, and their children were Bessie B., who became the wife of Paul de Moll; Anne B. and George H. Brinton.

ISAAC NEWTON HAINES, since 1886 one of the prominent and successful business men of West Chester, Pennsylvania, and a member, since its organization, of the West Chester board of health, was born on the old homestead in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, May 27, 1833, a grandson of Isaac and Hannah (Gest) Haines, the former named being born in Pequea Valley, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where he was a farmer by occupation and a member of the Society of Friends.

Joseph Haines, father of Isaac N. Haines, was born in 1800, on the same farm on which his father was born, in Pequea Valley, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and his education was acquired at the district school and the boarding school conducted under the personal supervision of Jonathan Gause. He then followed farming on the old homestead, was a member of the Society of Friends, formerly a Whig and later a Republican in politics, and for many years was the incumbent of the office of school director, taking an active interest in the cause of education. His business life and services in behalf of his native town were such that he possessed the good will and commanded the esteem of all with whom he was brought in contact. During slavery days Mr. Haines and his wife took a prominent part in the work of the "underground railroad," and in May, 1851, about four months prior to the "Christiana riot," they had an unexpected and unwelcome visit from eight strapping big men, who had surrounded the house during the night, and who read a warrant demanding admission to secure their property, declaring the warrant was issued by the United States marshal, and that if the door was not opened they would break it open and secure their man at the risk of their own lives. Mr. Haines refused their request, and, by defying the Fugitive Slave law, subjected himself to a fine of one thousand dollars and six months imprisonment. One of his daughter blew the old "conch shell," another the long tin horn and a third rang the dinner bell, and in this manner summoned the neighbors to their assistance. The slave hunters became alarmed, withdrew from the house to hold a long consultation, and finally marched off down the road. Fearing they might soon return with reinforcements, Aleck, the slave, being well provisioned and otherwise well equipped for a journey, struck out toward the North Star, after having resided with Mr. Haines for three years. In those days Abolitionists sympathized with each other in the labors and trials connected with the cause, and Mr. Haines was visited by such eminent philanthropists as William Lloyd Garrison, Lucretia and James Mott, Stephen S. and Abbey Kelley Foster, Charles Lenox Redmond, Charles C. Burleigh and J. Miller McKim.

Mr. Joseph Haines married Sarah Lamborn, of Sadsbury township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. Their children were: Hannah, Ruthanna Lamborn, Sarah Lloyd, Isaac Newton, Josiah Lamborn, Deborah G., Elizabeth D., Mary Ann, and Lucretia M. Haines. The father of these children died in 1881, and his wife passed away about 1900.

Isaac N. Haines, eldest son of Joseph and Sarah Haines, obtained a liberal education at the public schools of Lancaster county, the Smedley Darlington boarding school and the Benjamin Swayne school at London Grove, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He assisted with the management of the home farm until he attained the age of thirty years, at which time he purchased a farm at Pomeroy, Chester county, which he successfully operated for several years. In 1882 he located in Oxford, Pennsylvania, and for four years conducted a thriving trade in coal, lumber and commercial fertilizer. At the expiration of this period he removed to West Chester and up to the present time (1903) has been successfully engaged in the coal business. Mr. Haines is a supporter of the fundamental doctrines of the Republican party. He has served as a member of the West Chester board of health since its organization, and has always manifested a proper interest in political affairs. He was president of the Philosophical Society of West Chester, and is a loyal and consistent member of the Society of Friends.

On April 12, 1864, Mr. Haines married Ruth Esther Clemson Dickinson, who was born in Sadsbury township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, July 4, 1844, a daughter of Joseph C. and Sarah (Sellers) Dickinson. Their children are: Joseph D., born March 3, 1865, a resident of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, who married Olivia Wollerton, April 14, 1895, and are the parents of one child, Frederick W., born August 24, 1900; Mary Lamborn, born March 31, 1866, resides with her parents; Edgar Sellers, born May 5, 1869, married March 30, 1893, Mabel Angell, and their children are: Ruth A., born June 14, 1894, died February 8, 1899; Darthea, born July 15, 1898, and Edgar Ralph, born November 8, 1899; the family reside in Chicago, Illinois; Sarah Elizabeth, born February 27, 1871, resides with her parents; Harry Isaac, born October 5, 1873, acquired his education at the public schools, Swarthmore College and graduated from the Philadelphia Dental College. He resides at Coatesville, Pennsylvania, where he is engaged in the practice of his profession.

MARIANA BOYD. Joseph Cowan Boyd was born at what is known as the Black Horse Hotel, on the Philadelphia and Lancaster turnpike, Chester county, Pennsylvania, June 6, 1799. His father, Wallace Boyd, born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, was a farmer and afterward a hotel keeper. His grandfather, Thomas Boyd, was one of the early settlers of Chester county, and a staff officer in the Revolutionary war. His great-grandfather, the Rev. Adam Boyd, emigrated from Ireland, and was the first settled pastor of the Octoraro Presbyterian church in the vicinity of Parkesburg. Adam Boyd was looked upon as being foremost in church matters.

Joseph Cowan Boyd was one of the men who inherited some of the old Penn patent land, and he was a successful farmer in the last century. He was an active man in educational matters, filling the office of school director, and his political sympathies were with the Republican party. He married Mary D. R. McCorkle, daughter of William and Catherine (Snowden) McCorkle, who before her marriage successfully taught a private school called Mantua. This school was instituted by the Rev. James Latta, the fourth pastor of Upper Octoraro church. William McCorkle was the editor of the "Freemen's Journal," published in Philadelphia during the time of Napoleon. His first editorial work was in Greensburg, Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, and he continued in this business during his life.

To Joseph Cowan Boyd and Mary D. R. (McCorkle) Boyd were born the following children: 1. Catherine S., unmarried; 2. William Wallace, deceased; 3. Mariana; 4. Joseph C., a traveling salesman; 5. James S., a farmer, married Susan Dean, to whom were born three children, of whom two are deceased. The survivor, Robert S., married Nellie Phillips, to whom were born two children—James Harold, deceased, and Robert Wayne.

Mariana Boyd resides with her sister, Catherine, and her brother, Joseph, in Parkesburg, Pennsylvania. They are connected with the Octoraro Presbyterian church.

WILLIAM A. VALENTINE. For many years an active factor in the industrial interests of Chester county, Mr. Valentine, through his diligence, perseverance and business ability, has acquired a handsome competence, and at the same time has contributed to the general prosperity. Reliability in all trade transactions, loyalty to all duties of friendship, fidelity in the discharge of every trust reposed in him—these are his chief characteristics, and through the passing years have gained for him the unqualified confidence and respect of his fellow citizens. His paternal grandfather, Jehu Valentine, was a native of Chester county. He married Ann Taylor, and they became the parents of the following children: Ann T., who died unmarried; Benjamin, who married Margaret Ann Andrews; Pennell, who died unmarried; Jonathan; Sarah, who married Jacob Denney. Benjamin Valentine, the father of William A. Valentine, married Margaret Ann Andrew, and their children were: 1. Elizanna B., who married B. Franklin Mergargee, of Coatesville; 2. William A., the subject of this sketch; 3. Robert, who died unmarried; 4. Anna M., the wife of William Jackson; 5. Jonathan, who was wounded in the battle of Antietam, and died in the hospital at that place; 6. Mary Jane, who married Caleb L. Wagner; 7. Septeni, who married Clarence Vader.

William A. Valentine has been a resident of Caln township, Chester county, for the long period of sixty-five years, and during this time he has so lived as to win and retain the respect and confidence of all who have had the pleasure of his acquaintance. He was educated in the Caln public schools, and since putting aside his textbooks he has for many years devoted his time and attention to carriage-making and blacksmithing. The Republican party receives his hearty support and co-operation and on its ticket he has been elected to many positions of trust and responsibility, having served as a school director, ever discharging his public obligations with the same care which he gives to his private duties.

Mr. Valentine married Miss Emma Cave, and to them have been born three children: Jonathan, Mary Ann and Alfred Valentine. The Valentine home is a happy and attractive one, where warm hospitality is always to be found by their numerous friends.

THE LEVIS FAMILY. The earliest accounts in our possession of this family date from about the year 1575. They were French Protestants who sought England as a place of refuge from the religious persecution in France. Here they remained until about 1682, when the eldest brother returned to France and resumed possession of the title and estate.

Christopher Levis, whose father was Richard and whose father was also Richard, lived at Harby on Market Harborough, in Leicestershire, and married Mary Nede in 1648. Christopher and Mary had five children: Samuel, born 7 mo., 30, 1649; Mary, Richard, Sarah and Hannah. Christopher was buried 8 mo., 11, 1677. His widow, Mary, married Thomas Wright in 1680. There were none of the Levis family left in England after Samuel Levis and sisters came to America in 1684.

In the Buxton County Nottingham Register have been found sixty-seven Levis entries between 1553 and 1653 on a page much faded by time but still legible. There was a Christopher Levis resided about twenty miles north of Nottingham and evidently a substantial yeoman as early as 1543. This Christopher was either a direct or collateral ancestor of a descendant from the family of Levis settled at Buxton, a substantial yeoman during the reign of Elizabeth; from the latter family was sprung Christopher Levis of Harby. The will of Christopher Levis has been found and bears the date of October 19, 1677, proved December 31, 1677. This will is sealed with a crest, a dolphin transfixing with a spear. Arms a chevron ermine between three dolphins, coronet a French viscount. The arms discovered by the late Dr. Richard Levis in Paris were those used by the original family of De Levis in France, and quartering the arms of De Montmorency.

John Lewis

Samuel Levis was the son of Christopher and Mary (Nede) Levis. He was born in Harby or Hanby, England, 7 mo., 30, 1649. He came to this country among the early colonists in 1682, bringing servants and material for building to provide a home for his family, for whom he returned to England, bringing back with him his wife and son Samuel in 1684. He was a member of the Provincial Assembly of Pennsylvania for the county of Chester in 1686-89-94-98-1700-01-06-07-08-09, and a justice of the peace in 1686-90-98. He was also a member of the Governor's Council in 1692.

He married in 1680 (3 mo., 4.) Elizabeth Clator, daughter of William Clator, of Elton, Nottinghamshire, England, who suffered in 1658 fines and imprisonment at divers times for being a Friend. Samuel Levis died in 1734. The house which he built on coming to this country is in Springfield, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. It is still in excellent condition, and is and has always been in possession of one branch of his descendants. The children born to Samuel and Elizabeth (Clator) Levis were: 1. Samuel, of whom more is said hereinafter; 2. Mary, who married Joseph Penneck; 3. William, who married Elizabeth Read; 4. Elizabeth, who married William Shipley, who was one of the pioneers and early settlers of Wilmington, Delaware; 5. Christopher; 6. Sarah, who married John Maris.

Samuel Levis (2nd) was the oldest child of Samuel and Elizabeth (Clator) Levis, and the only one born in England, (1680) 12 mo., 8. He was married to Hannah Stretch in 1709 or 1710. Hannah was the daughter of Joseph Stretch, who was the son of Peter Stretch, goldsmith and clockmaker of Philadelphia. Samuel and Hannah lived in the old homestead on Darby Creek, Springfield. Samuel inherited his father's cool and courageous disposition. He foretold the day of his death, being in perfect health at the time. He was a member of the Provincial Assembly in 1720-21-22-23-30-31. His death occurred in 1758. He had three sons—Joseph, John and Samuel.

John Levis was the son of Samuel Levis (second) and Hannah Stretch, married 10 mo., 15, 1709. In 8 mo., 25, 1738, John married Rebecca, daughter of John Davis of Rhuddallt, county of Derby, Wales, who afterward resided in Pennsylvania and was a member of the Provincial Assembly, representing Chester county in 1832-33-47-48.

Thomas Levis was the son of John and Rebecca (Davis) Levis. Thomas was born in the Springfield homestead which his great-grandfather Samuel Levis had built, and in this home he spent most of his life. When the Revolutionary war broke out he said that he would hang up his Quaker garb, put on the soldier clothes and fight for his country.

In an old book belonging to the family is found an account of the proceedings of the Provincial Conference of Committees of the Province of Pennsylvania, held at Carpenter's Hall, Philadelphia, June 18-June 25, 1776:

"This day a number of gentlemen met at Carpenter's Hall in Philadelphia being deputed by the committees of several of the counties of this province to join in provincial conference in consequence of a circular letter from the committee of this city and liberties of Philadelphia enclosing the resolution of the Continental Congress of the 15th of May last."

With twelve others Thomas Levis was chosen to represent Chester county, which then included Delaware county, and his name is signed "Captain Thomas Levis." Out of this number he was selected to represent Chester county, and with four other men from other counties in the state drew up a Declaration of Rights setting forth the grievances that had been put upon Americans by the British Sovereign.

From other accounts we have reason to believe that Thomas Levis did good service for his country—he was a man for the time, determined and courageous and strictly honorable in all his dealings. He married Sarah Pancoast, a daughter of Seth and Esther Pancoast, and granddaughter of Bartholomew Coppeck, who was a member of the Governor's Council in 1688 and 1690, and of the Provincial Assembly in 1686, 1687, 1692, 1695 and 1697. To Captain Thomas Levis were born thirteen children: Ezra (12); Enoch, John, one unnamed, Thomas, Seth, Edward (2), Charles (7), Cyrus, Samuel, Sarah, Rebecca and Levis (13).

The following is an extract taken from the old book before mentioned, in which Thomas Levis with four others drew up a declaration which in some respects is little inferior to the Declaration of Independence:

"Whereas George the third King of Great Britain etc. in (torn out) British constitution, and of the laws of justice and humanity, hath by an accumulation of oppressions unparalleled in history excluded the inhabitants of this, with the other American colonies from his protection; and whereas he hath paid no regard to any of our numerous and dutiful petitions for a redress of our complicated grievances, but hath lately purchased foreign troops to assist in enslaving us; and hath excited the savages of this country to carry on a war against us; as also the negroes to embue their hands in the blood of their masters in a manner unpracticed by civilized nations; and hath lately insulted our calamities by declaring that he will show no mercy until he has reduced us; And whereas the obligations of allegiance (being reciprocal between a king and his subjects) are now dissolved on the side of the colonists by the despotism of the said King, insomuch that it now appears that loyalty to him is treason against the good people of this country; And whereas not only the parliament but there is reason to believe too many of the people of Great Britain, have concurred in the aforesaid arbitrary and unjust proceedings against us; And whereas the public virtue of this colony (so essential to its liberty and happiness) must be endangered by a future political union with or dependence upon a crown and nation so lost to justice, patriotism and magnanimity, We the Deputies of the people of Pennsylvania assembled in Full Provincial Conference for forming a plan for executing the resolve of Congress of the 15th of May last, for suppressing all authority in this province derived from the crown of Great Britain and for establishing a government upon the authority of the people only, now in this public manner in behalf of ourselves, and with the approbation, consent and authority of our constituents, Unanimously declare our willingness to concur in a vote of the congress declaring the united colonies free and independent states, provided the forming of the government and the regulation of the internal policy of this colony be always reserved to the people of the said colony, and we do further call upon the nations of Europe; and appeal to the great arbitrator and governor of the empires of the world, to witness for us, that this declaration did not originate in ambition or in an impatience of lawful authority; but that we were driven to it in obedience to the first principles of nature by the oppressions and cruelties of the aforesaid king and parliament of Great Britain, as the only possible measure that was left us to preserve and establish our liberties and to transmit them inviolate to posterity.

"Ordered:—That this declaration be signed at the table and that the president deliver it in congress."

Charles, seventh child of Captain Thomas and Sarah (Pancoast) Levis, married Margaret De Barger, and to them were born eleven children, as follows: Mary, Elizabeth, Sarah, Rebecca, Caroline, Margaret, Esther, Martha, Charles, Sarah and John.

Mary Levis married Moses Hey, and to them were born eight children: Caroline, who married Edward Lutton, and to whom was born a child, Anna, deceased; Margaret, unmarried; Rebecca, who married F. Augustus Server, and to whom were born two children, Walter and Charles H., both of whom, with the father, are deceased;

Mary, who married John Jackson, and to whom was born one child, Marion; Martha, who married John Shaffner, and to whom were born five children, Mary, Edward, Robert, John and George; Elizabeth, unmarried; Charles, unmarried.

Elizabeth Levis married Washington Baker, and the union was without issue.

Esther Levis married William Spearman, and to them were born three children: William, Charles, and Anna, who married Henry Lane, and to whom were born eight children: Fred, John, Harry, Edward, William, Arthur, Albert and Anna.

Sarah Levis married Ephraim Jackson, and to them were born three children: Esther, who married Harry Stewart, and to whom were born four children, Caroline, Albert, Harry and Bertha; Caroline married William F. Shaffner, and to them were born three children, Laurance, Margaret and Elizabeth; and Henry, deceased.

John Levis, youngest of the eleven children of Charles and Margaret (DeBarger) Levis, was born on the old Levis homestead, in Springfield township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, April 12, 1831. He was educated in the neighborhood schools and at the West Chester Academy. Upon attaining his majority he engaged in farming on the family homestead, upon which he remained until 1862, when he removed to Upper Darby township, near Llanerch, where he continued farming up to the time of his death, January 18, 1882. He was a man of most exemplary character, a consistent member of the Society of Friends, affiliating with the Darby meeting. He took an active interest in educational matters, and for a number of years he served acceptably and usefully as a member of the school-board.

Mr. Levis was married to Miss Elizabeth Lukens, a daughter of Nathan and Sarah N. (Lincoln) Lukens, and to them were born the following children:

1. Nathan L., born December 15, 1859, who married Elizabeth Pancoast, and to whom were born two children, Elizabeth and Ralph.

2. Charles, born May 11, 1861, who married Alida Conrow, and to whom were born four children, Charles, Anna, Alfred and Morris.

3. Florence, born September 14, 1862, who married Benjamin J. Miller; no issue.

4. Sarah Lukens, born February 2, 1865, who married Samuel Pancoast, who died, leaving a son Laurence; for her second husband she married Joseph Palmer.

5. Margaret, born September 20, 1867.

6. Elizabeth L., born June 10, 1869.

7. Mary H., born October 21, 1870, who married William Ridpath, and to whom were born two children, William and H. Levis.

8. Caroline Lutton, born April 25, 1872.

9. John Edgar, born May 22, 1874.

10. Helena L., born September 6, 1880.

Mrs. Elizabeth Lukens Levis, mother of the children before named, was one of two children born to Nathan Lukens and Sarah N. (Lincoln) Levis. Her brother, Levi Lukens, married Mary E. Shaffner, and to them were born seven children: Laura, Nathan L., Mary, John S., Charles, George S., and Catherine E. Lukens.

Both the Levis and Lukens families are widely and favorably known throughout Delaware and Chester counties, and its members are widely dispersed throughout the country. In instances where they have married and made their homes in the west, they have sent their children to Swarthmore College and other institutions in their own native counties, there to receive their education, and some of these children are now capable educators in the Mississippi valley region and farther west. Wherever the family names are known they are borne by those who are known to be industrious and upright, and an ornament to the community with which is their home.

ISAAC A. PENNYPACKER. The Pennypacker family, one of the oldest and most honored in Chester county, Pennsylvania, trace their origin to natives of North Brabant, Holland, some members still residing at Waalwyk, near Hertogenbosch. About the year 1650 some members of the family went up the Rhine to Flomborn, a village near Worms, and became Germanized, changing their Dutch name Pannebakker (tile-maker) to Pfaannebecker. The "Weissthum," a manuscript record of the village from 1542 to 1656, signed by Johannes Pfaannebecker, one of the town officers, is now in the possession of Samuel W. Pennypacker, a resident of the city of Philadelphia. About 1699, Heinrich Pannebecker, born in 1674, came to Germantown, a suburb of Philadelphia, and later removed to Skipack, where his death occurred in 1754. He was the first German surveyor in Pennsylvania, and a large land owner. Several of his grandsons crossed the Schuylkill into Chester county, and many of their descendants still make their home there.

Matthias Pennypacker, great-grandfather of Isaac A. Pennypacker, was born October 14, 1742, was a wealthy farmer and miller, the products of his farm and mill being carried to the city of Philadelphia partly by wagon and partly by boat, he conducting a line of boats on the Schuylkill river for that purpose. His house was the headquarters for a number of officers of the Continental army while they were camped at Valley Forge, and much property at his mill was destroyed by the British in 1777. In 1784 he was appointed by the Assembly one of the commissioners to provide for the navigation of the Schuylkill river, and in 1793, when yellow fever was ranging in the city of Philadelphia, he contributed $240 for the relief of the poor. His first wife, Mary (Custer) Pennypacker, bore him the following named children: John, James, Joseph, Matthias, Elizabeth and Margaret. The mother of these children died in 1798, and subsequently Mr. Pennypacker married Mary, widow of Christian Marys, by whom he had a daughter, Sarah Pennypacker. His death occurred in Schuylkill township, Chester county, February 8, 1808, at the age of sixty-six years.

Matthias Pennypacker, grandfather of Isaac A. Pennypacker, was born on the old homestead, August 15, 1786, and in this vicinity he was reared and obtained an education in the subscription schools. He was extensively engaged in various enterprises—farming, milling, operating a saw mill and dealing in lumber, in all of which he was eminently successful. He was an ardent admirer of Henry Clay and General William Henry Harrison, cast his vote with the Whig party, and in 1826 and again the following year was elected a member of the state assembly, and in 1837 was a member of the constitutional convention. In 1831 he was chosen chairman of the organization of the leading men of Chester county which made the first move toward the construction of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, and was one of the incorporators of that road. In 1807 he married Sarah Anderson, a daughter of Hon. Isaac Anderson, and their children were: James A., Mary A., Dr. Isaac A., Washington, and Dr. Matthias J. Pennypacker. The father of these children died at his home on Pickering creek, April 4, 1852, aged sixty-six years.

Dr. Matthias J. Pennypacker, father of Isaac A. Pennypacker, was born at Pennypacker's mill, Schuylkill township, Chester county, September 10, 1819. He received an excellent literary education in the school of Joshua Hoopes, an eminent teacher, at West Chester. Having a desire to lead a professional life, he began the study of medicine and later matriculated in the Pennsylvania University at Philadelphia, graduating from the medical department with honors in the class of 1841. His internship was spent in the Philadelphia hospitals, subsequently he practiced his profession for a short period of time at Lyanville, Chester county, and then accepted a position as assistant superintendent and manager of the Phenixville Iron Works. After filling this responsible position for two years, he accepted the superintendency of the Durham Iron Works, at Durham, Bucks county, but was forced to resign one year later on account of failing health. He then returned to Chester county, purchased the homestead farm, consisting of one hundred and twenty-seven acres of improved land, also a grist mill, and he has since continued operations thereon. He served one term (1855) as a member of the Pennsylvania house of representatives, and all movements calculated to advance the public welfare has his approval and support. He is a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal church at Phoenixville.

On April 27, 1848, Dr. Pennypacker married Annie R. Walker, a daughter of William and Sarah Walker, of Tredyffrin township, and among their children were the following named: Mary A., born April 8, 1855, resides at home; Sarah, who died January 25, 1899; Annie W., born December 24, 1863, and Isaac A. Pennypacker. The mother of these children died in 1868, and on May 16, 1878, Dr. Pennypacker married Kate A. Cook, a daughter of Tillinghast J. and Elizabeth C. (Samuels) Cook, of Parkersburg, West Virginia. One son was born of this union, James C. Pennypacker, whose birth occurred November 19, 1879; he is now operating the old mill, which was the site of General Washington's camp and from whence he marched to Germantown, and in addition to this industry is conducting a coal trade at Mont Clare, Pennsylvania. Dr. Pennypacker died August 31, 1899.

Isaac A. Pennypacker, son of Dr. Matthias J. and Annie R. Pennypacker, was born September 16, 1859, at Williams Corners, Schuylkill township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he obtained a common school education. He is now engaged in agricultural pursuits on the old home farm, and in close proximity to the old residence is the stone house which was erected as a slave headquarters by Moore Hall, who at one time was the owner of one thousand acres of land in that neighborhood; this building at the present time (1903) is still used as a tenement.

WILLIAM H. PENNYPACKER, an enterprising and prosperous agriculturist of Schuylkill township, who is serving in the capacity of clerk in the state department at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, being appointed to that office by Governor Pennypacker, in 1903, was born March 9, 1849, on the old homestead farm in Schuylkill township, Chester county, the son of Dr. Matthias J. Pennypacker, who was born September 10, 1819, and was elected to the assembly in 1855.

The Pennypacker family had its origin in North Brabant, Holland, and about the year 1650 some members of it went up the Rhine to Plomborn, a village near Worms, and became Germanized, changing their Dutch name Pannebakker (tile-maker) to Pfaunbecker. About the year 1699, Heinrich Pannebecker, born in 1674, came to Germantown, a suburb of Philadelphia, and from there moved to Skippack, where his death occurred in 1754. He was the first German surveyor in Pennsylvania, and subsequently became a large land owner. Several of his grandsons crossed the Schuylkill into Chester county—Jacob to Perkiomen Junction, in 1772; Matthias to the Pickering, in 1774; Harman, John, and Benjamin to the Chester Springs, in 1792, 1794, and 1796, and Henry to Vincent in 1794.

The preliminary education acquired by William H. Pennypacker, during his boyhood, was obtained in the public schools of his native township, and later he was a student at the Freeland Seminary of Montgomery county and Bond's Select School in Phoenixville. From the completion of his studies until he attained the age of eighteen years, he assisted with the work on the home farm. He then secured employment in the street railway office at Philadelphia, and by faithfully and promptly performing the various duties allotted to him was retained in this position for seventeen years. After the expiration of this period of time he purchased the farm where he now resides, which was formerly the old Zimmerman farm, which was a portion of the old Moore Hall farm, and on this tract of land conducts an extensive general farm and dairy business. In political matters Mr. Pennypacker is a staunch Republican, has been the incumbent of several township offices, and on all questions of state and national policy gives his party a loyal support.

On December 28, 1871, occurred the marriage of William H. Pennypacker and Mary Anna Wetherill, who was born December 28, 1849, the daughter of Edward Burson and Mary (Kinzie) Wetherill, and, after acquiring a common school education, was a student for two years at Miss P. C. Evans' Private School at West Chester. They have one daughter, Evelyn Pennypacker, who resides at home with her parents.

Edward Burson Wetherill, father of Mrs. Pennypacker, was born November 20, 1809, at Stroudsburg, Monroe county, Pennsylvania, acquired the limited educational advantages afforded by the schools of that period and the knowledge thus gained he added to by careful observation and by a thorough course of reading, which qualified him for the position of teacher, in which capacity he served at Radnor and Lower Merion. In 1834 he removed to Delaware county and was actively connected with its agricultural pursuits. He took an active part in the affairs of the Republican party, and was a consistent member of the Society of Friends, that being the religious faith of the Wetherill family for many generations. In November, 1844, Mr. Wetherill married Mary Kinzie, who was born in 1805, a daughter of Daniel and Mary (Hausell) Kinzie. Daniel Kinzie was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and during a naval engagement was severely wounded. He was vestryman in St. David's church, Radnor, in 1819, and was a man of sterling traits of character. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Wetherill were: Mary Anna, wife of William H. Pennypacker, and Frank W. Wetherill, a resident of West Philadelphia. Mr. Wetherill died September 28, 1890, and his wife passed away March 20, 1881.

AMOS SHARPLESS. The ancestry of Amos Sharpless, a veteran of the Civil war, who is now leading a retired life at Kennett Square, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is traced back to John Sharples, who was baptized at Wybunbury, Cheshire, England, August 15, 1624, but subsequently emigrated to the United States, settling near Chester, Pennsylvania, where his death occurred June 11, 1685. On April 27, 1662, John Sharples married Jane Moor, who was born in 1638, and their children were: Phebe, John, Thomas, James, Caleb, Jane and Joseph Sharples. Jane (Moor) Sharples, supposed to be a sister of Daniel Moor, of Hankelow, died near Chester, Pennsylvania, November 1, 1722.

Joseph Sharples, son of John and Jane Sharples, was born at Hatherton, Cheshire, England, November 28, 1678; he was united in marriage May 31, 1704, at Haverford Meeting, to Lydia Lewis, born in Glamorganshire, Wales, May 8, 1683. Their children were: Susanna, Joseph, Benjamin, Samuel, Lydia, Nathan, Jane, Abraham, Jacob and William Sharples. Of these children the first four were born in Nether Providence, and the remainder in Middletown township. The father of these children died in Middletown township, Chester (now Delaware) county, in the spring of 1757, and his widow, who was the daughter of Ralph Lewis, died in the year 1763.

Joseph Sharples, eldest son of Joseph and Lydia Sharples, was born in Nether Providence, Pennsylvania, September 8, 1707. On June 19, 1740, at Concord Meeting, was solemnized the marriage of Joseph Sharples and Mary Pyle, born March 31, 1723, the daughter of Daniel and Mary (Chamberlin) Pyle, the former named a son of Robert and Ann Pyle, and the latter a daughter of Robert and Mary Chamberlin. Eleven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sharples, namely: Jacob, Joseph, Daniel, Hannah, Caleb, William, Mary, Amos, Nathan, Benjamin and Jonathan Sharples. Joseph Sharples, the father of these children, died in Middletown, Pennsylvania, March 4, 1769, survived by his widow, who passed away March 23, 1812, and her remains were interred at Middletown Meeting, three days later.

Caleb Sharples, fourth son of Joseph and Mary Sharples, was born in Middletown, Pennsylvania, May 12, 1750. He took a certificate from Chester to Kennett Monthly Meeting, dated November 25, 1772, and settled on a farm near Hockessin Meeting, of which he was appointed an overseer, July 11, 1797. He was also appointed November 15, 1785, a member of the committee to extend care in cases of suffering on account of Friends' testimony against war. Mr. Sharples married Ruhene, or Ruhaney (as the name is modernized) Jordan, born February 25, 1750, a daughter of Joseph and Margaret Jordan, residents of Christiana hundred, New Castle county, Delaware; the ceremony was performed at Hockessin Meeting, December 20, 1773. Nine children were born to them, namely: Mary, William, Joseph, Elizabeth, Caleb, Amos, Margaret, Edith, and Hannah Sharples. On April 13, 1783, Mrs. Sharples was appointed to serve on a committee to "Excite to true moderation & good order at Funerals," and she also received the appointment of overseer for Hockessin Meeting, to take the place of Hannah Way, April 11, 1789. The death of Caleb Sharples occurred in Christiana hundred, Delaware, September 4, 1821. His widow died June 29, 1824.

Amos Sharpless, fourth son of Caleb and Ruhene Sharples, and father of Amos Sharpless, was born February 2, 1785. He was a farmer by occupation and followed this line of industry in Mill Creek and Christiana hundreds, Delaware, his well directed efforts meeting with a large degree of prosperity in both localities. At Hockessin Meeting, March 23, 1817, occurred the marriage of Amos Sharpless and Martha Dixon, who was born in Mill Creek hundred, Delaware, January 1, 1798, a daughter of Jehu and Mary (Taylor) Dixon, the former named being a representative citizen of Mill Creek, Delaware. The children born of this marriage were: Mary S., born November 23, 1817, died January 28, 1847, was the wife of Wistar T. Dixon; Ann, born June 12, 1820, unmarried; Edith, born March 14, 1822, wife of Samuel Cranston; Jehu D., born June 4, 1824, unmarried; Caleb, born August 17, 1826, married Rebecca Hoopes; Samuel, born January 6, 1829, married Sarah H. Cranston; Amos, born October 14, 1832; Edward, born February 26, 1835, died November 26, 1855, unmarried; and William, born September 6, 1837, married Jane R. Pyle, and his death occurred October 10, 1865. Mr. Sharpless died August 5, 1875; his widow died July 17, 1879, and their remains were interred at Hockessin Meeting, in Christiana hundred, Delaware.

Amos Sharpless, fourth son of Amos and Martha Sharpless, was born in Mill Creek, New Castle county, Delaware, October 14, 1832. He obtained a very liberal education, being a student first at the common schools of the neighborhood, later at Unionville, and the renowned school in Chester county, Pennsylvania, which was conducted under the personal supervision of Mr. Jonathan Gause, an efficient and excellent teacher, and finally he attended a New York school where he remained one term. In 1857 he located in the state of Illinois, where he began his business career, which was devoted to the buying and selling of stock. After conducting this enterprise for a short time he returned to his home in Delaware, turned his attention to farming interests for two years, and at the expiration of this period of time engaged in the milling business, pursuing his operations along this line for the remainder of his active commercial career, with the exception of the years when he served his country during the exciting and troublous period of the Civil war.

In 1862, Mr. Sharpless enlisted in the Delaware Light Artillery, being promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, and in this capacity he performed a large amount of skirmish work, also participated at the New York riots and in the Red River campaign, where he displayed both bravery and patriotism. He was mustered out of the United States service in 1865. He then returned to his home and resumed his milling interests, which he successfully conducted up to the year 1895, when he removed to Kennett Square, Pennsylvania, and purchased a beautiful home where he is enjoying all the comforts and luxuries of life, which should be the sequel of years of ceaseless activity. Mr. Sharpless has always been a staunch Republican, being recognized as a leader in the political circles of Delaware, where he served in various offices and was a member of the state central committee for eight years. He is a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic, in which organization he takes a keen personal interest. In his religious views he adheres to the faith of his forefathers, the Society of Friends.

In 1866, 1 mo., 4. Mr. Sharpless was united in marriage to Caroline Baily, a daughter of Richard and Susan (Buffington) Baily. Mr. Baily was a resident of Marlboro township, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

EDMUND H. BROWN, a prominent citizen of West Chester, Pennsylvania, who is engaged in the capacity of locomotive engineer of the Baltimore Central Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, his term of service for this corporation extending over a period of almost forty years, is a worthy representative of a family, on the paternal side, whose history is closely interwoven with that of Chester county, Pennsylvania, since the early days of the Revolutionary struggle.

Atlee Brown, grandfather of Edmund H. Brown, was born in the neighborhood of West Chester, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in the early part of the eighteenth century. His educational advantages were those that were offered by the common schools of that day, and throughout the many years of his active and useful life he followed the occupation of a farmer. Mr. Brown and his wife, Hannah (Woodward) Brown, a native of Chester county, were the parents of a number of children, among whom was a son, Forester Brown.

Forester Brown, father of Edmund H. Brown, was born on the old homestead near West Chester, Chester county, July 4, 1815. He obtained a limited but practical education in the common schools of the neighborhood, and then his tastes and inclinations led him to apply himself to the mastery of the trade of carpenter, which line of industry he successfully followed for the remarkably long period of sixty consecutive years. He was an expert mechanic, prompt and faithful in the discharge of all work entrusted to his care, and thus merited the financial success which attended his labors. Mr. Brown married Elizabeth Lewis, a native of West Goshen, Chester county, and the following named children were born to them: Hannah, Sarah, deceased, Hoopes, Eliza, Edmund H., Elizabeth, Frank, Theodore, deceased, Nathan, Joseph, Rebecca and Mary. Mr. Brown is living at the present time (1903), having attained the advanced age of eighty-eight years.

Edmund H. Brown, a son of Forester and Elizabeth Brown, was born in East Whiteland township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, September 28, 1847. His early boyhood was spent in attendance at the common schools of the community, and after completing his education at the age of seventeen years he secured employment with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and has remained in their service up to the present time. During this long period of almost forty years he has served in various capacities, and by faithfully and efficiently performing all the duties allotted to him was promoted to the position of locomotive engineer of the Baltimore Central Division. Mr. Brown was connected with the operating department of the United States Military Railroads in Kentucky, Tennessee and Georgia under General William T. Sherman, while they were used for transporting supplies and munitions of war to the army engaged in the campaign against Atlanta; and to equip it for its historic "March to the Sea." Mr. Brown has been a citizen of West Chester since 1870, occupies a fine commodious house in the residential section of the city, and is regarded as a leader in the ranks of the Republican party. In 1895 he was elected a member of the common council of West Chester, and is now serving in the capacity of president of the same.

E. H. Brown

Mr. Brown was married three times. He married his first wife, Kate Neeley, in 1868 and she died in 1870; they were the parents of one child, Ettie Brown. For his second wife, Mr. Brown married, in 1873, Annie Neeley, sister of his first wife, and her death occurred in 1875. In 1876 he married for his third wife, Mattie George, daughter of the late John George, who was a prominent resident of West Chester, Pennsylvania.

WILLIAM C. WARREN, extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits near Phoenixville, also serving for eight years in the capacity of supervisor of Schuylkill township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, was born May 19, 1861, in the vicinity of his present home, the son of Charles and Mary J. Warren.

Charles Warren, father of William C. Warren, was a native of London, England, but at a very early age came to the United States, having obtained a common school education in his native city. Upon attaining young manhood he chose the occupation of farming, conducting his operations on a tract of land adjoining that of his son, William C. Warren, and this line of industry proved a profitable source of income during his entire business career. When President Lincoln called for men who were willing to fight for their country, Mr. Warren was one of the first to respond, enlisting in Company C, Ninety-seventh Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, under the command of Colonel Gus. He was promoted to the rank of second lieutenant and later to that of first lieutenant, was severely wounded twice, and was honorably discharged from the service of the United States after serving for four years and two days, coming home with the rank of captain. He was united in marriage to Mary J. Sowden, a native of Cornwall, England, who also came to this country when a child. Mr. Warren was a well known, useful and highly respected citizen, and his death, which occurred July 16, 1897, was sincerely mourned by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. He was survived by his widow, who is living at the present time (1903), aged sixty-four years, and her mother, Harriet Sowden, is also living, aged eighty-eight years.

William C. Warren attended the public schools of Schuylkill township, and after completing his studies purchased the old Edwin Roberts property, which is situated in the southeastern portion of Schuylkill township. He has been successful and prosperous in the management of his farm, which is nearly all improved and in good condition, and his residence and farm buildings are substantial and pleasantly situated. Politically Mr. Warren is a Republican, and gives an earnest and hearty support to the candidates advocated by that party. In 1890 he was elected supervisor of Schuylkill township, is the incumbent of that office at the present time (1903) and is also serving a second term as school director. He has been faithful and efficient in the discharge of his public duties as well as those of private life, and by his exemplary habits has won an enviable reputation in the community.

On October 10, 1888, Mr. Warren married Catherine Howell, a daughter of David and Anna M. (Gamble) Howell, of Philadelphia, the former named being engaged as a ship joiner in that city. Their children are: William Thomas, David Howell, Charles Raymond, Chester Wayne and Walter Hastings Warren. Mr. and Mrs. Warren attend the divine services at the Methodist church of Salem.

BENJAMIN H. STEWARD. Agricultural interests claim the time and attention of Benjamin H. Steward, a prominent resident of Schuylkill township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in which vicinity his birth occurred November 20, 1834, the son of Benjamin and Margaret (Hawk) Steward, and a descendant of a Scotch ancestry. His paternal great-grandfather came from Scotland, was a collier, burnt charcoal and supplied a large quantity of this article to the Continental army. John Steward, grandfather of Benjamin H. Steward, conducted farming operations in Schuylkill township, Chester county, and during the winter months followed carpentering. He married Margaret Stark, daughter of Jacob Stark, who was a farmer by occupation, and came to this country from Germany, and among the children born of this union were: Benjamin, John, Elijah, Gaynor, Catherine, Margaret and Anna Steward.

Benjamin Steward, father of Benjamin H. Steward, was a farmer by occupation and conducted extensive operations for many years upon a large tract of land in Schuylkill township. He was an active and respected citizen of the community, and contributed in a large degree to the advancement and progress of the various interests of that section. He was united in marriage to Margaret Hawk, a daughter of Jacob and Anna (Buttersway) Hawk, who removed from Lower Providence, Montgomery county, to Schuylkill township, Chester county, about the year 1790. The Hawk family are descendants of a German ancestry, many of whom participated in the Revolutionary war, and an uncle of Mrs. Steward was at Valley Forge during that memorable winter when General Washington and his troops were stationed there. They all followed the quiet but useful calling of agriculture, and the old Hawk homestead is now in the possession of members of the fourth generation. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Steward: Benjamin H., unmarried, who possesses many excellent traits of character which qualify him for his duties and contribute to his influence and success in his business career. Anna, whose death occurred in the fifty-third year of her age. Cadwalader, born November 3, 1838, resided on the old homestead all his life, and died January 30, 1903; on April 7, 1870, Cadwalader Steward married Lydia A. Reese, a daughter of Edward, a native of Wales, and Eliza (Krewson) Reese, a native of Germany; their children are: Benjamin R., born January 1, 1871, and Edward, born April 19, 1875, who now resides on the ancestral estate. Jacob B., deceased. Eliza, who resides on the old homestead.

ROBERT MOORE, a well-known farmer of Upper Uwchlan township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is descended on the paternal side from ancestors who settled in the county at an early date. His great-grandfather, Charles Moore, was a Baptist minister, and pastor of a church in Vincent. He married Margaret Carrell and they were the parents of a son, Robert, who was born November 29, 1797. In early life Robert Moore followed the occupation of an undertaker, but afterward became a farmer, and devoted the remainder of his days to agricultural pursuits. He married Rachel Smedley, who was born February 4, 1797, and they were the parents of the following children: Charles; Thomas M.; William, who died in childhood; Lewis, who died young; Gideon S.; Francis J.; Leonard K., mentioned at length hereinafter; and Joseph. All these sons were farmers in Chester county. In religion they adopted the belief of the Friends, their mother having been a member of a family prominent in the annals of the Society.

Leonard K. Moore, son of Robert and Rachel (Smedley) Moore, was born April 17, 1837, and was educated in his native county, being a pupil at the celebrated school of Jonathan Gause. His life was spent as a farmer, and such was the confidence inspired by the integrity of his character and the strength of his understanding, that although a man of a very retiring disposition and shrinking from the turmoil of public affairs, his neighbors insisted upon electing him to the office of supervisor. He married, March 10, 1863, Naomi, daughter of George and Sidney Hoffman, the former a farmer of West Whiteland township. He and his wife were the parents of the following children: James and Vernon, who are both farmers in Whiteland township; Mary, who married Amos MacFarland, a railroad engineer, and who with her husband is now deceased; Levi, who was a farmer and engineer and is now deceased; Eliza, who became the wife of John Fisher, a farmer, who is now living at the age of eighty-two, his wife being deceased; John, who was a farmer, and is now deceased, as are so many of the family; Malinda, who married John Hoffman, a farmer, who has now retired, and lives in West Chester; Benjamin, who was a farmer, now deceased; Lydia, who became the wife of George Hartsell, a farmer of Chester county; Naomi, mentioned above as the wife of Leonard K. Moore; Sallie, who married B. Clevis Hoops, who was for many years a merchant in West Chester, and is now deceased; George, who led the life of a farmer on the old homestead, and is now deceased; and Thomas Jefferson, who died in infancy. The family at one time resided in Canton, Ohio, where their daughter, Naomi, above mentioned, was born, and she remembered, when four years old, making the journey in wagons over rough roads to Pennsylvania. As recorded above, she became the wife of Leonard K. Moore, and their children were: George H., who died in infancy; Sallie, who died early in life; Eva J., who married Joseph Taylor, a farmer near West Chester, and is the mother of two children, Mary and Leonard; Robert, mentioned at length hereinafter, and Laura, single and at home. Mr. Moore, the father of the family, died March 31, 1900.

Robert Moore, son of Leonard K. and Naomi (Hoffman) Moore, was born September 30, 1870, on the homestead, and has made agriculture the business of his life, thereby following in the footsteps of his ancestors. He resides on the homestead, managing the estate in the interest of his widowed mother, and displaying in the discharge of his duties, abilities both as a farmer and a man of business, which command the respect of all with whom he is in any way associated. In politics he is a Democrat, and though faithful to all his obligations as a citizen has never been induced to accept public office.

Mr. Moore married Eudora Pinkerton, daughter of a retired farmer of Upper Uwchlan township; they have no children.

EPHRAIM STRATTON DUNLAP, now deceased, was a man whose long and useful life was consecrated to all that was true and good, and his name will be held in lasting honor in the community where he lived and labored for so many years and achieved a large degree of prosperity through his own industry, perseverance and close application to business pursuits.

He was born at Millville, New Jersey, November 28, 1820, and his educational advantages were obtained in the public schools of the neighborhood. On August 1, 1846, he removed to Phoenixville, Chester county, Pennsylvania, secured employment in the office of the Phoenixville Iron Company, and up to the year 1888, a period of forty-two years, performed the duties of the position in a most efficient and conscientious manner that won for him the approval and commendation of his employers. In 1865 he purchased a farm about two miles southeast of where his family now resides, and for many years his spare time was devoted to its cultivation and improvement. In everything that pertained to the public improvement and welfare of the community, he was deeply interested and willingly gave his support to all worthy enterprises. In his political views he was a Republican, served for a number of years as a member of the school board, of which he was the secretary.

On July 3, 1866, Mr. Dunlap was united in marriage to Ann Sloan, a daughter of John and Mary (Jones) Sloan, of Chester Valley, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Their children are: Mary Isabella; Jennie D., wife of J. T. Malin; Anna M., who resides at home, and Edmund J., engaged in farming pursuits. Mr. Dunlap, father of these children, died in March, 1892.

REUBEN CYRUS JONES, a prosperous farmer and leading citizen of East Nantmeal township, Chester county, is a son of William Jones, whose name would seem to indicate Welsh ancestry. He was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, but moved to Chester county, where he made his home, first in Honeybrook, and afterward in Uwchlan township. His calling was that of a farmer. He married Susanna Munaugh, and their children were: 1. Louisa, who married Nicholas Northammer, a stonemason of Reading, Pennsylvania. 2 and 3. Maggie and Annie (twins). The former is the wife of Ephraim Stauffer, a carpenter who is engaged in business for himself in Honeybrook; and the latter married John Maudy, who is employed in the woollen mills of Sadsburyville. He served in the army during the Civil war, and draws a pension in consequence of having been wounded. 4. Emma, who is the wife of Henry Rafesnigder, a teamster of Reading. 5. Levi, who is a carpenter in Reading. 6. Eliza, who is the widow of John McCannon, a farmer of West Nantmeal, who was a pensioner until his death, having received a wound in the shoulder while serving in the army during the Civil war. 7. Loretta, who is the wife of Oliver Fry, a moulder employed at the works of Painter & Company in Reading. 8. Reuben Cyrus, mentioned at length hereinafter. All these sons, on reaching manhood, identified themselves with the Democratic party, thus following in the footsteps of their father, who died in 1893.

Reuben Cyrus Jones, son of William and Susanna Jones, was born August 20, 1854, in Honeybrook, and received his primary education in the schools of the township, afterward attending the Prospect schoolhouse in Uwchlan township. After finishing his education he entered upon the life of a farmer, as assistant to his father on the homestead. At the age of fourteen he went to Reading, where he found employment as a driver, and at the end of five years went as an apprentice to learn the plasterer's trade. After serving for three years, he began to follow the trade independently, and for the next ten years, devoted himself to this calling. Although he has not yet altogether abandoned it, he has been chiefly engaged for a number of years in agricultural pursuits. His farm, which is the one formerly known as the "John Eyrich farm," of eighty-four acres, he cultivates along the lines of general farming, and also conducts a dairy of twelve cows. As an agriculturist his success has been marked, and the products of his dairy command high prices at the Warwick Creamery. He is a member of the Junior Order of American Mechanics, and also of the Masonic fraternity. As a citizen Mr. Jones is highly esteemed for sagacity and fidelity to duty. He adheres to the political traditions of his family, having been twice elected supervisor on the Democratic ticket. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Jones married Mary Amanda, daughter of Reuben and Annie Quillman, the former a farmer of Berks county. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Jones. Ada, who is deceased; William, also deceased; Alvin, who is serving an apprenticeship to the trade of a plasterer with John McForlan of West Nantmeal; Harriet, who graduated from the schools of the township, and resides at home; Clifton, who assists his father on the farm; Maggie; Harry; Lela; Edgar; and Florence. The five last-named children, with the exception of the youngest, are attending the public schools.

MARION CLOYD HEMMIG, an enterprising business man and public-spirited citizen of West Nantmeal township, Chester county, is a son of Benjamin D. Hemmig, a native of Reading, Pennsylvania, who passed his early life on a farm, and spent some years in traveling in the west. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in Company F, Third Regiment, Pennsylvania reserve volunteers, in which he was afterward promoted to the rank of second lieutenant. He participated in the Seven Days' battle under the command of General George B. McClellan, and was also present in the battles of Fredericksburg, Cloyd Farm, Malvern Hill and many others. At the battle of Cloyd Farm he received a wound in consequence of which he was obliged to have one leg amputated above the knee, thus becoming a cripple for the remainder of his life. He was also among the number who endured the sufferings of the southern prisons. On his return to civil life he became a clerk in the postoffice in Reading, where he remained for some years, and then engaged in business for himself as a manufacturer of cigars. In this enterprise he met with a fair measure of success, and some years ago retired from business. He has resided for some time at Elverson, and was formerly driver of the stage which ran between that place and Phoenixville, making a trip each day for four years. For one year he drove the stage to Chester Springs. He now holds the office of assistant postmaster at Elverson. This is not the first government appointment which he has received, having served in 1866 and 1867 as assistant revenue collector at Reading. He has been chosen by his townsmen to fill the office of school director. In politics he is a Republican. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, affiliating with Post No. 16, of Reading. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Hemmig married Mary T., born in Elverson, daughter of Samuel and Annie (McCord) Shingles, the former a blacksmith of Elverson. Mr. and Mrs. Hemmig are the parents of the following children: 1. Albert Luther, who holds the position of foreman at the Trenton (New Jersey) Bridge Works, married Annie, daughter of Nesbit and Caroline Finger of Elverson, and has three children: Pearl, Cloyd and Carrie. 2. Marion Cloyd, mentioned at length hereinafter. 3. Carrie L. Mr. Hemmig, by reason of his eventful military career, possesses a wealth of reminiscences of the Civil war, and is able to relate many thrilling incidents relating to that critical period in our national history.

Marion Cloyd Hemmig, son of Benjamin D. and Mary T. (Shingles) Hemmig, was born May 26, 1876, in Elverson (then known as Springfield), West Nantmeal township. He received his early education in the public schools of his birthplace, afterward attending the Interstate Commercial College of Reading. He was for a time engaged in the drug business in Philadelphia, and later became a student in the National Institute of Pharmacy of Chicago, from which he graduated in 1896. He then returned to Elverson, where he established himself in the drug business, which he conducted successfully until 1903, when he retired. In 1900 he was appointed postmaster under the McKinley administration, succeeding William H. Wilson, who had held the office since 1895. This important position has now been filled for three years by Mr. Hemmig, the able manner in which he has discharged the duties devolving upon him, fully justifying the government in the confidence which they have reposed in him, and winning "golden opinions" from his townsmen. The free delivery system was, in May, 1903, established at this office, which is one of the fourth class, designed for the accommodation of those who desire to procure postal money orders and to send registered letters. In the sphere of politics Mr. Hemmig is prominently identified with the Republican party.

Mr. Hemmig married Cora F. Everhart, and they are the parents of three children: Emma E., who is just entering upon her school life; Ethel, and Allen E. Mrs. Hemmig is a daughter of William E. and Emma (Coche) Everhart, the latter the daughter of a farmer of Union township, who is now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Everhart are the parents of the following children: Maud, who is the wife of John R. Painter, a farmer of West Nantmeal, and has one child, Enoch E.; Clara E., who is a graduate of Darlington School, West Chester, and also of Maryland College, Lutherville, Maryland; Alice L., who is also a graduate of Maryland College; and Cora F., who graduated from Stewart's Academy, Reading, Pennsylvania, and became the wife of Marion Cloyd Hemmig, as mentioned above. Mr. Hemmig is regarded by the community in which he resides as a man destined to play a leading part in the future political life of his county and state.

HENRY COPE. Abiah Cope (16) was born in East Bradford township, Chester county, 3 mo., 22, 1759, and died 10 mo., 5, 1826. He was educated in the schools of the neighborhood. He was an industrious and successful farmer. He married Jane Morris, of Berks county, Pennsylvania, and their children were: 1. David, who married Deborah Phillips and to whom were born five children; 2. Samuel, who married Ann Williams, and to whom were born six children; 3. Abiah; 4. Morris, who married Ann Swayne, and to whom were born three children.

Abiah, son of Abiah and Jane (Morris) Cope, was born on the family homestead, near Cope's Mill, 4 mo., 8, 1791, and died 8 mo., 18, 1868. He was educated in the common schools, and he began his active career as a lumber dealer in Columbia, Pennsylvania, a pursuit which he soon relinquished to take up farming, which was his calling during the remainder of his life. He was an exemplary member of the Society of Friends. In his political affiliations he was formerly a staunch Whig and afterwards connected himself with the Republican party, but he was averse to political prominence and steadfastly declined all offers of office. He married Mary Hannum, daughter of John and Sarah (Jackson) Hannum, of West Goshen township. Mary (Hannum) Cope was born 10 mo., 13, 1800, and died 10 mo., 18, 1878. Two children were born to Abiah and Mary (Hannum) Cope: 1. Henry, born 9 mo., 24, 1838; and 2. David, born 9 mo., 18, 1840, who is single.

Henry Cope

Henry Cope, eldest son of Abiah and Mary (Hannum) Cope, was born at the ancestral home, September 24, 1838. He received an excellent education, taking courses at the Westtown Boarding School and Hoopes' Academy in West Chester. He taught school in West Marlboro, and evidenced such aptitude and capability as to afford assurance that he would have attained distinction in the educational field had he devoted himself to it permanently. He left the school room, however, to enter a store in West Chester. In 1868 he removed to Lower Oxford township, locating at Lincoln University, where he engaged in business upon his own account, opening a coal, lumber and fertilizer warehouse, and began the manufacture of the celebrated Cope Fertilizer, having begun the same pursuits in 1862. He has accomplished much toward the improvement of the village, and has erected several of the most handsome and convenient residences there. He is a charter director of the West Grove National Bank, and a director of the Farmers' National Bank of Oxford for over ten years, and is vice-president of the Oxford Agricultural Society for ten years. He takes an active interest in educational affairs. He is a member of the Society of Friends, and is a Republican in politics.

Mr. Cope was married 3 mo., 15, 1865, to Hannah A. Cooper, born 10 mo., 17, 1838, a daughter of George and Margaret (Mercer) Cooper. She died 2 mo., 10, 1902, leaving four children: 1. Frederic, born 9 mo., 3, 1866, who married Dora Wilson, born 2 mo., 1893, daughter of Ross and Hannah Wilson of East Nottingham; 2. Margaret, born 12 mo., 22, 1869, who died 3 mo., 23, 1870; 3. Paul A., 11 mo., 15, 1871, who died 3 mo., 18, 1872; Mary Alice, born 5 mo., 2, 1874, who is single. Mr. Cope married (second) Lydia Annie Kimble, daughter of Richard and Jane (Steel) Kimble, of Lower Oxford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

JOSEPH C. SHARPLESS. The patriarch and founder of the Sharpless family in America was John Sharples, who, accompanied by his wife, Jane (Moor) Sharples, and seven children, after a long, tedious and perilous journey from his native country, England, landed in Chester, Pennsylvania, 6 mo., 14, 1682.

John Sharples was the second son of Geoffrey and Margaret Sharples, of Wybunbury, Cheshire, England, and in this neighborhood his baptism occurred August 15, 1624. Prior to his removal to America, John Sharples resided in the towns of Mearemore, Blakenhall, and Hatherton; he became an early convert to the doctrines of the Society of Friends, and was an active member of their meetings, suffering a large degree of persecution on account of his religious principles. The children born to John and Jane (Moor) Sharples are as follows: Phebe, born 10 mo., 20, 1663, died near Chester, Pennsylvania, 4 mo., 2, 1685, unmarried. John, born 11 mo., 16, 1666, married Hannah Pennell. Thomas, born 11 mo., 2, 1668, died at sea 5 mo., 17, 1682. James, born 1 mo., 5, 1670 or 1671, married Mary Edge, and after her death, married Mary Lewis. Caleb, born 2 mo., 22, 1673, died near Chester, Pennsylvania, 7 mo., 17, 1686, from the bite of a snake. Jane, born 6 mo., 13, 1676, died near Chester, Pennsylvania, 3 mo., 28, 1685. Joseph, born 9 mo., 28, 1678, married Lydia Lewis. John Sharples, father of these children, died at his home near Chester, Pennsylvania, 4 mo., 11, 1685, and his wife, Jane (Moor) Sharples, born in 1638, died 9 mo., 1, 1722.

Joseph Sharples, youngest son of John and Jane (Moor) Sharples, was born at Hatherton, England, 9 mo., 28, 1678, was united in marriage at Haverford Meeting, 3 mo., 31, 1704, to Lydia Lewis, who was born in Glamorganshire, Wales, 3 mo., 8, 1683; she was a sister to the wife of his brother, James Sharples. The following named children were born to Joseph and Lydia (Lewis) Sharples: Susanna, born 12 mo., 18, 1705, married Joseph Chamberlin; Joseph, born 7 mo., 8, 1707, married Mary Pyle; his death occurred 1 mo., 4, 1769; Benjamin, born 11 mo., 26, 1708, married for his first wife, Edith Broome, and for his second wife, Martha Mendenhall; his death occurred 3 mo., 16, 1785; Samuel, born 12 mo., 7, 1710 or 1711, married Jane Newlin, and died 11 mo., 24, 1790; Lydia, born 3 mo., 7, 1713, married John Martin, and her death occurred in 1741; Nathan, born 9 mo., 2, 1715, married Hannah Townsend, and died in 1755; Jane, born 12 mo., 4, 1718, became the wife of Jacob Pyle, and her death occurred in 1775; Abraham, born 5 mo., 7, 1720, died in 1784; Jacob, born 10 mo., 14, 1722, married Ann Blakey, and died 7 mo., 19, 1775; William, born 3 mo., 31, 1725, married Abigail Sharp, and died 5 mo., 4, 1751. Joseph Sharples, father of these children, died in Middletown, Chester county, now Delaware county, in 1757, and his wife's death occurred in 1763.

Benjamin Sharples, eldest son of Joseph and Lydia (Lewis) Sharples, was born in Nether Providence, Pennsylvania, 11 mo., 26, 1709, and married, for his first wife, Edith Broome, who died 6 mo., 13, 1744, in the twenty-sixth year of her age, leaving three children, namely: Joseph, born 12 mo., 19, 1737 or 1738, died 9 mo., 1, 1763;

Benjamin, born 10 mo., 26, 1740, died 6 mo., 18, 1780; and Edith, born 10 mo., 30, 1742, became the wife of Ziba Ferris, and her death occurred 2 mo., 8, 1815. Mr. Sharples then married 3 mo., 21, 1746, at Concord, Martha Mendenhall, who was born 12 mo., 8, 1724, daughter of Benjamin and Lydia Mendenhall, of Concord. The children born of this union were: Joshua, born 12 mo., 28, 1746 or 1747, married Edith Yarnall, and died 9 mo., 21, 1826; Isaac, born 5 mo., 16, 1748, married Eliza Talbot, and died 1 mo., 23, 1780; Rebecca, born 10 mo., 29, 1749, died 2 mo., 9, 1780; Martha, born 10 mo., 28, 1751, died 9 mo., 7, 1763; Ann, born 7 mo., 1, 1754, died 9 mo., 4, 1763; Aaron, born 8 mo., 26, 1756, married Mary Elwood, and died 8 mo., 25, 1798; Amy, born 11 mo., 17, 1758, died 1 mo., 3, 1831; Enoch, born 9 mo., 15, 1760, died 9 mo., 15, 1763; Hannah, born 4 mo., 9, 1765, died 4 mo., 11, 1795; Esther, born 5 mo., 21, 1767, died 7 mo., 24, 1865; Sarah, born 9 mo., 21, 1769, died 9 mo., 13, 1823; and Samuel, born 11 mo., 25, 1770, died 9 mo., 8, 1796. Benjamin Sharples, father of these children, died at Middletown, 3 mo., 16, 1785, and his wife, Martha (Mendenhall) Sharples, died 10 mo., 20, 1812.

Joshua Sharples, eldest son of Benjamin and Martha (Mendenhall) Sharples, was born in Middletown, Pennsylvania, 12 mo., 28, 1746 or 1747, married Edith Yarnall, who was born 3 mo., 13, 1743, daughter of Nathan and Rachel Yarnall, and their children were: Benjamin, born 8 mo., 24, 1769, married for his first wife, Abigail Cope, and for his second wife, Sidney Hoopes, and his death occurred 2 mo., 1, 1852; Rachel, born 5 mo., 3, 1771, became the wife of Benjamin Cope, and died 8 mo., 10, 1807; Nathan, born 12 mo., 18, 1772, married Lydia Painter, and died 4 mo., 11, 1863; Martha, born 4 mo., 27, 1775, became the wife of Cheyney Jefferis, and her death occurred 4 mo., 30, 1857; Edith, born 6 mo., 15, 1777, became the wife of Thomas Kite, and died 1 mo., 24, 1861; Joshua, born 8 mo., 12, 1779, married Philadelphia Drinker, and his death occurred 12 mo., 21, 1860; Isaac, born 9 mo., 28, 1781, married Sarah Garrett, and after her death was united in marriage to Mary Ellis; his death occurred 11 mo., 12, 1822; Eli, born 12 mo., 30, 1783, died 9 mo., 12, 1789. Joshua Sharples married for his second wife, Ann Trimble, who was born 1 mo., 9, 1752, and their children were: William, born 1 mo., 15, 1791; died 3 mo., 5, 1793; Phebe, born 3 mo., 22, 1793, became the wife of Nathan Middleton, and died 4 mo., 30, 1850. Joshua Sharples, father of these children, died 9 mo., 21, 1826.

Joshua Sharples, third son of Joshua and Edith (Yarnall) Sharples, was born 8 mo., 12, 1779, died 12 mo., 21, 1860, married, in 1808, in the city of Philadelphia, Philadelphia Drinker, born 12 mo., 1777, died 10 mo., 4, 1875, daughter of Joseph and Hannah (Hart) Drinker, prominent residents of that city. Joshua Sharples learned the carpenter trade and settled in what is now West Philadelphia, but about 1823, removed to Chester county, and in 1829 settled on a farm in London Britain. Their children were: George, born 5 mo., 5, 1809, married Amy Chambers; Edward, born 1 mo., 3, 1811, married Ellen Paxson, and his death occurred 8 mo., 31, 1857; Hannah, born 11 mo., 9, 1812, wife of Caleb Cope; Mary, born 1 mo., 10, 1815; Benjamin, born 2 mo., 3, 1817, married Sarah Cook; and Charles, born 2 mo., 22, 1819, married Mary Ann Passmore. Joshua Sharples, father of these children, died in London Britain township, 12 mo., 21, 1860, and his widow died at the residence of her daughter, Hannah Cope, near Willow Grove, Montgomery county; they were both interred at London Britain Meeting.

George Sharpless, eldest son of Joshua and Philadelphia (Drinker) Sharpless, was born 5 mo., 5, 1809, in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, but subsequently followed the occupation of farmer in West Marlborough township. At New Garden Meeting, 10 mo., 13, 1841, George Sharpless married Amy Chambers, who was born near Stanton, Delaware, 9 mo., 5, 1811, daughter of Joseph and Deborah (Phillips) Chambers, of New Garden township, Chester county. Their children were: Deborah, born 8 mo., 15, 1842, died 2 mo., 6, 1843; Joshua, born 11 mo., 11, 1843, married 6 mo., 14, 1875, Mary Ellen Brown, daughter of Evan and Joanna (Taylor) Brown; Lydia, born 8 mo., 10, 1845, and Mary, twin with Lydia; Joseph, born 12 mo., 21, 1847; Edith, born 4 mo., 3, 1850; John P., born 11 mo., 15, 1851, married, at Londongrove Meeting, 10 mo., 15, 1884, Hannah Maule, daughter of Benjamin and Margaret (Evans) Maule. George Sharpless (father) died 3 mo., 12, 1897; his wife died 3 mo., 11, 1888, and the funeral was postponed by the great blizzard of that year.

Joseph C. Sharpless, second son of George and Amy (Chambers) Sharpless, was born in London Britain township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, 12 mo., 21, 1847, was educated at the common schools of the neighborhood and at Westtown Boarding School. He was reared on a farm, and thus acquired a thorough and efficient knowledge of the dairy business, to which line of industry he has devoted his energies during his entire business career. For the past fifteen years he has been the proprietor of a creamery known as the "Southbrook Dairies," making some of the renowned Sharpless butter which has so wide a reputation in the Philadelphia markets. He has been so actively and closely identified with the dairy interests of Chester county, that he was elected to the office of vice-president of the Creamery Association for eastern Pennsylvania, and was also elected, in 1901, to the office of president of the Pennsylvania State Dairy Union. In addition to these duties, Mr. Sharpless serves in the capacity of director in the Building Association of London Grove, having been chosen to fill that position about twenty years ago. He has strictly adhered to the religion of his forefathers, that of Friend, and in politics he is an Independent Republican. Mr. Sharpless is unmarried.

JOHN SIGMAN, a well known citizen of West Nantmeal township, who has been eminently successful in the line of business which he has followed during his entire active career, is a descendant of George Sigman (great-grandfather), who was a native of Holland and emigrated to America at an early day, settling in Chester county, Pennsylvania.

John Sigman (grandfather) was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1790. He was a farmer by occupation, a member of the Episcopal church, and an old line Whig in his political affiliations. He was united in marriage to Phebe Smith, a descendant of Timothy Smith, who came to this country with William Penn, and seven children were the issue of this union, four sons and three daughters—George, Thomas, Joseph, John, Mary, Eliza and Sarah Sigman. Mr. Sigman was drafted in the war of 1812. He died at his home in East Nantmeal township in 1864, at the advanced age of seventy-nine years.

George Sigman (father) was a native of East Nantmeal township, his birth having occurred there in 1816. In early life he learned the trade of plasterer, which occupation he followed for many years, and later he turned his attention to farming, being very successful and prosperous in this line of industry. He was a Republican in politics. Mr. Sigman married Phebe Kurtz, born in 1817, daughter of Christian and Mary (Huzzard) Kurtz, and six children were born to them—1. John; 2. Kurtz, deceased, who was a farmer during his active life, and served as school director of his township. He married Hannah Mills, and at the time of her decease there were three living children—George A., James G., and Lucretia, the first two named being graduates of the West Chester Normal School, and are now in their second year in Lafayette College, Easton, Pennsylvania. Kurtz Sigman then married Eliza Bingaman; 3. Hunter, unmarried, engaged in farming pursuits in Warwick township; 4. Clara; 5. Annie; 6. Smith, a farmer by occupation, whose death occurred in 1885.

Christian Kurtz, father of Mrs. Sigman, was a son of Christian and Barbery (Kauffman) Kurtz, the latter named being a writer of great note in Chester county history, and both Christian and Barbery Kurtz were descendants of old and prominent Chester county families. Christian Kurtz, Jr., was a miller by trade and followed this occupation up to 1845, and the remainder of his life was devoted to farming interests.

John Sigman, eldest son of George and Phebe (Kurtz) Sigman, was born in Warwick township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, November 4, 1843. He received a practical education in the public schools of Warwick and East Nantmeal townships, and then engaged in farming. He is now the owner of a one hundred and fifty-seven acre farm, situated about one mile from the village of Elverson, formerly known as Springfield. He devotes his entire attention to general farming and in operating a first-class dairy of twenty-two head of cows, and the products from the latter named industry find a ready sale at the Marsh Creamery. He filled the office of supervisor for four years, and that of school director for seven years, being the incumbent of the latter named office at the present time (1903). He is a Republican in politics.

Mr. Sigman married Annie Hoffman, daughter of George and Annette (Tucker) Hoffman, and a descendant of Peter Hoffman, one of the first settlers of Chester county. George Hoffman was a resident of Caernarvon township, Berks county, Pennsylvania, where he followed the occupations of farmer and lime burner for many years; later he retired from active business pursuits and changed his place of residence to Phoenixville, Pennsylvania, where his death occurred in 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Sigman are the parents of four children—Annette, a graduate of the Center High School; Ralph, a graduate of the same institution of learning; he now assists with the work on the farm; Smith, a student in the Center High School; and Arthur, a pupil in the public schools of West Nantmeal township. Mr. Sigman and his family attend the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Sigman has always closely adhered to business pursuits, and well merits the success which has attended his efforts.

ENOS B. HOOPES, a prosperous farmer of Chester county, is descended from one of its old families. His father, William Hoopes, son of Ezra and Rebecca (Allerton) Hoopes, was born in 1829 in Westtown township, reared on the paternal farm, and educated in West Chester. He devoted himself to agricultural pursuits, and after entering upon an independent course of life remained for one year in Westtown township, and then removed to East Goshen, where he bought a farm of the Matlack estate. Here he made a specialty of dairying, and engaged extensively in raising asparagus for the Philadelphia market, producing a superior quality, and obtaining the highest prices. Mr. Hoopes was a member of the Society of Friends. He married Hannah, daughter of Eusebius Barnard, of Pocopson township, and five children were born to them: Carrie M.; Anna R.; Ida, who is the wife of Frederick Lewis of Chadds Ford; Frank E., who resides in Kennett Square; and Enos B., mentioned at length hereinafter. Mr. Hoopes died December 6, 1895.

Enos B. Hoopes, son of William and Hannah (Barnard) Hoopes, was born September 2, 1863, on the farm where he now lives, in East Goshen township, Chester county, and was educated in the public schools and at West Chester Normal School. After completing his education he engaged for a short time in the drug business in Philadelphia, and then settled on the homestead, to the ownership of which he in time succeeded. Here he devoted himself, as his father had done, to dairying and the raising of asparagus, in both of which pursuits he has met with a gratifying measure of success. He takes an active interest in local affairs, and has been honored by his neighbors with various township offices, a trust which he has discharged in every instance in the most satisfactory manner. He attends the Friends' Meeting.

Mr. Hoopes married, January 21, 1891, Mary, daughter of Phineas and Emily H. (Haines) Pratt, of East Goshen. They have two children: Helen Emily and W. Claire.

ALBERT P. HALL, a leading business man of West Chester, Pennsylvania, traces his descent from Matthew Hall, who, tradition states, came from Birmingham, England, or its vicinity, and settled in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, where he married, about 1731, Sarah, widow of George Haworth, of Buckingham township. He was shortly after received into the Society of Friends, of which his wife was a member. Their son Mahlon settled in Blockley, probably on land which had been devised to him by his father, who had purchased it from Veronica Warner. He may have also purchased additional land, and it is said that much of his property is now within the limits of the park, adjoining Belmont, the former residence of Judge Peters, and also Lansdowne, the residence of the Governor, John Penn, who purchased some of the land from Mahlon to make up his place. In addition to farming he carried on the blacksmithing business, and his account book shows that Governor John Penn, the last of the colonial governors, was one of his best patrons. He married Jane, daughter of James and Elizabeth Higgs, of Bristol. Among the reminiscences of the Revolution related by Mahlon Hall to his descendants, was one which he was accustomed to tell his granddaughter, Matilda Heston, to the effect that an officer in command of a party of British soldiers, outstripping his men, arrived alone at the farmhouse, and in the course of conversation stated to Mr. Hall that he (the officer) came from Birmingham, England, and, upon hearing that the father of Mr. Hall had been a native of the same place, forbade his men from pillaging the house.

Mahlon Hall, son of Mahlon and Jane (Higgs) Hall, erected about 1793 a stone house on what is now Elm avenue, near Fiftieth street, West Philadelphia, close by Fairmount Park. He married Mary, daughter of Edward Warner Heston, of Hestonville, in Blockley, and his first wife, Mary Griffith. Their son, Edward H., born in Philadelphia, in 1792, was reared and married in Chester county. He was but thirteen years old when his father died, and, being the eldest son, took charge of the farm, and later learned the stocking weaver's trade. In 1821 he removed with his mother, wife, and three children, to Columbiana county, Ohio, where he purchased a farm which he improved and called the Beaver farm. He was a strict member of the Society of Friends, and a leader in the meeting. He married at West Chester, Pennsylvania, February 5, 1816, Jane Paxson, born May 31, 1796, daughter of Benjamin and Jane (Ely) Paxson, of Solebury, Bucks county, Pennsylvania. They were the parents of the following children: Sarah P.; Cyrus; William W.; Mary H.; Rachel; Mahlon; Thomas H.; John; George E.; Albert P., mentioned at length hereinafter; and Edward H. Of this large family, only two, Cyrus and John, died in infancy. Edward H. Hall, the father, died November 4, 1831. His widow married Abraham Heston, and died in 1883.

Albert P. Hall, son of Edward H. and Jane (Paxson) Hall, was born October 17, 1829, in Ohio, while his parents were residents of that state. After the marriage of his mother to Abraham Heston, he came with his brother, Edward H., to Philadelphia, where they lived with their paternal grandmother. Mr. Hall received his education at the Westtown Friends' Boarding School, and at the age of sixteen came to Chester county and learned the woolen business. Three years later he attended a private school for a short time, and then went to Ohio, where he was for two years employed in a store with his brother-in-law. At the end of this time he returned to Philadelphia and engaged for one year as clerk in the mercantile business. In 1852 he built a store in Philadelphia, which he conducted for four years, and then spent the same length of time in Marshallton, Chester county. He finally settled in West Chester, where he established a business in which he has now been engaged for more than three decades. He takes an active part in local affairs and enjoys in a high degree the esteem and confidence of his neighbors. He was for a considerable period one of the directors of the Farmers' National Bank, of which, in 1897, he was elected president. He is treasurer of the Assembly Association, trustee of the State Normal School, and prison inspector. He served for four years as a member of the borough council. Politically he is a Republican.

Mr. Hall married, July 11, 1854, Hannah, daughter of Mahlon and Isabella Hall, and two children were born to them: Walter E. and Irene A. Hall. As were his ancestors, Mr. Hall is a member of the Society of Friends.

Walter E. Hall, eldest child of Albert P. Hall, is a journalist, and was the founder of the "Morning Republican," of West Chester. He was married, September 26, 1878, to Miss Lydia T. James, and to them were born the following children: 1. John James, born August 26, 1879, who married Grace Widdicombe, and to whom were born two children, Lydia T. and Lewis Hall; 2. Albert P., Jr., born September 21, 1880; 3. Herbert W., born December 10, 1882, died February 4, 1883; 4. Laureta J., born April 18, 1889; 5. Hannah L., born April 30, 1895; 6. Ruth.

Irene A., only daughter of Albert P. Hall, was born July 9, 1856, and was married, March 4, 1880, to Abraham G. Williams.

ROBERT COWAN. The Cowan family, who are actively interested in all the worthy enterprises of Parkesburg, Chester county, Pennsylvania, trace their ancestry to Robert Cowan, one of four brothers who came from the north of Ireland at an early day and settled in the township of Sadsbury, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he purchased a large tract of land, the deed of which is dated in 1770.

Adam Cowan, son of Hugh Cowan and father of Robert Cowan, was born in Sadsbury township, reared and educated there, and upon reaching man's estate became a farmer by occupation. He married Elizabeth Withrow, a native of Sadsbury township, and the following named children were born to them: 1. Robert, born October 14, 1792; 2. Samuel, married for his first wife Hannah Filson and four children were born to them, and by his marriage with Hannah Ramsey, they became the parents of two children; 3. John, married Mary English; they have five children. Mr. Cowan died in 1802, aged fifty-five years, and his widow died in 1834, in the eighty-fourth year of her age.

Robert Cowan, eldest son of Adam and Elizabeth Cowan, was born in the township of Sadsbury, Chester county, Pennsylvania, October 14, 1792. The early years of his life were spent in assisting with the work upon the farm in summer and attending the public school during the winter session. When he attained the age of sixteen years he removed to what is now known as Coatesville, Chester county, where he learned the trade of blacksmith. He served five years as an apprentice, and during this time became a thorough master of all the details of the various branches; he was then employed as a journeyman up to the year 1823, when he returned to Sadsbury township and took charge of the home farm, whereon he continued to reside during the remainder of his life. In connection with his farm he conducted a blacksmith shop, and by his energy and industry accumulated a comfortable competence with which he relieved the necessities of the poor and suffering, many of whom he befriended during his active and useful life. Up to the time of the Civil war he was a Democrat in politics, but ever afterward advocated the principles of the Republican party, serving one term as justice of the peace in Sadsbury township, and as school director for a term of twenty years.

Mr. Cowan was united in marriage to Mary Cowan, a native of the township of Sadsbury. Their children were: 1. Mary A.; 2. George N.; 3. James F.; 4. Robert C., married Ellen Bailey and five children have been born to them; 5. Elizabeth, married to William T. Simpson; she died April 11, 1898; 6. Margaret, acquired her education at the select private schools in Chester county, and in 1878 removed to Parkesburg, where she resides at the present time (1903). She served as president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Parkesburg, has been a member of the Independent Order of Good Templars since 1862, and is an active and successful Sunday school worker, being noted for her many acts of charity and benevolence; 7. Amos, died in early life; 8. Caroline, became the wife of Robert Irwin, a prominent resident of Coatesville, Pennsylvania. Mr. Cowan, as well as the members of his family, was a firm believer in the tenets of the Presbyterian church, and contributed liberally to its charitable and religious interests. His death occurred in the year 1877, and his widow survived him until 1892.

AMOS MICHENER. The Michener family, who have long been prominently identified with the commercial, political and social interests of Chester county, Pennsylvania, trace their ancestry to John and Sarah Michener, who emigrated to this country about the same time as William Penn, and settled in Philadelphia, where the public records bear the name as early as 1686. In the year 1715 they removed to Abington, Pennsylvania, and the line of descent is as follows: William, who married Margery Kester, and located at Plumstead, Bucks county; John, who married Mary Hayworth, and two of their nine children, Mahlon and Arnold, settled in Chester county. Joseph Michener, grandfather of Amos Michener, was born November 19, 1757, and settled in Chester county about the time of the Revolutionary war. He was the owner of an extensive farm in the township of London Grove, adjoining the West Grove Meeting House. He was twice married, his first wife having been Anna Dunn, daughter of Ralph and Anna Dunn, by whom he had five children, and his second wife was Rebecca Good, and they became the parents of four children.

William Michener, father of Amos Michener, was born and reared on the old homestead in West Grove township, and being accustomed to life upon a farm followed that occupation during his entire active business career. He removed to Penn township, where he took an active part in the affairs of the Democratic party, and was a consistent member of the Society of Friends. He married Hannah Cain, a native of New London township, Chester county, and eight children were born to them. Mr. Michener died in 1833, at the age of forty-five years, survived by his widow, who passed away December 23, 1858, aged seventy-five years.

Amos Michener was born August 5, 1819, in Penn township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and his literary education was acquired in the common schools of the vicinity and the New London Academy. For a short space of time after leaving school he was engaged in teaching, but later changed his occupation to that of bookkeeper, being continuously employed in his native county, with the exception of three years, when he was associated with an iron firm in Huntingdon county. For three years he served the Thordale Iron Works in the capacity of bookkeeper, and in 1873 filled a similar position with the Parkesburg Iron Company. In 1882 he was appointed secretary of the company, in which he was a large stockholder; he also served as secretary of the Parkesburg Building and Loan Association, and acted as treasurer of the Parkesburg Iron Works Beneficial Association. In politics he was a firm supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and served as member of the borough council as well as being elected twice to fill the office of burgess.

On March 23, 1848, Mr. Michener married Elizabeth Townsend, and three children were born to them: 1. William C., who is serving as superintendent of the Parkesburg Iron Works; he married Belle Wilson and one child has been born to them, Helen Michener; 2. Carrie, deceased, who traveled extensively during her life; 3. Mary, who resides with her mother in a beautiful home in Parkesburg, Pennsylvania. The father of these children died in 1873. Mrs.

Michener is a daughter of William Townsend, who received his education in the common schools of Chester county, and subsequently engaged in agricultural pursuits in Upper Oxford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. In politics he was formerly a Whig and later a Republican, and in religion he adhered to the faith of the Quakers. Mr. Townsend was united in marriage to Letitia Fell, daughter of Thomas Fell, who was engaged in farming in Bucks county; and the following named children were born to them: Samuel, who married Ruth A. Pyle, and one child was born to them; Thomas, who married Amy Mackey; William, who married Elder Good, and they have two children; Melinda, wife of Enoch Gatchell; Letitia, wife of Daniel Pennington, and mother of ten sons; Amanda, wife of Jesse Good, and they are the parents of eight children; and Elizabeth, widow of Amos Michener.

JOSEPH LAWRENCE, one of the most highly respected citizens of Chester county, is a representative of a family of English origin, the American branch of which was planted in this country soon after the close of the Revolutionary war. The emigrant ancestor found a home in Pennsylvania, but different members of the family in the successive generations removed to other places, so that in course of time the race became scattered all along the eastern coast from Maine to Florida. The branch to which Mr. Lawrence belongs has always resided in Pennsylvania, settling in Chester Valley, where from generation to generation the members have devoted themselves to agricultural pursuits. The success which has attended them testifies to the ability of the family as a race of farmers, in their chosen calling, and one of their marked traits has been an even, quiet, and agreeable disposition which has caused their prosperity to be a source of pleasure to others as well as to themselves.

Joseph Lawrence was born in 1781, and obtained his early education in the common schools. Like his ancestors he made farming the business of his life, renting a farm in Wayne, Delaware county. In the management of this he was very successful, being prospered to such a degree that he soon found his farm inadequate to the large amount of business which he transacted. In consequence of this he removed to Radnor township, where he rented a large farm for twenty-four years, during which time he conducted a flourishing dairy business, keeping from thirty to thirty-five cows, and also fine horses. He was a man who took an active interest in local affairs, and for a number of terms served as supervisor of Radnor township. In early life his political opinions were those held by the Democratic party. He was a member of the Baptist church. Mr.

Lawrence married Elizabeth, one of the three children of John and Jane Grey, descendants of the early settlers of Chester Valley. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence: Sarah, born March 19, 1819, died September 9, 1819; Jane, born July 13, 1821, died December 20, 1899; James, born May 6, 1823, died October 27, 1833; Elizabeth, born July 2, 1827, died April 17, 1886; John, born October 16, 1829, died January 23, 1894; Joseph, mentioned at length hereinafter; and Martha, born July 13, 1837. The death of Mr. Lawrence, the father, took place in 1879.

Joseph Lawrence, son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Grey) Lawrence, was born November 21, 1834, and in his boyhood, attended the common schools of Radnor township. He remained on the homestead, assisting his father, up to the death of the latter, and continued for some years to cultivate and manage the estate, his labors being attended with great prosperity and success, in company with his brothers and sisters. Fifteen years ago he retired (1888) from active life and now lives with his maiden sister, Martha, in a beautiful home in Devon, in that region better known as Warrenton. In politics he is an independent voter, and his religious affiliations are with the Baptist church, of which his sister is an active member. In his disposition and manner of life Mr. Lawrence is very quiet and conservative, thus maintaining the traditions of a family which ranks among the best in Chester county.

MATHIAS P. WALKER, a prosperous farmer of Tredyffrin township, is a representative of a family which has been known for two centuries as the "Walkers of Chester Valley." They are the direct descendants of Lewis Walker, who in 1686 came to this country from Merioneth, Wales, in company with about one hundred passengers, the greater part of whom were of the same nationality as himself. The ship was thirteen months in making the voyage, during which time many died from hunger and other privations. In 1687 they landed in Pennsylvania, where they found a home after their long wanderings. Lewis Walker, who was then a young man, settled in Radnor, which was regarded as the "Welsh tract," where he purchased three hundred acres of land and rented two hundred more on the west bank of the Schuylkill, near and included in the towns of Merion, Haverford, and Radnor. He married, in 1693, Mary Morris, an English girl, who had been one of the passengers on the ill-fated vessel. They were the parents of eight children, five sons and three daughters. Lewis Walker and his wife were stanch and active members of the Society of Friends, and did much to keep together the flock of their fellow believers who had settled in this region.

Thomas Walker, of the fourth generation from Lewis, was born 12 mo., 29, 1757, and married 4 mo., 2, 1789, Margaret, born 3 mo., 13, 1772, daughter of Richard and Hannah (Potts) Currie. The former who was born and educated in Glasgow, Scotland, came to America in 1710 as a tutor, and shortly after became acquainted with the Rev. George Ross, of the Protestant Episcopal church at New Castle, Delaware. Through his friendship for Mr. Ross he was led to study for the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal church, to which he was ordained in 1737. Mr. and Mrs. Walker were the parents of eleven children, five sons, among whom was William, mentioned at length hereinafter, and six daughters. Mr. Walker died 3 mo., 17, 1839, and his wife passed away in 5 mo., 1858.

William Walker, fourth child of Thomas and Margaret (Currie) Walker, was born 2 mo., 8, 1795, in Tredyffrin township, which had been the birthplace of his father also. He was a prosperous farmer and lived for more than fifty years on a farm which formed a part of the original "Walker tract." His estate, which consisted of one hundred and thirty acres, was known as "Rehobeth Spring." William Walker was a man of a very genial disposition, and much "given to hospitality." He was a strong Republican, and a member of the Society of Friends. He married Sarah, born 2 mo., 28, 1787, daughter of Mathias and Mary Pennypacker, whose ancestors came originally from Holland. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Walker were ten in number, including Mathias P., mentioned at length hereinafter. Mr. Walker died at his home, "Rehobeth Spring," 3 mo., 10, 1873, and his wife expired on the homestead 1 mo., 17, 1878.

Mathias P. Walker, son of William and Sarah (Pennypacker) Walker, was born 9 mo., 8, 1827, and attended the Friends' School of that neighborhood, and also a private school in Norristown. After completing his education he traveled extensively through the United States, receiving thereby the training which acquaintance with books is powerless to confer, but can be gained only by contact with the world. On his return he engaged in farming in Swedeland, and later in the valley, on a farm which he bought of the heirs of his uncle, the late Richard C. Walker. This farm is now the residence of Mr. Walker's eldest son. By the death of his father, Mr. Walker inherited the homestead, "Rehobeth Spring," where he has since resided. As a dairy farmer his skillful management has been rewarded with the most gratifying results. In politics he adheres firmly to the Republican party, and his religious connections, like those of his ancestors, are with the Society of Friends.

Mr. Walker married Elizabeth, born 1 mo., 13, 1841, daughter of Nathan and Ann (Bwadess) Rambo, of Swedeland, Pennsylvania, descendants of the early Swedish settlers, who came to America in 1638, and took up their abode near the Schuylkill river, where Norristown now stands. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Walker: Anna Bwadess, who married James Arthur McFarland; Nathan Rambo, who married Sarah Ella Stephens; John O. Stearns, William Colket, Athalia L. Piernam, who became the wife of Samuel Eugene Kendall; Winfield Wilson; Mary Schall, who married George A. Merkel; Mathias Pennypacker, and Sarah Pennypacker, who died in infancy. Mrs. Walker, the mother of the family, died 3 mo., 18, 1883. Mr. Walker is today, the oldest living male descendant of Lewis Walker, the founder of the family in America.

JAMES MONROE SMITH. The above named, a native of Delaware county, has resided within its borders throughout his entire life, and during that time has been identified in an active way with educational, business and political affairs. Nor is it too much to say that as teacher, farmer, holder of important local offices and in control of corporate interests, he has always displayed discretion and judgment, while ever conscientious in the discharge of any duty assigned to him, either in public or private capacity. Those who have known him best have always had implicit confidence in his integrity, and from the earliest period of his career to the present time he has enjoyed the desirable reputation of being a good neighbor and good citizen.

The family connection is numerous, and the ancestry was resident in Delaware county from a remote period. The genealogical record, however, will be traced only from Joshua Smith, father of the subject of this sketch, whose parents were James and Mary (Pyle) Smith, and whose birth occurred November 8, 1801, and his death November 26, 1873. He married Hannah Worrall Broomall, daughter of Daniel and Sarah (Worrall) Broomall who was born January 6, 1806, and died March 18, 1867. Her father was the son of David and Martha Broomall, and his birth occurred July 9, 1780. The children of Joshua and Hannah W. (Broomall) Smith were as follows: Sarah Ann, born April 24, 1825, and died August 2, 1901; Mary Jane, born September 23, 1827; James Monroe, who is noticed fully below; Eliza Pyle, born in 1832; Hannah B. Broomall born in 1834; Americus Vespuccius, born in 1840, now employed in the office of clerk of court at Media, Pennsylvania; Mattie, born December 18, 1837, married Joseph P. Yarnall, and died January 12, 1876; Lydia Emma, born March 30, 1843, died August 29, 1854; Wesley Worrall, born March 18, 1846, resides in Edgmont township.

James Monroe Smith, third in the family of children above enumerated, was born in Edgmont township, Delaware county, May 5, 1830, and received his education in the public schools, supplemented by a course at Unionville School, under the principalship of Milton Durnall. From 1851 to 1857 he was engaged in teaching school in Edgmont, Thornbury, Middleton and Upper Providence, but with the adjournment of his last term he definitely abandoned the school room for more active pursuits.

The twenty years terminating with 1877 were spent by Mr. Smith on the homestead farm in Edgmont, from which occupation he retired to accept appointment as steward of the Delaware County Alms House at Lima. After holding that position a few months over four years, he made his home with his brother on the homestead farm until 1889, but was not engaged in active business, and spent some time in traveling. April 6, 1885, the Cumberland Cemetery Association was incorporated, and Mr. Smith was elected its first president, which position he held for five years. In fact, he had charge of its affairs from the first, has been superintendent since 1889, and is also a member of the board of directors and secretary and treasurer. Mr. Smith has held various public offices, including that of school director in Edgmont township for several terms, jury commissioner of Delaware county for three years, and justice of the peace for seven terms, the last of which he is now serving.

Mr. Smith has been connected more or less prominently with many of the fraternal orders, and his membership in some of them extends over a long period of time. He was a member of the Sons of Temperance in the flourishing days of that order, and was an enthusiastic worker in the cause, which he has always had much at heart. On his twenty-first birthday he put in a petition to Rose Tree Lodge, No. 275, was made an Odd Fellow on September 30, 1851, passed all the chairs, and was noble grand in 1854. For thirty years he has been a member of the Independent Order of Red Men, belonging to Tammanade Tribe, located at Tanquey, Pennsylvania. January 9, 1865, he was initiated into George W. Bartram Lodge, No. 298, A. F. & A. M., at Media, Pennsylvania, and was worshipful master of the lodge in 1887 and 1888. He is also a Royal Arch Mason, having joined Girard Mark Lodge, No. 214, in Philadelphia, June 8, 1868.

March 14, 1861, Mr. Smith was married to Anna Maria, daughter of Reese and Mary (McCall) Pyle, who was born August 30, 1835, and died June 26, 1862. April 19, 1866, he contracted a second matrimonial alliance with Mrs. Elizabeth Amanda Green and daughter of John and Elizabeth Wood, whose births occurred September 23, 1795, and October, 1802, respectively. Mrs. Smith was born September 22, 1831, and died May 12, 1881. The children of Mr. Smith by his second marriage are as follows: Annie Laura, born November 1, 1867, married, June 4, 1890, at Gradyville, to David A., son of David Ashbridge and Annie Jane (Bacon) Vernon; they live in Upper Providence, Delaware county, and have five children, as follows: May Elizabeth, born May 13, 1891; David Ashbridge, born October 18, 1892; James Monroe, born June 15, 1896; Clinton Wesley, born August 24, 1898; Annie Alma, born June 12, 1900 and Forrest Larnize born 1903. James Harvey, second child of our subject, was born August 4, 1869, and was married October 17, 1894, to Grace Estella, daughter of William Henry and Sarah Elizabeth (James) Hoskins, and born October 3, 1871; he lives at Lima, and holds a position as reporter on one of the city papers; they have two children: Minerva Ella, born June 19, 1895, and Beatrice Manilla, born August 13, 1897.

Mr. Smith, though not a member of any church, is friendly to all good causes, his father being a Methodist and his mother inclined toward the Friends, while he himself has kept on good terms with members of all denominations. His political beliefs have always coincided with the cardinal doctrines of the Republican faith, and he has co-operated with that party from its beginning as a factor in affairs.

WILLIAM T. SHARPLESS, a successful farmer of East Goshen township, Chester county, is a grandson of John Sharpless and a descendant of one of the oldest families in Pennsylvania. John Sharpless was born on the old Sharpless homestead in Concord township, Delaware county, in 1750. He became one of the largest land owners of East Goshen township, where he was a prominent farmer and a representative member of the Society of Friends. He bought three hundred and sixty acres of land of Anthony Hearn, besides two other tracts in the same township, one of one hundred and fifty, and the other of two hundred and ten acres. This land was subsequently occupied by four of his sons, Smith and Samuel settling on the Hearn farm, and Nathaniel and Jesse taking the other portion. That part of the Hearn farm which belonged to Smith, consisting of about one hundred and sixty-seven acres, is now the homestead of William T. Sharpless.

John Sharpless married Elizabeth Yearsley in 1773, and they were the parents of the following children: Nathan, born 8 mo., 19, 1774, died 1 mo., 13, 1833, married Sarah Thatcher 3 mo., 15, 1799; Jacob, born 12 mo., 23, 1776, died 11 mo.,

24, 1777; Jesse, born 2 mo., 11, 1779, died 6 mo., 22, 1866 married Ann Harvey, 3 mo., 16, 1805; Esther and Ruth, twins, born 4 mo., 8, 1782, died on the day of birth; Susanna, born 8 mo., 28, 1783, died 3 mo., 22, 1856, married Enmor Hickman; Edith, born 12 mo., 22, 1785, died 8 mo., 23, married Anthony Taylor; Sarah, born 6 mo., 29, 1789, died 1 mo., 21, 1858, married Jesse Seal; Hannah, born 1 mo., 24, 1794, died 8 mo., 4, 1857, married Eli Lewis 12 mo., 22, 1814. Elizabeth (Yearsley) Sharpless died 7 mo., 31, 1796, and John Sharpless married Hannah Smith 9 mo., 28, 1798. The children of this second marriage were as follows: John, born 7 mo., 28, 1799, died 9 mo., 8, 1872, married Charity Thatcher, 4 mo., 5, 1820; Smith, born 9 mo., 28, 1802, married Sarah Thatcher 11 mo., 7, 1822; Samuel, born 7 mo. 29, 1804, died 10 mo., 8, 1872, married Abigail G. Ashbridge 11 mo., 20, 1828. John Sharpless, the father, died 10 mo., 29, 1834, and Hannah, his wife, died 3 mo., 31, 1843.

Smith, second child and second son of John Sharpless by his second marriage, was born in Concord, Delaware county, and became a farmer on a portion of the land purchased by his father in East Goshen township as already mentioned. He made a specialty of feeding cattle to fit them for market, and he did an extensive business in that line. He was a man who took a prominent part in local affairs, being one of the board of county commissioners under whose direction the court house was erected. For more than thirty years he was a director of the Chester County Bank. He married Sarah, daughter of William Thatcher of Concord township, Delaware county, and had a family of three children, namely: Elma; William T., mentioned at more length hereinafter; and Joseph. Mr. Sharpless maintained his public and financial interests, carrying on his dealing in cattle, up to the close of his life. He died February 19, 1875, and his wife died April 10, 1866.

William T., son of Smith and Sarah (Thatcher) Sharpless, was born March 16, 1827, in East Goshen township, and was brought up on his father's farm. He was educated at the Strode and Jonathan Gause boarding schools, and having determined upon farming as his vocation, he bought the William Cloud farm of George Ashbridge, which he owned for seven years. At the end of that time he took charge of the homestead, to the possession of which he subsequently succeeded. He manages the farm according to the most improved methods, and along the line of business conducted by his father, making a specialty of the feeding of sheep and cattle. He is a Republican, and follows the course of national politics with much interest.

Mr. Sharpless married, in 1850, Alice C., a daughter of Edward Shimer of Westtown township. The two children of this marriage were Ella, who became the wife of William Smedley, of West Chester, both she and her husband having died, and Edward, who is a prominent physician of Philadelphia. Mrs. Sharpless died in 1857, and in 1859 Mr. Sharpless married Sarah Shimer, who became the mother of four children,—Smith, Elsworth, Alice C., and Sarah. May 1, 1877, Mrs. Sharpless died, and Mr. Sharpless married February 19, 1879, Emma D., daughter of James and Mary (Lytle) Dicks, of Upper Providence, Delaware county.

CHARLES ATWOOD HOLLAND, a successful farmer and respected citizen of East Whiteland, Chester county, is descended from a family of German origin, the founder of which was among the early settlers of Philadelphia. Robert Holland, who was a farmer in the neighborhood of that city, was the father of four children, one of them, a son named Alexander, who was born in 1805.

This son was educated in the common schools, and at an early age became a stone mason, following that occupation successfully for a number of years, and he erected the first high school building ever reared in Philadelphia. In 1839 he bought a farm of one hundred acres in Willistown, where he kept twenty head of stock and conducted a flourishing dairy business, sending his produce to the local and Philadelphia markets, where it found a ready sale. After thirteen years he sold his property and returned to Philadelphia, where he opened a stoneyard, but, at the end of one year, purchased a farm of one hundred and two acres in Tredyffrin township. Here for nineteen years he followed his old occupation of supplying the markets with dairy produce, and then once more took up his abode in Philadelphia, where he passed the remainder of his life. In politics he was a strong Republican, and in Willistown held for fifteen years the office of justice of the peace. At the time of his death he was a member of long standing in the Presbyterian church. He married Mary Ann, daughter of Robert and Mary Miller, who were of Irish nationality and residents of Philadelphia. Mr. and Mrs. Holland were the parents of seven sons and one daughter: Robert M., Charles Atwood, mentioned at length hereinafter, John, George, Thomas, Mary, and Alexander. Three of these children are now living and married. Mr. Holland, the father, died in 1893, at the advanced age of eighty-eight.

Charles Atwood Holland, son of Alexander and Mary Ann (Miller) Holland, received his education in the common schools of Willistown, after which he was employed for seven months in a grocery store in Philadelphia, and then returned to the paternal farm, deciding to make agriculture the business of his life. For a number of years he hired farms, cultivating them in connection with the business of a butcher, finding many and appreciative purchasers for both his meat and vegetables in and around the Valley. In 1900 he bought a farm of sixty acres, where he keeps about twenty head of stock and does a thriving business. Politically he is a Republican, and his neighbors testified to their high regard and esteem for him, by intrusting him for two years with the office of supervisor. He is an attendant of the Presbyterian church.

Mr. Holland married, in January, 1853, Rebecca, daughter of Joseph and Mary Watson, of Tredyffrin township, where the former is a farmer, owning thirty acres of land. Mr. and Mrs. Holland are the parents of the following children: 1. Mary Ella, who resides at home; 2. Joseph A., who married Hester Clayton of Malvern, and is a resident of East Whiteland; 3. Charlotte Ann, wife of J. M. Baker, residing at Lafayette Hill, Montgomery county; 4. Charles Wilford, who also lives in East Whiteland, and married Elizabeth Cox, of Malvern; 5. Edgar A., who married Nellie Jarvis of Philadelphia, and is a resident of that city; 6. Clara, who resides at home; and 7. George S., who lives in East Whiteland, and married Mary Catanach of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Holland recently celebrated their golden wedding, receiving on that occasion the sincere and heartfelt congratulations of a large circle of relatives and friends.

THOMAS BROWN, an enterprising and public-spirited citizen of Tredyffrin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a descendant of a family whose original and early ancestors were of Welsh birth and came to this country, according to tradition, before the Revolutionary war. His grandfather, Brown, settled in New Jersey, was married twice, and reared a family of children. He followed the sea during most of his life, conducting a prosperous shipping trade in merchant vessels; at first he served in the capacity of captain and navigator, and later was the owner of a small fleet of ships.

Thomas Brown, father of Thomas Brown, Jr., was born in the state of New Jersey, but at an early age left home and settled in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, where he followed agricultural pursuits. He was employed on an extensive farm on which was situated a large saw-mill, this being the property of William Hughes. By his diligence, perseverance, and good business management he was appointed superintendent of the estate, and after filling this position for a number of years he was enabled, by means of thrift and economy, to locate on ten acres of this property which came from Mr. Hughes to his daughter. He cultivated and improved this land, which was devoted to general and dairy farming, and under his supervision it became one of the most productive of its size in the community. In politics he was an adherent of the Republican party, and in religion an attendant of the meetings of the Society of Friends. He was united in marriage to Phoebe Hughes, a daughter of William and Catherine Hughes, early settlers of this county, and descendants of a Welsh ancestry.

Thomas Brown, son of Thomas and Phoebe (Hughes) Brown, attended the common schools of Montgomery and Chester counties, and during his early life acquired the details of farm life on the old homestead. Upon the death of his parents he became the owner of the farm, which he enlarged to fifty-five acres. He raises a general line of garden produce, and in addition conducts a small dairy which is well equipped with selected stock. His principal income is derived from his extensive wood lands, his trade extending not only throughout his own county but also into the adjoining counties. He is a Democrat in politics, and his support is given to all measures calculated to advance the moral and material welfare of the community.

In 1872 occurred the marriage of Thomas Brown and Sarah Briens, and two children were the issue of this union, namely: William J., born in 1872, unmarried, who resides at home and assists his father in the management of the farm; he is considered a shrewd and successful trader in live stock. Anna Hughes, born in 1877, wife of John W. Henry, a prosperous agriculturist of Tredyffrin township, Chester county; they have one child, a daughter, born August 28, 1902. Mrs. Brown is a daughter of Andrew and Ann Briens, natives of county Antrim, Ireland, where her birth occurred and where she obtained her early education under the supervision of private tutors who were paid for their services as was the custom of that country. She came to this country in 1860 and settled in Lower Merion, Montgomery county, where she resided with her uncle, James McCone, and later removed to Tredyffrin township, Chester county. The family are loyal and consistent members of the Presbyterian church, taking a keen interest in the work of the various societies connected with it.

JAMES LOVETT MILEY, a prosperous farmer of East Whiteland, is descended from ancestors who were among the early settlers of Germantown, emigrating to this country from Germany about 1700. The grandfather of Mr. Miley was in his day a prominent farmer, raising produce for the Philadelphia markets.

Samuel Miley, son of this farmer ancestor, was born in 1795, in Germantown. He obtained his education in the common schools, and followed the business of sash-making, in which he was associated with his brother, William, in Philadelphia. Subsequently he moved to Lancaster, where he purchased a farm of three hundred acres, and conducted a flourishing and extensive dairy business, supplying the local and also the Philadelphia markets with his produce. At the end of four years he disposed of his farm and business and went to Germantown, where he opened a general store, but in 1842 returned to the life of a farmer, purchasing an estate of seventeen acres in East Whiteland township, which he increased to one hundred and seventy acres. Here he kept about forty head of stock, and during the Civil war supplied the markets of Philadelphia, furnishing articles of a very superior quality. His political affiliations were with the Democratic party, and he was a member of the Presbyterian church. He married Christianna Lovett, with whom he became acquainted while residing in Lancaster. She was the daughter of a prosperous and influential farmer of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Miley had two children: William, who is now a thriving farmer in Caroline county, Maryland, and James Lovett, mentioned at length hereinafter. The death of Mr. Miley took place in 1881, when he had attained the age of eighty-six. The mother of our subject is still living, in her ninety-third year.

James Lovett Miley, son of Samuel and Christianna (Lovett) Miley, in his boyhood attended the common schools of the neighborhood, and on reaching man's estate decided to devote himself to the life of a farmer. On the death of his father he inherited the homestead where he now resides, his farm testifying, by the high state of cultivation in which it is maintained and also by its generally flourishing condition, to the owner's skillful and scientific management. During the construction of the Pennsylvania Railroad system the corporation bought about forty-five acres of Mr. Miley's land to be used in the extension of the road. Like his father, he is a Democrat in politics, and his religious connections are with the Presbyterian church.

Mr. Miley married in 1885, Sabilla, daughter of John and Mary Buckous, of Germantown, the former being the owner of a fulling mill near Norristown, in Bucks county. Mr. and Mrs. Miley had no children, and their married life was of brief duration, the death of Mrs. Miley occurring in 1889. In his disposition and manner of life Mr. Miley is extremely quiet and unobtrusive. In addition to being regarded as one of the most successful and enterprising farmers in the township, he is respected by all for his sterling integrity of character, and cordially and sincerely liked for the many attractive and estimable social qualities which cause him to be looked upon as a model neighbor.

WILLIAM CLARK THOMSON, one of the well known citizens of East Whiteland, is descended from Scotch ancestors, who were among the early settlers of Chester county. John Thomson was educated in the common schools, and was all his life a farmer by occupation. He married the second daughter of Mr. Tamsen, who owned and cultivated a farm of one hundred acres near Whiteford station, doing a dairy and produce business, and at the same time conducting a general store. Mr. and Mrs. Thomson were the parents of the following children: Jessie M., Levis, Israel, John, Townsend, mentioned at length hereinafter; Hannah, who married Joseph Snigley, who is now deceased; Morris, deceased; Tamsen and Sallie. The children are all deceased but Hannah, who is a resident of Wilmington, Delaware.

Townsend Thomson, son of John Thomson, was educated in the common schools, after which for two years he followed the profession of teaching. For a number of years he served as mail carrier between Whiteford and Morgantown, and for three years kept a tavern, the Lynn House, in Wilmington, Delaware. On the death of his father, in association with his brother John, he conducted the home farm for five years, at the end of which time the estate was settled, and he thenceforth hired and worked a number of farms on shares, with good financial results. Mr. Thomson was a man of sound judgment and fine business ability. He was well esteemed by his fellow townsmen, and for one year held the office of supervisor of Willistown. In his political relations he was identified with the Republican party, and although not a member of any church he attended Friends' Meeting. He married Caroline W., daughter of Joseph and Mary Rogers, the former a farmer of Willistown, where he possessed a farm of one hundred acres, largely stocked with cattle and sheep, and also owned and operated extensive quarries. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Thomson: William Clark, mentioned at length hereinafter; Mary R., who married Howard Williams, of Sugartown; Joseph R.; Ada L., who became the wife of Alexander D. Boyd, of Birmingham; and Eliza, who married Howard Sypherd. The death of Mr. Thomson took place in 1891.

William Clark Thomson, son of Townsend and Caroline M. (Rogers) Thomson, was born March 4, 1852, in West Whiteland township, and obtained his education in the common schools. In his youth he was engaged in farming, but at the age of twenty-two abandoned that calling for the purpose of learning telegraphy, in which art he became very proficient. He was employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Malvern, and afterward at Frazer, and also worked for the Western Union Telegraph Company. After following this occupation for eight years, failing health forced him to retire, and he opened a restaurant near the station, which he conducted until recently, when he retired on account of poor health. He is a Republican in political affairs, and in religion is an attendant of the Society of Friends.

Mr. Thomson married, in 1878, Elizabeth C., daughter of Francis and Ann Eliza Fiss, who were early residents of East Whiteland, where they conducted a general store for forty years. Mr. and Mrs. Thomson have one child: Harry C., born May 17, 1879, married May McClellan, of Exton, West Whiteland. One child has been born to them, who is named Herbert, and is now (November, 1903) three years old.

CHARLES NACE FREDERICK, M. D., a well known and highly esteemed physician of Tredyffrin township, is descended from ancestors who were among the early German settlers of Montgomery and Chester counties, emigrating to this country about two hundred years ago. In common with other settlers of German origin, the founder of the American branch of the Fredericks was noted for ambition, industry and intelligence, traits of character which he transmitted to his descendants, and to the possession of which may be traced the unusual degree of material prosperity with which their persevering ability has been rewarded.

Henry Frederick, who lived at different times in both Montgomery and Chester counties, was a successful shoemaker and prosperous farmer, his products supplying his own table with all the necessaries of life, and meeting with a ready sale in the markets of Philadelphia. At an early age he married a daughter of Mr. Bearer, a member of one of the old families of German origin.

Jacob L. Frederick, son of Henry Frederick, was born in 1808, in Franconia township, Montgomery county, and like his father followed the occupation of a farmer, his estate comprising fifty-six acres. He was a successful market gardener, disposing of his products in the Philadelphia markets, where they commanded good prices. Although his only educational advantages had been those afforded by the common schools of Upper Salford, he was a man of marked intelligence, taking much interest in public affairs, and identifying himself staunchly with the Republican party. He was a member of the Lutheran church, to which his ancestors had belonged and to which his descendants still adhere. He married Sarah, daughter of Peter and Catharine Nace, who were among the early settlers of Montgomery county, and lived in northern Upper Salford, near Tylersport. Mr. Nace was a farmer, and both he and his wife were of German descent. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick were the parents of a son, Charles Nace, mentioned at length hereinafter. Mr. Frederick died in 1876.

Charles Nace Frederick, son of Jacob L. and Sarah (Nace) Frederick, was born September 19, 1838, in Upper Salford township, Montgomery. His primary education was received in the common schools, after which he spent two terms at Freeland Seminary, and the same length of time at Washington Hall. After completing his education he taught for four seasons in Relane, Salford, Happenville and Claytonville townships. From 1860 to 1864 he studied medicine in the University of Pennsylvania, graduating in March, 1864, and was one of those who responded to the call for medical attendants in the different hospitals in and around Philadelphia in the stormy days of the Civil war. At the close of the war he returned home, and entered upon the practice of his profession in Tredyffrin township, making his home near the New Centerville postoffice, where he purchased a farm of fifty-three acres. Here he conducts a successful dairy business, and is also in the possession of a lucrative practice. In politics he is a strong Republican, and takes an active interest in town affairs.

Dr. Frederick married, in 1864, Annie, daughter of James and Elizabeth Shumaker, of Gwynedd township, Montgomery county, both descendants of the old German settlers. Dr. and Mrs. Frederick have had eight children, six of whom are deceased: Clara, who died at fourteen years of age; Bessie, who died at the age of ten; Charlie, who died at two months old; Harry, who died at thirty-four; William, who died at seven years of age; and John, who died at the age of three months. Two daughters, Ellie and Hannah, are living, and by their brightness, intelligence and vivacity, do much to enliven the home of their parents. Mrs. Frederick, who was a member of the Society of Friends, died September 7, 1903.

WILLIAM THOMAS DAVIS, retired hotel proprietor of Newtown Square, Delaware township, Pennsylvania, was born in Chester county, August 13, 1830, one of seven children born to Edward and Drucilla (Garner) Davis, the others being Henry G., deceased, Hannah T., deceased, Susanna R., deceased, George L., deceased, Keziah G., and Edith A. Davis.

William T. Davis received his preliminary education in the public schools of his birth-place, this being supplemented by a finishing course at the boarding school of Jonathan Gause, at Greenwood, Delaware. Upon completing his studies young Davis returned to his father's place and assisted him in the management of the farm until his father's death which occurred in 1854. For about a year and a half he continued upon the farm, and then went into the cattle droving business; in 1856 he rented what was known as the Grubb farm, comprising two hundred acres located in Chester county, which property he operated with no small success until 1866 when he disposed of his entire interest in the place. He then went to Newtown Square, and for one year carried on business as a drover. This occupation he set aside to become proprietor of an hotel which he established, and which he conducted for thirty years up to 1897, and which is still carried on under different management. Besides the duties demanding his attention as hotel proprietor, he found time to devote to an entirely different branch of trade; that of auctioneering, and in addition to this, in season, he still conducted his cattle droving business. In 1897 he retired from active business pursuits, and built the handsome modern residence which he now occupies at Newtown Square. In politics Mr. Davis is a Republican; he has held the office of supervisor, and for one term acted as auditor.

Mr. Davis was married to Sarah J. Kirk, daughter of John and Hannah (Thomas) Kirk, in 1877. Their one son, Edward Nathan Grimm Davis, born October 20, 1880, is now engaged in operating a coal and lumber yard, and also has a well equipped store for the sale of agricultural implements, and indeed handles all kinds of desirable goods. This store is one of the finest of its kind in the county.

ADO LATCH, a successful farmer of Chester county, belongs to one of the oldest families in Pennsylvania, the founder, who was of English descent, having emigrated to this country about the time of the arrival of William Penn, and settled in that region known as the "Welsh tract," consisting of portions of both Chester and Montgomery counties. Throughout the successive generations the race of the Latches has been noted for the possession of splendid fighting qualities, combined with strong moral integrity.

Jacob Latch was born October 30, 1758, and was by trade a shoemaker, an occupation which he followed in connection with that of farming. His home was in Lower Merion township, Montgomery county, near the Black Horse Hotel. His estate consisted of one hundred acres which he cultivated as a dairy and produce farm. After reaching middle life he abandoned his trade and devoted himself exclusively to agricultural labors. During the Revolutionary war he served as a scout under Washington, being regarded as the best in a company of twenty, and receiving special mention from the commander-in-chief for his heroic deeds and daring exploits. He married, March 22, 1779, Jeannette, daughter of Peter and Mary (Gardiner) Rose, the former being the son of David Rose, who came to this country with William Penn, and settled in West Philadelphia. Mr. and Mrs. Latch were the parents of eight children, among them being a son, Peter R., mentioned at length hereinafter. The death of Mr. Latch took place June 29, 1845, and his wife died March 18, 1853, at a very advanced age.

Peter R. Latch, son of Jacob and Jeannette (Rose) Latch, was born September 9, 1799, in Merion township, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. He received a common school education, after which he learned the carpenter's trade, at which he worked all his life. He settled in Lower Merion township, near the General Wayne Hotel, and in 1834 purchased a small but valuable farm of fourteen and one-half acres in Tredyffrin township, which he cultivated with great care, thus combining agricultural pursuits with the practice of his trade. He was active in all the duties of a good citizen, and possessed in a high degree the respect of his townsmen, serving for nine years as school director and one year filling the office of treasurer. In politics he was a strong Democrat, but gave his vote to place General Taylor in the presidential chair, after which he returned to the old party, of which he remained a member until his death. He belonged to the Baptist church, in which he rendered active and zealous service. He married Johannah, born November 27, 1808, daughter of Samuel and Anna (Levering) Stearns. The former belonged to a family which came from England and settled in Roxborough, Philadelphia county. His wife, Anna, was the daughter of Major Levering, of Revolutionary fame, son of the first settler in Manayunk, Philadelphia, emigrating to this country from France. Mr. and Mrs. Latch were the parents of three sons, Samuel, William and Ado, mentioned at length hereinafter. Mr. Latch died February 23, 1878, and his wife passed away October 11, 1901, in the ninety-third year of her age.

Ado Latch, son of Peter R. and Hannah (Stearns) Latch, was born January 10, 1842, in Devon. He attended the common schools, and was from boyhood distinguished by those characteristics of energy and ambition which have been so marked throughout his career. His occupation has always been that of a farmer and school teacher. As a young man it was upon him that the charge of the estate chiefly devolved, his father being engaged in following his trade. Mr. Latch now lives on the homestead, where he conducts a flourishing dairy and poultry business, having about ninety-five head of poultry the year around. He is bound by no ties to any political party, and in religion is an independent thinker, being a member of no church.

Mr. Latch married, March 12, 1873, Virginia, eldest daughter of Thomas and Eliza (McPherson) Campbell, whose ancestors came originally from Scotland and were among the early settlers of Chester county. Mr. and Mrs. Latch are without children of their own, but have an adopted daughter, eleven years of age, who was born at Marshall's Creek, Monroe county, and was an inmate of the Baptist Orphanage in Angora, Philadelphia.

HARRY R. WILSON, of Tredyffrin township, a representative of the best agricultural enterprise of Chester county, Pennsylvania, belongs to the fifth generation of a family long identified with the social and industrial life of that locality. Of John Wilson, the great-great-grandfather of Harry R. Wilson, little is known beyond the fact that his life was passed as a farmer in Chester county, and that he lived to a great age. Among his children was David Wilson, born in Tredyffrin township. David Wilson was one of the most successful farmers of the Chester valley, where all his life was spent. At the time of his death in 1828, he owned two hundred acres of valuable land. His wife was Sarah Davis, who bore him six children—Elizabeth, Anna, Mary, Sarah, John and David.

David, youngest child of David and Sarah (Davis) Wilson, was born in Tredyffrin township, March 23, 1791. He was brought up on his father's farm, but when about twenty-five years old he went to Delaware county. There he remained for twelve years, returning to the old homestead in 1829 where he spent the rest of his life. He died in March, 1873, at the age of eighty-two. He was the owner of two farms, and his farming operations were on an unusually extensive scale. He was widely known as a dealer in live stock, and he was connected with various financial enterprises, being a stockholder and director in the National Bank of Norristown, and a director of the Chester Valley Railroad Company. A Whig in early life, he later voted with the Republican party. David Wilson married Eliza, a daughter of Adam Siter, of Delaware county, in 1811. The children born were as follows: 1. Sarah A., born in 1812; 2. Mary, born in 1814; 3. Caroline, born in 1816; 4. Edward S., born in 1818; 5. John M., born in 1820; 6. Amanda, born in 1823; 7. Winfield Scott, born in 1825, who became a railroad president and financier.

Edward S., fourth child and oldest son of David and Eliza (Siter) Wilson, was born April 8, 1818, in Delaware county, near Stratford.

When but a child his father removed to Chester county. Here, except for two years spent in the leather business in Philadelphia, Edward Wilson passed his life as a farmer. He was a prominent member of the Great Valley Presbyterian church, and he was treasurer of that society for many years. He married Sarah A., a daughter of William Ritter, of Tredyffrin township, in 1845. Three children were born of the union: William R., born June 13, 1846, and who died at the age of twenty-three, in Wyoming, where he was engaged in quartz crushing; Harry R., who was mentioned at the beginning of this article; Mollie L., born December 14, 1858. William Ritter, father of Sarah (Ritter) Wilson, was a native of Philadelphia, but in 1839 he bought a farm of one hundred and fifty acres in Tredyffrin township, on which he lived for twenty-seven years. He died there in 1856. He had been a bricklayer in Philadelphia, but he turned his hand successfully to farming, and became one of the substantial men of the township. He was a member of the Great Valley Presbyterian church. He voted with the Republican party. Mr. Ritter married Dorothea Allberger, and reared a family of seven children, as follows: 1. Sarah A., born August 2, 1817; 2. Mary, now of Philadelphia, the widow of Jacob S. Wonderly; 3. Henry B., a retired merchant of Philadelphia; 4. Harriet, who also lives in Philadelphia; 5. William, who died in 1864; 6. Emily, who married John W. Davis, of Philadelphia, but who now lives in Alabama; 7. Catherine, who became the wife of Samuel Piper, and resides in Sacramento, California.

Harry R., second child and second son of Edward S. and Sarah (Ritter) Wilson, was born in Tredyffrin township, October 18, 1851. He early evinced an aptitude for the affairs of the farm, and after finishing his education, which was gained in the public schools of the township and at the Tremont Seminary in Norristown, he turned to farming as an occupation. He is a skillful manager, and has been successful in his business ventures. Like his father, he is an interested member of the Great Valley Presbyterian church, and is a member of its board of trustees. He has served the society also as elder and treasurer. He has been a director of the Malvern National Bank since 1891. He was a member of the school board and its treasurer. His political interests are with the Republican party.

Mr. Wilson married Belle, a daughter of John and Anna Esler, of Malvern, in 1882. Three sons and two daughters have been born of the marriage: William R., born February 26, 1884, died July 1, 1891; John E., born December 12, 1886; Edward S., born August 9, 1888; Marion D., born June 17, 1890; Alice, born November 25, 1891; Charles Davis, born May 1, 1893; Elanore Smith, born September 26, 1894; Dorothea Sheridan, born February 9, 1897.

GEORGE BEAVER WERSLER, a prosperous farmer of Tredyffrin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a descendant of a German ancestry who have been residents of the state of Pennsylvania since early colonial times, having settled in Chester county prior to the Revolutionary war.

George Wersler, great-grandfather of George B. Wersler, was the son of a Lutheran minister, and in 1775 removed from his native county of Bucks and purchased a tract of twenty acres of land in Charlestown, now Schuylkill township, whereon he erected a large sawmill and workshop. In addition to his trade of carpenter he was a farmer, conducting operations on two farms, each containing one hundred acres; he was also a surveyor, and in this capacity surveyed a large portion of the land in Chester county and in the coal regions around Wilkesbarre; he manufactured buttons for the uniforms of the Continental army, being the first to use shanks on such buttons, and later he manufactured a large number of different sizes of spinning wheels which found a ready sale among the residents of the neighborhood, nearly all of whom manufactured their own clothing in those early days. He served as a captain during the Revolutionary war, was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a consistent member of the Protestant Episcopal church. He married Anna Maria: Golden, of Bucks county, and their children were: John G., Rebecca and Elizabeth. Mr. Wersler died at his home in Charlestown township at the advanced age of eighty-four years.

John G. Wersler, grandfather of George B. Wersler, was born in Charlestown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1781, and in this vicinity he spent his entire life, being by occupation a farmer and surveyor. He was a prominent citizen of the township, served as deputy sheriff in 1810 under George Hartman; a few years later he was a candidate for the sheriffalty, but was defeated by two weaker candidates combining against him; in 1818 he was appointed by Governor William Findlay to the office of prothonotary and clerk of the courts of Chester county, a position he held from March 25, 1818, to February 29, 1821, and he was also the incumbent of several minor township offices. He served with distinction in the war of 1812, first as captain of a company bearing the name of Great Valley Light Infantry, which he was instrumental in organizing, and later as captain of the Chester County Blues, so named on account of their blue uniform. Subsequently he was promoted to the rank of major of volunteers in his brigade, being noted for his efficiency and courage, and for many years he served as captain of a company of state militia. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion an Episcopalian, serving as deacon and trustee and also superintendent of the Sunday school of St. Peter's Episcopal church.

In 1810 John G. Wersler married Mariah Davis, a daughter of Hezekiah Davis, who was born in Charlestown township, Chester county, was a saddler by trade, and also owned and operated a farm of one hundred and twenty-five acres. Mr. Davis was elected a member of the state legislature, and represented Chester county one term in that honorable body. He also served as quartermaster during the Revolutionary war, and at the battle of Long Island he was captured by the British and held prisoner for some time, during which he formed the acquaintance of Anna Schenck, a descendant of General Schenck, of Brooklyn, New York, whom he subsequently married, and they became the parents of nine children. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wersler: Milton; Anna M., who became the wife of B. G. Rapp; George; Harriet, who married Thomas Hampton; Anna, Albert H. and William L. Wersler. The father of these children died November 20, 1876, in the ninety-fifth year of his age.

George Wersler, father of George B. Wersler, was a native of Charlestown township, Chester county, his birth having occurred there February 2, 1816. He received a common school education, after which he engaged in farming in his native township, following that pursuit for thirty years. The following eight years were spent in West Tredyffrin township, where he engaged in farming, and for a similar number of years he pursued the same occupation on the General Wayne farm. Subsequently he purchased a farm of one hundred and seventeen acres, formerly the property of Mr. Beaver, his father-in-law, and here he resided up to the time of his death. His political affiliations were with the Democratic party, and his religious sentiments were in accord with the doctrines of the Presbyterian church. On February 17, 1838, Mr. Wersler married Ann Elizabeth Beaver, daughter of George and Ann Elizabeth Beaver, of Tredyffrin township, Chester county, the former named being one of several children born to Devault Beaver, who bequeathed to each of his children, before his death, a farm. The Devault station, in Chester county, was named in honor of the Devault family, one of the oldest and most honored families residing in that section of the county. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wersler, namely: Mary Louisa, widow of David Clemmens; Anna May, wife of David Detwiler; Mariah Ella; Ida R., deceased; Elizabeth, who became the wife of William Swearer; George Beaver; Clara Teresa, who became the wife of Archie Catanach; Emma W., and John G., deceased. The death of Mr. Wersler occurred in the year 1896.

George B. Wersler, eldest son of George and Ann E. Wersler, was born on the farm he now owns and operates in Tredyffrin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, October 29, 1856. His education was acquired at the public schools of Willistown township and Salem School, Tredyffrin township, and his business career has been devoted to farming pursuits, which he has conducted successfully on the old homestead. The farm is equipped with all modern and improved machinery, the soil is exceedingly fertile, and in every respect it is a desirable property and home. In politics and religion Mr. Wersler adheres to the principles of his forefathers, being a Democrat in politics, and a Presbyterian in religion.

In February, 1882, Mr. Wersler was united in marriage to Alice Finch, a daughter of Samuel and Esther Finch, residents of Tredyffrin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where Mr. Finch engaged in the occupation of shoemaking.

RICHARD JACOBS BALDWIN. Baldwin is an old name and quite common as early as the conquest of England. It appears in the roll of Battle Abbey and in English history there was a Baldwin as early as 672 A. D. Baldwins were Earls of Flanders from the one contemporary with Alfred the Great, and whose son Baldwin (second), married Elstruth, daughter of Alfred, to the Baldwin (fifth), who married the daughter of Robert, of France, and whose daughter Matilda, married William the Conqueror. The first Latin Emperor of Constantinople was a Baldwin. That the name was in Flanders in Normandy and perhaps elsewhere in France is well known. Genealogists have learned that the name is an old one and known, and in some cases common in Denmark, Germany and Italy. One authority says, "It is of Saxon origin and signifies 'Bold Winner.'"

Richard J. Baldwin, prominently identified with the mercantile pursuits of Chadd's Ford, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, is a descendant of John Baldwin, who came from Oxfordshire, England, about 1682, settled in Aston township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, where for a number of years he was extensively engaged in the carpenter trade, but subsequently became a merchant in Chester, Pennsylvania, and acquired a large and valuable estate. In his religion John Baldwin was a firm believer in the doctrines of the Friends' faith, as was also his wife, who previous to her marriage, 4 mo., 4, 1689, with Mr. Baldwin, was the widow of Mr. Turner; her maiden name was Catherine Carter. Through his maternal grandfather, Richard J. Baldwin is a descendant of Hannah Price, who in the eighteenth generation is a descendant of King John of England and Isabella his wife.

The line of descent from John Baldwin I, the founder of the American branch of the family, is as follows: John Baldwin II, who married 4 mo., 11, 1719, Hannah Johnson; John Baldwin III, who married 9 mo., 9, 1743, Ann Pierce, and in 1751 settled in East Caln on a portion of land (500 acres) purchased by his grandfather on 2 mo., 23, 1702-3, the estate being still in the family name; Caleb Baldwin, who married 11 mo., 24, 1774, Charity Cope; Jonathan Cope Baldwin, married, in 1822, Mary Ann Jacobs; he inherited half of his father's land in East Caln, was much interested in horticulture and served for many years as president of the Chester County Horticultural Society; John Erskine Baldwin, who married Mary G. Hoopes, and Richard Jacobs Baldwin, the subject of this sketch, who married Sarah Worrall Temple. All of these were Friends and in full and regular standing in the Friends Meeting House.

John Erskine Baldwin, father of Richard J. Baldwin, was born in East Caln township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, March 28, 1823, and after acquiring the usual advantages of a village school in those days attended the Westtown Friends Boarding School, and then devoted his attention to farming pursuits. In his politics he was a staunch supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and in religion followed the faith of his forefathers, that of a Friend. He was united in marriage to Mary Griffith Hoopes, born in Westtown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, May 13, 1828, the daughter of Isaac Hoopes, Jr., who was in turn the son of Isaac Hoopes, Sr., the son of Abraham Hoopes, the son of Daniel Hoopes, who was one of seventeen children, the son of Joshua Hoopes, who came to this country from Cleveland, Yorkshire, England, in 1683.

Richard Jacobs Baldwin, son of John E. and Mary G. Baldwin, was born in East Bradford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, March 1, 1853. He obtained an excellent literary education in the common schools of his neighborhood, and at the Maplewood and Kennett Square Academies, and after completing his studies he learned the trade of carpenter. At the age of twenty-three he entered the mercantile business, first at Belvidere, now Whitford, West Whiteland, Chester county, and in 1878 moved to Chadds Ford, Delaware county, where he has continued in the same line of trade up to the present time (1903). Mr. Baldwin is a Republican in politics, and during President Harrison's administration was appointed postmaster at Chadd's Ford, performing the duties of the office in a highly creditable and efficient manner; he was elected a member of the House of Representatives, serving during the sessions of 1895, 1897 and 1899; in the fall of 1901 he was elected to the office of recorder of deeds for Delaware county, Pennsylvania. He is a member of the Young Men's Republican Club, the Springhaven Golf Club of Media, the Brandywine Golf Club of Brandywine Summit, Pennsylvania, and an honorary member of Media Fire Club. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masons, Odd Fellows, Improved Order of Red Men, the American Mechanics, and Patrons of Husbandry.

In Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1873, Mr. Baldwin married Sarah Worrall Temple, a daughter of Thomas B. and Elizabeth S. (Worrall) Temple, the former named being first a tanner by trade but later interested in agricultural pursuits; in his religion he was a Friend. Tradition says that William Temple, founder of the family in America, and who brought the Temple family Bible with him (which is in the possession of John Temple of Lionville, Pennsylvania,) was smuggled to this country in 1714 by his step-mother after his father's death, that her son might inherit the estate and title in England; his father was Sir William Temple. Mrs. Baldwin received her education in a private school of her native county and Eaton Institute, Kennett Square, Pennsylvania. She is a descendant from the Taylor, Brinton, Broomall, Worrall, Thatcher and Sharples families, who emigrated from England in the latter part of the seventeenth century. Their children are: 1. Mary Griffith, born November 16, 1873; 2. Thomas B. Temple, born May 12, 1875, obtained his education in the common schools, then entered Martin Academy, Kennett Square, later was a student at the State Normal School, West Chester, and completed his education at the Temple College, Philadelphia. He is now a merchant and the present postmaster at Chadd's Ford, Pennsylvania; he married Mary Cummings Watkin; 3. Helen Brinton, born May 14, 1882; 4. John Erskine, born September 3, 1883; 5. Florence Edith, born December 1, 1885; 6. Richard Lindley, born January 1, 1887.

HARRY S. WALKER. The Walker family of Chester county, Pennsylvania, as appears by certain records, received its name in ancient times from the fact that certain members of the family held various positions in the Royal Forests, such as Verderers, King's Foresters or Walkers, having the custody of certain walks and boundaries of allotments. It was called "One of the Mighty Sixty."

The American branch of the Walker family is over two centuries in age, and was founded by Lewis Walker, a native of Marioneth, Wales. He left his native country for the United States in 1686, and landed in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he resided for one year. He then removed to Radnor township, Delaware county, but after a short residence in that locality, he located in Tredyffrin township, Chester county, where he conducted farming operations on a tract of three hundred and eighty acres of land, purchased from William Penn. On February 22, 1693, Mr. Walker married Mary Morris, also a native of Wales, who emigrated to this country on the same ship with him. They were the parents of five children. Mr. Walker's death occurred on December 20, 1728, at an advanced age; he was survived by his wife, who passed away in the year 1748, aged eighty years.

Harry S. Walker, a representative of the seventh generation, was born January 23, 1853. He acquired an excellent literary education, which thoroughly qualified him for an active business career. He was actively connected for many years with the Peoples' Bank in the city of Philadelphia, but at the present time (1903) is living a retired life near the town of New Centerville, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Mr. Walker is a man of great intelligence, a pleasant conversationalist, and stands high as an honorable and upright citizen. He is a Republican in politics.

Mr. Walker was united in marriage to Ada B. Stewart, and one daughter has been born to them, Eleanor Walker.

ISAAC S. BAILEY. Among the distinctively representative and well known citizens of Tredyffrin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, none are more worthy of mention than Isaac S. Bailey, who was born in the city of Chester, Chester county, Pennsylvania, May 3, 1829, who has taken an active part in political affairs, and whose business and private life has been characterized by energy, enterprise and noble purpose.

The educational advantages enjoyed by Isaac S. Bailey were acquired at what is known as the Sugartown public school, and in this institution he gained his first ideas of the perseverance by means of which he has in the main accomplished success in life. He served as an apprentice at the blacksmithing trade, and after becoming thoroughly proficient he served as a journeyman at the shipyard for four years. He then pursued the same line of industry for fourteen years at Howelltown; was employed for seventeen years at Bulls Corners; then in Charlestown township for one year, after which he abandoned his trade and turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, operating a farm in Tredyffrin township. By his energy and perseverance, Mr. Bailey soon placed this land under a high state of cultivation and these broad acres now yield goodly harvests which amply repay him for the time and labor expended upon them. In his political views he is a firm supporter of the principles of Democracy, was elected by that party to the office of constable, which position he held for two years, and so faithful and efficient was he in the discharge of his duties that he was requested by his fellow citizens to accept a third term, which he persistently declined. He is a man of quiet and unassuming manner, and by his exemplary life has won and retained the high esteem and confidence of his business associates and social friends.

Mr. Bailey was united in marriage to Elizabeth Umblely, a daughter of Thomas Umblely, a manufacturer of woolen blankets. Five children were born of this union, namely: John, deceased; Harvey, deceased; Powell; Ida, wife of John M. Yarnell, who is a successful agriculturist of Willistown township, and Morris S., unmarried, who resides at home with his parents.

HENRY CLIFTON PRIZER. The family of which Henry C. Prizer, an enterprising and prosperous agriculturist of East Nantmeal township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a worthy representative, is of German extraction and was planted in the state of Pennsylvania at an early period of its history. The first ancestor of the family of whom there is any record was a native of Montgomery county, from whence he removed to Berks county in early manhood, and subsequently became a resident of Chester county, spending the latter years of his life in this vicinity, where his death occurred at an advanced age. His occupation was that of farming; he married and reared a family, one of his sons being named Frederick Prizer.

Frederick Prizer (great-grandfather) was born near "The Trappe," Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, in 1764, but his parents removed to East Coventry township, Chester county, when he was a young child. He obtained a common school education, and in early life learned the trade of carpenter, which he followed in addition to agricultural pursuits; he was also the owner and operator of a sawmill which yielded a goodly profit. He was an active and devout member of the Evangelical Lutheran church, and his political affiliations were with the Democratic party. Mr. Prizer married Susannah Brownback, daughter of Henry Brownback, and three children were born of this union—Hannah, John and Henry Prizer. The father of these children died in 1820, in the fifty-sixth year of his age.

Henry Prizer (grandfather) was born in East Coventry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, June 13, 1802. He was reared on the farm, educated in the common schools of the neighborhood and upon attaining man's estate turned his attention to farming and saw-milling. Both these occupations proving profitable and remunerative, in 1867, he was enabled to retire from active business and enjoy the fruits of his many years of labor in his handsome and commodious home which was situated in East Coventry township. He was one of the first members of Brownback's Reformed church, where he served in the capacity of deacon and elder; later he became an adherent of the Methodist denomination, and in 1844 was instrumental in founding the New Bethel Methodist Episcopal church, in which he was leader, steward and superintendent of the Sunday school connected with it. Politically he was a Democrat, later a Republican and finally a staunch Prohibitionist. On March 30, 1826, Mr. Prizer married Elizabeth Diffendoffer, daughter of Henry Diffendoffer, of Pughtown, Chester county. Their children were—Sarah, Elizabeth, Leah, Harman, Susan and Esalindah Prizer.

Harman Prizer (father) was born on the old homestead in East Coventry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, November 5, 1832. After completing his education in the common schools he assisted in the operation of the home farm, but in 1862 he purchased one hundred and twenty acres of choice land in his native township which was formerly the property of the Heister family. His land was well improved and under a high state of cultivation; he had an extensive and flourishing dairy and a large portion of the milk was shipped to Philadelphia. In 1883 the East Coventry (now Elgin) Creamery was organized, and Mr. Prizer was one of the earliest promoters of that enterprise. He was a stockholder and director in the Citizen's National Bank of Pottstown, being connected with that institution since its organization in March, 1892. His first church affiliations were with the New Bethel Methodist Episcopal church, in which he served as trustee, but later he became a member of Brownback's German Reformed church, serving in the capacity of superintendent of the Sunday school.

On October 28, 1855, Mr. Prizer married Mary A. Wanger, daughter of Abraham and Mary (Bersey) Wanger, of North Coventry township, Chester county. Their children were: L. Ella, born in 1856, became the wife of John Buckwalter; Henry Clifton, born October 5, 1857; Flora K., born February 19, 1859, became the wife of John Schlichter; William W., born

September 15, 1860, died in infancy; William A., born September 10, 1861, married Anna R. Hallman; G. Milton, born July 19, 1863, married Emma High; Anna L., born June 15, 1865, became the wife of Addison Miller; Rose M., born March 29, 1868, died at the age of four years; N. Bella, born August 29, 1869; F. Newton, born February 6, 1874, and Irwin W., who died in infancy.

Henry C. Prizer, eldest son of Harman and Mary A. Prizer, was born in East Coventry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, October 5, 1857. At the age of eighteen years he completed his educational advantages which were obtained in the public schools of his native county, and for a number of years thereafter he resided on the old homestead and assisted his father with the varied duties connected with the management of an estate. At the time of his marriage he located in East Nantmeal township, near the postoffice of St. Peters, where he purchased one hundred and fifty-two acres of productive farming land with a dairy attached of twenty-four head of well selected cows. Mr. Prizer is a Republican in his political views and at the present time (1903) is a director of the school board of East Nantmeal township. He is an attendant of Brownback's Reformed church, of which his wife is a member.

Mr. Prizer was united in marriage to Mary L. Guest, daughter of Isaac and Sarah Guest, residents of East Nantmeal township, and they were the parents of three children, all of whom are now deceased; Isaac Guest was a farmer by occupation. Mrs. Prizer died October 28, 1896, leaving no issue. She was educated at Millersville Normal School at Lancaster, Pennsylvania. She was by nature an artist and devoted about all of her spare time during her life to painting. There are many fine specimens of her handiwork adorning the walls of Mr. Prizer's elegant country home. She was an active member of the Baptist church, of which she was the organist; was a woman who was beloved and admired by all who appreciated a sound intellect and a pure character. Her remains were interred in the cemetery of the Baptist church in which she worshiped in East Nantmeal township.

In 1900 Mr. Prizer married for his second wife, Annie C. Eggeling, who was one of a family of eight children that were born to Lewis C. Eggeling, a cabinet maker of South Coventry. They are the parents of one child, Raymond E. Prizer, born May 5, 1901.

The present Mrs. Prizer (second wife) was a student of the Ursineus College and of the State Normal School at West Chester. Previous to her marriage she taught school for seven years. She has been an active member of Brownback's Reformed church for a number of years, and has held a membership in that church without interruption since her fourteenth year.

JOB S. PUGH. Among the old and honorable families of Chester county, Pennsylvania, who have been actively and prominently identified with the interests of the town of East Nottingham almost from the beginning of its history, is the Pugh family, which was founded in the United States by John Pugh, supposed to be a descendant of a Welsh lineage, who with his wife, Jane Pugh, were among the first residents of East Nottingham, and as far as known their children were as follows: 1. Mary, who became the wife of John Barrett; 2. William, mentioned in the following paragraph; 3. John, who was married twice; his first wife was Sarah Littler, and his second wife was Hannah Bennett; 4. Sarah, who became the wife of William White; 5. Jane, who became the wife of John Brown. John Pugh, the pioneer ancestor, died at his home in East Nottingham, April 24, 1760.

William Pugh, eldest son of John and Jane Pugh, was a resident of London Grove, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1771. He was married three times. His first wife was Mary (Brown) Pugh, daughter of Messer and Jane Brown of East Nottingham, and the ceremony was performed February 8, 1742; his second wife was Sarah (Chandler) Pugh, daughter of Jacob Chandler, their marriage was celebrated March 13, 1755, and her death occurred July 27, 1756; his third wife was Patience (Casner) Pugh. He was the father of the following named children—Jean, Dinah, John, Jesse, Mary and William Pugh.

John Pugh, second son of William and Mary (Brown) Pugh, was born June 9, 1747, and married, May 9, 1771, Rachel Barrett, daughter of Thomas and Hannah Barrett, of East Nottingham, Chester county. Their children were—Jesse, born March 1, 1772, died October 16, 1847; Thomas, born November 17, 1773; William, born December 4, 1775; John, born October 11, 1778; Mary, born February 16, 1781, became the wife of Jacob Cope; Hannah, born February 16, 1781, became the wife of William Howell; Ellis, born February 25, 1785; and David, born September 8, 1788.

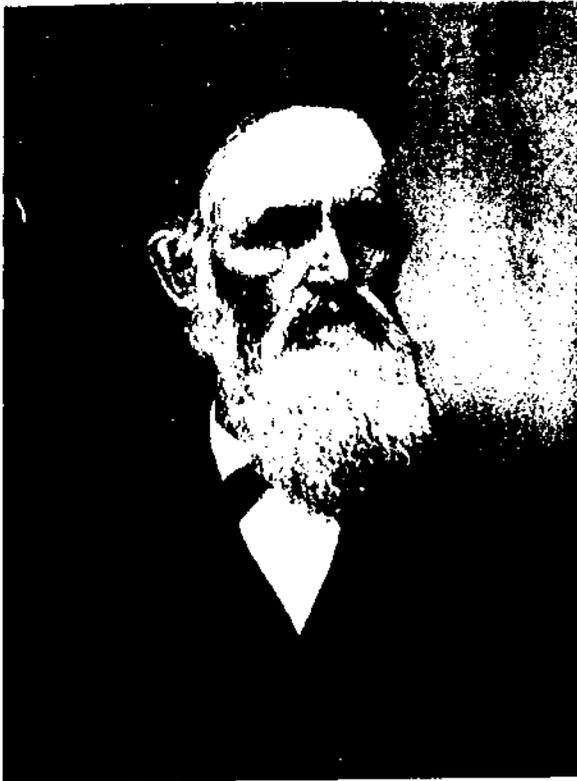

Jesse Pugh, eldest son of John and Rachel (Barrett) Pugh, was born March 1, 1772, and at the age of five years was brought by his parents to their new home in East Nottingham. He acquired the limited education afforded by the common schools of the day, and achieved a large degree of financial success by following the occupations of farming and blacksmithing. He married, March 19, 1795, Elizabeth Hudson, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Hudson, of his home town. They were the parents of ten children—Rachel, Lewis, Amos, Rachel, Adrianna, Reece and Evan (twins), Abner, Elizabeth and Mary W. Pugh. Jesse Pugh, father of these children, died October 16, 1847; his wife, Elizabeth (Hudson) Pugh, died July 18, 1825.

Lewis Pugh, eldest son of Jesse and Elizabeth (Hudson) Pugh, was born December 4, 1796, married, September 12, 1822, Mary Hutton, born September 8, 1797, a daughter of Hielt and Sarah Hutton, and they were the parents of the following named children—Rebecca, born June 30, 1823, died July 1, 1823; Susanna, born October 11, 1824; Eliabeth, born April 12, 1826, died July 10, 1847; Evan, born February 29, 1828; Enoch, born February 2, 1830, died unmarried; and John L., born March 2, 1832, whose death occurred from drowning, November 15, 1834. Lewis Pugh, father of these children, died July 20, 1840.

Dr. Evan Pugh, eldest son of Lewis and Mary (Hutton) Pugh, was born at Jordan Bank, East Nottingham township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, February 29, 1828. At the age of sixteen he was apprenticed to learn the trade of blacksmith, but this occupation not being congenial to his tastes and inclinations he was released from his indentures at the expiration of two years, after which he became a student at the Manual Labor School, at Whitestone, New York. After his return home he taught a district school for one winter, and about the year 1850 established a boarding and day-school three miles south of Oxford, which was called the Jordan Bank Seminary. In the autumn of 1853 he went to Europe, and for four years was a diligent and successful student of natural and mathematical science and practical chemistry in the Universities of Leipsic, Gottingen, Heidelberg and Paris. From 1857 to 1859 he devoted his attention to a series of investigations in the laboratory of J. B. Lawes, the well known agricultural chemist of England, at his estate of Rothamstead, near London. In the autumn of 1859, after an absence of six years, Dr. Pugh returned home and assumed the presidency of the Farmers' High School, near Bellefonte, Pennsylvania, the name of which was later changed to that of the Agricultural College of Pennsylvania. This was the first institution of the kind established in the United States, and under the competent supervision of Dr. Pugh, who was gifted with a mind of unusual vigor and clearness, and distinguished in a remarkable degree for the utmost purity and rectitude in thought, word and deed, was attaining a high degree of success and usefulness. On February 4, 1864, Dr. Pugh married Rebecca Valentine, of Bellefonte, Pennsylvania. His death occurred April 29, 1864, in the thirty-seventh year of his age.

Amos Pugh, second son of Jesse and Elizabeth (Hudson) Pugh, was born in the old ancestral home in East Nottingham, Chester county.

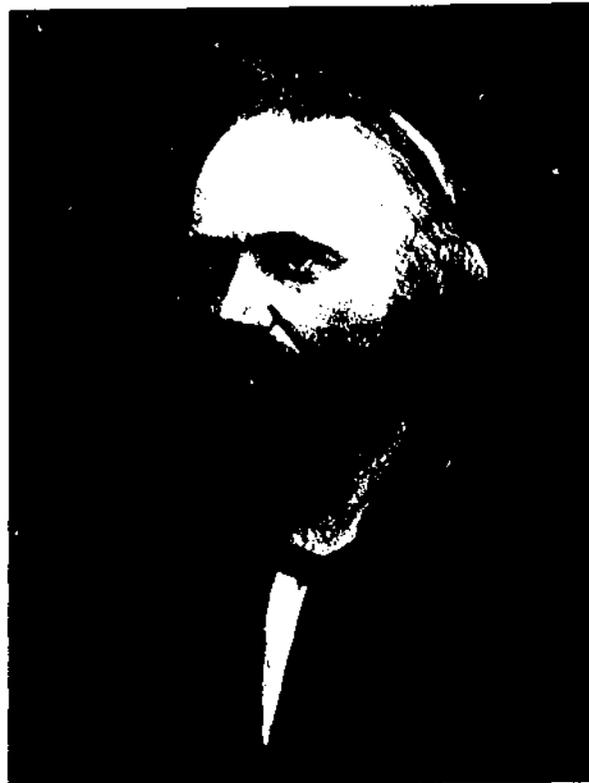

JOB S. PUGH.

EVAN PUGH.

AMOS PUGH.

REECE PUGH.

August 15, 1798, and, like his father, became a farmer after acquiring an education in the common schools of the town. He was interested in all matters of public welfare, and served the community in the capacity of school director for many years. He was a member of the Society of Friends. Mr. Pugh was married twice; his first wife was Elizabeth Sidwell, daughter of Job and Sarah (Trimble) Sidwell, and the children born of this union were as follows: 1. Job S., mentioned at length hereinafter; 2. Reece, also mentioned hereinafter; 3. Jesse, unmarried; 4. Chandler, married Phœbe Leak, now deceased, and they were the parents of three children; 5. Townsend, married Annie Crowl, and three children were the issue of this union; 6. Sarah E., unmarried. Elizabeth (Sidwell) Pugh, mother of these children, died May 6, 1838. The second wife of Amos Pugh was Mary A. Bye, daughter of Amos and Deborah (Paxson) Bye, the former named a farmer of Elk township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Their children were—1. Charles B., married Melissa Kirk; 2. Lydia A., became the wife of Stephen Coates, and they are the parents of four children; 3. Deborah, became the wife of Eri Poley, and two children have been born of this union; 4. Amos Lewis, married Alice Wilson, and their family consists of two children. Amos Pugh, father of these children, died December 12, 1885, and the mother, Mary A. (Bye) Pugh, died April 4, 1901; she was born June 14, 1809.

Job S. Pugh, eldest son of Amos and Elizabeth (Sidwell) Pugh, was born on the ancestral farm in East Nottingham, Chester county, December 2, 1826. He was educated at Kennett Square, Chester county, and after laying aside his school books he returned to the old home and conducted a sorghum mill on the property. Later he increased his operations by opening the old Pugh bone mill in the same township, which he purchased in 1873 and operated on his own account for twenty years. About the year 1895 he removed to his present home in the borough of Oxford. He has served his town as assessor, and is an active and loyal supporter of the principles of Republicanism. He is a birthright member of the Society of Friends, and has always been prompt and faithful in his attendance at their meetings. Mr. Pugh is unmarried.

Dr. Reece Pugh, second son of Amos and Elizabeth (Sidwell) Pugh, was born September 17, 1828, in East Nottingham township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. His educational advantages were obtained in the common schools adjacent to his home, and in early life he served an apprenticeship at the milling trade which he followed for a period of five years. He then devoted his attention to the study of dentistry, and subsequently practiced his profession at Kennett Square, New London and at his home in East Nottingham. The next enterprise in which he engaged was photography, and during his seven years' connection with that business he traveled extensively throughout the United States. During the years 1865 and 1866 he gave his entire attention to reading medicine, then entered the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He practiced his profession in East Nottingham until 1871, during which time he acquired an extensive and lucrative patronage, then removed to the borough of Oxford where he engaged in the jewelry and watchmaking trade, becoming noted for his mechanical genius. He was a man of varied accomplishments, studious and industrious habits, possessed a well stored and philosophic mind, and therefore his advice and counsel were eagerly sought for on matters of importance. His death, which occurred August 8, 1902, at the home of his brother, Job S. Pugh, on Broad street, Oxford borough, Pennsylvania, after a few weeks' illness, was sincerely mourned by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. His remains were interred in the Little Elk Friends' graveyard.

JACOB THEODORE WHEATLEY, of East Nantmeal township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is now occupied with dairy husbandry, after years spent in various other lines of work. He was born in Cumberland county, September 20, 1862, and lived in West Pikeland township, attending the Mt. Vernon school until he was nine years old. His father died during this early period of his childhood, and his tenth year was spent on the farm of Albin Pennypacker. The next year he spent with the family of Abram King, and the year following he went to a farm in West Brandywine. With the West Brandywine family, he removed to West Nantmeal, and after a year returned again to Brandywine. In 1877 he went to Philadelphia, where he worked in a meat market; but he soon returned to Kimberton and took up farming again. In 1881 he went to work in the Charlestown creamery, where he staid for two years, giving up his place to operate a threshing machine, a business which he followed for the four succeeding years. Taking advantage of his experience in the Charlestown creamery, he found employment with the Hustens creamery, at present conducted by Brendlinger Brothers. Here he stayed for three years and three months without losing a day; but at the end of that time he went to farming in East Coventry, where he remained for two years. In 1897 he moved to the farm in East Nantmeal township which he now occupies. This farm is one of the old landmarks of that section, and 1897 marked the centennial of the buildings. One hundred and eighty-four acres of land are comprised in the farm, on which Mr. Wheatley keeps a dairy of twelve cows, delivering his milk at the Fairmount creamery. Mr. Wheatley is an earnest member of the Lutheran church, and strongly identifies himself with the Republican party.

He married Anna L., daughter of Benjamin and Sarah Wagner, neither of whom are now living. The mother died five years before her husband, who fell a victim to heart failure while loading hay, July 16, 1903, at West Pikeland. This worthy couple were members of the Baptist church, and brought up a family of five children, who were as follows: 1. Anna L., born July 9, 1862, the wife of Jacob T. Wheatley; 2. Monroe, born in March, 1864, who married Sally Longnecker and has one child, is a blacksmith living in West Vincent township, with a shop at Wilson's Corners; 3. Elmer, born in August, 1866, married Laura Bat in 1891, and has one child; 4. Emma, born in December, 1868, married, in July, 1888, Daniel Brownback, of Phoenixville, who operates an electric crane for the Phoenix Iron Company; this couple have two children; 5. Christian Wagner, born in 1870, is a blacksmith with a shop at East Vincent; his wife was Alice Fry. The children of Jacob T. and Anna (Wagner) Wheatley are as follows: Lillie May, born October 24, 1887; Clarence Elmer, born August 17, 1889; Calvin L., born July 28, 1892; Earl F., born July 21, 1894; Eva C., born May 1, 1899; Elma M., born August 6, 1901. The mother of Mr. Wheatley married as her second husband, Abram Shoffner of West Pikeland.

LEWIS TEMPLIN, one of the substantial men and public-spirited citizens of East Nantmeal township, is well-known in several lines of business and prominent as one of the staunch supporters of the conservative wing of the Democratic party in Chester county, Pennsylvania.

He is a son of James and Martha (Morrison) Templin. They came of strong-fibred stock, and were the parents of a large family, as follows: Elizabeth, deceased; Sarah, who became the wife of Nelson Green, at one time engaged in carpenter work at Concordville, and afterward a builder and contractor; Susan, wife of Pennell Smith, a farmer of Delaware county, Pennsylvania; Lewis, of whom a more detailed sketch appears; Mary, who married John Wynn, at one time a hotel proprietor, but now a shoe manufacturer at Pottstown, Pennsylvania; Rebecca, who became the wife of Davis Amo, of Warwick township, a collier by trade; George (1), who died young; George (2), who also died in early life; Martha, deceased; William, of whom a sketch appears elsewhere in this volume.

Lewis Templin, born October 29, 1835, in East Vincent township, was the fourth child and first son of James and Martha (Morrison) Templin. He went to school in East Vincent township and in Nantmeal village, and at sixteen years of age he began to learn the carpenter's trade with John Neely, of East Nantmeal township. For five years after finishing his apprenticeship, he carried on an independent business as contractor and builder. He then moved to the farm which he now occupies in East Nantmeal township. This farm he has cultivated since 1868. It consists of seventy acres of highly productive land, and yields a varied line and high average of crops under its owner's management, for Mr. Templin is an exponent of intensive agriculture. He believes that a small farm well-tilled and carefully studied as to its adaptability, yields a far better return for a given amount of labor than a large farm indifferently cultivated. When this idea becomes general, or when increase of population makes intensive cultivation necessary, our unkept country districts may take on the trim and thrifty appearance that characterizes the landscape in the civilizations of Europe. Mr. Templin is greatly interested in all matters for the external improvement or the moral uplift of his township. He is a Methodist, and has administered most of the local offices in a limited political field. He has served at different times as school director, supervisor, constable and he made a strong stand for the gold standard at the time the split came in the Democratic party, and has since been a leader of that faction.

Mr. Templin married, in 1862, Elizabeth J., daughter of Jonathan Wynn of Chester county, whose wife was Elizabeth Richards, and five children were born of the union, namely: John R., born January 12, 1837, who married Mary, sister of Lewis Templin, is now living in retirement at Pottstown, Montgomery county; his activities have been various, as he was many years a farmer, was at one time engaged in the leather business, and afterward proprietor of a hotel; Rachel Ann, born April 5, 1839, who married Clayton R. Pike in 1858; he was a farmer, now deceased, leaving his wife and three children; Howard, born May 6, 1844, who married Clara Ewing in 1863 and has one child, has been since 1874 living in San Francisco, where he is employed as clerk in a lumber yard; Jacob D., of whom a sketch appears elsewhere in this work; Elizabeth J., already mentioned as the wife of Lewis Templin. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Templin are three in number, and are as follows: 1. Mary Emma, born April 9, 1863, who married James Elmer Entriken of West Chester, a tinsmith by trade, has two children, Helen, born October 27, 1890, and Sarah B., born July 5, 1894; 2. Marshall W. born April 3, 1866, who married Della Mower, in 1891, is a painter and resides in Bucktown; has two children, LaRue, born June 6, 1892, and Wynn, born May 24, 1897; 3. Jonathan W., born July 26, 1869, married Annie Swineheart, in 1894, who died August 13, 1899, leaving one child, Emma E.; he is a painter, working in Bucktown with his brother.

JOHN K. SPANGLER, an enterprising and progressive agriculturist of Barneston, Chester county, Pennsylvania, noted for his practicability and sound judgment, is a worthy representative of that class of men who have come to the United States from their native land, adopted the customs and methods of this country and in due course of time become loyal and true citizens of this great and glorious Republic.

He was born in Wurtemberg, Oehringen, Pedelbach, Germany, December 7, 1862, attended the public schools of the community and completed his education at the age of sixteen years. He then entered the brewing establishment of Philip H. Beitz, a cousin of John H. Beitz, the well known brewer, where he served an apprenticeship of five years. At the expiration of this period of time he abandoned this line of industry, and entered the German army, where he served as a dragoon for the full term of his enlistment, three years. Having decided that the opportunities for financial success were greater in the new world than the old, he engaged passage on the steamer "Netherland" in 1887 and landed in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He remained in that city for ten days and then located in Willistown township, Chester county, where he was employed on a farm for a period of two and a half years, after which he removed to Doe Run, and for one year was employed as a farmer by E. Maull & Company. The following three years he conducted farming on his own account in Concordville township, then entered into an agreement with John Hughes by which he was to work his farm on a one-half share for three years, after which he removed to White Horse, Chester county, where he also rented from Josiah Hypert for one year on the same terms. The following two years he cultivated a farm in Goshenville, which rented from Mr. Sharpless and at the expiration of this period of time he purchased his present farm at Barneston, Chester county, consisting of one hundred acres of rich and arable land, whereon he has conducted a general line of farming for four years. His ground is under a high state of cultivation, and his entire estate including residence and out buildings indicate the careful and thoroughgoing supervision of an experienced and careful manager. Mr. Spangler is a member of the Lutheran church, a firm adherent of the principles of the Republican party, was formerly a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, but not being able to attend their meetings he withdrew his name from the membership of the organization.

In 1883 occurred the marriage of John K. Spangler and Christina Haum, daughter of Christian Haum, of Germany. Mr. Haum was a mason by trade, and reared a family of three children—two sons and one daughter—the sons are natives of Germany and have both served the stipulated time in the German army. Eleven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Spangler, all of whom are unmarried. John C., employed on the farm of Amos Atkins, of Glen Mawr, Chester county; Fred B., employed by the Reading Railroad Company; Henry A., employed as a farm hand in Chester county; Max M.; Albert; Emma A.; Elmer L.; Bessie A.; Clyde R.; Lillie A.; and Rosie E. Spangler.

HOWARD B. BAGENSTOSE. Energy, industry and perseverance have been the essential factors in the business career of Howard B. Bagenstose, a well known and respected citizen of Glen Mawr, Chester county, Pennsylvania, whose birthplace was Centre township, Berks county, Pennsylvania, and the date of his birth October 3, 1862.

His educational advantages were obtained in the common schools of Berks county, which he attended until he attained the age of nineteen years. He then entered a steam saw-mill which was owned and operated by his father, and after thoroughly mastering all the details of the work he was employed as a journeyman in the same mill for fifteen years. After the expiration of this period of time he secured employment as a farm hand on the estate of John S. Eyrich in East Nantmeal township, and in this capacity he served for two years. He then located on his present site in the same township, erected a saw mill and shop and is now conducting a flourishing and remunerative business. He is a shingle maker and in addition to the business conducted in his shop on the premises, he is the owner of a portable machine for sawing shingles which he takes to the residence of such of his neighbors and friends as require its services. He also grinds feed, manufactures cider and performs a large amount of carpentering work, being an expert mechanic in that line. Mr. Bagenstose is a devout member of the Lutheran church, and takes a keen and active interest in the work of the various societies connected with that body. He is a member of the Protective Order of Sons of America, and Warwick Lodge, No. 682, Free and Accepted Masons. Mr. Bagenstose is the eldest of a family of six children, the other members of the family being—George, who owns a farm in Berks county; Kate, unmarried, who resides on her father's farm in Centre township, Berks county; Milton, deceased; John W., born in Berks county, is now conducting a creamery in Centreport; Morris, who is married, and resides on the home farm in Centre township, Chester county.

On December 24, 1885, Mr. Bagenstose married Mary A. Wilson, daughter of Barton and Phebe (Barton) Wilson of Carnaervon, Berks county, Pennsylvania. Their children are: Bessie, born July 13, 1887, now at home attending public school. William, born September 19, 1888. Edgar, born March 5, 1895. George, born December 10, 1899. Mr. Wilson was a plasterer by trade and followed that occupation throughout his entire active career; he married Phoebe A. Long, and they were the parents of the following named children: Phineas, Mary A., Martha, Fannie, George B. and Margaret, twins William and Harry Wilson.

EDWARD W. SHINGLE. Prominent among the enterprising, practical and progressive agriculturists of the town of Wyebrooke, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is Edward W. Shingle, who was born June 18, 1870, on the farm where he now resides, a son of John D. and Maggie (White) Shingle. John D. Shingle was one of a family of four children, all of whom are prominent and respected residents of Chester county, Pennsylvania. His wife, Maggie (White) Shingle, daughter of David and Elizabeth White of West Nantmeal township, both of whom are among the old and honored residents of Chester county, was one of a family of four children.

Edward W. Shingle acquired a practical education which prepared him for a life of usefulness and activity at the Allan school house in West Nantmeal township, Chester county, being a pupil of that institution of learning until he attained the age of sixteen years. Being reared upon a farm he naturally chose that occupation for his vocation in life, began operations upon the old homestead which consists of fifty-five acres of rich and arable land, with a dairy attached which is equipped on an average with ten head of well selected cows, and he has continuously engaged in that industry on his father's farm up to the present time (1903). He is a thorough-going farmer, honorable in all his transactions, and enjoys the respect and good will of all who know him and have business relations with him.

In 1891 Mr. Single married Lizzie Loomis, daughter of Jacob Loomis, the former named being a prosperous farmer of West Nantmeal township, Chester county. Mr. and Mrs. Loomis are the parents of three children—Sallie, wife of John S. Miller; Lizzie, wife of Edward W. Shingle, and Mary, wife of Elmer Layton, a farmer of West Nantmeal township; they have a family of three children. The following named children are the issue of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Shingle—Clara M., born November 4, 1894; Florence, born March 21, 1898; John D., born December 4, 1899, and Bessie, born in December, 1902.

ROBERT HARPER. The above named gentleman has been long and favorably known at Glen Mills on account of his connection with the paper manufactory, in which in one capacity or another he has continued for over thirty-four years. He is a mechanic of the first rank, and that his abilities as well as his trustworthiness are appreciated by the owners of this important plant is fully attested by his long retention in positions of responsibility. He comes of a race noted for its mechanical ingenuity and from a country where young men are trained with unusual care in all branches of the mechanic arts. His father, James Harper, was born in Scotland in 1812, learned the trade of paper making and pursued that calling during all the years of his active life. He married Catherine Oram, who was born in Scotland November 24, 1811, and came with his family to this country in 1848. First settling at Trenton, New Jersey, he remained there about nine years, and removed in 1857 to Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he obtained employment in Garrett's paper mill at Willistown. In 1866 he came to Glen Mills, where he remained until the time of his death, which occurred September 15, 1896, when eighty-four years old. His wife, having reached the venerable age of ninety-two years, still survives in full possession of all her faculties. The seven children of this worthy Scotch couple will be briefly mentioned in order of birth. Margaret, who married Andrew Schaaf, is now a widow with five children; Jeanette, who married John Spring, is now a widow with three children, one having died; James, who married Jennie Carmichael, has had six children, of whom four are living, and is at present a resident of Nebraska; Thomas first married a Miss Watterson and they were the parents of one child, and after her death took as his second wife, Jennie Hamby, with whom and his two children he lives at Oxford, Pennsylvania; Charlotte, who married George Davis, is living with her husband and three children at Malvern, Pennsylvania; Alexander, the youngest child, married Mary O'Brien, by whom he had two children, and lost his life in a railroad accident at Pittsburg.

Robert Harper, sixth of the above enumerated family, was born in Scotland on April 17, 1846, and was consequently two years old when his parents emigrated to America. He attended the public schools while residing at Trenton and completed his education after the removal to Williston. In 1864 he went as an apprentice to learn the trades of millwright and machinist with Miles Kelly at Manayunk. His first work at Glen Mills was in 1865, after which he spent two years in South Jersey working at his trade, and in 1868 returned to Glen Mills for permanent residence. For the twelve subsequent years he was engaged as millwright and machinist for the Glen Mills Paper Company, and in 1880 became superintendent of the works, which position he still occupies. In 1876 he rebuilt the lower mill, the upper one in 1883 and again in 1893, when the plant was enlarged and began the manufacture of parchment paper. Mr. Harper is not a member of any church, though his religious inclinations are rather toward the Methodist beliefs, and his political affiliations are Republican. His only office was that of school director, which he held twelve years, and during that time served both as president and secretary of the board. He has long been connected with and active in the Masonic fraternity, in which ancient order he has reached the thirty-second degree and holds membership in the various bodies as follows: George W. Bartram Lodge, No. 298, A. F. & A. M., at Media, of which he is past master; Holy Royal Arch Chapter, No. 234, Royal Arch Masons at Media and the present high priest; Philadelphia Council, No. 11, Royal and Select Masters; St. Albans Commandery, No. 47, Knights Templar, Philadelphia; Lulu Temple of the Mystic Shrine, Philadelphia; Philadelphia Consistory of the Scottish Rite.

On the 20th of June, 1868, Mr. Harper was married to Hannah A. Sayers, of South Jersey, who died August 27, 1894, leaving three children. Debbie S., the eldest of these, was born April 2, 1871, married Sherman Wells, a contractor and builder, and now resides at Glenolden with her husband and two children, Sherman and Dorothy. Robert Francis, Mr. Harper's eldest son, was born May 15, 1873, married Viola Essey, of Glen Mills, June 11, 1902, and now resides at Morton, Pennsylvania, with employment as bookkeeper. William James Harper, third of his father's children, was born July 18, 1875, and in 1894 entered the employment of the Glen Mills Paper Company as bookkeeper. He is a member of the Stony Brook Methodist church in Thornbury township, and takes an active interest in the religious work, being steward, trustee and secretary of the Sunday-school. He married Effie V. McQuade, who died August 10, 1898, leaving one child, Raymond Francis, who was born April 23, 1897. October 18, 1898, Mr. Robert Harper was married a second time, to Mrs. Anna M. Moore, widow of Paschal Moore, deceased, whom she married April 13, 1881. By her first marriage

Mrs. Harper, whose maiden name was Anna Mendenhall, had three children: Chester J., born December 29, 1882; Margaret P., born January 15, 1886; and Alica A., born May 17, 1888.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN BEAN is a name identified, in the minds of all residents of Schuylkill township, Chester county, with soldierly qualities and good citizenship. Mr. Bean is a son of Nicholas Bean, a farmer, who was for many years engaged in the coal and lumber business at Pawling. In politics he was first a Whig, and afterward a Republican, and was all his life very active as a farmer, a business man and a citizen. He married Mary Ann Vanderslice, and their children were: Ann, Sarah, Susan, Henry, Benjamin Franklin, mentioned at length hereinafter, Harriet, who is the widow of Joseph Kulp, James V., George W., Mary Frances, who is the wife of John T. Cox, of Norristown, and Lewis W. Of these children, three—Sarah, Susan and Henry—are now deceased.

Benjamin Franklin Bean, son of Nicholas and Mary Ann (Vanderslice) Bean, was born January 18, 1835, and has spent a large portion of his life in mercantile pursuits. In partnership with his brother Henry, he was for many years engaged in the lumber trade, and was also a dealer in sand. The firm carried on a large business, and were very successful in their undertakings. Mr. Bean's mercantile career, like that of many others, was interrupted by the Civil war, and he thereupon exchanged the sphere of commerce for that of arms. In 1862 he enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, with the rank of second lieutenant, but in one month was made captain. At the end of his term of enlistment he returned home, and recruited a second Company, B, of the Thirty-fourth Regiment, United States Guard, after which he re-entered the army. He participated in the battles of second Bull Run, Chantilly, Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. At the battle of Fredericksburg, in the brief space of from twenty to thirty minutes, the regiment lost out of 500 men the proportionally great number of 143. After the war Captain Bean was appointed quartermaster with the rank of major on the staff of General J. R. Dobson, a position which he held for about thirteen years. He also joined the Washington Troop of Chester county, in which he was made captain. It will be perceived that his military record is an unusually long one for a volunteer soldier, covering in all a period of well nigh twenty years. He has been still longer in the service of the government as a civilian than as a soldier, having held the appointment of postmaster at Pawling for twenty-seven consecutive years. By his townsmen he was at one time chosen to fill the office of supervisor. The manner in which he has discharged the duties of these positions proves him to have been no less zealous and faithful as a citizen than as a soldier.

Mr. Bean married, January 25, 1865, Martha Jane, born May 26, 1835, daughter of Jacob and Hannah (Horning) Bickley. Mr. and Mrs. Bean are the parents of two sons: 1. Francis M., who was born November 3, 1866, and is engaged in the quarry and sand business at Valley Forge; he became a member of Battery C, National Guard of Phoenixville, Pennsylvania, when a lad of fifteen years of age and is at present captain of the same battery, being appointed to that position while serving in the Spanish-American war; the battery was stationed at Porto Rico. He married Gussie Wenner, of Philadelphia, and they have one child living—Hilda Bean. 2. Benjamin F., Jr., who was born February 8, 1878, married Jean Jordan, of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, and they are the parents of a son, Harold James Bean.

Henry Bean, mentioned above as the brother and business partner of Benjamin Franklin Bean, was characterized by a spirit of adventure which led him at one period of his life to become a pioneer. Desiring to penetrate into the then unexplored regions of the far west, he joined the Pike's Peak expedition, and in 1859 traveled about twelve hundred miles with ox teams, his route lying across the plains and through a country infested with hostile Indians. He was accompanied on this journey by his brother, Benjamin F. Bean.

ELLWOOD CLAXTON COX, a useful and prosperous citizen of East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, owes his success in his vocation partly to the fact that he brought a business training to his work as an agriculturist.

Mr. Cox comes of a Chester county, Pennsylvania, family. His grandfather, William Cox, married Ann Whelen, of Uwchlan township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and they were the parents of six children: 1. Martha W., born 8 mo., 14, 1810; 2. Joseph W., born 3 mo., 22, 1812, died in childhood; 3. Mary, born 6 mo., 1, 1815; 4. Charles J., born 10 mo., 8, 1816, who had one child, Florence; 5. William, born 11 mo., 30, 1819, married Ruhaney Way; 6. Mark James, born 3 mo., 1, 1826, whose line is traced in this article. Ann (Whelan) Cox belonged to what were termed Irish Quakers. What is now the township of Uwchlan, Chester county, was owned almost exclusively by the Whelen family, descendants of whom are now prominent citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Mark James Cox married Susan Hoopes Evans. Her grandfather, Mordecai Evans, was born 6 mo., 18, 1772, and his wife, Sarah Williams, was born 10 mo., 28, 1772. Their son, Mordecai Evans, was born 5 mo., 26, 1794; he inherited from an uncle, his mother's brother, Hugh Williams, four hundred acres of Chester county land when he was but one year of age, and was brought from Uniontown, Fayette county, his place of nativity, on horseback. Mordecai Evans married Priscilla Townsend, who was born 3 mo., 7, 1797, and was the father of the following children: Elizabeth, born 2 mo., 6, 1816; Hugh Williams, born 11 mo., 30, 1817; Sarah, born 11 mo., 7, 1819; Townsend, born 9 mo., 5, 1821; Rebecca, born 10 mo., 19, 1823; Frank T., born 9 mo., 25, 1825; Isaac Newton, born 7 mo., 29, 1827; Susan Hoopes, born 6 mo., 16, 1829; Priscilla, born 8 mo., 9, 1831; Anna Maria, born 10 mo., 19, 1833; Emma R., born 6 mo., 28, 1836, died 10 mo., 5, 1900; Deborah W., born 5 mo., 17, 1840. Susan Hoopes Evans, eighth child and fourth daughter of this family, who married Mark James Cox, was the mother of the following children: Ellwood, whose name appears at the head of this article; Anna, born 1 mo., 15, 1856, died 3 mo., 25, 1857; Martha Elma, born 10 mo., 14, 1860, died 10 mo., 11, 1873.

Ellwood Claxton, first born and only surviving child of Mark James and Susan Hoopes (Evans) Cox, was born 9 mo., 24, 1852, at Wilmington, Delaware. When he was yet a child his father bought a farm in East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and took his family there to live. The son was brought up here, and attended the neighborhood schools in his boyhood. He afterward went to Eaton Institute, Kennett Square, Pennsylvania, and also took a course at a business college in Philadelphia. With this preparation he returned and took up farming as an occupation, and he stands with the most advanced agriculturists of the county.

December 25, 1900, Ellwood C. Cox married Louisa Eleanor Hughes, born in West Brandywine township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Her family is an old one, dating back on her father's side to the year 1698, when Edward and Eleanor Foulke, of Coed-Y-Foel, Wales, landed in America. The grandfather of Louisa Eleanor (Hughes) Cox was William Hughes, born in the year 1781, in Loudon county, Virginia, who later removed to Berks county, Pennsylvania, and married Eleanor Jackson, of Berks county. His son Ellis, born 12 mo., 13, 1825, upon attaining young manhood removed to Chester county, Pennsylvania; he married Ruth Doan, a daughter of Thomas and Esther (Hayes) Doan, prominent in the Society of Friends, and he was the father of Mrs. Ellwood C. Cox.

JONATHAN MANIS LEWIS, a public-spirited and patriotic citizen of Chester county, Pennsylvania, who enlisted his services in behalf of his country and served with credit and distinction during almost the entire period of the Civil war, and by his bravery and heroism was promoted to the rank of corporal, was born in Easttown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, August 2, 1842, a son of Richard C. and Anna Maria (Baker) Lewis. The latter named was a daughter of William Baker, of Delaware county, Pennsylvania, who was a colonel in the war of 1812, died at the age of thirty-six years, and by attaining that high rank so early in life he proved his ability as a warrior. He was the father of the following named children, all of whom are now deceased: Washington R., was for many years a merchant at Green Tree, and later at Glen Luck, where his death occurred; Enos, was a merchant in wall paper and paint in New York city, where his death occurred; Anna Maria, was the wife of Richard C. Lewis; Emily, was the wife of Horatio Lobb, who was a merchant for many years at Darby, Delaware county; he was a soldier in the late rebellion, being quite an old man when he enlisted. The father of Colonel Baker was an active participant in the Revolutionary war, and every member of the family have been ready and willing to defend their country under any and all circumstances.

Jonathan M. Lewis was reared in his native township and educated in common schools of the community. On June 6, 1861, he enlisted in Company K, Fourth Pennsylvania Reserves, otherwise known as the Thirty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, which was organized at Easton, Pennsylvania. On June 27, 1862, he was wounded and captured at the battle of Gaines Mill, Virginia, which was fought near Richmond, and was confined in the notorious Libby and Bell Island Prisons until August 7, 1862, when he was exchanged. On December 12, 1862, he was discharged from the service of the United States government, but re-enlisted the following 16th day of June in the Continental troop of Chester county, which was organized to answer an emergency call to protect the state from the invasion of the Confederate army. The regiment was discharged on July 31, 1863, after the enemy was driven back to Virginia, and on February 26, 1864, Mr. Lewis re-enlisted in the Seventh Pennsylvania Veteran Cavalry, and was promoted to the rank of corporal on January 1, 1865. The command served under General Sherman, participating in all the battles which led up to the conflict at Atlanta, and was with General Thomas at Nashville. They also served under General Wilson in his raid which ended in the final surrender of Harold Cobb, and this with other detachments were sent out under Colonel Mitchell, of the Fourth Michigan Cavalry, after Jefferson Davis, the president of the Confederacy, whom they captured near Irwinsville, Georgia, at daylight on May 11, 1865. The regiment was then divided, and the battalion in which Mr. Lewis belonged was appointed to provost duty at Eufaula, Alabama, until August and from there to Macon, Georgia, where they were mustered out on August 23, 1865. Politically Mr. Lewis is a Republican, served as postmaster during the administration of President Harrison, for nine years was a school director in East Whiteland township, and has always taken an active interest in the education of the young members of the community.

On March, 8, 1870, Mr. Lewis married Angelena Richards, born December 9, 1851, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, attended the public schools of that city until the age of fifteen years when she removed to Chester county, and her education was completed in the public schools of that locality. They are the parents of ten children, five of whom reside at home—Carry L., born March 3, 1871, became the wife of William Todd, March 11, 1896, and three children have been born to them; they reside in Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania. Mary Edna, born January 15, 1873, received her education at the State Normal at West Chester, taught in the Chester county schools for a period of nine years and one year in Kansas; in February, 1903, she took a course in a training school to become a missionary; she is in Arumia, Persia, where she expects to stay for seven years and serve in the capacity of one of the principals for Fisks Seminary. Emily R., born August 29, 1874, married, May 6, 1894, Jacob Weigel, a barber by trade who resides in Hoboken, New Jersey; they are the parents of three children. Morris Custer, deceased. Florence W., born August 15, 1879, unmarried, resides at home. W. Baker, born April 12, 1882, learned mathematical instrument making in Philadelphia. W. Wayne, born September 11, 1884, resides at home. Reynolds M., born November 15, 1886. Jennie M., born January 19, 1889. Angelena Alfa, born July 11, 1893, resides at home with her parents.

HENRY WISMER, deceased, who throughout his entire active career was a representative agriculturist of Tredyffrin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he was widely known and respected as a man of business ability and enterprise, was born on the farm which he subsequently owned and operated, July 22, 1831, a son of Jacob and Mary (Detwiler) Wismer, the former named having also been a prosperous tiller of the soil.

In the common schools of his native township Henry Wismer obtained a practical education which prepared him for a life of usefulness and activity, and after completing his studies he chose the occupation of his forefathers, that of farming. His operations, which were conducted on an extensive scale, proved a profitable means of livelihood, and by dint of thrift and industry he accumulated considerable property and was regarded as one of the influential and substantial citizens of the community. His political affiliations were with the Republican party, and he was the incumbent of several township offices.

On October 16, 1856, Mr. Wismer married Elizabeth Funderwhite, daughter of Frederick and Clare Funderwhite, the former named having served in the capacity of superintendent of farming operations for a number of property owners in Chester Valley; she is also a sister of John C. Funderwhite, a prominent citizen of West Pikeland. Six sons and five daughters were the issue of this union—1. Jane, widow of Samuel Smith, who was a prominent citizen of Bridgeport, Pennsylvania. 2. Winfield, a resident of Schuylkill township, Pennsylvania. 3. Hannah, wife of William Griffith, of East Vincent township, Pennsylvania. 4. Lizzie, who resides at home with her mother. 5. Katie, wife of Jones Robison, of Tredyffrin township, Pennsylvania. 6. Irvin, mentioned at length in the following paragraph. 7. Jacob, a twin brother of Irvin, who resides at Valley Forge, Pennsylvania. 8. Wilmer, a prosperous agriculturist of East Vincent township, Pennsylvania. 9. Ulysses Grant, who is successfully engaged in farming in East Vincent township, Pennsylvania. 10. Ida, a twin sister of Ulysses Grant, and who is the wife of John De Haven, overseer at the McCoy Lime Works located near Malvern, Pennsylvania. 11. William H., died in infancy. Henry Wismer, father of these children, died at his home in Chester county, December 15, 1900. His wife, Elizabeth (Funderwhite) Wismer, survived him, and is now residing on the old homestead in Tredyffrin township, Chester county.

Irvin Wismer, a twin brother of Jacob Wismer, was born on the farm where he now resides in Schuylkill township, received a common school education, and his business career has been devoted to agricultural pursuits on the farm where he now resides and the farm owned by his father, in Tredyffrin township. His political affiliations are with the Republican party. On October 7, 1896, Irvin Wismer was united in marriage to Kathe Henzie, who was born April 30, 1872, a daughter of Frederick and Catherine (Bloomhart) Henzie, the former named being an extensive agriculturist of Schuylkill township. They are the parents of two children—Elsie May, born September 7, 1897; and Annie Henzie Wismer, born September 6, 1899. Mr. Bloomhart, maternal grandfather of Mrs. Irvin Wismer, was a native of Germany, as was also her father, Frederick Henzie; her mother was a descendant of a German ancestry. The Wismer family are also of German extraction.

JACOB R. CLEMENTS, deceased, a worthy and useful citizen of Tredyffrin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, came of sturdy and industrious stock. He was a native of Chester county, having been born in Tredyffrin township, where his father was known as an upright and prosperous farmer.

Mr. Clements was born April 16, 1843, and was a son of George and Catherine (Rickabaugh) Clements. George Clements was born in Bucks county, and his wife was a native of Chester. The son, Jacob R., lived the life of a typical farmer boy, growing up in active out-door work and sports, and receiving such instruction as the district school afforded. He made farming his vocation, and in it he found scope for much intelligent effort. In 1901 he bought the farm which he afterward occupied, and took his place among the most advanced agriculturists of his locality.

He was married in 1864 to Caroline Rennard, of East Goshen township. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Clements, of whom Elizabeth is the wife of Norval Acker, a farmer of the community. The other two daughters, Effie and Carrie are living with their parents. Mr. Clements died May 31, 1903.

JONATHAN T. MORRIS, deceased, who for many years was an enterprising and prosperous agriculturist of Easttown township, Pennsylvania, and also engaged in other lines of business to some extent, was born in the year 1805, in the township of Easttown, Chester county, Pennsylvania, the son of James and Honoria (Thomas) Morris.

Jonathan T. Morris grew to manhood in his native county, and received a good practical education in the common schools of the neighborhood, and after laying aside his school books entered the milling business with his uncle, James Bonsall, at Darby, Pennsylvania. He maintained this connection for a number of years, thus gaining a thorough knowledge of the trade which qualified him to establish a business on his own account, which he accordingly did at Easttown township.

Jonathan T. Morris

becoming proprietor of the Waterloo Mills, which he operated successfully up to the year 1843. He then returned to his birth place and while he was actively engaged in the management of his farm and the supervision of his stock, was also interested in every measure or enterprise that was of interest to his fellow citizens or of benefit to his township. In politics he was a Republican, and being an intelligent man of good business ability and energy was chosen to serve in the capacity of school director and supervisor, being the incumbent of those offices for a number of years. He was formerly a member of the Society of Friends, but for several years previous to his death was actively associated with St. David's Protestant Episcopal church, being a member of its vestry.

Mr. Morris was united in marriage to Elizabeth W. Stackhouse, daughter of Asa and Lucy Stackhouse, the former named having been prominently identified with the agricultural interests of the township of Goshen, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Their children were: Anna M., died in childhood; Hannah M., unmarried; Sarah E., unmarried, and Lucy S., wife of W. John Campbell; they are the parents of three children. Hannah M. and Sarah E. Morris reside in a beautiful cozy dwelling in West Chester, Pennsylvania, being beloved and esteemed in the community for their many admirable traits of character which prompt them to perform various deeds of charity and benevolence. Mr. Morris died June 10, 1888, survived by his widow, whose death occurred December 30, 1891, and both are buried at St. David's Radnor cemetery.

HENRY W. DAVIS. The Davis family of Chester county, of which Henry Walley Davis, of Tredyffrin township, is a descendant in the present generation, is of Welsh origin, and had for its American progenitor Llewellyn David, and the patronymic assumed the form of Davis in the next generation.

Llewellyn David (1), of Haverford, "sawyer," is of record in the year 1705 in Easttown, where he purchased two hundred and five acres of land, but he does not appear to have settled there. In 1708 he bought three hundred acres in Tredyffrin township, where he made his home. He was married, November 14, 1709, to Bridget Jones, who bore him four children—Elizabeth, Isaac, Sarah and Llewellyn. He died and his widow married (April 7, 1722), James David (or Davies) of Tredyffrin.

Isaac Davis, the eldest son of Llewellyn David, purchased the interests of the other heirs and became owner of the paternal estate at Tredyffrin, upon which he settled. He was a justice of the peace, and was known as an enterprising man. He married, May 30, 1738, Elizabeth, daughter of John and Mary Bartholomew, who died in July, 1779, surviving her husband about a year. Their children were Benjamin; Mary, who became the wife of John Morgan; Thomas; John; Sarah, who became the wife of David Wilson; Elizabeth, who became the wife of Major Ezekiel Howell; and Joseph, who became a physician. The paternal estate was divided between the three sons.

General John Davis (3), fourth child and third son of Isaac (2) and Elizabeth (Bartholomew) Davis, was a conspicuous figure during the Revolutionary period. In 1776 he recruited and was captain of a company, and October 21, 1780, he was commissioned of the same rank in the Pennsylvania line and remained in service until the end of the war. He participated in the battles of the Brandywine, Paoli, Germantown, Monmouth, Stony Point and Yorktown, and was with "Mad Anthony" Wayne in South Carolina and Georgia. In 1780 he was appointed brigadier general of Chester county and Delaware county militia. March 31, 1803, he was commissioned an associate judge of Chester county, and he graced this position until he was incapacitated by the infirmities of age. He died in 1827. His wife was Ann Morton, a daughter of John Morton (one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence), and to them were born seven children: Isaac, John Morton, Mary, Charles Justis, Ann, Benjamin and Albert.

John Morton Davis (4), second child and son of General John (3) and Ann (Morton) Davis, was born in 1788 and died in 1848. He married, in 1818, Elizabeth Knight, of Philadelphia, who died leaving two children, Mary and Albert K. Davis. Mr. Davis married (second), in 1830, Anna Maria Walley, and of this marriage were born six children—William Walley, Henrietta, John M., Elizabeth, Isaac Henry and Anna Maria Davis.

William Walley Davis (5), eldest son of John Morton (4) and Anna Maria (Walley) Davis, was born in Chester Valley, Tredyffrin township, in November, 1827. He began his education in the public schools and pursued advanced studies in the Academy of Professor Noble Heath, at Reeseville, Pennsylvania. He was a farmer throughout his life. In politics he was a Democrat; for many years he held the office of justice of the peace of Tredyffrin township, and he was an unsuccessful candidate for the legislature. During the Civil war he enlisted in a company organized in the vicinity of Chester Valley, which rendezvoused at Harrisburg and was there discharged, the emergency having passed. He married Cornelia Walker, daughter of Charles Justice and Mary (Siter) Davis, and a granddaughter of Adam and Mary Siter, of Delaware county.

William Walley and Cornelia Walker (Siter) Davis were the parents of one child. Mr. Davis died February 12, 1897.

Henry Walley (6), son of William Walley and Cornelia Walker (Siter) Davis, was born in Chester Valley, Tredyffrin township, Chester county, March 15, 1877. He was educated in the public schools of Tredyffrin township and the Hamilton school, Philadelphia. He superintends the homestead in Tredyffrin township. He is connected with the Presbyterian church, and is affiliated with the Democratic party. He has held no public office.

CHARLES HENRY KIRK, an enterprising and leading citizen of Tredyffrin township, Chester county, is a son of Philip Kirk, who was born in 1831 near Media, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, and was a blacksmith, following his trade at White Horse. In 1859 he settled on the farm now owned and occupied by his son, an estate consisting of forty-three acres. In the early days of the Civil war he enlisted as a blacksmith in the service of the Union army. He was a man much respected by his neighbors, and was prominent in the affairs of the township, holding among other offices those of supervisor and tax collector. In politics he was a Republican. It is a fact illustrative of the versatility of his talents that, in addition to the excellence of his work as a blacksmith and his skill as a farmer, he was regarded as one of the best road builders in the township. He married Mary, daughter of William and Anna (Hoopsteikler) Fields, of Delaware county. The former was a farmer, and the latter belonged to an old family of German origin. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kirk: Samuel S., who is now deceased; Wilmer D., who lives in Philadelphia, and is employed as a pattern maker by the Textile Machinery Company of that city; John J., who is a wheelwright, and, although entirely blind as the result of an accident at a shooting match, continues to do different kinds of work; Charles Henry, mentioned at length hereinafter; Albert A., who has been for many years a detective, and is now one of Pinkerton's men.

Charles Henry Kirk, son of Philip and Mary (Fields) Kirk, was born April 6, 1856, at White Horse, Willistown township, Chester county. He was engaged for a time in the railroad business and was for five years a carrier in the Philadelphia postoffice under the Heidekooper administration. As a result of the ascendancy of the opposite political party, the Harretty administration came into power and Mr. Kirk was as a matter of course dismissed, for purely political reasons. He then turned his attention to farming, and for the last eight years has devoted himself to agricultural pursuits on the old homestead. He is active in local affairs, and filled the unexpired term of his father as collector of the township. He was also chosen at the last election to hold the office of school tax collector. Like his father, he is a staunch Republican.

Mr. Kirk married Helen F., daughter of Henry and Emma Jane Eddy, of Putnam county. The former, who is a machinist, was employed for many years as an iron worker. Mr. and Mrs. Kirk have one daughter, Ethel M., who is a graduate of the Tredyffrin High School, and of Union College, Philadelphia, and is now employed in that city by Dr. Kelley as a stenographer and typewriter. Historic interest is imparted to the Kirk homestead by the fact that during the Revolutionary war a temporary hospital was erected on the land.

WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON GARRETT, of Lansdowne, Pennsylvania, a veteran of the war of the Rebellion, was born in Marple township, October 25, 1837, the son of William and Hannah (Super) Garrett. His grandfather's name was also William Garrett, as was also his great-grandfather's, thus making the present bearer of the name the fourth in succession and sole survivor of the name. His mother, Hannah (Super) Garrett, was the daughter of Philip and Hannah (Kirk) Super. Besides William Henry Harrison Garrett, his parents had four other children, namely: Philip S., born January 25, 1834, married Elizabeth McAfee, October 16, 1856, by whom he had three children—Eliza C., unmarried; Lewis McAfee, who married Anna Snyder and has two children, Eliza and Edith; and Mary Edith, who married Orville C. Stebbins, and have no family; Philip S., the father of the foregoing children died October 8, 1899. The next child of William and Hannah Garrett was Mary A., born July 1, 1836, married John Andrew Casterline, September 9, 1885, and has no children. Next in order came William H. H., then Rachel S., born June 5, 1839, and died March 28, 1866. The last son, John Kirk Garrett, was born March 28, 1842, and died in February, 1864. His was a most untimely end. He had enlisted in defense of his country at the breaking out of the Rebellion and served faithfully for three years, at the end of which time he received an honorable discharge; but with the spirit still strong within him to render his still struggling country all the service in his power, he re-enlisted, and shortly afterward was captured and sent to Newberne Prison, North Carolina, where he met his death by starvation.

The parents of the above family died and left William H. H. Garrett at a very early age, whereupon he went to live with his aunt, Rachel, who sent him to the old stone school house, where he acquired his education. After finishing his studies he assisted his aunt in the management of her farm. She, thinking to qualify young Garrett for a business career, sent him to the city at the age of eighteen to learn the paper hanging trade; after spending three years at this, he determined that farming suited his taste better and returned home. During the war he enlisted in the Sixteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, under Captain Amos Bonsall, who is the only survivor of those who accompanied Dr. Kane on his Arctic explorations. Mr. Garrett returned from the war bearing an officer's title, he having entered the service as third to sergeant of his company. His regiment was an emergency regiment and was held in reserve at Antietam. The regiment having been mustered out of service, Mr. Garrett returned to his aunt's farm. In addition to regular farming he made a specialty of dairy products which gained for the farm a wide reputation throughout that section of the country. His aunt died in 1884, and he then gave up farming altogether.

In 1876 Mr. Garrett was elected to the office of tax collector, and has since served in that capacity for the township of Upper Darby, making the remarkable record of twenty-seven consecutive years in that position.

On December 21, 1876, Mr. Garrett married Mary Sutton Owen, a daughter of Jones and Sarah (Bowen) Owen, of Upper Darby. No children were born of this marriage.

ELI SEAL, residing in Pennsbury township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a splendid representative of that class of men known as independent farmers, who by the exercise of energy, frugality and good business judgment, accumulate a handsome competence which they enjoy during their declining days.

William Seal, great-grandfather of Eli Seal, was a native of England and emigrated to this country in the early colonial days; he settled in Birmingham, township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, and married, October 31, 1718, Hannah Gilpin, a daughter of Joseph and Hannah Gilpin, of Birmingham township. Their children were: Rachel, Joseph, Hannah, wife of John Bennett, William, Joshua and Caleb Seal. The father of these children died in 1742, and his widow and the eldest two of his children in 1746.

William Seal, grandfather of Eli Seal, and second son of William and Hannah Seal, was a distiller by occupation. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and that body having concluded that it was against their principles to produce any thing that would work harm to mankind, requested all who held membership with them to cease to distil, thereupon Mr. Seal turned his mill to the manufacture of castor oil. He was one of the prominent and influential citizens of Delaware county, and was the owner of about six hundred acres of land in Birmingham township, Chester county. He was united in marriage to Mary Hunt, and their children were: William, Jesse, Dr. Thomas, Eli, Joseph, Benjamin, Susanna, Sidney and Mary Hayes Seal. The father of these children died in 1821.

Eli Seal, father of Eli Seal, was born April 27, 1788, the son of William and Mary (Hunt) Seal. After acquiring a common school education he learned the trade of mason, which line of industry he followed up to the year of 1821, the date of his father's death, when he came into possession of the Seal farm at Birmingham Meeting, Delaware county, which he continued to operate for the remainder of his life. In 1817 he married Mary Hannum, and shortly after the birth of their child, Edwin Seal, which occurred December 31, 1818, Mrs. Seal departed this life. In 1821 Mr. Seal chose for his second wife, Susan Heyburn, and two children were the issue of this marriage: 1. William, born September 14, 1822, married Deborah Twaddle, daughter of William and Mary (Wilson) Twaddle, the former of Chaddsford, Pennsylvania, and the latter of Christiana Hundred, New Castle county, Delaware. Their children were: Eli, deceased, James, deceased, a child who died in early life, William T., Howard E. and Mary Emma Seal. 2. Eli, born January 31, 1824. Eli Seal, father of these children, died 10 mo., 10, 1823. Mrs. Seal, wife of Eli Seal, was a granddaughter of John Burgus, who came to this country from England, landing at Chester, Pennsylvania, March 24, 1713, with his wife, who gave birth to a daughter, Elizabeth, the night of landing. The aforementioned Elizabeth Burgus married George Heyburn, and two daughters were born to them, one of whom married Eli Seal, and the other married Joseph Buffington.

Eli Seal, youngest son of Eli and Susan Seal, was born in Birmingham township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, January 31, 1824. His early life was spent in acquiring a common school education, and assisting his mother with the labor on the farm; upon attaining his majority he chose agricultural pursuits for his life work, and accordingly purchased the farm where he now resides, which is situated on the historic Brandywine. This stream, which empties into the Delaware river near the town of Christiana, received its name from the fact that a ship from Europe laden with brandy and wine put in there during a severe storm and sunk across the mouth of the stream. For twenty-five consecutive years, Mr. Seal acted in the capacity of school director in Delaware and Chester counties, discharging the duties of the position with promptness and fidelity.

December 31, 1862 Mr. Seal married Priscilla Wilson, daughter of John and Jane (Tally) Wilson, and one child was the issue of this marriage: Mary, born November 6, 1865, married, March 12, 1884, Nicholas White, son of John White, and their children are: Eli Seal, born February 20, 1885; John Atlee, born May 24, 1886; Reacilla Seal, born May 16, 1887; Edgar Ludwell, born October 17, 1889; Arthur Nicholas, born July 18, 1890; Walter Haywood, born September 23, 1892, died June 30, 1893; Pauline Marie, born June 15, 1893; Alice Ellen, born March 2, 1895, and Mildred Lulu, born September 22, 1900. Nicholas White, the father of these children, was born in Ireland in 1860, and at the age of six years he was brought to this country by an aunt, who secured for him a home on a farm near the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Here he remained until he attained the proper age to care for himself, when he located in Reading and learned the trade of machinist.

THOMPSON RICHARDS. Joseph Richards was a purchaser of five hundred acres of land from William Penn, a part of which was surveyed in Aston township, 6 mo., 26, 1682, but the deeds not being recorded we are not informed as to his place of residence in England. He was present at a court held at Upland, now Chester, September 12, 1682, and it has been claimed on the authority of Hazard (Annals, p. 604) that he was a member of the first Assembly held in Pennsylvania, but the evidence is not conclusive. A deed from John Bristow to Jasper Yeates recites that David Lloyd, on September 8, 1693, had conveyed to Joseph Richards, "of the town and County of Chester, Physitian," a parcel of meadow or cripple, containing three acres, in Chester township; and that the latter had conveyed the same to John Bristow, January 16, 1702-3.

William Cecil, of Longcomb, Oxfordshire, having purchased two hundred and fifty acres of land from William Penn, one moiety of this was conveyed by his widow, Ann, and son Thomas, to Joseph Richards, Junior, "of New Yate in the Pish of Whitney in the said county of Oxon, masson," February 25, 1685. This indicates that the son did not come over with his father, but he probably came from the same place. By a deed dated 10 mo., 5, 1688, Joseph Richards, Senior, conveyed to Joseph Richards, Junior, two hundred acres of land in Aston.

Jane Richards, wife of Joseph and mother of his children, was alive in 1689, but the time of her death is unknown. The family appear to have been in membership with Friends, yet took little part in the affairs of the meeting. The will of Joseph Richards, of Chichester, is dated 7 mo., 6, 1705, and was proven February 16, 1710-11. In this he devised to his son Joseph five shillings, and to the two older children of the latter, Susanna and Joseph, five shillings each; to his son Nathaniel's three children, William, Nathaniel and Elizabeth, £5 each; mentions son-in-law Humphrey Scarlet and daughter Ann Scarlet, daughter Susanna Lownes and her four children, Joseph, James, Hannah and Susanna Lownes.

Nathaniel Richards married Mary Mason, daughter of Richard Mason, and lived in Aston. His will, dated 12 mo., 6, 1699-70, proven October 10, 1700, shows that he was a blacksmith; mentions his father, Joseph Richards, wife Mary and four children, William, Nathaniel, Elizabeth and Mary. His widow married Thomas Rowland, and they made an acknowledgment to Concord Monthly Meeting, 12 mo., 10, 1706, for their outgoing in marriage against the advice of Friends. They settled in the Toughkenamon Valley, where Thomas died in 1708, and Mary married again, 8 mo., 30, 1813, Evan Powell, of Nottingham. By her second husband she had children, Ruth, Mary and Rachel Rowland, and by the third had Sarah Powell. Of the children by Nathaniel Richards, Mary probably died before her grandfather and William before 1715. Elizabeth married Roger Kirk and a genealogy of her descendants has been published.

Nathaniel Richards, Jr., married Margaret Wiley, daughter of Allen (and Sarah?) Wiley, from Ireland, and settled in New Garden, where he died about 1730, leaving children; William, married Joanna Jenkins and Jane Miller; Nathaniel, married; and Isaac. Margaret married a second husband, William Carpenter, from England, whom she survived, and died in West Bradford, 12 mo., 5, 1796, aged ninety years, and leaving one hundred and thirteen descendants.

Isaac Richards, of New Garden, son of Nathaniel and Margaret, was married 1 mo., 17, 1753, at Hockessin Meeting to Mary Gregg, of Kennett, daughter of Thomas and Dinah (Harlan) Gregg. She was born 12 mo., 12, 1729, and died in 1762. Isaac was married again, 11 mo., 10, 1763, to Rebecca Miller, widow of James Miller and daughter of Jacob Kirk. Isaac was a wheelwright as well as a farmer. In the division of his father's land in New Garden he received one hundred and fourteen acres, to which he made addition by purchase. By his first wife he had six children:

Thomas, b. 6 mo., 10, 1755; d. 2 mo., 8, 1837; m. Hannah Cox.

Nathaniel, b. 8 mo., 21, 1756; m. Lydia Pritchett, 12 mo., 29, 1785.

Isaac, b. 4 mo., 18, 1759; d. 6 mo., 22, 1854; see below.

William, b. 1 mo., 17, 1761; m. Catherine Phillips, 11 mo., 19, 1788.

Mary, b. 3 mo., 1, 1762; m. Thomas Hoopes, 10 mo., 16, 1788.

Lydia, b. 3 mo., 1, 1762; m. Joshua Seal and William Chandler.

Isaac Richards, son of Isaac and Mary, was married 12 mo., 21, 1785, at London Grove Meeting, to Ann Pusey, born 2 mo., 14, 1765; died 6 mo., 5, 1796; daughter of Joshua and Mary (Miller) Pusey, of London Grove. He was married again, to Tamzen Hoopes, born 9 mo., 10, 1771; died 4 mo., 25, 1811; daughter of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Bane) Hoopes, of New Garden. He inherited the homestead, it being the farm next east of Toughkenamon. By his first wife he had three and by the last five children:

Joshua, b. 6 mo., 20, 1788; m. Phebe Baker, 11 mo., 11, 1812.

Samuel Emlen, b. 8 mo., 30, 1791; died young or unmarried.

William, b. 11 mo., 22, 1793; m. Lydia Seal and Elizabeth Hughes.

Lydia, b. about 1798; died young or unmarried.

Ann, b. 4 mo., 29, 1800; m. Caleb Brinton, 11 mo., 15, 1832.

John, b. 4 mo., 8, 1804; d. 1 mo., 7, 1881; see below.

Phebe, b. 5 mo., 11, 1806; d. 11 mo., 27, 1886; unmarried.

Sarah, died young or unmarried.

John Richards, son of Isaac and Tamzen, was married 3 mo., 21, 1833, at New Garden Meeting, to Phebe Thompson, born 10 mo., 17, 1813; died 1871; daughter of Daniel and Jane (Gawthrop) Thompson, of Mill Creek. His father gave him some land in New Garden, to which he added by purchase. He had five children:

Jane, b. 1 mo., 29, 1834; m. Joel Scarlett, 2 mo., 18, 1864.

Elizabeth, b. 3 mo., 21, 1836; unmarried.

Isaac, b. 9 mo., 9, 1838; m. Ruth B. Lam-born, 2 mo., 9, 1865.

Thompson, b. 2 mo., 11, 1842; see below.

William, b. 5 mo., 5, 1846, married Eliza Kay.

Thompson Richards was married 4 mo., 9, 1870, to Anna Mary Scarlett, born 4 mo., 6, 1845; daughter of Abiah and Sarah D. (Hoopes) Scarlett, of New Garden. He inherited the homestead with about one hundred and forty acres of his father's land, on which he resides. He was educated at Kennett Square and at Wilmington, Delaware, and for a time taught school in Delaware. In politics he is a Republican and he has served as school director and supervisor, and he is a member of Kennett Lodge, No. 475, and Kennett Chapter, No. 275, and director of the Kennett National Bank. Children: Rowland A., b. 11 mo., 27, 1871, married Lillian Mendenhall, October 22, 1903; Charles T., b. 8 mo., 17, 1874; d. 1 mo., 31, 1897; Bessie S., b. 5 mo., 27, 1876; William J., b. 1 mo., 14, 1878; Mary B., b. 6 mo., 27, 1880; J. Warren, b. 3 mo., 14, 1882; Ruth E., b. 7 mo., 29, 1885; Anna T., b. 3 mo., 14, 1888. The family are birthright members by both paternal and maternal sides of the Society of Friends.

JOHN HOOPES, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in the township of Newlin, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a worthy representative of the Hoopes family of Chester county, whose early ancestry is recorded in another portion of this work. He was born in Honey Brook township, Pennsylvania, April 3, 1852, the son of Joseph and Jane Hoopes.

Joseph Hoopes, father of John Hoopes, was born in Newlin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and his entire life was spent in this locality. After acquiring a good common school education he learned the trade of millwright, but after pursuing this line of industry for several years he turned his attention to farming interests, and being practical and progressive in his ideas, soon became one of the leading agriculturists of that section of the state. He was a Republican in politics, and served his township for many years in the capacity of auditor and school director. He was united in marriage to Jane Glendenning, a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, the daughter of Mr. Glendenning, a prominent farmer of that vicinity. The following named children were born to them: Mary, wife of Joseph Wilson and mother of five children; Jesse, who married Sarah Hempell, of Wilmington, Delaware, and they are the parents of two children; Frank, married Mary Sample and two children have been born to them; Annie, wife of Ebenezer Speakman; they are the parents of six children; William, who married Mary Woodward and five children have been born of this union; Elizabeth, wife of John Andress and mother of five children, and John Hoopes, of whom this sketch treats.

John Hoopes attended the public schools of Unionville, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he acquired a practical education which qualified him for the active duties of life. Since attaining young manhood he has followed agricultural pursuits, and being a man of positive character, undoubted ability and honesty of purpose, has gained for himself a high place in the estimation of the community in which he resides and throughout the state wherever he is known. In politics Mr. Hoopes is an ardent Republican, and has served his party as supervisor for nine years, also school director for a number of years. He is prominently identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a true and consistent member of the Society of Friends.

Mr. Hoopes was united in marriage to Ruth Ann Rodeback, daughter of George Rodeback, a prosperous and progressive farmer of West Bradford township, Pennsylvania. One child has been born to them, Bertha J. Hoopes, unmarried, who resides at home with her parents.

MATTHEW J. WILSON, who has for many years occupied the position of a leading and veteran agriculturist among the residents of East Nottingham township, Chester county, belongs to a family which has been represented in the township for at least a century, and a half, the homestead, which is now the property of Mr. Wilson, having been in the possession of his ancestors prior to the Revolutionary period.

James Wilson, the progenitor of the family and the first to settle in East Nottingham township, Chester county, about the year 1728, came from the north of Ireland and was descended from a Scotch-Irish ancestry. His son, Robert Wilson, was born on the old homestead in East Nottingham township, was known in his day as Colonel Wilson, and is supposed to have served in the Continental army during the Revolution. His son, Matthew Wilson, was born on the family homestead in East Nottingham township, where he passed his life as a farmer. He was the eldest of a family of ten children and the only one of whom there is any record of having been married. He was known as Captain Matthew Wilson, and served for twenty-five years as paymaster in the Pennsylvania militia. He married Jennie Fulton, a daughter of a farmer in East Nottingham township, and they were the parents of a number of children.

Robert Wilson, son of Matthew and Jennie (Fulton) Wilson, was born July 1, 1796, on the homestead in East Nottingham township and obtained his education in the common schools. He followed his hereditary calling of agriculture, in connection with which during the latter part of his life he operated a saw mill. He married Lydia Wilson, a daughter of Abner and Tamar (Chandler) Wilson, of English ancestry and members of the Society of Friends; they were of no kin. The children of Robert and Lydia (Wilson) Wilson are as follows: 1. Matthew J., mentioned hereinafter; 2. Phebe Ellen, born August 1, 1831, unmarried; 3. Tamar Jane, born February 8, 1836, married William K. Warden; 4. Robert F., born June 23, 1839, married Agnes Thompson; 5. John D., born January 11, 1842, married Elizabeth Thompson. Robert Wilson, the father, died April 2, 1862, and the mother, Lydia Wilson, in September, 1864; they were both of the Presbyterian faith.

Matthew J. Wilson, son of Robert and Lydia (Wilson) Wilson, was born January 11, 1830, on the old homestead, in East Nottingham township, and received his education in the common schools of his native place. His life since leaving school has been devoted to the cultivation of his paternal acres, of which he is now the owner. Once for a brief period he abandoned his congenial and peaceful pursuits, and then it was in response to the call of his country. In 1862 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Seventy-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, under the command of Colonel Dwyer. His period of service was passed chiefly in doing guard duty, and in 1863 he was honorably discharged after a year's experience of military life. Mr. Wilson has been repeatedly placed by his townsmen in positions of trust, having served for ten years as justice of the peace, and as school director for the same length of time. He has also filled the office of supervisor. His political principles are those of a staunch Democrat. Mr. Wilson is now living retired in the borough of Oxford, reaping the fruits of an industrious and useful life, and passing the evening of his days amid the scenes which have been familiar to him from childhood.

Mr. Wilson married, December 18, 1855, Rebecca, daughter of Robert and Ruth (Drennen) McIntire, of Oxford, Chester county. Children of Matthew J. and Rebecca (McIntire) Wilson are as follows: 1. Robert B., who married Ida M. Crowl, and has children: Ella V., Mary, Robert C. and Matthew J. Crowl. 2. Ella F., who married W. W. Haley, resides in California, and has children: James Bayard, Robert Wilson and Horace Llewellyn Haley. 3. Mary H., who died in childhood. 4. Lillian J. 5. Annie E., who is a graduate of the Millersville State Normal School. 6. Margaret R., who is a graduate of the same school. 7. James C., who married Mary Groff, and has one child, James C., Jr. 8. Josephine, who died in childhood. 9. Joseph M., who married Rachel Kimble, and has one child, Edward K. 10. Edna L., who married Alfred E. Johnson, and has children: Margaret R. and Anna M. Johnson. 11. Francis Bayard, who is a graduate of the Philadelphia Dental College. 12. Mabel Campbell Wilson.

HON. SEPTIMUS EVANS NIVIN. John Evans, the American ancestor of Septimus E. Nivin, supposed from Radnorshire, Wales, arrived in Philadelphia in 1695. Tradition says that with him came his parents, wife, daughter, brother and sister, but the names of none of these are known except of Lydia, his wife, whose death occurred December 23, 1735. He found a temporary home among the Welsh settlers on the Schuylkill, but in the spring of 1696 removed to a farm of two hundred acres which he had purchased in what was known as the Welsh tract, in the western part of New Castle county, Delaware. His brother, who was a carpenter, was of great assistance in enlarging the dwelling and adding other improvements. Soon after settling here his daughter and only child died, but in the year 1700 a son was born and named John. About the year 1714 he purchased 400 acres of land on White Clay Creek, in London Britain township, and erected thereon a dwelling, grist and saw mill. On August 4, 1725, he conveyed a few acres of land nearby for the erection and use of a Baptist church, since known by the name of London tract. He conveyed his farm in the Welsh tract and the farm and mills on White Clay creek to his only child, John Evans, Jr., and died April 26, 1740, leaving a large personal estate, which he devised to his grandchildren.

John Evans, Jr., born in 1700, before attaining his majority, was married to Mary, the daughter of a neighbor, whose name is unknown. She died June 2, 1721, and her son in infancy, after which which he married a second wife, Jane Howell, eldest daughter of Reynold Howell, of the neighborhood of the present town of Newark, Delaware. Her father came from Wales in 1718, bringing his wife and six children, Jane, Lewis, Mary, George, Margaret and William.

John Evans, Jr., settled at the mill property of his father, on White Clay creek, and on May 31, 1734, purchased one thousand acres of land adjoining and further up the creek, from John Evans, formerly governor of Pennsylvania, now residing in England. On this he erected a fulling mill, now extinct. He was elected a member of Assembly in the years 1734, 1735 and 1736, and on December 2, 1837, was commissioned a justice of the peace. He died April 14, 1738, and his tombstone may be seen at the London Tract church. At the time of his death he owned fifteen hundred acres of land and a large personal estate. His widow died about 1787. They had six children: 1. Mary, born 1724, married Evan Rice, and died January 20, 1752, leaving a daughter Lydia, who married Thomas Gilpin. 2. Lydia, born 1726, died August 6, 1745, unmarried. 3. John, born 1728, married Mary Jones, inherited the grist mill and four hundred acres in London Britain, and became a lawyer; took an active part in favor of independence and was commissioned the third judge of the supreme court of Pennsylvania; died in Philadelphia December 11, 1783. 4. Evan, born 1732, married Margaret, daughter of William and Jennet Nivin, was a colonel in the Revolution, elected to the Assembly in 1780, 1781, 1782, 1783, and in 1785 was chosen to the supreme executive council, dying in 1794. 5. George, born 1734, married Rachel Gilpin. 6. Peter, born 1736.

Peter Evans, last named, married Rachel, daughter of David Evans, of Bucks county, and became a citizen of Philadelphia county, but in that part now forming Montgomery county, where he died September 28, 1822. He was commissioned a justice of the peace in 1777 and took an active part in the cause of independence, being also mentioned as a physician. He had six children: 1. John, married Elizabeth Evans; 2. Lydia, married John Roberts; 3. Peter, married Mary Bryan; 4. David, married Ann Griffith; 5. Septimus; 6. Sarah.

Septimus Evans, last named, was born February 1, 1771. He was first married, June 20, 1798, to Mary Morgan, who died September 10, 1807. They had a daughter Matilda, born December 10, 1804, died February 14, 1832, who married Dr. Andrews Murphy. Septimus was married again, March 15, 1810, to Ann, daughter of John and Deborah (Davis) Whitting, who was born May 23, 1771, and died January 23, 1846. Her husband died January 20, 1849, and they are both buried at London Tract church. He inherited from his father several hundred acres in London Britain, which he devised to his only surviving daughter, Sarah Ann, born December 26, 1811, who married David B. Nivin.

David Evans, of the county of New Castle, perhaps the same person who is named in the warrant dated October 15, 1701, for the survey of thirty thousand acres to the Welsh settlers, died leaving children, William, Jennet, Mary, David and John. It was the custom in Wales for the children to take the father's first name for their last name, but in this case the children took the name of Nivin, as shown by a deed on record at Wilmington, Delaware.

David Nivin, son of David Evans, married Isabella Evans, daughter of John and Jane (Moore) Evans. His sister Jennet married a William Nivin who died in 1739, leaving children, Robert, David, Jane, Mary, Jennet, Margaret and Samuel, of whom Margaret married Colonel Evan Evans, already mentioned. His other sister, Mary, married James McMachen. William Nivin, brother of David, married and died in 1747, leaving children, William, Mary, Martha, Margaret, Agnes and Isabel.

John Nivin, son of David and Isabella

(Evans) Nivin, married Martha Nivin, daughter of his uncle William Nivin. She was born in 1730, and they had children, William, Samuel, David, Mary and Isabel.

David Nivin, son of John and Martha Nivin, was born March 29, 1764, and died December 15, 1823. He was married by the Rev. John Evans Finley to Tabitha McMechen, June 7, 1792. Their children were: John, Margaret, Martha, James McMechen, Mary and David Boyd.

David Boyd Nivin, youngest child of David and Tabitha (McMechen) Nivin, was born in Christiana, Delaware; January 22, 1807, and died October 23, 1877. He was married November 30, 1837, by Rev. Thomas Barton, to Sarah Ann Evans, born December 26, 1811, died August 3, 1876, a daughter of Septimus and Ann (Whitting) Evans, of London Britain. They settled on a large farm which she inherited from her father, in London Britain, and had children: Anna Whitting; 2. Septimus Evans; 3. Ella McMechen; 4. Myra Bryan; 5. Clara Llewellyn; 6. John Wilkin Nivin, who married Sophie Stone. The parents and daughter, Clara, who died February 8, 1862, are buried at New London cemetery.

Septimus Evans Nivin, second child and eldest son of David Boyd and Sarah Ann (Evans) Nivin, was born April 12, 1842, in the home in which he now resides. He was educated in the neighborhood schools, and has given his life to the care of the ancestral estate which has descended to himself and the three sisters, and whose home is shared in common. This splendid property comprises a fine farm of three hundred and fifty-four acres, a portion of which fringes the village of Landenburg, on White Clay Creek, in London Britain township, Chester county. Mr. Nivin and sisters have in possession the deed made to their ancestor by the son of William Penn, in 1714 and another deed for another tract, made in 1720.

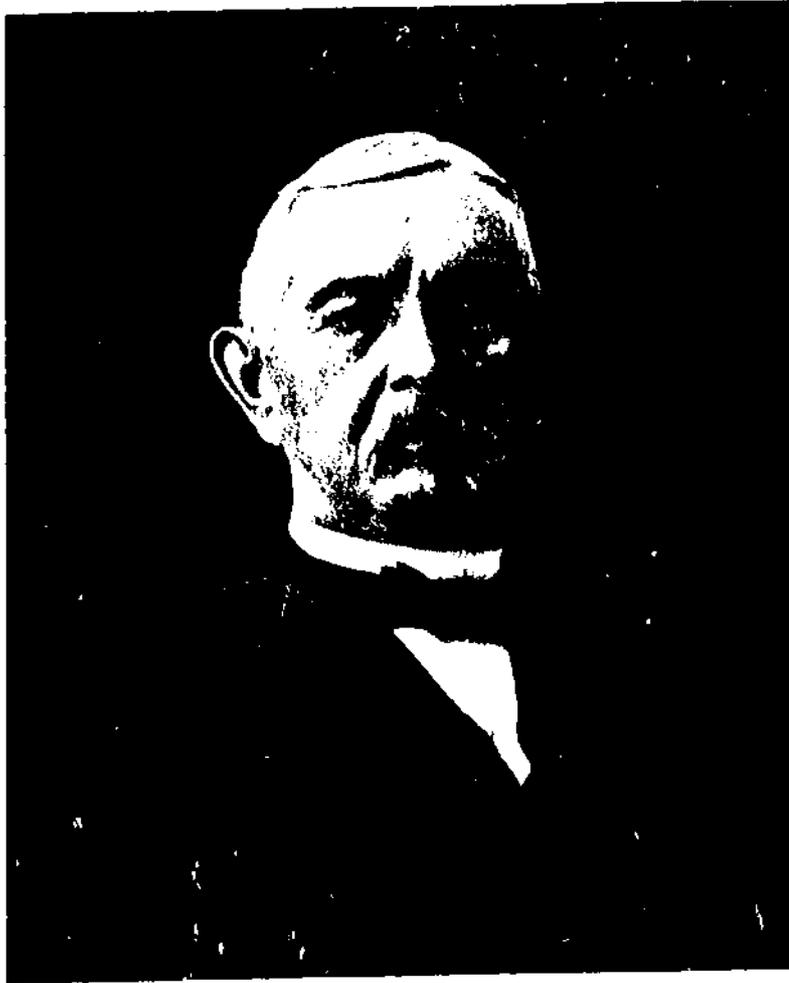

Mr. Nivin, a highly progressive practical farmer and dairyman, has long given his attention more particularly to breeding Jersey cattle. The milk is converted into butter in a model creamery upon the farm, and the product commands the highest price known in the Philadelphia market. His stables and cattle sheds are all of the first excellence, and perfect in all their appointments. The family occupy the paternal mansion, which is beautifully adorned, containing all that culture and intelligence would crave. The family, brother and sisters, also own two other farm tracts, one of fifty-five acres and the other two hundred and thirty-three acres. The larger tract, a short distance from the homestead farm, came from the same ancestors, and has been in the possession of the family for about one hundred and eighty years.

Mr. Nivin, during all his manhood years, has occupied a place of high prominence and usefulness in the community. He has been called, at one time or other, to every township office, that of constable alone excepted, and has seen long service as a school director and treasurer of the school board, having held the latter position for about thirty years, and he was twice elected county auditor. A Democrat in politics, his personal popularity was so great that in 1891 he was elected to the state senate, although the county is one of the principal Republican strongholds in Pennsylvania, and his opponent was the Hon. D. Smith Talbott, one of the most formidable candidates who could have been pitted against him. He has borne a full share in advancing community interests, and has long been actively identified with its most important financial institutions, including the First National Bank of West Chester, in which he is a director.

Mr. Nivin has attained to high rank in the Masonic fraternity, and is a member of numerous other fraternal bodies and social clubs. In all his relations with those about him, he is held in high regard for his many personal excellencies. Strong to do good, he is equally strong to resist evil, and his character for rectitude stands unimpeached. Of kindly and sympathetic disposition, he is habitually liberal in his benefactions to charitable objects, dispensing his bounty with such modesty that none ever learn from him of his deeds of kindness.

JOSEPH WORRELL, a prominent resident of Parkesburg, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a grandson of Joseph Worrell, who was a farmer in the same township, and the son of Elisha Worrell and Mary S. (Minshall) Worrell, both of whom are deceased.

Elisha Worrell, the father of Joseph, was educated in the public schools of Upper Providence, and like his father followed the occupation of a farmer, and continued agricultural pursuits throughout his life. He married Mary S. Minshall of Edgemont township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. They were the parents of twelve children: 1. Dutton, born 6 mo., 2, 1828, married Phebe Green, who is deceased, and one child was born of this union; 2. Sarah E., born 8 mo., 26, 1829, married Levi G. James, and died 9 mo., 18, 1883; 3. Jemima, born 1 mo., 25, 1831, died 12 mo., 26, 1841; 4. Eliza, born 6 mo., 13, 1832, died unmarried, 1 mo., 28, 1866; 5. Henry, born 7 mo., 13, 1834, unmarried; 6. Mary, born 8 mo., 28, 1836, died 9 mo., 19, 1838; 7. Isaac born 6 mo., 2, 1839, died 8 mo., 28, 1840; 8. Mary, born 8 mo., 6, 1840, became the wife of Harvey S. Garrett, and they are the parents of four children; 9. Joseph, twin with Mary, mentioned hereinafter;

Joseph Howell

10. Charles, born 8 mo., 5, 1841, who married Mira Leedom, as his first wife; 11. Elisha, born 7 mo., 15, 1844, married Miss Morris and Alice Thompson; 12. Susan T., born 8 mo., 9, 1847, became the wife of Joseph H. Afflick, and they were the parents of two children.

Joseph Worrell, son of Elisha and Mary S. (Minshall) Worrell, was born in Providence township, Delaware county, on August 6, 1840, and was educated in the schools of the township and county. In his early youth he became an apprentice in a flour mill in Haverford township, eventually entering into partnership with Joseph Leedom who then conducted the business, and this association continued for a period of twenty-five years. His apprenticeship and work in the flour mill at Haverford was but a preparation for his future business elsewhere. Since 1885 he has been a resident of Parkesburg, Pennsylvania, and is one of the most esteemed and leading business men of the town, having been for nearly twenty years the active owner and manager of a large lumber and coal business which he opened when he first removed to Parkersburg; the business was established by William Hoslett.

He has served for some time as a member of the borough council. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. His political affiliations are with the Republican party. He served for a time in the Civil war. He first enlisted in Company E, Sixth Regiment, Pennsylvania Militia, and during the invasion of the state by the Confederate army under General Lee, he served with the Forty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, and was present at the battle of Antietam.

Mr. Worrell has been twice married; his first wife, who died in 1888, was Mrs. Mary A. Ross. His second wife, who is still living, was Anna M. Worrell, daughter of George and Hannah Worrell, born in Cooperton, Haverford township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania.

HERBERT O. MOONEY, an active, energetic and prosperous business man of Williams Corner, Chester county, Pennsylvania, whose career has been noted for industry and progress, was born on the old ancestral home situated in the northern portion of Schuylkill township, April 7, 1872, the son of John A. and Mary A. (Clevenstine) Mooney, the former named being engaged in farming pursuits in West Vincent township. John Mooney, father of John A. Mooney, was a farmer by occupation and resided for many years at Williams Corner, Chester county. John A. and Mary A. Mooney were the parents of the following named children: Laura E., died in early life; Herbert O., mentioned at length hereinafter; John H., died in childhood; M. Luther, engaged in farming pursuits in West Vincent township; Mary D., died in early life; Nellie E., wife of Albert Strough, engaged at his trade of machinist in the town of Royersford, and Effie L. Mooney, who resides at home. The father of these children died at his home in the year 1897.

Herbert O. Mooney, eldest son of John A. and Mary A. Mooney, acquired a practical education in the common schools of Schuylkill township, and after completing his studies learned the trade of blacksmith with J. M. Wagoner, of Wilsons Corner, Chester county. In 1897 Mr. Mooney located at Williams Corner, where he established a general blacksmith and horseshoeing business, which he has conducted ever since. He has now a large and lucrative business, and enjoys an enviable reputation which has been the result of years of careful and conscientious devotion to the work in which he is engaged. Mr. Mooney is a Democrat in politics, but takes little part in political matters, preferring to devote his time and attention strictly to business pursuits.

On December 21, 1892, occurred the marriage of Herbert O. Mooney and Ella Rowland, a daughter of Albert N. Rowland, a prominent agriculturist of East Vincent township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. They are the parents of one daughter, Effie Mooney, born September 1, 1902.

GEORGE H. JACOBS, a thriving farmer and esteemed citizen of East Whiteland township, Chester county, is a son of Joseph Jacobs a native of the county, who was all his life numbered among the large agricultural population which has contributed so greatly to the prosperity and upbuilding of this section of the country. He was moreover a man of strong patriotism and during the Civil war enlisted in the Union army. He neglected none of the obligations of citizenship, and was regarded with much respect by his neighbors, being chosen tax collector in Charlestown and school director in East Whiteland. He married Sarah, daughter of Henry and Catherine Detwiler, the former a farmer of Tredyffrin township. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs: George H., mentioned at length hereinafter; Katie E., who is the wife of George E. Fulmer, a farmer of Charlestown township; Henry H., who is a farmer; Blanche, who is unmarried; Jennie, who is the wife of Frank Young, a merchant and contracting carpenter; and Lula May. Mr. Jacobs, the father of the family, died in 1897, and was survived but two years by his wife, who passed away in 1899.

George H. Jacobs, son of Joseph and Sarah (Detwiler) Jacobs, was born March 28, 1864, in Tredyffrin township, and received his education in the public schools. From his youth up he has been engaged in farming, to which he has devoted himself with more than ordinary success. He is now the owner of the homestead, an estate consisting of ninety-seven acres, which he cultivates with scientific skill, according to the latest and most improved methods and maintains in a high state of productiveness. Attached to his farm is a dairy of fifteen head of cows, which he conducts in such a manner as to insure for its products a ready sale and high prices. Although not actively engaged in public affairs, Mr. Jacobs is keenly interested in whatever concerns the welfare of the community in which he resides, and is ever ready to act the part of a good citizen by doing all in his power for the advancement of any worthy project. His church connections are with the Methodist denomination.

Mr. Jacobs married Mary B., daughter of Thomas and Mary S. Bowman, the former a farmer of Charlestown township.

GEORGE W. REFSNYDER. The Refsnyder family, prominent in all the various enterprises of Chester county, Pennsylvania, where they have made their home for generations, was founded in this country by three brothers who came from Switzerland, May 20, 1744, settled in the vicinity of Pottstown, Pennsylvania, and were the owners of several large tracts of land, consisting of one thousand acres or more. The name was originally spelled Reiffschneider; some branches of the family located in Holland, from whence their descendants emigrated to the United States at various times.

George W. Refsnyder, son of James and Sarah (Price) Refsnyder, was born at Parker's Ford, Chester county, Pennsylvania, May 14, 1844, and obtained an excellent education at the public schools of Phoenixville and Grovemont Seminary. In early life he served an apprenticeship in a rolling mill, and for nineteen successive years worked as a journeyman at that trade in the Phoenixville Mills. He then engaged in agricultural pursuits in the township of Schuylkill, making a specialty of fruit growing, and in addition to this branch of industry he purchased produce from the neighboring farmers and disposed of it in the market near the city of Philadelphia. In 1878 Mr. Refsnyder purchased the farm of twenty-six acres where he now resides, and which he has made one of the most highly improved farms in this part of Chester county. In 1900 he remodeled the residence. He adheres strictly to business methods, is industrious and painstaking, and well merits the prosperity which has attended his efforts. In his political affiliations Mr. Refsnyder is an Independent, casting his vote for the candidate best qualified for office, in his estimation, but he also firmly believes in the policy of protection.

On November 4, 1869, Mr. Refsnyder and Rachel Rossiter were united in marriage, the latter named being a daughter of Thomas Rossiter, Jr. Her grandfather, Thomas Rossiter, was the owner of a large tract of land and a member of one of the oldest families in this section of the state. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Refsnyder were: Edwin Ambrose, deceased; Rachel Georgia, deceased; Harry Price, James Price, and Emma Augusta Refsnyder. The mother of these children died December 26, 1898. Mr. Refsnyder chose for his second wife, Ida V. Nagle, a member of an old and honored family of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania; the ceremony was performed February 18, 1900.

PETER J. CAFFREY, an esteemed citizen of Schuylkill township, whose life has been one of honorable and prominent identification with the agricultural interests of Chester county, was born in that vicinity, March 15, 1866, the son of Peter and Catherine (Hannon) Caffrey, both of whom were natives of county Kildare, Ireland.

Peter Caffrey, father of Peter J. Caffrey, seeking to better his financial condition, crossed the Atlantic to America in the year 1854, his wife following him four years later. He soon adapted himself to the changed conditions and surroundings, secured employment as a farmer's assistant in the township of Schuylkill, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and subsequently became the owner of the property. He possessed a large amount of ability, untiring energy and sound judgment, and by the exercise of these characteristics he became one of the prosperous and influential residents of the community. He enlisted as a private in the Civil war, and served his adopted country for several years. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Caffrey: Mary, died in infancy; Peter J., mentioned at length in the following paragraph; John S., born December 26, 1868, resides on the farm; Anna M., born March 20, 1870, now the wife of John M. Kirk, a prosperous farmer of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, and Philip J., born July 20, 1872, resides on the farm, and was united in marriage to Mary Kiernan, a native of Philadelphia. Peter Caffrey, the father of these children, died at his home in Schuylkill township, February 27, 1896.

Peter J. Caffrey, eldest son of Peter and Catherine Caffrey, attended the public schools of Schuylkill township, where he acquired a good English education. He is now engaged in agricultural pursuits on the old homestead farm, which is under a high state of cultivation, and on which he conducts a general farm and dairy business which has proved most remunerative.

G. W. K. Snyder

In his political sentiments Mr. Caffrey is an adherent of the principles of the Democratic party. He was elected in 1890 to the position of township collector, serving for seven years. He was again elected to the same position, in which capacity he is serving at the present time (1903). Mr. Caffrey is unmarried.

B. FRANKLIN WILLIAMS, actively and prominently identified with various important mercantile pursuits at Williams Corner, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is also a veteran of the war of the Rebellion, in which struggle he fought valiantly and well in defense of his country's flag, participating at the battles of second Bull Run, Fredericksburg, South Mountain, Antietam, Cloyd Mountain, and a number of skirmishes and minor engagements. He traces his ancestry to a family whose history has been closely interwoven with that of Chester county, Pennsylvania, where they have resided for several generations.

Daniel Williams (grandfather) was a native of Charlestown township, Chester county, and in the neighborhood of his birthplace he was reared, educated, spent his active business career, and died. He followed agricultural pursuits as a means of livelihood, was a believer in the tenets of the Presbyterian church, and a firm supporter of the principles advocated by the Democratic party. Daniel Williams and his wife, Jane (McCoy) Williams, reared a family of seven children, four sons and three daughters—Mordecai, David, James, John, Juliann, Elizabeth and Martha Williams.

John Williams (father) was born December 8, 1801, in Charlestown township, Chester county, was reared on his father's farm, educated in the common schools, learned the trade of mason, and later became a contractor and builder. He erected many fine residences and public buildings between Downingtown and Philadelphia, the Presbyterian church at Charlestown, and bridges and other work on the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad. He was also engaged for a time in the manufacture of paper at Williams Corner, and the latter years of his life were devoted to agricultural pursuits. All these enterprises proved most remunerative and he was enabled to acquire considerable real estate, being at one time the owner of six farms in Schuylkill and Charlestown townships. He resided in his native township until 1858, when he disposed of his property there and removed to Schuylkill township, settling in the vicinity of Williams Corner, where his death occurred September 4, 1875, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. He was a strict member of the Presbyterian church, and in politics was formerly a Democrat but later joined the ranks of the Republican party. On April 12, 1833, Mr. Williams married Sarah Roberts, daughter of Joseph and Mary Roberts, of Schuylkill township, Pennsylvania. Their children were—J. Robert, Mary J., Davis B., I. Walker, Sallie A., B. Franklin, William K. and Retta Williams.

B. Franklin Williams, fourth son of John and Sarah Williams, was also a native of Charlestown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, the date of his birth being January 1, 1844. He pursued his studies at the common schools of Chester county, completing his education in the year 1860, and on June 10, 1861, when in his seventeenth year, he enlisted as a musician in Company K, Fourth Regiment, Pennsylvania Reserves, for three years. He served the entire time of his enlistment, being detailed as a clerk at headquarters during the latter part, and was honorably discharged at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1864. Shortly after his discharge from the service of the United States, Mr. Williams pursued a course of study in the Quaker City Business College at Philadelphia, after which he engaged in the manufacture of paper at Williams Corner. He conducted this line of business successfully until 1884, when he rented his plant, which was formerly a cotton mill, but was converted into a paper mill by his father in the year 1858, and engaged in the general mercantile business at the same place. In 1891 he rented his store and again assumed the management of his paper mill, his specialty being the manufacture of binder's board. In addition to this enterprise, Mr. Williams also owns and operates a finely improved and productive farm in Schuylkill township. Since attaining his majority he has given a strong support to political affairs in the township, has served as auditor and assistant assessor, and in 1884 was appointed to fill the position of postmaster at Williams Corner, the onerous duties of which he performed in a highly creditable and efficient manner. He is connected with the Veteran Reserve Corps, and is a member of Phoenixville Post, Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. Williams was united in marriage, October 25, 1871, to Josephine H. Stephens, a daughter of William M. and Hannah (Hall) Stephens, of Upper Merion, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. They are the parents of one child, Howard S. Williams, who was a student at the Friends' Central School in the city of Philadelphia, and is ward burgess of Phoenixville and is engaged in the real estate business.

J. FRANK KULP, the representative of an old and honored German ancestry who have resided in the state of Pennsylvania for many years, was born near Swanksville, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, March 30, 1857, the son of Henry K. and Sarah (Wentzel) Kulp, who were the parents of three children, namely: Jacob W., born in 1846, who followed his trade of mason in Schuylkill township, and was an active participant in the Civil war; Michael, deceased; and J. Frank Kulp.

In the public schools of his native township, J. Frank Kulp acquired an excellent education which qualified him for the active duties of life. During his boyhood and young manhood he became inured to the varied and arduous labors of a farm life, and when he attained the age when it was necessary to select an occupation, he naturally followed the calling most familiar to him. He is now the owner of the farm which was formerly the property of Thomas J. Grover, consisting of seventy-four acres of rich and arable land. Mr. Kulp has devoted his entire time and attention to general farming and dairying, having fourteen well selected cows, and by his skillful and competent management the farm has been productive and therefore yields him a handsome income for the care and labor bestowed upon it. Politically he is a firm adherent of the principles of the Republican party, and in religious faith the family have been attendants of the Methodist Episcopal church.

On March 30, 1896, Mr. Kulp was united in marriage to Alice A. Lambert, who was born in Schuylkill township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, October 13, 1866, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Leach) Lambert, the former named having served as a private in the Mexican war. Their children are: Clarence R., born February 10, 1898, and Ida L., born October 15, 1902.

JOHN F. MYERS, who has gained distinctive recognition as one of the leading men of Schuylkill township, Pennsylvania, whose career has been one of usefulness and prosperity, characterized by the strictest honesty in all business relations, was born in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, August 11, 1854, the son of Charles and Rachel (Robinett) Myers.

Charles Myers, father of John F. Myers, was a native of France, his birth having occurred about the year 1819. He came to this country in early life, and was one of the newsboys who sold the first edition of the Philadelphia Ledger, printed within forty-eight hours after the firing on Fort Sumter, in 1861. He was also instrumental in forming a military company which participated in the battles of Antietam and Gettysburg, remaining in the regular army until the surrender of General Lee, at Appomattox, Virginia. Mr. Myers was a printer by trade, but was largely interested in the manufacture of coal oil, in real estate and conveyancing, all of which enterprises he successfully conducted in the city of Philadelphia, in addition to a lucrative law business which he practiced in Philadelphia, having been admitted to the bar under Judge Brewster. Although his time was devoted mainly to business, Mr. Myers took an active and intelligent interest in all public questions, served as justice of the peace in Ocean City, New Jersey, and also served in the capacity of alderman in the Twenty-first ward of Philadelphia.

The educational advantages enjoyed by John F. Myers were obtained in the public schools of Philadelphia, and his entire business career has been devoted exclusively to agricultural pursuits. In 1883 he secured employment on the farm of A. J. Cassett, in Tredyffrin township, one of the most extensive and productive farms in that section of the county, where he remained until 1898, and during these years he acquired a thorough and practical knowledge of farming which has been of material service to him in the management of his own estate. He then settled on the James Taylor farm, which consists of one hundred and nineteen acres of well cultivated land, located in Schuylkill township, Chester county. This property he purchased in June, 1902, and since that date has devoted his time principally to the raising of live stock, such as horses, cattle and swine; he also intends to operate a fine dairy, the products of which will be of the best quality. Mr. Myers is a man of standing and influence in the community, is a Republican in politics, having been the incumbent of several township offices, and he has also served as delegate to a number of county conventions.

In 1880 Mr. Myers was united in marriage to Mary Golder, whose death occurred in 1882. The following year he married Christiana Isinger, a daughter of Christian and Mary Isinger, and the following named children were born to them: Laura, who resides at home; Lillie, engaged in the millinery business in Philadelphia; John, William, James G., Harry and Norman Myers.

ANDREW BROWN MAITLAND. There is much in the life of everyone to interest and instruct. Although it is impossible in a work so limited as this to depict the undercurrent of motives and actions which are the real source of power and are necessary to the complete understanding of the character, yet it is a pleasure to have even a cursory knowledge of the life and deeds of a unit in the throng of humanity. Among the men of Chester county who have met with success in their ventures and have accordingly retired from active pursuits to obtain that full enjoyment which only comes to the mind at rest and free from the earlier goading aspirations, is Andrew Brown Maitland, a resident of Parkesburg.

He comes of a good family, and is a native of West Caln township, Chester county, the date of his birth being 1836. The first occupation to which he devoted himself after being freed from the confines of the school room was tilling the soil. But he had been attracted, as so many young men are, by the life of the railroader, and he soon found a position with one of the principal lines in the country, the Pennsylvania Railroad, remaining in the employ of this company for twenty-three years, during which time he proved himself faithful to his duties and always diligent. It is a remarkable fact that he was never suspended from work with this company for any time during his long service. Having gained a considerable competence, he was able to retire for the rest of his life, and now resides in his pretty home in Parkesburg, where he is one of the most respected citizens.

The maiden name of his wife was Rachel Henrietta, a daughter of Baker Ottey, who was a prominent farmer of West Caln township, but is now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Maitland have no children. He is a member of the Masonic order, is firm in his adherence to the Democratic party and he and his wife belong to the Octoraro Presbyterian church.

HARRY E. WENTZ. Atglen is only a small borough in the west part of Chester county, but it is noted for the enterprising character of its citizens and in its population of four hundred are many who have all the elements which go to make up success in any place. It is happy in the possession in the number of its citizens of Mr. Harry E. Wentz, who is a progressive business man and has become thoroughly familiar with his occupation of undertaker and cabinet making by close application from youth up.

Mr. Wentz is a native of the neighboring county of Lancaster, where he came into the world in 1862. He received a good education, first in the public schools of his native county and later in Chestnut Level Academy. He arrived at the conclusion that the trade of cabinet maker was the best calling for him to pursue, and when he had become quite well established in this line he also took up the undertaking business. He moved over into Chester county and made Atglen the seat of his operations, and since this time he has been very successful.

His wife was Miss Mary, the daughter of Joshua Rupp, a farmer of Lancaster county, and by their marriage they have become the parents of three children, all of whom are at home, their names being Harold, Zella and Joseph. The family are members of the Presbyterian church and make church work one of the principal objects of their attention. Mr. Wentz holds to the beliefs of the long established Democrat party, and at the present time is serving by election as a member of the borough council. He takes a prominent part in the work of the three fraternal organizations in which he holds membership—the Masons, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics and Octoraro Lodge of Odd Fellows. Altogether he may be said to have made considerable success in life, and the fact that he is now only in the prime of vigorous manhood is indicative of a still brighter future.

WILLIAM HAWK WILSON, a substantial and prosperous business man of Elverson, Chester county, Pennsylvania, engaged in a general line of merchandise, was born July 6, 1846, in Springfield, now known as Elverson. He was one of the first and most earnest advocates for the changing of the name of Springfield to Elverson; the first attempt was a failure, but the second attempt made during the second administration of President Cleveland proved a success.

John Wilson, father of William H. Wilson, was born at Springfield (now Elverson) on April 6, 1816, a son of James Wilson, who died when his child was but eighteen months of age. John Wilson resided for a number of years at Glen Moore, where he devoted his attention principally to agricultural pursuits. He married Hannah Walleigh, of West Nantmeal township, and the following named children were the issue of this union: Mary Elizabeth, born August 19, 1844, wife of Daniel Hughes, and their family consists of three children; William Hawk, mentioned hereinafter; James, born December 23, 1850, married Hannah Dubson, and they are the parents of three children; Katherine Emma, born February 23, 1852, wife of Harrison Hedricks, and six children were born of this union; Stephen W., died at the age of three years; John Wesley, who died on May 1, 1901, leaving a widow and four children. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were active members of the Methodist Episcopal church until the death of Mr. Wilson, which occurred in August, 1881, at Glen Moore, when his widow joined and became a working member of the United Brethren church, in which she remained until her death on March 25, 1903; she was survived by one sister, who is the only living member of a family of twelve children.

The educational advantages enjoyed by William H. Wilson were obtained in the schools of Springfield, Centre, Marsh and at Wallace Seminary, where he completed his studies at the age of fourteen years. His first occupation was farming on his father's property, which consisted of one hundred and sixty acres of land; he then assisted his father with the cultivation of the farm belonging to John Hatfield in Wallace township, and after being thus engaged for three years he left his home and for one season was employed on the farm of George Hartzeler. He then located at Birchrunville, and for one season was employed by his maternal uncle, Levi B. Waleigh. The following two years he was employed on the James Brown farm in Wallace township, then removed to West Nantmeal township and worked for Christian Kurtz for two years, after which he was employed for four years on the farm of Newton Evans in Upper Uwchlan township. For one year he changed his occupation to that of railroading, being employed on the Pennsylvania Railroad under Jacob Mullen, but during this time his health failed and he was obliged to abandon all business pursuits for a period of one year. After regaining his customary health and strength he was employed by Samuel Simley, of Upper Uwchlan township, for one year, then became an employe of the Jones Mine, where he was engaged in mining ore for one year, and the following two years he was employed as a farmhand for Daniel Mast and his son, John Mast.

Mr. Wilson then spent one year as an employe of the lead mines of Uwchlan township, after which he was employed for six consecutive years by the Wilmington & Northern Railroad. In 1885 he purchased from Jacob Diem, of Elverson, Chester county, the good will and trade of a store devoted to the sale of general merchandise and this enterprise he has successfully conducted up to the present time (1903). He is energetic and industrious, possesses good business judgment and therefore merits the financial success which has attended his efforts. He is a member of the United Brethren church, has served as trustee since 1880 and class leader for a number of years, and his political affiliations are with the Democratic party. In 1885, under the administration of President Cleveland, Mr. Wilson was appointed postmaster of Elverson and in this position he creditably filled for a period of nine years. He is a charter member of the Junior Order of American Mechanics, was appointed first councilor of Council, No. 904, and at the present time (1903) is a representative of the state body of that order.

Mr. Wilson was united in marriage to Leah E. Whitman, daughter of Peter and Jane (Maitland) Whitman, of West Nantmeal township, and one daughter, Emma Jane, was born to them; she died in infancy. Peter Whitman was a farmer and laborer, and he and his wife, Jane (Maitland) Whitman, a daughter of Martha Maitland, were the parents of seven children, four of whom died in early life, and the other members of the family were: Leah E., wife of William H. Wilson, as mentioned above; Owen G., born in 1856, was a railroad man and was accidentally killed while crossing the railroad at Elverson on October 10, 1903; his remains were interred in the family burial lot of the United Brethren cemetery at Elverson; he married Hannah Sheeler, daughter of Levi Sheeler, and ten children, two of whom died in early life, were the issue; the family reside in the village of Elverson; Stella, who died on December 7, 1902, aged nineteen years.

JACOB RAPP, a veteran of the Civil war, and a well known and esteemed citizen of Schuylkill township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in which vicinity he was born July 24, 1836, is a descendant of a family who have made the state of Pennsylvania their home for many generations.

Amos Rapp, father of Jacob Rapp, was born in Schuylkill township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, son of Jacob Rapp, the son of Barnet Rapp, who was born March 27, 1761, a descendant of a German ancestry. Amos Rapp was a blacksmith by trade and successfully conducted this line of industry in that section of Chester county now known as Williams Corner. He was one of the foremost citizens of the community, and the success which he attained in his business career was the result of earnest and persistent effort. He was united in marriage to Catherine Clair, whose ancestors were among the early settlers of this section of the state, and the issue of this union was eight children, six sons and two daughters, namely: Lewis, a resident of Chicago, Illinois, and a blacksmith by trade; Mary, widow of John F. Young, who was a prominent citizen of Phoenixville; Anna, widow of B. F. Hartman, a former resident of Charlestown; Jacob, mentioned at length hereinafter; George Washington, deceased, who was a carpenter by trade, and served as a soldier in the Civil war for four years; he was a member of Company K, Fourth Pennsylvania Reserves, and participated in a number of battles; Sylvester, engaged in farming pursuits in Schuylkill township; in 1863 he answered the emergency call for three months' men and became a member of the Thirty-fourth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers; Thomas Jefferson, who is engaged as a carpenter in West Chester; he served in the Civil war, being a member of Company J, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, under command of Captain B. F. Beach; and Eugene, a native of Charlestown, Pennsylvania.

Jacob Rapp, second son of Amos and Catherine Rapp, attended the public schools of Schuylkill township and in early life learned the trade of carpenter, which occupation he has followed, in addition to general contracting, during his entire business career. He is recognized as a man of integrity and honor, whose influence has always been for the good of his community. He is a Republican in politics and a member of the Knights of Pythias, Shannonville Lodge, No. 300, now Audubon, and the Carpenters' Union. During the Civil war he enlisted his services in defense of his country, joining Company J, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, under the command of Captain B. F. Bean, was promoted to the rank of second sergeant, and participated in the following named skirmishes and battles: Kearneysville, Fredericksburg, and the Five Days of Chancellorsville. His term of service was for nine months, and he is now in receipt of a pension from the United States government. For six months during the winters of 1858 and 1859 he served on the frontier in the northern corner of Iowa, at Spirit Lake, guarding the white settlers from the Indians.

On December 23, 1863, Mr. Rapp married Marietta Stauffer, who was born July 6, 1842, a daughter of Abram and Mary A. (Hoxworth) Stauffer, both deceased, who were residents of Upper Merion, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. Two children were the issue of this marriage, namely: Harry C., born February 27, 1865, engaged as a machinist in the city of Philadelphia, married, May 1, 1887, Mary Bernhardt, of Philadelphia, and they are the parents of four children: Jacob, Caroline, Harry and George Rapp. Carrie A., youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Rapp, was born August 25, 1876, and died at the age of twelve years.

EDWIN G. ESWORTHY, an enterprising and public-spirited citizen of Glen Moore, Chester county, Pennsylvania, engaged at the present time (1903) in agricultural pursuits on the farm which was formerly the property of his father, is a native of West Nantmeal township, the date of his birth being July 6, 1858.

He is a son of James M. and Anna Mary (Hoopes) Esworthy, who were the parents of seven children—1. Marshall, a pattern maker by trade, but now engaged in farming pursuits in Uwchlan township; he married Rebecca Peck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peck of Uwchlan township; their family consists of three children: James M., Cora and Mary Esworthy. 2. Mary, wife of Lewellyn Wilson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, and they are the parents of seven children—Blanche, Laura, Florence, Walter, Helen, Elmer and Bertha Wilson; he is engaged in the express business in Philadelphia. 3. William, a farmer, married for his first wife Maggie Trego, daughter of William Trego, of Honeybrook township, who died during the blizzard of 1888; his second wife was Edith Hartman, daughter of Jacob Hartman of Georgetown, Lancaster county, and two children were the issue of this union—Rebecca, who was burned to death in her home, and Essie Esworthy. 4. Edwin G., mentioned at length hereinafter. 5. Laura, wife of Charles Heller, a horse dealer who conducts business in Fifth street, Philadelphia; they are the parents of one child, James Heller. 6. George McClellan, a farmer by occupation, resides with his brother, William Esworthy. 7. John W., engaged in the express business in Philadelphia with his brother-in-law, Lewellyn Wilson; he married Josephine Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Brown, and their family consisted of four children, the eldest of whom is now deceased; the surviving members of the family are: Walter, deceased, George Edwin and Warren Esworthy.

Edwin G. Esworthy, third son of James M. and Anna M. Esworthy, acquired a practical education at the Goodwell school, completing his studies at the age of sixteen years. He then assisted his father in the cultivation and management of his farm, which consisted of twenty-one acres of rich and productive land, on which he resided for twenty-three years. He then secured employment first as a carpenter and later as a drover, and in the spring of 1900 he was very seriously injured by an accident which occurred in Coatesville, this incapacitating him for active work for over two years. At the expiration of this period of time he purchased from his father the farm upon which he now resides, and since then he has been busily engaged in getting the land in proper farming condition; he also operates a dairy which averages about five head of cows. He attends the services of the Fairview Presbyterian church, and his political affiliations are with the Republican party.

Mr. Esworthy married Clara Wilson, daughter of Joseph and Anna (Spinogle) Wilson, residents of Berks county, Pennsylvania, where Mr. Wilson was engaged in farming pursuits. One child was born of this union, Lewellyn Esworthy, now deceased. Mrs. Esworthy died and her remains were interred in Goodwill cemetery.

Edwin G. Esworthy was afterward united in marriage to Rebecca Cassidy, who was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, November 28, 1872, a daughter of Michael and Elizabeth (Brown) Cassidy. Their children are: Laura Elizabeth, born January 28, 1883; James Edgar, born December 21, 1884; Carl, born November 3, 1897; and Jean Stuart, born December 18, 1901. Michael Cassidy, father of Mrs. Esworthy, was born in Philadelphia, was a lieutenant in the regular army, and his death occurred from a fever contracted while in the service of the Sixty-ninth Regiment; his brother, David Cassidy, now deceased, was a prosperous tobacco dealer. Elizabeth (Brown) Cassidy, mother of Mrs. Esworthy, was born in Ireland, July 6, 1834, and is living at the present time (1903), her home being with her daughter, Mrs. Esworthy. Mrs. Cassidy is a daughter of the Rev. Hugh and Jean (Stuart) Brown, both of whom lived and died in Washington county, New York; their children were—Rebecca, wife of Thomas Church, and their residence is in Pottstown, Pennsylvania. John, a resident of Redwood, Jefferson county, New York. Jean Stuart, wife of Hannibal Williams; she is a noted elocutionist and has traveled for several years with her husband teaching the art of elocution and giving public entertainments; they are now in China. Libby, who became the wife of Hugh Miller, and they make their home in Washington county, New York. Georgia, who became the wife of Mr. Steel, and they reside in Washington county, New York. Alexander Brown, who also resides in Washington county, New York.

JAMES DOWLIN PECK is the grandson of John Peck, who was a land owner of Uwchlan, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He was a farmer, and died in Uwchlan, his native township. The name of his wife was Margaret, and they were the parents of three sons: Uriah, Samuel and John, all of whom located on farms adjoining in the same township of Uwchlan.

Uriah Peck, son of John and Margaret Peck, and father of James Dowlin, was also born in Uwchlan township, in 1796. He was educated in the common schools of his native township and followed the vocation of farming all his life, first in the township of Uwchlan, and then in Brandywine township. He finally returned to Uwchlan, where he resided until his death, November 6, 1865. Politically he was a Democrat, and was a man whose interest was always for the advancement of the township in which he resided. He was a member of the Methodist church, in which he was actively interested. Uriah Peck married Mary Temple and their children were: 1. John, deceased; 2. Thomas T., deceased; 3. Elizabeth, deceased; 4. Samuel, deceased; 5. James Dowlin; 6. Margaret, deceased; 7. Taylor T., deceased; 8. Mary J., deceased; 9. Uriah, deceased; 10. William D., deceased, and Sarah R., who married Thomas Humphrey, and who resides in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

James Dowlin Peck, son of Uriah and Mary (Temple) Peck, is the only surviving one of six brothers. He was born in Uwchlan township, April 29, 1828, and received his education at the common schools of his native township and that of Brandywine. Until he was twenty-one years of age he remained with his father and assisted him in the cultivation of his lands, a little later on renting a farm in Uwchlan and beginning to farm for himself. In 1867 he purchased another farm in West Whitehead township, called the "North Side Farm," residing there and continuing to follow the vocation in which he began life until the year 1870, when he opened a sand mine located in the West Whiteland township, and which he successfully and extensively worked for a period of thirty years.

Mr. James Dowlin Peck was a Democrat in politics until 1884, but since then has been a Republican. He has been at all times especially active and energetic in affairs relating to the welfare of his township and has held numerous local offices of importance, having been school director for seventeen years, and for many years judge of election. He is also a trustee of Grove church, at West Whiteland, of which he is a member, and has been president and secretary of the church board for over thirty years.

Mr. Peck has been married twice. His first wife was Mary Hill, to whom he was married February 26, 1852. She was the daughter of Richard Hill, and was born in West Whiteland township, November 15, 1829. She died February 27, 1889. The children of this union were two daughters: Annie C. was born December 28, 1852, and died March 26, 1861. The second daughter, Elberta Jones, was born in Uwchlan township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, on June 30, 1854. She was educated at the district schools and the Normal School at West Chester, Pennsylvania, being one of the first students at that institution. Elberta Jones Peck married, January 19, 1881, Nathan Ramsey Jardine, who was born in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, September 14, 1849. He was educated at the public schools and was a farmer in West Whiteland township for twelve years, but is now engaged in the coal business in West Chester, Pennsylvania. He is also a member of the Grove church (Methodist) at West Whiteland, Pennsylvania. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Jardine are one son, James Peck, born January 27, 1882, and Mary Hill, born March 27, 1884.

The second marriage of Mr. James Dowlin Peck took place on October 11, 1893, to Annie Coulston, daughter of Charles and Grace Coulston, of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. Mr. Peck located in West Chester, Pennsylvania, in 1899, and is now a resident of that town.

C. ARTHUR FISHER, the present supervisor of Schuylkill township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in which vicinity his birth occurred January 20, 1877, is an enterprising and prosperous agriculturist, and his record as a business man is characterized by the utmost integrity and honesty. He is a son of General Benjamin F. Fisher, who responded to President Lincoln's first proclamation calling for militia from the several states to the number of seventy-five thousand men, to serve for three months. He was active in the signal corps, later served in the capacity of lieutenant and subsequently was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general, which position he filled with ability until the termination of the war. In 1875 he purchased the farm in Schuylkill township on which his son, C. Arthur Fisher, now resides, and for fifteen years successfully conducted a general farming business. He is now following his profession of lawyer, having been admitted a member of the Philadelphia bar in 1867. He is an able and honest practitioner, well skilled in the intricacies of the law, and his practice is both extensive and lucrative. His residence is at 1100 North Fortieth street, Philadelphia.

C. Arthur Fisher, son of General Benjamin F. and Alice E. Fisher, was educated in the public schools of Schuylkill township, at the Quaker school in Philadelphia, and at Franklin and Marshall College. He began his business career as a clerk in his father's law office in the city of Philadelphia, where he remained for several years. He devoted the following two years of his life to the study of law, after which he decided to become an agriculturist, and since that date has conducted his operations on the homestead farm which contains eighty-two acres of rich and arable land, which was formerly the property of Joseph Anderson. His farm is well cultivated and very productive and ranks as one of the best pieces of property in that section of the state. Mr. Fisher is alive to every measure or enterprise that is of benefit to the community, is a Republican in politics, and was elected supervisor of the township in February, 1903.

On April 30, 1902, Mr. Fisher was united in marriage to Annie R. Hoy, a daughter of John L. and Elizabeth (Coats) Hoy. Mr. Fisher and his wife are consistent members of the Episcopal church of Phoenixville, Chester county.

John L. Hoy, father of Mrs. C. Arthur Fisher, was a union soldier of the late war, and the proprietor of the well-known Mansion house of Valley Forge. He is a son of Bernard and Sarah (Curry) Hoy, and was born at Norristown, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, November 4, 1837. He received his education in the common schools of Valley Forge and Norristown, and then was engaged in farming and in the hotel business until 1861, when he enlisted in Company H, Eighty-second Regiment, Pennsylvania Infantry. He participated in the battles of the Army of the Potomac on the Peninsula up to the last of the seven days' fight, soon after which he contracted rheumatism and was sent to the hospital, where he remained some time. Returning to his company he was promoted to orderly sergeant, but was so afflicted with rheumatic trouble that on April 28, 1863, he was discharged from the service on account of disability. Returning from the army he was engaged for a short time in the hotel business at Mt. Claire, Montgomery county, and then went to Philadelphia, where he served as a conductor on a street car line for three years and a half. At the end of that time he returned to Norristown, Montgomery county, and was in the hotel business there until 1880, when he came to Valley Forge, where he opened his present hotel. Mr. Hoy is a popular landlord and a successful business man. He owns and tills the home farm of seventy-six acres of land. He is a Democrat in politics, and formerly took an active part in political affairs.

In August, 1858, Mr. Hoy married Maria Morgan, who died in 1875, and left three children: Bernard, Elizabeth Hallowell, and Peter V., proprietor of the Montgomery house at Norristown, Pennsylvania. For his second wife he married Elizabeth Coats, by whom he had one child, Annie. After his second wife's death (1887), he wedded Tillie, daughter of Chalkley Coats.

Bernard Hoy, Sr., (paternal grandfather), was a native of county Antrim, Ireland, where he passed his life. He left two children to survive him, a son and a daughter: Bernard (father), and Bridget. Bernard Hoy was born in 1802 in Ireland, where he became a "loom boss," and after following that occupation for a short time in the factories of his native country went in 1821 to England, where he married, and from which country he came in 1835 to the United States. After spending some time in New York city he removed to Norristown, this state, which he left in 1851 to settle at Valley Forge, where he purchased a good farm and engaged in farming and in the hotel business. Bernard Hoy was a Democrat in politics, and a Catholic in religion, and died in December, 1858, aged fifty-six years. He married Sarah Curry, and reared a family of six children, three sons and three daughters: James F., Peter, John L., Elizabeth, a sister of charity at St. Patrick's church in Philadelphia; Mary, who married Stanly Ogden, a cotton and woolen manufacturer of Valley Forge and Norristown; and Annie, who died in 1861. Mrs. Hoy was born and reared in England, and died at Valley Forge in March, 1879, when in the seventy-fifth year of her age.

CADWALADER EVANS SUPLEE. The Suplee family of Chester county, Pennsylvania, is of French extraction and was founded in this country by Andreas Souplis, who was among the earliest settlers of Germantown, Pennsylvania, becoming in due course of time a prominent and influential citizen and, in 1691, was chosen sheriff of that corporation. The Revolutionary muster-rolls of Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania, testify to the fact that many members of the family were active participants in the struggle for liberty. Peter Suplee (grandfather), a native of Schuylkill township, Chester county, enlisted as a private during the progress of the war, and died of camp fever in the service a few months before his son, Peter Suplee (father) was born.

Peter Suplee, father of Cadwalader Evans Suplee, was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, spent the greater part of his life in Schuylkill township, where he engaged extensively in agricultural pursuits, but during the latter years of his life he was a resident of Norristown, Montgomery county, where his death occurred in 1859, having attained the advanced age of four-score years. His church affiliations were with the Baptist denomination, and his political allegiance was given to the Whig party, and he was elected on that ticket to fill several offices in Schuylkill township, among which was that of justice of the peace. By his marriage to Hannah Eastburn, the following named children were born—Samuel, Horatio, Cadwalader, Silas, Peter, Margaret, who became the wife of Joseph Rapp, Hannah, who became the wife of Mr. Reess, and Eliza, who became the wife of Robinson Kennedy.

Cadwalader E. Suplee, third son of Peter and Hannah Suplee, was born in Schuylkill township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, July 31, 1804. His boyhood days were spent on the old homestead, and he pursued his studies in the common schools of the neighborhood. When eighteen years of age he was apprenticed to the blacksmith trade, and by paying the strictest attention to the particulars and details of the business he became an expert mechanic, and for seven years successfully conducted a business of his own, part of the time in Montgomery and part in Delaware county. He then worked two years as a journeyman at his trade, and about the year 1834 he purchased of his father one hundred acres of land situated about two and a half miles from Phoenixville, in a region very early settled by some of his ancestors, where he conducted general farming and dairying. Mr. Suplee was always a strict adherent of the principles of Republicanism, and served his township in the capacity of school director and supervisor.

Mr. Suplee was united in marriage, in 1827, to Catherine Jones, daughter of Charles and Mary (Allaway) Jones, of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, and the following named children were the issue of this union: 1. Benjamin Franklin, deceased, was a farmer during the early part of his life but later engaged in the lumber and coal busness in Phoenixville, Pennsylvania, where his death occurred in 1862; a wife and two children survived him. 2. Mary Jones, wife of William Stepiens, a prosperous farmer of Upper Merion, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. 3. Edwin M., formerly an agriculturist but now engaged in the lumber and coal business at Phoenixville, Pennsylvania. 4. Hannah E., who died in 1898. 5. Adaline Rebecca, wife of Abraham Delp, who was identified with the real estate and insurance business at Norristown, Pennsylvania. 6. Sarah J., who resides on the old homestead in Schuylkill township. 7. Esther Anna, wife of Gideon T. Ruth, a representative farmer of Malvern, Pennsylvania. Mr. Suplee was a regular attendant of the Baptist church, as was his family.

The death of Mr. Suplee occurred January 23, 1882, and his widow survived until January 1, 1892. In 1893 Hannah E. and Sarah J. Suplee moved to their present home, the homestead of their grandfather, Peter Suplee, known as Suplee Corner. Hannah C. Suplee died August 4, 1898.

RICHARD DONEGHAN GIBNEY, of Coatesville, Chester county, Pennsylvania, a man of prominence in local commercial affairs, is widely known as a writer and public speaker, and has exerted a marked influence in village and county affairs.

He is of Irish ancestry, descended from Luke Gibney, who came to America in 1849. Luke Gibney was a farmer, and was noted for his excellent knowledge of domestic animals. His son John, who was also born in Ireland, possessed the paternal instincts, and was for many years an extensive and successful dealer in horses and cattle. He was of limited education, as were most of the Irish immigrants of his day, who were afforded little if any school advantages, but he was of strong and discerning mind, and was recognized as a man of force, ability and strict integrity. At the close of the Civil war he engaged in railroad construction, and completed much important contract work, including two miles on the Wilmington & Northern Railroad, adjacent to the city of Wilmington; and sections of the Reading & Columbia Railroad, the Northwestern Penn Railroad, the extension of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, and others. In 1872 he retired from this work and devoted his attention to the care of some valuable farms which he had purchased in Honeybrook and West Caln townships, and to a livery stable in Coatesville, which he conducted for twenty years, and made noted for its fine horses and excellent equipages. He was throughout his life a consistent churchman in the Roman Catholic communion, and in politics he was a Democrat.

John Gibney married Anne E. Doneghan, who was also a native of Ireland and received her education in Chester county, Pennsylvania. Their children were: Richard D., Lewis L., John and Annie E. Gibney, deceased. Her parents were Richard and Mary (Stewart) Doneghan. The story of her mother's life is in a degree romantic. Mary Stewart was born near Belfast in 1800, and the death of her parents left her an orphan at the tender age of five years. She was reared by a relative who brought her up after the strictest Presbyterian fashion. When she came to maturity she eloped and married Mr. Doneghan, who was a Catholic, and this, in a day when religious animosities were held with extreme bitterness, so incensed her blood relations that they ignored her ever afterward. To her children she told of a brother almost two years her junior, who was brought up by her grandfather. He was educated for the ministry, but before he could be ordained emigrated to the United States, and engaged in mercantile business in New York city. Her sister Mary, who had not seen her brother since she was an infant, cherished the hope of meeting him as soon as she could reach New York, but she died at sea. A few years ago the late J. Grier McClure handed to Mr. Richard D. Gibney a package of old letters which came to him from the executors of Arthur and Richard Doneghan, and among them was one dated September 11, 1834, relating to the two children of Andrew Stewart—Mary and A. T.—which is accepted as conclusive evidence that Mary Stewart, grandmother of Mr. Gibney, was the sister of Alexander T. Stewart, the millionaire merchant of New York. Her husband with his children came direct to Chester county, where he expected to find a brother, but who had died before his arrival. The members of this family married and settled in various parts of the state, but these lines have not been traced.

Richard D. Gibney, son of John and Anne E. (Doneghan) Gibney, was born in West Brandywine township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, November 8, 1856. He was educated in the public school of the county, and in the McClellan Institute at West Chester. From 1878 to 1880 he was bookkeeper for his father. In 1882 he bought a farm in Highland township to which he removed. Six years later he purchased the Idle Wylde farm in West Brandywine township—a beautiful and splendidly improved tract which for a number of years has returned him ten per cent. upon its cost of $11,000. In 1900 he bought the livery stable in Coatesville formerly conducted by his father, and is now engaged in that business. He is the owner of considerable property in the village and other parts of the county, collecting his own rents and attending to all business connected with the ownership, and employing no agents.

In 1880 Mr. Gibney came into prominence as a writer for the press, his letters as western correspondent for the Pittsburgh and New York newspapers during the memorable Garfield-Hancock campaign attracting marked attention. Prior to this he had received recognition as forceful and logical in debate, and it was his great distinction that for twelve consecutive years he met men of all callings and of highest intelligence in joint debate before public lyceums, institutes and other bodies, and in all that time not once failed of receiving a favorable decision from the judges, a record that can scarcely be paralleled. His oratorical and controversial powers found a useful field in the great political contest before referred to, and he was listened to with intense interest by thirty-eight distinct audiences in Beaver, Lawrence and Alleghany counties, in his advocacy of General Winfield S. Hancock for the presidency. Known as a successful practical farmer, he was subsequently employed by the Secretary of Agriculture as an expert exponent of agricultural interests and methods, and in that capacity has repeatedly addressed Farmer's Institutes throughout eastern Pennsylvania. For years he has been a contributor to all the local journals, and his articles upon farming and kindred topics, all of which have appeared over his own signature, have a permanent value.

As was his father, Mr. Gibney was originally a Democrat, but in 1884 he supported General Benjamin A. Harrison for the presidency, and from that day has been known as a stalwart Republican. For nine years he held the office of justice of the peace in West Brandywine township, and he was assessor, school director and member of the county committee in Highland township after his removal thither in 1882. In religion he is a Roman Catholic, from principle and conviction, ever ready to defend its teachings, doctrines and dogmas, with pen or tongue, and he is a willing and liberal contributor to the maintenance of his church and of its splendid charities.

Mr. Gibney married, November 27, 1878, Miss Sara Esther Vandever, who received her education in the public school of Chester county and in Professor Gause's Academy at Harrisburg, and is a member of the Catholic church. She is a daughter of Jesse M. and Mary (De Haven) Vandever. Her father was a contractor and builder, and he served with distinction during the Civil war. The Vandevers originated in Switzerland, and his ancestors settled in Wilmington, Delaware, about 1790. His mother, Sara Baker, sprang from the old Quaker family of that name, and was connected with the Millers, who date back to the days of Penn. The mother of Sara E. Vandever was a daughter of Jehu De Haven, a prominent contractor and builder of Harrisburg, who as partner with the late United States Senator Simon Cameron, built the old Erie canal. He also erected the Dauphin County Soldiers Monument in Harrisburg, and the Rockville Bridge over the Susquehanna. He was for fifteen years superintendent of the Northern Central Railroad. He was a descendant of Jacob De Haven, who furnished the United States government during the Revolutionary war, through Robert Morris, $400,000 and the government regularly acknowledged the debt. Jacob De Haven died poor. He had three sons—Nathan, Henry and Mordecai, and one daughter, Deborah. Nathan's children were William, Henry, Uriah, Jehu, (the grandfather of Sara E. Gibney) Harriet and Eliza. Her maternal grandmother was Esther Kline, descended from a family of musicians who early in the seventeenth century settled in Montgomery and Philadelphia counties. The De Havens and Klimes were members of the Presbyterian and Lutheran churches.

To Richard D. and Sara E. (Vandever) Gibney were born twelve children: 1. Mary E., born October 11, 1879, now the wife of I. A. Frank; 2. Anna Theresa, born October 25, 1881, unmarried. 3. Richard DeHaven, born June 16, 1883. 4. John, born November 27, 1884. 5. Helen Gertrude, born May 20, 1886. 6. Edward Paul, born January 23, 1888. 7. Agnes, born January 23, 1890. 8. Esther, born September 11, 1891. 9. George Raymond, born December 19, 1893. 10. Jesse Lewis, born January 15, 1895. 11. Ruth, born October 12, 1896, deceased. 12. Edith Cecelia, born September 30, 1899. Many of these children are natural born musicians.

ISAAC NEWTON WALKER, a representative agriculturist of Schuylkill township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, located on a farm near the postoffice of Pawling, and a lineal descendant of one of the early settled families in that section of the state, was born September 27, 1864, on the farm now known as the Whitacker farm, the property of H. C. Pennypacker, but formerly owned by his parents, Thomas Pennypacker and Charlotte E. (Weber) Walker.

Isaac Newton Walker obtained his preliminary education in the common schools of Phoenixville, and this was supplemented by a thorough course of study at the West Chester State Normal School, and since then he has engaged extensively in farming pursuits. He conducts his operations on the old Batt farm, formerly the property of Mr. Valentine and now known as Cedar Croft farm, and being progressive and practical in his ideas and methods he has gained a large degree of financial success in his enterprise. He is also the owner of a fine quarry which produces a good quality of brown sandstone, and this he ships in large quantities to various parts of the United States. Mr. Walker is a Republican in politics, but has never allowed his name to be used as a candidate for office, preferring to devote his entire attention to his business pursuits.

Mr. Walker was united in marriage, June 5, 1890, to Martha Sunderland, a native of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and daughter of John and Margaret (Beckley) Sunderland. Mr. Sunderland was an extensive contractor and builder in the city of Philadelphia, and during the many years that he conducted this business he erected nineteen hospitals and also laid the foundation of the city hall of Philadelphia. He was a man of strong and independent character and of absolute integrity, and refused to align himself with the unscrupulous political ring then in charge of public affairs. In consequence, he was not only deprived of the employment in which he served the public so usefully, but he was marked for violence, and on several occasions narrowly escaped the bullet of the assassin. His death occurred in January, 1898, aged eighty-four years, and his wife, Margaret (Beckley) Sunderland, passed away in 1883.

EDWIN H. PAVITT, a representative citizen of Schuylkill township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, who has been successfully engaged in various pursuits for well nigh half a century, was born in Essex county, Terling, England, June 17, 1840, a son of John and Sarah Pavitt.

John Pavitt (father), accompanied by his wife and family, emigrated to the United States about the year 1852, locating in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, where for a number of years he gained a large degree of financial success by following the occupations of butcher and farmer. The latter portion of his life was spent in the city of Philadelphia, where his death occurred in the seventy-eighth year of his age. His wife, Sarah Pavitt, died at the age of eighty-six years. They were the parents of the following named children: John, Sarah, Louisa, William, Susanna, Robert, Eliza, Edwin H., Jane, Eleanor and Julian Pavitt.

Edwin H. Pavitt acquired a thorough educational training in the public schools of the neighborhood, after which he served an apprenticeship at the trade of butcher and upon becoming proficient in this line of industry, he engaged in it at the Eagle and upon the present site of Devon, making his home in the latter named town for fourteen years and acquiring considerable property, on which he erected a substantial and commodious residence. He followed agricultural pursuits in connection with his butchering trade. His next place of residence was at 3807 Market street, Philadelphia, where he conducted an extensive business as a shipper and dealer in horses; he purchased his horse flesh in the western portion of the United States, and by disposing of them in the eastern markets he was enabled to realize a goodly profit. After continuing at this business for a period of twelve years, he removed to Goshen, Chester county, and followed farming for three years; he then located in what is now Gladwyn, and for one year was employed as farmer; later served two years in the same capacity at Ardmore, then assumed charge of the A. F. Phillips farm for one year, after which he settled on the William H. Pennypacker farm where he is residing at the present time (1903).

Bentley Worth

Mr. Pavitt married, January 7, 1863, Miss Kate Crewe, who was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Samuel and Emma J. (Howorth) Crewe, who came to this country from England. One child has been born of this union—Clifford J. Pavitt—who attended the public and private schools adjacent to his home, completed his education at Pierces Business College in Philadelphia, and is now a resident of Sacramento, California.

BENTLEY WORTH, now living a retired life in the town of West Chester, Pennsylvania, was for half a century the leading contractor and builder of Chester county, and many of its public and private buildings stand as monuments of his skill and ability in the architectural line. He traces his origin to Thomas Worth, who was born in England in 1649, and left his native country on February 21, 1682. He settled in Darbytown immediately after his arrival, and subsequently removed higher up in the township. He was a consistent member of the Society of Friends, and, having acquired an excellent education for those days, his services were in constant demand in the performance of such duties as required an expert and ready penman. In 1685 he was united in marriage to Isabell Davidson, who died in 1709, at the age of fifty-four years, survived by her husband, who passed away in 1731. Their children were John, Thomas and Sarah Worth. Mr. Worth brought his Bible with him to this country; it was printed in 1636, and is now in the possession of one of his descendants.

John Worth, eldest son of Thomas and Isabell Worth, was born June 9, 1686, and married, in 1711, Katherine Ormes, daughter of Richard and Mary Ormes, of Radnor, and died September 23, 1716. Thomas Worth, Jr., second son of Thomas and Isabell Worth, was born January 4, 1688, and in 1749 was commissioned a justice of the peace and of the court of common pleas, in which office he was continued by reappointment until near the time of his decease. He married Mary Fawcett, daughter of Walter and Rebecca (Ferne) Fawcett, of Ridley. Their children were: Samuel, Susanna, Lydia, Rebecca, Hannah, Ebenezer, Joseph and Mary Worth.

Samuel Worth, eldest son of Thomas and Mary Worth, was born January 25, 1718, and married October 27, 1744, at Birmingham Meeting, Elizabeth Carter, daughter of George and Elizabeth Carter, of East Bradford. Their children were: John, Thomas, Joseph, and Elizabeth Worth. John Worth was born October 5, 1745, and for many years was a prominent resident of Mortonville, where he owned and operated a mill. He married Mary Bentley, daughter of George and Jane Bentley, and the following named children were born to them: Thomas, Elizabeth, Ebenezer, Samuel, John, George, Emnor, and Benjamin Worth.

Benjamin Worth, father of Bentley Worth, was born August 5, 1789, and after receiving a common school education learned the hatter's trade, in which he was engaged for a number of years in East Marlborough township. Later he purchased a hat store and remained the proprietor of it up to the time of his death. On February 15, 1811, he married Phoebe Taylor, who was born February 25, 1789, the daughter of Titus and Rebecca (Hunt) Taylor, of Westtown. Their children were: Caroline, born December 14, 1811, died December 19, 1887; Rebecca, born July 31, 1813, died June 4, 1837; Anna, born March 9, 1816, died August 1, 1849; Thomas, born January 17, 1819, died July 30, 1894; Bentley, born January 27, 1820, and Titus T., born July 13, 1823, died November 13, 1892. The father of these children died June 17, 1831, survived by his widow who removed to West Chester, where her death occurred March 29, 1868.

Bentley Worth, son of Benjamin and Phoebe Worth, was born near Unionville, Chester county, Pennsylvania, January 27, 1820. He attended the public schools of the neighborhood, where he acquired a practical education, and at an early age served an apprenticeship of three years at the trade of carpentering. After becoming a thorough master of this art he established a business on his own account in West Chester and soon became noted for his efficiency and skill in this direction. He erected many of the handsome buildings which adorn the city, the more notable ones being the county house, the First National Bank, and the business block owned by David McConkey. In addition to this extensive business, Mr. Worth was identified with the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of West Chester, and acted in the capacity of trustee of the Normal School for many years, serving as a member of that board at the time of the erection of the building. In his political sentiments he was formerly an old line Whig, but later joined the Republican party. He served as a member of the borough council for a number of years.

In April, 1854, Mr. Worth married Dorcas P. Mercer, who was born near West Chester, Pennsylvania, a daughter of William and Eliza (Pierson) Mercer. Both Mr. Worth and his wife attend the meetings of the Society of Friends.

JONES V. BEAN, one of the energetic, progressive and prosperous agriculturists of Schuylkill township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, was born on the old Bean homestead near the village of Pawling, July 29, 1839, the son of Nicholas and Mary A. Bean.

Henry Bean, grandfather of Jones V. Bean, was a native of eastern Pennsylvania, and the greater part of his life was spent in the vicinity of Pawling, where he owned a small farm which he cultivated to a high state of perfection. He was upright and honorable in all the relations of life, and was held in high esteem by all who had the honor of his acquaintance. Eight children were born to Mr. Bean and his wife, Susannah Bean, two sons and six daughters, all of whom are now deceased. Their daughters were: Sarah A., wife of Jacob Rasor; Catherine, wife of John R. Dean; Rebecca, wife of Joshua Zimmerman; Susan, wife of Marks Morris. The sons were: Nicholas and Henry Bean. The father of these children died in 1820, aged sixty years.

Nicholas Bean, father of Jones V. Bean, was born on the old homestead, January 17, 1801, acquired a common school education, and in early manhood learned the trades of carpenter and cabinet maker. For a number of years he followed that combined occupation, but subsequently changed his line of business to the buying and selling of lumber and coal, having a large and lucrative trade at the time of his decease. In connection with this enterprise he owned and operated a farm, and in all his business ventures he displayed great energy and executive ability. In his political affiliations he was formerly an old line Whig, but upon the formation of the Republican party he joined their ranks and gave an active and zealous support to their candidates. Mr. Bean, who was of Welsh origin, married Mary A. Vanderslice, a descendant of Holland Dutch ancestors, who have made their home in this section of the state for many generations. Their children were: Anna, wife of Jesse Jarett; Sarah, wife of William Govett; Susannah, wife of Abin Evenson; Harriet R., wife of Joseph Culp; Mary F., wife of John T. Cox; Henry B., deceased; Benjamin F.; Jones V.; George W., and Lewis U. Bean. Mr. Bean died in April, 1878, in the seventy-eighth year of his age, and his wife died in 1885, having attained the same age as her husband.

Jones V. Bean, son of Nicholas and Mary A. Bean, attended the common schools of the township, wherein he acquired a practical education. Since the completion of his studies he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits, this occupation proving most profitable and the best suited to his disposition and inclinations. He takes an active interest in local affairs and was chosen to serve as supervisor of the township in 1881, and this position he held up to the year 1891. He was elected on the Republican ticket, but his convictions are in favor of the Independent party. Three of his brothers served during the Civil war, Benjamin F., George W. and Lewis U. Bean, the former named being the captain of Company I, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Pennsylvania Regiment.

On February 28, 1868, Mr. Bean married Rebecca Peart, a native of Schuylkill township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Bean is a member of the Society of Friends, and is a regular attendant at their meetings.

GEORGE W. DWIER. The first progenitor of the American branch of the Dwier family in eastern Pennsylvania of whom there is any authentic account, emigrated to the United States in 1796, coming from Dublin, Ireland, his native city. He took up his abode in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he died only two years later, in 1798, and his remains were interred in St. Mary's cemetery. Among his children was a son Daniel, who became the grandfather of George W. Dwier.

Daniel Dwier, before named, was born in what is known as the Kensington district of Philadelphia. He passed his life in his native city and there married Mary Mood, and among their children was a son, Henry. Henry Dwier, when he reached years of maturity, married Amanda Abel, and to them were born seven children, named as follows: 1. Daniel, who married Hepzibah Holroyd; 2. Mary A., who became the wife of George H. Frederick, now deceased, and to whom was born one child; 3. George William, to be further referred to hereinafter; 4. Henry; 5. Kate S.; 6. Sallie S., who became the wife of Henry Weightman; 7. William, who married Lizzie Kolb. The mother of this family died about 1893, and her husband survived her about three years, passing away in August, 1896. As were their parents and grandparents, they were people of excellent character, and gave careful rearing to their families. Henry Dwier and his wife were exemplary members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

George W. Dwier, third child and second son of Henry Amanda (Abel) Dwier, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, October 26, 1851. He attended the excellent public schools of the city, acquiring an education which was equivalent to that afforded in many academical institutions. On leaving school he found employment in the office of a conveyancer and real estate dealer, with whom he remained for five years, during this period gaining a knowledge of business methods and conditions which was invaluable in after years. He then engaged in a mercantile business, but this proving uncongenial, he accepted a position as bookkeeper in the Penn National Bank of Philadelphia. He displayed a genuine aptitude in this new calling, and, some years later, when was organized the First National Bank of Darby, he was called to the position of assistant cashier in that institution. In 1891, on the death of the cashier, Mr. W. L. Buck, Mr. Dwier was elected to succeed him, and has served in that position continuously to the present time. The Bank of Darby is recognized as one of the most substantial in eastern Pennsylvania, having experienced a steady and uniform growth in volume and class of business from the time of its organization, and not a little of the prosperity of the institution is ascribed to the ability of Mr. Dwier, and the confidence reposed in his comprehensive knowledge of banking affairs, both in principle and in every-day detail.

An active public-spirited citizen, Mr. Dwier has borne a full share in advancing the interests of the community along both moral and material lines, and his influence and means have always been freely extended to the promotion of improvements and reform. He rendered most intelligent and useful service as a member of the board of education, and accomplished much toward the maintenance and extension of the educational system. He was for several years president of the borough council of Sharon Hill, during a period when various notable improvements were carried forward, and is at present in the midst of a three year term of office in the capacity of burgess. He is a member in good standing of Ivanhoe Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons of Philadelphia; of Integrity Lodge No. 139, Ancient Order United Workmen, of Pennsylvania; Delphi Senate, No. 5, Order of Sparta; and of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, also of Philadelphia. Politically Mr. Dwier is a Democrat, firm in his support of his party on general national issues, but sufficiently independent to act in local affairs in such manner and with such associates as he conceives to be for the public interest.

Mr. Dwier was married, October 17, 1870, to Miss Mary E. Vaughan, a native of Philadelphia, and a daughter of John and Margaret (Dickes) Vaughan. Two children have been born of this marriage: 1. George Alonzo, born October 24, 1872, who married Miss Nellie F. Schenk, of New Jersey, and to whom have been born two children, Edith Virginia and George W. 2. Edith May, born August 18, 1874, who is now the wife of Harry E. Gilman.

SAMUEL M. GRIFFITH is a successful grocer of Garrettsford, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, and he is a son of the Rev. James Wilson Griffith, and grandson of Eleazer and Ellen (Wilson) Griffith. The latter had two children, viz. the Rev. James and Charles M. Charles M. married Martha Phillips, and they had six children, of whom but very little is known as the family is scattered, but they were as follows: Celia, who married O. B. Channell, of West Chester, and has one daughter, Bessie; Wilmer, who married and has three children; Captain Emerson Griffith, who married and has two daughters; Daniel; Johanna, who married Harry Carr; and Mary Griffith.

The Rev. James Griffith married Harriet M. Miller, by whom he had two children, viz: Thomas and Samuel M., our subject. Thomas was educated in the public schools at Birch Run, and leaving school at the age of eighteen years he began the battle of life for himself, and since then he has been engaged in different lines of business, including that of merchant, mechanic, contractor and surveyor; in the latter capacity he served the government in South Carolina from December 6, 1863, until June 1, 1864, when he returned to Pennsylvania and resumed his every day life. At the present he is thinking of retiring from active life and devoting his entire attention to his farm, upon which he makes his home. During the past four years he has served most acceptably as justice of the peace, as a member of the school board and auditor, and upholds the principles of the Republican party. His first wife was Sarah Pennypacker, who bore him one child, who died at the age of seven years. His second wife, the present Mrs. Thomas Griffith, was a Miss Kate Rice Rawlson, and she unites with him in dispensing a most gracious hospitality to their many friends.

Samuel M. Griffith was educated in the school of Birch Run, from which he was graduated, and then started out in life as a clerk for Bennett & Lear in Garrettsford, remaining with them until that firm sold out, when he went with Powell & Haycock at Clifton. When Hibbard & Son purchased the old business of Bennett & Lear, they secured Mr. Griffith's services, and he remained with the new house until he and his brother went to west Philadelphia and started in business for themselves. Later Samuel sold his interest and entered the employ of William H. King, but after four years purchased a paper route and for sixteen years made that line of commercial activity a success. Receiving a good offer for his business, he sold it and returned to Garrettford, where he embarked in the grocery line, in which he has since continued and in which he has met with marked success. During the nearly fifteen years he has been thus engaged Mr. Griffith has enlarged his field of operation and now carries one of the finest stocks of goods in the locality, which he offers at prices sure to command ready purchasers and meet popular demand. The service of his establishment is prompt and efficient, and he numbers among his customers the very best people of Garrettford. In politics, like his brother, he is a staunch Republican, but he has been so engrossed with business cares that he has not had time to give much attention to party matters. His religious inclinations make him a consistent member of the Baptist church, towards which denomination he gives liberally.

Mr. Griffith married Mary Hoffstittler, and they are the parents of eight children, as follows: 1. Elmer W., born in Garrettford, November 20, 1870, and educated in the public schools of the neighborhood; when he attained his majority he secured employment in the butter and provision trade in Philadelphia, and continued in this line until 1896, when he began business on his own account. In 1901 he removed to his present location at 61 Thompson street. On June 27, 1899, he married Estella S. Buckley, of Philadelphia, and their children are: Francis Wilson and Allen Wilson. 2. Ella, who married Robert Craig, and their three children are: Leslie, Myrtle and Mary Craig. 3. Mary, unmarried. 4. Margaret, who became the wife of Charles Evans. 5. Harriet, unmarried. 6. Nina, unmarried, and two children who are deceased. Both Mr. and Mrs. Griffith are very popular in their neighborhood and have gained numerous friends by their kindly actions, many charities and consideration for others. They earnestly endeavor to live according to the example set them by the Divine Master.

LEWIS WORRELL PYLE, prominently identified with the agricultural interests of Charles-town township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a descendant in the seventh generation from Robert Pyle, a resident of parish Bishops, Cannings, county of Wilts, England, who embarked for America in or about 1683, settled in Pennsylvania and occupied one hundred and sixty acres of ground recently purchased from William Penn and conveyed by William Smith, of Bromham house in Wiltshire, May 1, 1683. Robert Pyle (1) married Ann Stovey, of Hilperton, county of Wilts, a daughter of William Stovey, November 16, 1681. Their son, John Pyle (2), married Lydia Thomas, and among the children born to them was a son, Jacob Pyle (3), who resided in Thornbury, near the present village of Thornton, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. He married Jane Sharples, and they reared a family of eight children, namely: Caleb, Levi, Hannah, Benjamin, Jacob, Lydia, John and Esther Pyle.

Benjamin Pyle (4), third son of Jacob and Jane Pyle, was born in Thornbury, Pennsylvania, was a stone mason by trade, which occupation he followed in the towns of Springfield and Concord, being a resident of the latter named locality from the year 1782 to 1788. He was united in marriage at Springfield Meeting, on 12 mo., 8, 1774, to Sarah Heacock, born in 1753, a daughter of Joseph and Hannah (Massey) Heacock of Marple, Pennsylvania. Their children were: Joseph, Hannah, John, Phebe, Benjamin, Sarah, Esther, Mary, James, Edith, Ann, Jonathan, Isaac and William Pyle.

Jonathan Pyle (5), fifth son of Benjamin and Sarah Pyle, was born 3 mo., 17, 1794, and the greater part of his active life was spent in the township of Marple, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. He was a stone mason by trade, superintended the building of the stone wall around Blokly Alms House in Philadelphia, and he built the dam at Valley Forge, formerly General Washington's headquarters. On 10 mo., 10, 1816, at Springfield Meeting, Mr. Pyle married Naomi Parsons, born 4 mo., 19, 1795, a daughter of Joshua and Rebecca Parsons, of Marple. Their children were: Rebecca E., Mary, William, Phebe M., Thomas C., Emily P. and Anne Gibson Pyle. The father of these children died December 4, 1879, in Haverford, and his remains were interred at Fernwood; his wife passed away October 18, 1837, and was buried at Springfield.

William Pyle (6), father of Lewis W. Pyle, was born in Marple, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, October 18, 1820, obtained a common school education, and at the age of sixteen years learned the trade of miller. In 1845 he settled at Bonsall's Mills, Upper Darby, removing from thence to Locust Grove Mills, Concord, in 1856, and four years later he finally located at Harriton Mills, Lower Merion. On March 11, 1845, Mr. Pyle married Susanna Clarkson, who was born January 4, 1822, a daughter of Thomas and Catharine (Tibben) Clarkson, prominent residents of Lower Merion township. Their children were: 1. Thomas Elwood, born November 21, 1846, married Clara M. Humphrey, a daughter of Benjamin and Annie (Sibley) Humphrey. 2. Emilie Kate, born July 19, 1848, wife of William C. Wilson, a resident of Lower Merion. 3. Lewis Worrell, mentioned at length hereinafter. 4. Ella Virginia, born June 4, 1852, wife of William Horace Vaughan, of Lower Merion. 5.

William Calvin, born January 1, 1854, died February 1, 1854. 6. Laura Adelia, born March 6, 1855, widow of Samuel W. Rawlins. 7. Robert Plumstead, born July 30, 1857, married Emma Pavitt, have two children. 8. Milton Melross, born October 23, 1859, married Mary Grant, a daughter of John and Maggie (Neason) Grant, of Bryn Mawr. 9. William Horace, born February 20, 1862, died March 8, 1862.

Lewis W. Pyle (7), second son of William and Susanna Pyle, was born in Upper Darby, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, April 20, 1850. His early education was acquired in the common schools of Concord and Lower Merion townships, and this knowledge was supplemented by a two years' course of instruction under the supervision of Edgar Haas. He learned the trade of miller with his father, and this line of industry he successfully followed for twenty-eight years, dealing extensively in grain, flour and feed. In 1894 he purchased his present farm in Charlestown township, Chester county, formerly the property of Peter Hartman, and now known as the "Bright Side Farm." It contains about fifty-six acres of well cultivated ground, and in addition to general farming he makes a specialty of breeding Chester White swine, Plymouth Rock poultry and the famous Guernsey stock of cattle, in which enterprise he has met with excellent results.

At Ardmore, Pennsylvania, on October 17, 1877, Mr. Pyle married Rosalba S. Enochs, who was born in the city of Philadelphia, February 5, 1856, a daughter of Enoch and Hester (Van Sickle) Enochs, of Ardmore, the former named being a marble worker by trade, has led a very active life, and is now residing at Ardmore. Their children are: 1. Enoch William, born February 23, 1880, studied law under the supervision of George McCurdy, president of the Philadelphia common council, was graduated in June, 1903, and at once began the practice of his profession. 2. Milton Aubrey, born April 3, 1881, engaged in the study of mechanical engineering and making a specialty of mechanical drawing. 3. De Witt Clinton, born April 20, 1882, a graduate from the Phoenixville High School, and at the present time (1903) residing on the old homestead. 4. Lewis Clifford, who died in infancy. 5. Rosalba Clarkson, born September 5, 1887, a graduate from the Phoenixville High School in June, 1903. 6. Elwood Baker, born January 7, 1894, resides at home with his parents, and is now a student in the public schools of Charlestown township. The family occupy a prominent position in social circles, and hold membership in the Lutheran church, being consistent and active representatives of that denomination. He is a Republican in politics.

GEORGE W. STATZELL, whose name introduces this review is one of Lansdowne's progressive and enterprising citizens. In the brief period in which his interests, both materially and socially, have been associated with the borough he has accomplished much towards the improvement and advancement of the neighborhood in which he resides.

The Statzell family of which George W. Statzell is a representative, had its origin in Germany, and the founder of the family in America was Peter Statzell, who came from the Fatherland prior to 1800, and settled at Philadelphia. He married and had a family of children, among whom was Peter M. Statzell, who married Anna Bartholomew, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Bartholomew, and of this union were born eight children, of whom two are yet living, viz.: Cecelia, who became the wife of Isaac T. Wolff, and George W., of this review. Peter M. Statzell, the father of this family, died February 19, 1882. His faithful wife still survives him.

George W. Statzell was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, February 14, 1858, and acquired his educational training in the public schools of his native city. He began his business career as an office boy in a mercantile establishment, where he remained for some time, when he began to learn the stair-building trade, in which he served an apprenticeship of three and a half years, during which time he gained a thorough knowledge of the business. Upon ending his term of apprenticeship he determined to direct his efforts into other channels, and in 1880, he became engaged in merchandising as a representative of the well known house of Coon & Company, of Troy, New York, manufacturers of collars and cuffs. Mr. Statzell has ever since been associated with this institution through its growth and development and its various changes of the firm, and is at present vice-president of the Cluett, Peabody Company, which organization was formed in 1897 as successor of the firm of Cluett, Coon & Company. It will thus be seen that Mr. Statzell has by thrift and enterprise worked his way upward to a position of importance and commercial influence in the manufacturing world, and his career may justly be styled that of a self-made man in the fullest sense of the word. In 1894, Mr. Statzell came to Lansdowne, and during the period of his residence here, has become an important factor in the improvement and development of the borough, having erected many of the modern and most substantial residences in the neighborhood in which he resides, while in all public affairs he has labored for the welfare and progress of the community.

Mr. Statzell was married May 1, 1877, to Miss Alice Bauer, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Miller) Bauer, and by this union has children, viz.: Harlan Page, born September 22, 1878, who married Adele Clayborn, and has one daughter, Alice, and a son, Harlan P., Jr. Henry Clay, the second child, was born June 23, 1884, and George Washington, born September 28, 1894.

Henry Clay Statzell, brother of George W. Statzell, was born in Philadelphia on August 12, 1852, and died September 8, 1902. He attended the public schools of his native city until he was twelve years of age, when he secured employment in a mercantile establishment. In 1878 or 1879 he was engaged by Coon & Co., of Troy, New York, as the manager of the Philadelphia branch of the house, and in 1881 was admitted as a member of the firm. In 1891 he entered into business relations with Cluett Bros. & Co., under the firm name of Cluett, Coon & Co., and in 1896 he removed to Lansdowne and became a prominent factor in the growth, development and progress of the town, also aided considerably in the support of the Episcopal church. He was one of the organizers and served as president of the Lansdowne Electric Light Company.

DAVID McCLEES. Among the successful and progressive farmers of Chester county, David McClees, of East Nantmeal township, is conspicuous. He was engaged in different lines of work in various parts of the country and had thereby gained a wider experience than is the part of the man who in his youth settles down to a special calling.

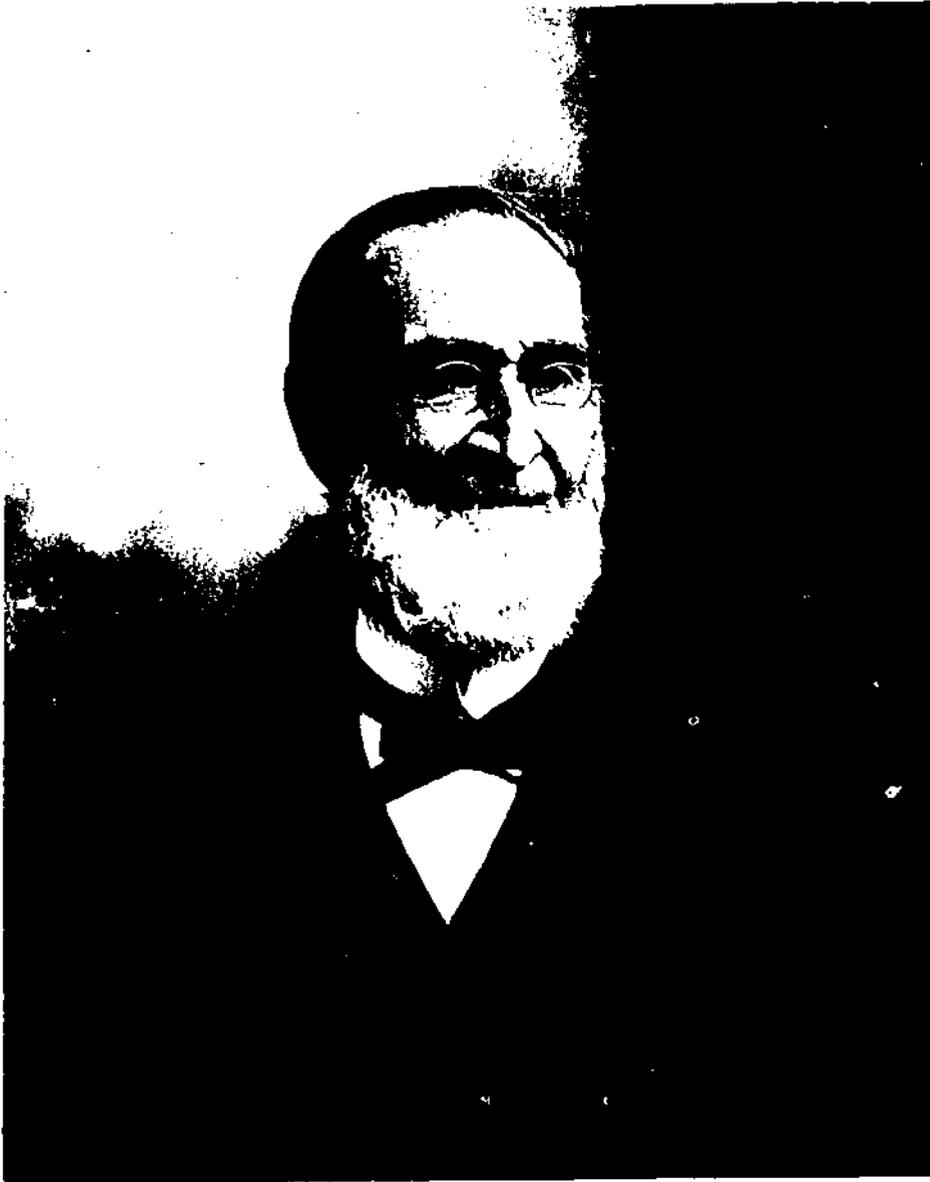

His father, John McClees, was born in Chester county, and spent his life there as an agriculturist. His father, the grandfather of David, was a soldier in the war of 1812, serving throughout hostilities with an unblemished record. The son John, in addition to the management of his farm, was a dealer in live stock, buying and selling cattle on a large scale. About 1829 he removed from Willis township to Wallace, where he purchased the property known as the Bullock farm from the Brinton family, who were then the owners. He worked this farm up to the time of his death in 1842, and commanded the respect of the community in which he lived. He served the township as supervisor and as school director at different times. His wife was Mary Boggs, daughter of Joseph and Mary (Pierce) Boggs. Mr. Boggs was a farmer of Willis township.

David, one of the six children of John and Mary (Boggs) McClees, was born in Willis township, January 3, 1819. His education was that of the average farmer's son, the severe discipline of the district school, with a substantial grounding in the three R's, rounded out by the many sided activities of the farm. After his school days in the Indian town school house were over, he worked on the homestead up to the time of his father's death. He spent a few years in farming on his own account, and then joined his brother Jones, who was proprietor of a general merchandise store at St. Mary's. After three or four years he sold out his interest to his partner, who continued the business. Mr. McClees now devoted several years to dealing in live stock, going to New York and to Ohio for the purchase of horses and cattle. He then bought the farm where he died in East Nantmeal township, formerly the property of the Rev. Mr. Bull. This farm consists of one hundred and forty acres of productive land, and Mr. McClees conducted a dairy of fifteen cows in addition to raising a general line of produce, disposing of his milk at the Marsh creamery. He had the confidence of the community, and at different times filled the offices of supervisor and school director in his township. The family are connected with both the Baptist and the Presbyterian denominations. Mr. McClees, though brought up a Democrat, has been a Republican since the war.

He married Hannah M. Gibson, daughter of Mrs. Mary Gibson, and their children were: 1. Mary, who became the wife of John Sheeler, a farmer of West Nantmeal township, and had a family of the following named children: Ellie, who is the wife of William Meredith, a farmer, and the mother of two children, John and B. Franklin; David, who is a farmer on the homestead in West Nantmeal township, married Alice Bare and had no children; William, deceased; Gertrude, who is the wife of Chester Wolf, a farmer, and mother of three children—Mary, Ella and William; Jennie, who lives at home; John, a farmer on the home place; 2. Jones, deceased, who married Margaret Ann Lewis; 3. Joseph, who is a farmer in Iowa, married Phoebe Well, and is the father of four children, namely—John, superintendent of a penitentiary in the state of Washington, Hunter, a farmer in Kansas, Howard, a doctor in Nebraska, and Edward, a mechanic in Des Moines, Iowa. John McClees, a brother of David McClees, is a real estate dealer of Atlantic City. He is unmarried, and his sister, Mary Abrams McClees, lives with him. Mr. McClees died September 8, 1893, and his remains were interred in the Fairview cemetery, and his wife, Hannah M. McClees, passed away November 6, 1902, and was also interred in the Fairview cemetery.

JOHN D. WORTH is numbered among those who in the active affairs of life have acquired sufficient capital to enable them to live in retirement. His is a strong, forceful, dominating character, laid out in early life on broad, liberal and strictly honorable lines, from whose course he has not deflected in the years of his active and useful business career. He is a descendant of Thomas Worth, who was born in 1679, and came to this country about the same time that William Penn arrived here. He married Isabelle Davidson, and their children were: John, Thomas, Samuel and Sarah Worth. Samuel Worth was born in Pennsylvania, January 25, 1718, and his son, John Worth, was born in what is now Delaware county, October 5, 1745. He married Mary Bently, and the following named children were born to them: Ebenezer, Elizabeth, Thomas, Samuel, John, George, Emma, and Benjamin Worth.

John Worth, father of John D. Worth, was born in West Bradford township, June 25, 1782. Subsequently he located in Chester county, where he was extensively engaged in general farming, finding in that industry a very profitable source of income. He was a carpenter by trade. Since early manhood Mr. Worth took a helpful interest in everything influencing the welfare of the community. He was appointed commissioner of Chester county and acted in the capacity of magistrate for twenty-five years. He was an earnest member of the Society of Friends, in which organization he was an elder. He was united in marriage to Lydia Carpenter, daughter of William and Rachel Carpenter. Their children were: William C., Sheshbazzar Bentley, Richard J., Samuel A., Rachel J., wife of John White, John D., Lydia Maria, and Elizabeth M., wife of Jacob S. Wickersham. The father of these children died January 16, 1878; his wife passed away August 10, 1832.

John D. Worth was born in West Bradford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, March 16, 1816. After acquiring a common school education he accepted a clerkship in the general store at Embreeville, and after two years purchased the store, which he operated for six years, then moving to Doe Run where he later engaged in business on his own account, which he successfully conducted for six years and also served as postmaster fourteen years. In 1860 he removed to West Chester and established a lumber business, and being possessed of the qualities which insure success—perseverance, industry and capable management—he was able to accumulate, during his nineteen years' connection with this enterprise, sufficient money to enable him to retire from the active pursuits of business and to enjoy the remainder of his life in ease and comfort. For many years he faithfully and conscientiously performed the duties of a member of the borough council, being elected to that office on the Republican ticket; he was formerly an old-line Whig. Mr. Worth is a member, and serves in the capacity of elder, in the Society of Friends.

On January 5, 1852, Mr. Worth married Miss Elizabeth Pyle, of East Marlborough township, Chester county, a daughter of James and Margaret (Marshall) Pyle. Of their three children, two died in infancy, the surviving one being Herbert P., born March 2, 1861. He obtained his education in the State Normal School at West Chester, after which he engaged in business, being now a member of the firm of Brinton & Worth, dealers in agricultural implements, in West Chester, Pennsylvania. He served as postmaster of the town for four years under President Harrison's administration. On October 11, 1892, he was united in marriage to Miss Caroline Jackson, a daughter of Halliday Jackson. Mrs. John D. Worth died January 29, 1892.

NORRIS J. SCOTT, a prominent man of affairs of Philadelphia, residing in Moylan, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, is descended from a line of farmers, who have been numbered for several generations among the honored citizens of the Keystone state, some of them having served in the Patriot army of the Revolution.

The great-grandfather of Norris J. Scott was Alexander, his son was Israel, and his son, in turn, Alexander. This Alexander, the second of the name, was the father of Norris J. Scott. He married Sarah R., daughter of Norris Jones, of Montgomery county. The Jones family is an old one in Pennsylvania, and its members have from very early times belonged to the Society of Friends. The anti-slavery principles of that fearless and devoted body of men and women found in Norris Jones a staunch advocate, as well by deeds as by words. His home was one of the stations of the underground railroad, and many a fugitive slave has been helped by him on his way to Canada or the free states. Mr. Alexander Scott died in 1898, at the age of eighty-four.

Norris J. Scott, son of Alexander (2) and Sarah R. (Jones) Scott, was born November 17, 1844, in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, of which county his father was also a native. Norris J. received his education at Westtown Boarding School and in 1863, when he was nineteen years of age, worked in a coal and lumber yard at Concord, Delaware county. In 1868 he went into the lumber and coal business for himself at Concord, Delaware county, and continued at it until he went to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1893. Two years previous he had built in that city the large office building which he named "The Scott," erecting not long after a similar building, which he called "The Heed," after his friend and associate, Mr. Charles Heed. In addition to his extensive business interests, Mr. Scott also has the management of the Windsor Hotel, one of the finest in the city. This hotel, which is situated next door to the two above named buildings, is the property of Mr. Scott's wife and sister-in-law. Over and above these large labors and enterprises, Mr. Scott is a stockholder in many other business establishments, and holds the position of manager of the Pennsylvania Training School at Elwyn. He is a member of the Philadelphia Historical Society, and the Geographical Society of Philadelphia.

Mr. Scott married, in 1874, Rebecca C., daughter of Enos Smedley, builder of the Windsor Hotel, of Philadelphia, formerly called the Smedley Hotel. Mr. and Mrs. Scott are the parents of two children: Philena S., who is the wife of Charles P. Jacobs, of the firm of Jacobs & Bros., 1015 Chestnut street, and Norris A., who is superintendent of the Heed building.

LEWIS WARNER, prominent among the leading and enterprising business men of Devon township, is descended from a family the founder of which, tradition says, was among the early settlers in Chester Valley, occupying and owning a large area of land in the region called the "Welsh tract," which comprised a territory now included in the towns of Radnor, Norristown and Merion. He came from a small township in Wales, and endured all the hardships incident to the lot of a colonist of that period, but being a man of ambition and industry he prospered, and built up a reputation which forms a part of the history of the county, and has been worthily sustained by his descendants.

Levi Evans Warner was born in 1821, in Haverford and obtained his early education in the common schools of the neighborhood, after which he attended the State Normal School in West Chester. He then opened a custom and retail shoe store in Rosemont, Montgomery county, which he conducted for five years, employing eight men and conducting a thriving business. In 1876 he moved to Devon, where he purchased a farm of seventy acres, upon which he carried on a flourishing dairy and produce business, keeping about thirty head of stock. This farm is now occupied and worked by his son, Gardner. In 1880 he opened on his farm a serpentine quarry, which he worked until his death, after which it was operated by the family until 1880. In politics he was a strong Republican. He and his wife were members of the Lutheran church. He married Emma D., daughter of Norris and Sarah Hansell, of Libertyville, Montgomery county, whose ancestors were among the early Welsh settlers of the county, having emigrated contemporaneously with the founder of the Warner family. Mr. and Mrs. Warner were the parents of eight children, of whom seven are living, one of them being Lewis, mentioned at length hereinafter. Mr.

Warner died October 18, 1887, and his wife passed away in January, 1901.

Lewis Warner, son of Levi Evans and Emma D. (Hansell) Warner, was born March 26, 1861, in Rosemont, where he attended the public schools, after which, with a laudable spirit of enterprise, he apprenticed himself to learn the carpenter's trade. He soon went into business for himself, and for the last eighteen years has been one of the foremost contractors and builders in Chester county. Almost all the artistic dwellings of Devon township have been erected under his superintendence, a fact which speaks volumes for his ability in view of the reputation of this township as a center of wealth and refinement. Many buildings in other townships also give evidence of his superior work. He is a staunch Republican, and like his father a Baptist in religious belief.

Mr. Warner married, March 26, 1884, Clara Phillips, daughter of George and Elizabeth Stanley, of Easttown township, Delaware county, descendants of the early Welsh settlers. Mrs. Warner was the fourth in a family of six children, and received her early education in the common schools of Easttown and Willistown. Mr. and Mrs. Warner are the parents of five children: Mabel, born May 24, 1885; Leila, born April 2, 1887; Lewis, born May 6, 1889, died in infancy; Ethel, born November 12, 1893; and Adele, born October 9, 1895. Mr. and Mrs. Warner have a beautiful residence in the heart of Devon township, where they lead the quiet, retired life prompted by their love of home and devotion to their family.

JOHN P. WALLACE. Chester county, Pennsylvania, is fortunate in having within its borders so many places of historical interest, and its citizens can never take sufficient pride in preserving the record of the incidents and the ground where so much of the early history of this great country centered. It is also a source of special pride to an individual if some of his ancestors have been connected with any of these events, as has been the case with John P. Wallace, whose paternal great-grandfather, Thomas Wallace, was one of the brave bands of patriots who endured the rigors of that memorable winter at Valley Forge.

On the maternal side John P. Wallace is a descendant of the Parke family, which consisted of William, Arthur, Samuel, David and Jane Parke, residents of Ballylagby, county Donegal, Ireland, in 1720. William Parke participated in the siege of Derry in 1690, married and was the father of a son, John Parke, who in turn was the father of William Parke, whose two sons, in 1834, settled in New Brunswick, Canada, and became the progenitors of a numerous progeny. Until recently the old Ballylagby homestead was occupied by a lineal descendant, Samuel Parke. Arthur Parke with his wife, Mary Parke, and children—Joseph, John, Samuel and Mrs. William Noblett—his brothers, Samuel and David, and his sister Jane emigrated to America prior to 1724 and settled in West Fallowfield township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Arthur died in 1740, and shortly afterward Joseph Parke and Mr. and Mrs. Noblett removed to South Carolina, and later to Georgia. John Parke, son of Joseph Parke, was killed in the Revolutionary war, and the property of George Parke, his brother, was totally destroyed by the British troops. Mary Parke, wife of Arthur Parke, and his sister Jane remained on the old Fallowfield farm until their death in 1760; the property, containing about six hundred acres, is at present owned by the heirs of the late Samuel Hodson, and James Boyd. Their son, John Parke, born 7 mo., 28, 1706, died 7 mo., 28, 1787, retained by the will of his father about three hundred acres of the northern portion of his father's farm; his children were: Joseph, John, Arthur (2), William, Elizabeth, Mary, Jane, Samuel and David Parke. Arthur Parke (2) was born 9 mo., 12, 1736, and died 7 mo., 11, 1822; he was an elder in the Octoraro Presbyterian church, his grandfather having been the first elder on the founding of the church in 1720. He received from his father about one hundred acres of land on the northern portion of his tract; he married Jennett Hope, a daughter of Thomas Hope, and their children were: Jane Stewart; Hannah Hershberger, Ann Pattin, Margaret Wallace, Thomas, Elizabeth, Daniel, Tabitha and Martha Patton, Mary, wife of Henry McClellan, whose daughter, Kezia, was the mother of the Rev. John L. Withrow; Martha, became the wife of James Patton, the son of Thomas and Isabella (Hayes) Patton, Thomas having come to America in 1746, when twenty-one years old, strongly recommended by the civil and religious officials of his native parish of Urney, county Tyrone, Ireland, as descended from "very good, honest Protestant parents and as having behaved himself as becometh a Christian." Thomas Patton settled on the forks of the Delaware, and in 1772 removed to Pequea. Lancaster county; he and his wife were the parents of the following named children: Jean, William, Jane, Agnes, Mary, John, James, born June 21, 1768, died February 8, 1858, and Thomas. The children of James and Martha Patton were—Jane Wallace, born 6 mo., 20, 1800, died 1 mo., 12, 1885; Isabella; Maria, who became the wife of the Rev. Levi Chamberlain, and their children were—Warren, Martha, Maria Forbes, Isabella Lyman, Everett, James and Levi; the Rev. Mr. Chamberlain and his wife went as missionaries to the Sandwich or Hawaii Islands in 1827; Thomas Hayes, Ann Buchanan, Arthur Parke and Martha Patton. Margaret Parke became the wife of John Wallace, grandson of John and Elizabeth Wallace, Scotch-Irish Presbyterians of Tobermore, county Derry, Ireland, who were the parents of Thomas, Charles, Robert, Elizabeth and other daughters; the eldest son Thomas with his two sons—John and Charles—and his sister Elizabeth came to Highland township, Chester county, in 1769; he served in the Fifth Battalion of Chester county militia in the war of the Revolution, and was fatally wounded and taken prisoner by the British in Bucks county during a raid for provisions for our starving soldiers at Valley Forge; it is supposed his remains were interred in Independence Square, Philadelphia, 2 mo., 24, 1778. John and Margaret Wallace were the parents of Mary St. Clair Donald, Jane Reid Arthur, Thomas, Tabitha Stewart, Margaret Ramsey and John H. Wallace, born 9 mo., 8, 1803, died 1 mo., 12, 1899. John H. Wallace married Jane Patton, and their children were: Martha Jones, Margaret Smith, Isabella, John P., J. Hayes and Maria Jane.

John P. Wallace was born in Highland township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, October 11, 1837, a son of John H. and Jane Wallace. His parents believed thoroughly in giving their children the best possible education, and thus his preparation for life was much better than the average boy receives. After the usual course in the public schools, he attended the Rockville Academy, the Millersville State Normal School, and completed his training in Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio. His entire business career has been devoted to agricultural pursuits. When a call came for emergency troops, Mr. Wallace responded and served until the disturbances were quieted. He has always shown a keen interest in public matters, and as a candidate of the Republican party has been elected to numerous positions of trust, which he filled creditably.

On February 17, 1868, Mr. Wallace married Susanna Davis, a daughter of William Kennedy and Jane Brown (Gipson) Davis. Mr. Davis is a farmer of West Caln township, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

DAVIS W. ENTRIKIN. The paternal ancestor and progenitor of the Entrikin family, who is worthily represented in the present generation by Davis W. Entrikin, who for more than a quarter of a century has been numbered among the highly respected citizens of Kennett Square, Chester county, Pennsylvania, came from England to America during an early period of the colonial days.

The first of his ancestors of whom we have an authentic information was his paternal great-grandfather, Samuel Entrikin, who died December 16, 1800, aged eighty years, and whose wife Mary died December 19, 1821, aged eighty-seven years. They were of Scotch descent and came to this country from Scotland.

Samuel Entrikin (grandfather) was a farmer by occupation, and resided in West Goshen township, Chester county, where he was well and favorably known for his integrity and uprightness of character. Samuel and Martha Entrikin were the parents of three children, namely: Elizabeth, who became the wife of Amos Davis, of West Goshen township, a son of Jesse and Priscilla (Wall) Davis; William, mentioned hereinafter; and Martha, who was unmarried. Samuel Entrikin, the father of this family, died May 19, 1837, aged seventy-one; Martha, his wife, died August 29, 1825, aged sixty years.

William Entrikin, father of Davis W. Entrikin, was born on the old family homestead in West Goshen township, March 19, 1803. He received a practical education in the schools of the neighborhood, and was reared to manhood on his father's farm, where he acquired a thorough knowledge of agriculture. He pursued that quiet but useful calling up to the year 1856, and the latter years of his life were spent in West Chester, where his death occurred on July 31, 1886. He was just and conscientious in all his transactions, and was universally respected and esteemed by all who had the honor of his acquaintance. William Entrikin and his wife, Jane (Davis) Entrikin, born in 1797, a daughter of Jesse and Priscilla (Wall) Davis, and a descendant of Welsh origin, were the parents of the following named children: Davis W., mentioned hereinafter; Anna Elizabeth, who became the wife of Jesse J. Baily; and six children were the issue of this union; Wilmer Worthington, who died unmarried; Martha Jane, who became the wife of Thomas Kugler, and was the mother of two children. Jane (Davis) Entrikin, the mother of these children, died September 6, 1882; she was a birthright member of the Society of Friends, a most estimable wife and mother and her life was that of an exemplary Christian woman.

Davis W. Entrikin was born on the old homestead in West Goshen township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, November 22, 1827. His elementary education was obtained in the schools adjacent to his home, and this was supplemented by an academic course at a private school in East Bradford township conducted by Joseph Strode, a noted instructor of Chester county. After his return to the parental roof, he assisted on the farm for a short period and then taught school for two terms in West Goshen township. He again turned his attention to farming, but agricultural pursuits not being entirely congenial to his tastes he removed to the borough of West Chester, where he engaged in the sale of agricultural implements in association with Jesse J. Bailey. Later he engaged in the trade and manufacture of the Davis and Entrikin Mowing Machine, which was sold extensively throughout Pennsylvania and enjoyed a state reputation. After ten years of successful business in this line of trade, he became interested in the manufacture and sale of lumber in Potter county, Pennsylvania, later was engaged in mercantile pursuits, and in 1877 removed to Kennett Square, Chester county, where he has since continued in the same line of trade. Since his residence in this borough he has become thoroughly identified with its material and social interests, and is always ready and willing to aid in any enterprise which will serve those ends. In his political affiliations he is a Republican, and has served his party in various capacities. In 1893 he was elected to the office of county commissioner and creditably served a term of three years; he served for almost twenty-two years as a director on the school board, and at the present time (1903) is the incumbent of the office of borough treasurer. He is a prominent member of the Knights of the Golden Eagle, and is regarded among his fellowmen as a worthy and public-spirited citizen.

On October 25, 1855, Mr. Entrikin married Esther C. Baily, born September 26, 1834, a daughter of James and Esther (Williamson) Baily. Their children were: 1. Anna Cheyney, born October 6, 1856; 2. Harry D., born February 8, 1858; 3. Joseph B., born November 28, 1868, married Maud Cochran, a daughter of Robert and Maria Cochran, and they are the parents of one child, Romona Entrikin, born April 14, 1888; 4. Francis C., born January 12, 1870; 5. Elizabeth B., born July 31, 1873, died December 16, 1882. Esther C. (Baily) Entrikin, the mother of these children, is a birthright member of the Society of Friends.

ABRAM DETWILER, of Spring City, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is descended from German ancestry. The earliest ancestor of the family of whom there is any authentic record was Jacob Detwiler, a native of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, who subsequently purchased a large tract of land in Tredyffrin township, Chester county, where he made his home for the remainder of his life and devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits. He was united in marriage to Elizabeth Hunsickle, a member of the Mennonite church, as was also Mr. Detwiler, and their children were: Henry, Isaac, Elizabeth, Mary and Sarah Detwiler.

Henry Detwiler, son of Jacob and Elizabeth

Detwiler, was born in Tredyffrin township, Chester county, in 1793, was reared on a farm, and obtained his education in the common schools of the neighborhood. Upon attaining young manhood he chose the occupation of farming, conducting his operations on a farm in West Pikeland township; later he returned to the old homestead, and finally he settled in Cedar Hollow. He was formerly an old line Whig in politics, but upon the formation of the Republican party he joined their ranks. He was a member, and served as deacon, in the Mennonite church. Mr. Detwiler married Catherine Latshaw, whose birth occurred in East Vincent township, a daughter of Abraham Latshaw, and their children were: Jacob, Catherine, Isaac, Elizabeth, Henry, John, Mary, Sarah, Abram, Anna, Susanna and David Detwiler. The father of these children died in 1873, having attained the age of seventy-nine years, eleven months and two days; his wife, Catherine (Latshaw) Detwiler, died at the age of seventy-eight years, one month and eight days.

GEORGE ARTHUR DETWILER was born in Tredyffrin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, July 21, 1873. He received public school education in his home township, finishing at the West Chester State Normal school. At the age of twenty-one years, he assumed charge of one of his father's farms in Tredyffrin township and remained in this capacity four years, after which he worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad for one year, being agent at Berwyn, Pennsylvania.

He then removed to Phoenixville to engage in the life insurance business, representing the Equitable and Prudential Insurance Companies for a period of thirteen months, in which work he was highly successful, and he several times declined the appointment of superintendent. In May, 1902, he was obliged to give up this work, and, to protect family interests, purchased the insolvent "Keystone Marble and Granite Works" of Phoenixville, changing it to the present name of "Detwiler's Marble Works," which business is now in a prosperous condition.

He was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal church and in politics a staunch Republican. In June, 1903, he was married to Anna Louise Snyder, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Snyder, of West Pikeland, Pennsylvania.

George A. Detwiler is a great-grandson of Jacob Detwiler, a native of Germany, born March 22, 1763. After his arrival in this country he purchased a large tract of land near Howellville, which is still known as the Detwiler property. He was a farmer, a Whig and Abolitionist. He married Elizabeth Hunsicker, a member of the Mennonite church, as was also Mr. Detwiler. To them were born four children—Jacob, Sallie Kolb, Henry and Mary Wisner. Jacob Detwiler died in 1840, aged seventy-seven years. His wife died in 1862, aged ninety years.

Henry Detwiler, grandfather of George A. Detwiler, was born September 15, 1793. He married Catharine Latshaw, born October 3, 1800. They removed from the home property to Yellow Springs, East Pikeland township, Pennsylvania, but soon returned to Howellville. He left the latter place a second time in 1832, and settled in the western part of Tredyffrin township. To them were born twelve children: Jacob, Catharine Heistand, Isaac, John, Elizabeth Funk, Mary Funk, Henry, Sarah Jacobs, Abraham, Anna, Susan Jacobs, and David. Henry Detwiler died August 1, 1873, aged eighty years. His wife died in 1879.

David Detwiler, the father of George A. Detwiler, was born August 22, 1846. He was reared on his father's farm, received a good business education, and then engaged in farming, which has been his occupation up to the present time. A Republican in politics, he has served his township in various offices. In religion he is a Methodist. He is active and useful in all the political, civil and religious affairs of his community. On February 22, 1871, he married Anna May Wersler, daughter of George and Elizabeth (Beaver) Wersler. To them were born eight children—George A., Elsie May Green, Frank L., Walter D., now deceased; Lizzie L., Hattie M., Mary L., and Sarah E.

George Arthur Detwiler, on his mother's side, is a great-great-great-grandson of Mr. Wersler, who came to this country with his five sons before the breaking out of the Revolutionary war. He was an Episcopal minister, but at the commencement of the war joined the American army with his five sons. One of the sons, George Wersler, great-great-grandfather of the subject, at the close of the war established a farm near Olie, Bucks county, Pennsylvania, and married Anna Maria Guldin in 1780. He died in Chester Valley, May 14, 1832. Three children survived him—John G., Rebecca and Elizabeth.

John G. Wersler, great-grandfather, was born February 20, 1781, in Charlestown township. In 1810 he married Miss Maria Davies, daughter of Hezekiah Davies, whose wife was Anna Schenck, of Long Island, who was of Holland descent. The first progenitor of the Long Island branch of the family was Johannes Schenck, who was born in Holland, September 19, 1656, and came to America in 1683. He was a man of learning, and had conferred upon him the degree of J. U. D. (Juris Utriusque Doctor), doctor of both laws, canon and civil. His mother was Margaretha Bæckhorst, who died April 12, 1688. According to Motley's "History of the Netherlands" he was descended from an old and influential family who could trace their ancestry back to the time of Charlemagne, in the eighth century. Before leaving Holland he married Magdalena De Haes, in 1682. Johannes died at Bushwick, Long Island, February 5, 1746.

Major John G. Wersler was commissioned September 1, 1821, and March 25, 1818, was commissioned by the Governor of Pennsylvania clerk and prothonotary of the courts of Chester county. Eight children survived him—George, the subject's grandfather, was born February 1, 1816. In 1847 he married Elizabeth Beaver, born September 22, 1827. For awhile after his marriage he lived on his father's farm, then moved to the William Wayne farm, near Paoli. On the death of his father-in-law he purchased the old Beaver homestead; the celebrated Diamond Rocks is situated on this property, also the old Diamond Rock School House. To them were born nine children—Louise Clemens, Annie May Detwiler, Ella, Ida R. Tyson, Lizzie H. Swearer, George B., Clara T. Catanach, Emma W., John G., deceased. George Wersler died in 1894. Anna May, the second child, and mother of the subject of this sketch, was born May 1, 1849.

Anna Louise Snyder, wife of George A. Detwiler, was born March 27, 1879, in Charlestown township. Her early education was received in the public schools of the neighborhood; her father being a public school teacher, most of this time was spent under his tutorship. In 1894-95 she attended Miss Stiteler's Private Preparatory School at Chester Springs, Pennsylvania, after which she attended the West Chester State Normal School, graduating from there in 1898, at the age of nineteen. She then taught two years at Salem School, Tredyffrin township, after which she accepted a position in the public schools of Grand Junction, Colorado, which position she successfully filled for two years. She returned to Pennsylvania in 1902, and taught one year in East Pikeland township, and was married June 10, 1903.

Jacob and Mary Funderwhite, great-great-grandparents of Anna Louise Snyder, were natives of Germany. They had two sons, John and George, who came to this country in early life. George was lost at sea, and John settled in Chester county. He married Mary Shimer, who was the daughter of Betsy and Frederick Shimer. The said Betsy Shimer was an only sister of Jacob Baker, and their mother was Betty Ball, a member of George Washington's mother's family. The children of John and Mary Funderwhite were Mary Wurtz, Hannah Snyder, John, Julia Coffman, Frederick, Sarah Hobbs, Eliza Knapp, Ann King and Mary Funk.

The said Hannah was married to John Snyder, and they were the great-grandparents of the subject. The said John Snyder was descended from John and Susanna Snyder, who were great-great-grandparents of the subject on the Snyder side. John Snyder, Sr., was born in 1760, and died in 1828. He lived in Charlestown township, and was engaged in farming during his life. Susanna, his wife, was born in 1761, and died in 1836.

John Snyder, Jr., was born in 1787. He married Hannah Funderwhite in 1810. He settled on the old homestead near Hopewell school, in Charlestown township, and lived there until his death in 1861. His wife Hannah was born in 1792, and died in 1873. To John and Hannah Snyder were born five children—Susanna Gayger, Joseph, the subject's grandfather, John, Isaiah F. and William.

Joseph Snyder was born September 20, 1814. He was a farmer, living in Charlestown township. In August, 1835, he married Elizabeth Catharine Jacobs, whose ancestry we will now trace.

Benjamin Jacobs, great-great-grandparent of the subject, married a Potts, who was related to the historical Revolutionary family of that name. He was associate judge of Chester county. Their children were John and Samuel, (who died unmarried).

John Potts Jacobs was born in 1790. He married Catharine Sheets, on January 6, 1814. To them were born three daughters—Caroline Glisson, Ann Lapp and Elizabeth Catharine Snyder. John P. Jacobs died in 1818, at the age of twenty-eight years. His wife afterward married George Fiss, and their children were Frank and Mary.

Elizabeth Catharine Jacobs was born June 9, 1819, several months after her father's death. She received a good education at private school, and in 1835 was married to Joseph Snyder. They settled on a farm in Charlestown township. To them were born nine children—Caroline Pearce, J. Wesley, Hannah Rapp, Isaiah, William H., Stephen O., Joseph W., Benjamin J. and Mary Moses. Joseph and Elizabeth Snyder were highly respected people in their community, having served and remaining active in various offices of the Methodist Episcopal church, Charlestown. Joseph Snyder died November 15, 1876, and his wife died twenty years later, November 15, 1896.

Joseph, W. Snyder, the subject's father, is written in the sketch which follows this.

Miles and Damazine Davis, great-great-grandparents of the subject on his mother's side, came to this country from Wales, and settled in Chester county early in the eighteenth century. To them were born six sons and one daughter, Sarah, who married George Kunkle (the subject's great-grandparents). George died in 1825. Sarah, his wife, was born about 1776, and died in 1826. To them were born six children, one of them, Miles Kunkle, being the subject's grandfather.

Miles Kunkle was born September 12, 1811, in Chester county, Pennsylvania. In 1836 he married Sophia Hursh, born October 8, 1814, whose parents came from Wales when she was a little child. They died shortly after reaching this country, and she was raised by the family of Moses Hartman. Miles Kunkle and his wife lived during the remainder of their lives on a farm near Chester Springs, where eight children were born to them—William, Catharine, Emma, John, Sarah Young, George, Anna Backert, and Sophia Elizabeth Snyder, the subject's mother.

Miles Kunkle and his wife were highly esteemed and were practical industrious people, and the latter was known for her beauty and gentle disposition throughout her section of the county. She died March 12, 1866. A few years after, Miles Kunkle married Elizabeth King, and to them were born Harvey and Ella (twins) and Mattie F. Miles Kunkle died June 8, 1887, at the age of seventy-six years, a venerable and respected citizen, and lies buried with his wife Sophia in Lionville Lutheran cemetery, Lionville, Pennsylvania.

JOHN WESLEY SNYDER, a veteran of the Civil war, who, during a long and active business career of almost half a century, served in various important capacities, was born on the old homestead in Charlestown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, May 17, 1839, the son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Jacobs) Snyder of Chester county, Pennsylvania.

The educational advantages enjoyed by John W. Snyder were obtained in the schools of Charlestown township, Oakdale Seminary and the West Chester Normal School, which was then under the personal supervision of Professor Allen of Upland, Pennsylvania. Shortly after the completion of his studies, he enlisted in Company K, Fourth Regiment, Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, in which he served for three years and participated in the following named battles: Antietam, Mechanicsville, Gaines Mill, Malvern Hill, Charles City Cross Roads, second battle of Bull Run, and Cloyd Mountain, and he was severely wounded at Antietam.

After being honorably discharged from the service of the United States, Mr. Snyder returned home and the following six years served in the capacity of train dispatcher at the Belmont station of the Reading Railroad. He then received the appointment of superintendent of the Boys' Department of the Orphan Home at Chester Springs, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he faithfully and conscientiously performed his duties for thirteen years, after which he settled on his present farm, which is located in Charlestown township. His time is devoted to the production of a general line of farm and dairy products, which, being of a superior quality, he readily disposes of in the nearby markets. Mr. Snyder is a firm advocate of the fundamental principles of Republicanism, and has been elected by that party to serve as supervisor of the township for seven years; he was also a member of the school board for six years, and during his incumbency of both these offices he was faithful and conscientious in the performance of the duties allotted to him. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and next to the oldest officer in the home lodge of the Masonic fraternity, in which organization he has passed all the principal chairs. He is a member of Mt. Pickering Lodge, No. 446, of Byers, Pennsylvania.

On August 23, 1876, Mr. Snyder married Angelica Kendall, a daughter of Levan P. Kendall, who was engaged in the tailoring business at Lebanon, Lebanon county, Pennsylvania. Their children are: Mary K., serving in the capacity of stenographer and typewriter for the International Paper Company, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Chester L., engaged as a machinist at the works of the Phoenix Iron Company; H. Elizabeth, who resides at home with her parents.

JOSEPH W. SNYDER, of West Pikeland, known to all residents of Chester county as one of the most enterprising and public-spirited citizens within her borders, is descended from ancestors who emigrated from Germany, probably at some period during the eighteenth century, and made a home for themselves and their descendants in Pennsylvania.

Joseph Snyder, father of Joseph W. Snyder, was born in Charlestown township, and was all his life engaged in agricultural pursuits. His sound judgment and strict integrity of character caused him to be regarded with great confidence by his townsmen, by whom he was repeatedly chosen to fill the office of supervisor and school director. In the sphere of politics he was for many years identified with the Whigs, but later became a Republican. He married Elizabeth Catharine Jacobs, who was also a native of Charlestown township, and they became the parents of the following children: 1. Caroline, who became the wife of John Pierce, of Philadelphia; 2. J. Wesley, who lives in Charlestown; 3. Hannah, who married William Rapp, of Charlestown; 4. Isaiah J., deceased; 5. William H., who is a farmer of Charlestown; 6. Stephen O., who is secretary of the Swansea Mining Company, and secretary and treasurer of the Idaho Gold Dredging Company, of Salt Lake City; 7. Joseph W., mentioned at length hereinafter; 8. Benjamin J., who lives in Colorado; 9. Mary, who is the wife of Hosea Mosses, of West Pikeland. The death of Mr. Snyder, the father of these children, occurred November 15, 1876, and it is a noteworthy fact that he was survived precisely twenty years by his wife, who died November 15, 1896.

Joseph W. Snyder, son of Joseph and Elizabeth Catharine (Jacobs) Snyder, was born August 28, 1851, on the homestead in Charlestown township, and was educated in the public schools. After leaving school he was for a time engaged in farming, but for eighteen years he was a teacher in his native county. For twelve years of that time he taught in two schools only, a fact which in itself speaks volumes for his success as an educator. Mr. Snyder is now engaged in farming. A strong interest in public affairs is one of his most marked characteristics, and his ability in administration has received full recognition both from his townspeople and from the federal government. He has been for some time school director and justice of the peace, and on April 1, 1903, received an appointment in the United States mail service, rural free delivery. Politically he is a Republican. He is a member of the Masonic order, affiliating with Mount Pickering Lodge, No. 446, Free and Accepted Masons, is also a member of Phoenixville Chapter, No. 75, Royal Arch Masons, and of Jerusalem Commandery No. 15, Knights Templar. He is a past master of his lodge.

Mr. Snyder married, October 6, 1877, Sophia Elizabeth, born April 14, 1857, daughter of Miles and Sophia (Hersh) Kunkle, the former a farmer of West Pikeland. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder are the parents of two children: Anna Louise, who was born March 20, 1879, attended the public schools in West Pikeland and the Chester Springs preparatory school, being graduated in 1898 from the West Chester Normal School and afterward being a teacher until her marriage to George Arthur Detwiler, of Phoenixville, June 10, 1903; and Ralph Wesley, who was born August 30, 1891. Mr. Snyder is regarded by his neighbors as a man whose unquestioned abilities and energetic spirit render him an extremely valuable member of the community in which he lives.

CLOUD PYLE, of East Fallowfield township, Chester county, prominent both as a farmer and citizen, is a representative of a family which was founded in America by three brothers, James, Joseph and Robert, who emigrated from England prior to the Revolutionary war. James settled between London Grove Meeting House and Upland on a tract of land consisting of upward of 300 acres. When the war of the Revolution began he was fearful of the result, feeling sure that should the British government prove successful the land belonging to the Whigs would be confiscated. In order to avert such a calamity in his own case, he sold a large portion of his estate, converting into a fowl farm such acres as he thought best to retain. Here he resided during the remainder of his life. So far as known by his descendants his family consisted of two sons, Robert and James, to each of whom he left sixty acres.

Robert Pyle, son of James, the emigrant, was a blacksmith by trade, which he followed in conjunction with the labors of his farm, upon which he resided. He married Miss Wilson, and their children were: Alice, who married Palmer Chamberlain; Hannah, who became the wife of Sharpless Taylor; Anna E., who married Pennock Mercer; Sarah, who died unmarried; Matilda, who was the wife of Elwood Bennett; Susan, who married Jesse Taylor; Rachel, who became the wife of Caleb Perdue; and Lewis, who married Ophelia Heald.

James Pyle, son of James, the emigrant, was born on the home farm. As a young man he worked at the cooper's trade. In matters of religion he was in sympathy with the Society of Friends, of which he was a member. He married Mary Bunnell and their children were: Alice, who married Mr. Faddis; Mary, who married James Birdsell; Sarah, who became the wife of Christopher Webb; Lizzie, who married Aaron McLaughlin; Ann, who died unmarried; Philena, who became the wife of Eli Hutton, and is the sole surviving member of the family; and James, mentioned at length hereinafter. Mr. Pyle, the father of the family, died about 1848, and his wife expired some years later. Both are buried in the graveyard of the London Grove Meeting House.

James B. Pyle, son of James and Mary (Bunnell) Pyle, was born October 23, 1807, and followed the occupation of a farmer. His religious convictions were those of the Society of Friends. He married Susan B. Hayes, and the following children were born to them: Mary A.; Louisa J., who married William G. Stamp; Emily H.; and Henry H. Mrs. Pyle, the mother of these children, died July 21, 1892, and her husband passed away August 19, 1896, having attained the venerable age of eighty-nine.

Joseph Pyle, son of James and Mary (Bunnell) Pyle, was born about 1794. He learned the trade of a shoemaker, and when a young man went to Delaware, where he leased a farm upon which he lived seventeen years. It was known as the hop yard farm, formerly the property of Samuel L. and Mary Tyson, Mill Creek Hundred, New Castle county. At the end of that time he returned to Chester county, and purchased the Laurel Iron Works, in Newlin and East Fallowfield townships, of three hundred and sixty acres of land, for which he paid $16,975.00. Three years later he sold the works, as well as 100 acres of his land, to Hugh E. Steel, for $12,500.00. He then built on the remaining two hundred and sixty acres the house in which he spent the remainder of his life. He subsequently added one hundred and forty acres to his estate, to the care of which he devoted his latter years. He was in politics a Republican, and in religious conviction a Friend. He married Mary A., daughter of James Cloud, of Kennett township, a representative of one of the pioneer families of Chester county. Mr. and Mrs. Pyle were the parents of the following children: Sarah, who married Daniel Ramsey, and is now deceased; Cloud, mentioned at length hereinafter; Mary, who married Ebenezer Worth; Elizabeth, who became the wife of Levi S. Passmore, and after his death, married Charles H. Pennypacker; Philena, who married William Peters Phipp; Anna M., who became the wife of J. Barnard Walton; Emma, who married Jonathan K. Taylor; Joseph, who married Emma Harlen, and after her death, Maggie J. McFarland. Mr. Pyle, the father of this numerous family, died in 1854, and his wife passed away November 1, 1880.

Cloud Pyle, son of Joseph and Mary A. (Cloud) Pyle, was born November 27, 1826, in New Castle county, Delaware, where his early life was spent on a farm, his education being received in the "subscription school" of those times, and at the Westtown Boarding School. He remained on the farm, assisting his father in the care and management of the estate, and on the death of the latter inherited two hundred acres of land. He subsequently purchased the old homestead from his brother Joseph, and in 1860 built the house in which he has since resided. He takes an active interest in local affairs, and his long tenure of office testifies to the confidence and respect with which he is regarded by his neighbors. Since 1880 he has served as school director, and since 1884 has held the office of township treasurer. He has also served in minor offices. His political opinions are those advocated and upheld by the Republican party, and his religious affiliations are with the Society of Friends.

Mr. Pyle married Mary L., daughter of James and Hannah McFadden, of Kennett township, and they were the parents of one child: Carlton J., who was born March 25, 1861, educated in the common schools and at Swarthmore College, and now has charge of the paternal farm. He married Lizzie, daughter of Charles Mercer, of Kennett township, and they have three children: Charles C., Leland S., and Ronald. Some time since Mr. Pyle was afflicted by the loss of his wife, whose death occurred October 5, 1898.

AMOS L. PUGH, son of Amos and Mary A. (Bye) Pugh, was born on the ancestral estate in East Nottingham, Chester county, Pennsylvania, September 19, 1849. He first attended the public schools and later pursued the regular course of instruction at the Millersville State Normal School, where he completed his studies. He then engaged in the carriage trimming trade which he followed until 1887, then entered into partnership with Messrs. Wilson and Wilson, and from that date to the present time (1903) the business, which consists of carriage building, trimming, repairing, etc., has been conducted under the style of Wilson, Pugh & Wilson. Politically Mr. Pugh is an ardent adherent of the principles of the Republican party, has been chosen to fill several minor township offices, and served one term as member of the borough council of Oxford, Pennsylvania.

January 8, 1873, Mr. Pugh was united in marriage to Alice L. Wilson, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Mahan) Wilson, the former named being a farmer of East Nottingham, Chester county. Two children were the issue of this marriage—F. Chester, born October 19, 1873, who married Charlotte M. Peas; and Mary E. Pugh, born August 8, 1883. Mr. Pugh and his family are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Oxford, Pennsylvania.

CHANDLER PUGH, a highly esteemed resident of East Nottingham, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he is practically retired from the duties of an active business career, is a worthy representative of the old and honorable Pugh family, who are supposed to be of Welsh origin. The progenitor of the American branch of the family was John Pugh, one of the pioneer settlers of East Nottingham, and in this locality he and his wife, Jane Pugh, reared a family of five children—Mary, William, John, Sarah and Jane Pugh. The death of John Pugh, father of these children, occurred at his home in East Nottingham, April 24, 1760.

The line of descent is traced from William Pugh, first son and second child born to John and Jane Pugh, who resided in London Grove, Chester county, in 1771. On February 8, 1742, William Pugh married Mary Brown, daughter of Messer and Jane Brown, of East Nottingham; on March 13, 1755, he married Sarah Chandler, daughter of Jacob Chandler, who died July 27, 1756; subsequently he married Patience Casner. He was the father of the following named children: Jean, Dinah, John, Jesse, Mary and William Pugh.

The next in line of descent was John Pugh, second son of William and Mary (Brown) Pugh, who claimed East Nottingham as his birthplace, the date of his birth being June 9, 1747. He was united in marriage, May 9, 1771, to Rachel Barrett, daughter of Thomas and Hannah Barrett, residents of East Nottingham. Eight children were born of this union—Jesse, Thomas, William, John, Mary, Hannah, Ellis and David Pugh.

The next ancestor in line of descent was Jesse Pugh, first child born to John and Rachel Pugh, the date of his birth being March 1, 1772. He attended the common schools of the neighborhood, and upon attaining the age when it was necessary to make a selection as to his life work, he chose the trade of blacksmith. He married Elizabeth Hudson, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Hudson, of East Nottingham, the ceremony being performed March 19, 1795. The following named children were born to them: Rachel, Lewis, Amos, Rachel, Adrianna, Reece, Evan, Abner, Elizabeth and Mary W. Pugh. Jesse Pugh, father of these children, died on the old homestead where he was born and reared in East Nottingham, October 16, 1847. His wife, Elizabeth (Hudson) Pugh, passed away July 18, 1825.

Amos Pugh, father of Chandler Pugh, was the next ancestor in the line of descent. His birth occurred on the old homestead in East Nottingham, in 1798. His educational advantages were those afforded by the common schools of the day, and after completing his studies he first learned the trade of blacksmithing and then took up farming as an occupation, which proved a profitable source of income for many years. He was a birthright member of the Society of Friends, and a staunch advocate of the fundamental principles of the Republican party. He served in the capacity of school director for the township of East Nottingham for several years. The issue of his marriage to Elizabeth Lidwell was five children—Job S., unmarried; Jesse, unmarried; Chandler, mentioned at length in the following paragraph; Townsend, who married Annie Crowl, and three children have been born to them; Sarah E., unmarried. After the death of his wife Mr. Pugh married Mary A. Bye, daughter of Amos Bye, a prosperous agriculturist of Elk township, Chester county. Four children were born of this union: Lydia A., wife of Stephen Coates, and mother of four children; Deborah, wife of Eria H. Powley, and the issue of this union was two children; Amos Lewis, who married Alice Wilson, and they are the parents of two children; and Charles B., who married Melissa P. Kirk, daughter of Ellis and Sarah Kirk. Amos Pugh, father of these children, died in 1886.

Chandler Pugh, third son of Amos and Elizabeth Pugh, was born on the ancestral estate in East Nottingham, Chester county, in 1832. His early education was obtained in the public schools of the neighborhood and this was supplemented by attendance at the Unionville Academy. His first business experience was gained as a teacher in the schools of Elk township, Chester county, and in Media, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He then turned his attention to agricultural pursuits as a means of livelihood, conducting extensive operations in his native township for many years, and during this period by the exercise of thrift and industry he accumulated a sufficient competence to allow him to retire from the active management of business. He is a member of the Society of Friends. Since attaining his majority he has taken an active interest and given a loyal support to all political questions of county, state or national importance, and has filled the responsible office of auditor of East Nottingham township.

In 1867 Mr. Pugh married Phœbe A. Leak, daughter of Charles Leak, a prosperous farmer of East Nottingham township. Their children are: Florence, Leone and Rachel V. Pugh. The death of Mrs. Pugh occurred in 1879.

CHARLES B. PUGH, for many years actively and prominently identified with the agricultural interests of East Nottingham, Chester county, but now retired from business pursuits, traces his ancestry back to John and Jane Pugh, supposed to have been natives of Wales, who were among the pioneer settlers of East Nottingham. They were the parents of five children—Mary, William, John, Sarah and Jane Pugh. Many of their descendants reside in that locality at the present time (1903). The line of descent from the emigrant ancestor is as follows:

William Pugh (2) resided in London Grove, Chester county, in 1771. He married for his first wife, Mary Brown; for his second wife, Sarah Chandler; for his third wife, Patience Casner. He was the father of six children—Jean, Dinah, John, Jesse, Mary and William. John Pugh (3) was a native of East Nottingham, the date of his birth being June 9, 1747; he married Rachel Barrett, May 9, 1771, and their children were: Jesse, Thomas, William, John, Mary, Hannah, Ellis and David. Jesse Pugh (4) was born March 1, 1772, on the old homestead in East Nottingham. Like his forefathers, he was a farmer by occupation. He married, March 19, 1795, Elizabeth Hudson, and the following named children were born to them: Rachel, Lewis, Amos, Rachel, Adrianna, Reece, Evan, Abner, Elizabeth and Mary W. Amos Pugh (5), father of Charles B. Pugh, was a native of East Nottingham, his birth having occurred on the old homestead in 1798. He attended the common schools of the neighborhood where he acquired a practical education. His tastes led him to adopt farming as his occupation, which line of industry he conducted for several years, and later he became a blacksmith. He was a zealous and exemplary member of the Society of Friends, and an ardent partisan of the Republican party. For many years he held the office of school director in East Nottingham.

Amos Pugh (father) married for his first wife Elizabeth Sidwell, and the following named children were born to them: Job S., unmarried; Jesse, unmarried; Chandler, was united in marriage to Phœbe Leak, now deceased, and they are the parents of three children; Townsend, married Annie Crowl, and the issue of this union was three children; Sarah E., unmarried. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Pugh married Mary A. Bye, daughter of Amos Bye, who engaged in agricultural pursuits in Elk township, Chester county. Their children were: Lydia A., wife of Stephen Coates, and mother of four children; Deborah, wife of Eria H. Poley, and they are the parents of two children; Amos Lewis, married Alice Wilson, and two children have been born to them; Charles B., mentioned at length in the following paragraph. Amos Pugh, father of these children, died in 1886.

Charles B. Pugh, son of Amos and Mary A. (Bye) Pugh, was born in the home of his ancestors in East Nottingham, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1844. He attended the public schools of the neighborhood, and later completed his education at the Millersville State Normal School. He then turned his attention to farming, conducting his operations on the ancestral estate, which consisted of seventy acres of well cultivated land, this being only a portion of the original tract. He was practical and progressive in his ideas and therefore prospered wonderfully in his undertaking. Mr. Pugh adheres to the religious belief of his forefathers, that of the Society of Friends, and in politics he is a firm supporter of the principles of Republicanism, taking a keen and active interest in the welfare of his party. During the Civil war he answered the emergency call for men who were willing to serve one hundred days for their country and their flag.

In 1870 Mr. Pugh married Phebe Melissa Kirk, daughter of Ellis and Sarah Kirk, the former named being a prosperous agriculturist of East Nottingham, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

WILLIAM M. REYNOLDS, a representative citizen of Oxford borough, whose principal occupation throughout his entire active career has been agriculture, was born in East Nottingham township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1865.

He is a lineal descendant of Henry Reynolds, who was born in England in 1655, the youngest son of William and Margaret (Exton) Reynolds. His first settlement in this country was at Burlington, New Jersey, where he was united in marriage to Prudence Clayton, daughter of William and Prudence Clayton, of Chichester, Pennsylvania, to which town he shortly afterward changed his place of residence. The ceremony was performed November 10, 1678, and the following named children were born of the union—Margaret, Mary, Francis, Prudence, Deborah, William, Henry, John, Hannah and William. The father of these children died August 7, 1724, aged sixty-nine years; the mother died about the year 1728.

The line of descent from Henry Reynolds (1), the pioneer ancestor, down to William M. Reynolds is as follows: Henry Reynolds (2), born August 16, 1693, married, in 1717, Hannah Brown, daughter of William and Catharine Brown, of Nottingham, Pennsylvania, born October 31, 1701, died December 12, 1731, or 1732. His next marriage occurred March 23, 1733, to Ann, widow of William Howell, and his third marriage occurred April 23, 1743, to Mary, widow of Jacob Haines. His death occurred December 17, 1779, aged eighty-six years. Jacob Reynolds (3), born September 14, 1728, married, August 10, 1751, Rebecca Day. Jacob Reynolds (4), born November 10, 1755, married, October 19, 1785, Esther Taylor. Jacob Reynolds (5), born in Cecil county, Maryland, May 8, 1791, married, November 10, 1813, Anna Moore, daughter of Joseph and Mercy Moore, of West Grove, Chester county. Their children were—William M., Mercy Ann, Esther T., Jacob, Adrianna, Benjamin C., Joseph T., Granville T., Stephen John, Anna and Susan Jane Reynolds.

Joseph T. Reynolds (6), born in Cecil county, Maryland, June 29, 1827, acquired a common school education and in early life learned the trade of miller, which occupation he followed until the year 1863, when he removed to East Nottingham township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He purchased a one hundred and seventy-five-acre tract of land near the town of Oxford, erected a commodious and beautiful residence which he named "Peace and Plenty," and here he conducted general farming and dairying, being the owner of thirty head of select cows. He is a birthright member of the Society of Friends, and his allegiance has always been given to the Republican party. He has been the incumbent of several township offices and was a member of the school board for ten years. On April 22, 1858, Mr. Reynolds married Rebecca Pugh, and three children were born to them—Walter P., Elmer E. and William M. Reynolds. After the death of his wife, Mr. Reynolds married her sister, Elizabeth Pugh, September 16, 1869, and the children born of the second marriage were—Joseph Cecil, Elwood Abner and Mary E. Reynolds.

William M. Reynolds (7) was reared in his native township, attended the public schools of that community and completed his education at a private school in the city of Philadelphia. Upon his return home, he engaged in agricultural pursuits on the old homestead but subsequently removed to his present home in Oxford borough. He has been successful in his enterprises, and this is attributable to his indomitable energy, industry and having mastered in early life the essentials to the proper management of a farm. Mr. Reynolds holds membership in the Society of Friends, casts his vote with the Republican party, and always manifests a keen interest in all questions pertaining to the welfare and material growth of the township in which he resides.

In 1892 Mr. Reynolds married Catherine Wilson, daughter of John and Louisa Wilson, residents of Cecil county, Maryland, where Mr. Wilson is engaged in farming. They are the parents of one child, J. Wilson Reynolds, born in 1896.

ANSON B. KIMBLE is a worthy representative of the farming interests of Lower Oxford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and is an enterprising and progressive business man. He was born in West Nottingham township, Chester county, in 1835, a son of John and Rachel Kimble and grandson of John Kimble or Kemble, who in 1783 purchased one hundred and eighty-seven acres of the McKean land, in New London, and died prior to 1812.

John Kimble, father of Anson B. Kimble, was born on the old homestead in Kimblesville, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1794. This vicinity was named in honor and recognition of the Kimble family. He attended the common schools and by applying himself closely to his studies became an intelligent and well educated man. The first line of business which he pursued was the blacksmith, which he learned in early life, and later he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits on the old farm. After attaining his majority he cast his vote with the Democratic party, and always took an active interest in all questions which affected the welfare of his community. He married Rachel Reynolds, daughter of Samuel Reynolds, who was engaged in farming in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. Their children were: Samuel, Rebecca, Sarah C., Caroline, Mary J., Rachel E., a brother of Samuel who died in infancy, Anson B., Carlton and John T. Kimble. The father of these children died in 1856.

The educational advantages enjoyed by Anson B. Kimble were obtained in the common schools of West Nottingham township, and since laying aside his school books he has followed the occupation of a farmer. He is the owner of a well cultivated farm of one hundred and sixty acres, on which is a good residence, barn and out-buildings, and by judicious and careful management his broad acres yield him a plentiful harvest which well repays him for his labor. Mr. Kimble is a Democrat in politics, and has held several of the minor township offices.

In 1859 Mr. Kimble married Mary H. Kirk, daughter of William Kirk, a farmer of West Nottingham township, Chester county. Their children are: John H., who is on the executive board of the Tome Institute, secretary and assistant treasurer of the same; he married Mary J. Tome, and they are the parents of two children: Chester Tome, a graduate of Tome Institute, Port Deposit, Maryland, and now pursuing his studies in Lafayette College; and Anna May, a student in the Tome Institute. Sarah A., wife of Kirk Fulton, and mother of five children: Rachel M., wife of Joseph Wilson, and one child is the issue of this union; Anson B., Jr., unmarried; and Walter R., unmarried. Mr. Kimble and his family are members of the Nottingham Presbyterian church of West Nottingham township, Chester county.

JOHN T. KIMBLE, a representative and prosperous farmer residing in West Nottingham township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, who has spent a lifetime in the cultivation of the soil, and is well known and highly esteemed throughout this section of the state, is a son of John and Rachel Kimble, and was born in the vicinity where he now resides in 1833. The earliest ancestor of the family of whom there is any record was John Kimble or Kemble, who became the owner of a one hundred and eighty-seven acre tract of land in New London township, Chester county, formerly the property of the McKean family; he was the father of the following named children—James, William, John, Samuel, Mary, Isaac, Jane and George Kimble.

John Kimble, father of John T. Kimble, was born in Kimblesville, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1794. The town was named for the family. During his boyhood days he attended the common schools of the neighborhood, and after completing his studies he applied himself to acquiring a thorough knowledge of the trade of blacksmith which he followed for several years. His inclinations then led him to adopt farming as a means of livelihood, and for the remainder of his life he conducted extensive operations on the old homestead. He was a staunch adherent of the principles of Democracy, and always fulfilled his duties as a citizen. He was united in marriage to Rachel Reynolds, daughter of Samuel Reynolds, a representative farmer of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. Their children were: Samuel, Rebecca, Sarah C., Caroline, Mary J., Rachel E., a child who died in infancy, Anson B., Carlton and John T. Kimble. John Kimble, father of these children, died at his home in West Nottingham township in the year 1856.

John T. Kimble was reared on the old homestead, and in the common schools of the neighborhood he obtained a good English education. Since the completion of his studies up to the present time (1903) Mr. Kimble has devoted his entire attention to agricultural pursuits. His farm is under a high state of cultivation, and the neat and thrifty appearance of the premises, including barn and outbuildings, indicate the careful and personal supervision of a practical and painstaking man. Mr. Kimble has always been active and loyal in his support of the candidates of the Democratic party, has served his township in several minor offices, and for twelve consecutive years acceptably filled the position of school director.

In 1862 John T. Kimble married Rachel Kirk, daughter of Joseph Kirk, a prosperous farmer of West Nottingham township, Chester county, and Elizabeth (Scott) Kirk. The following named children were born of this union—Rachel E., died in early life; Joseph W., died in childhood; Ida, died in early life; Hannah L., died in childhood; John A., married Della Worth, and they are the parents of one child; and Hannah L., wife of John Thompson, and mother of two children, one living and one dead. Mr. Kimble, with his family, are consistent members of the Presbyterian church of West Nottingham township, Chester county.

HARRISON HARLEY, an indefatigable veteran farmer and highly respected citizen of East Coventry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, was born October 5, 1839, on the family homestead, the son of Benjamin and Susan (Pennypacker) Harley. Benjamin Harley was born in 1805 and died in 1891; he served as justice of the peace for over fifteen years, and by his marriage to Susan Pennypacker became the father of the following named children: 1. Caroline; 2. Aquilla, deceased, who became the wife of David Savage, a farmer and justice of the peace, who is also deceased; 3. Isabella, who became the wife of Samuel Lloyd, a carpenter and house contractor, and they are the parents of two living children; 4. Enos T., a merchant of Coatesville, married, and three children have been born to him; 5. Franklin, a carpenter by trade, married Martha Hipple, and one child has been born to them; 6. Harrison, mentioned in the following paragraph; 7. Amanda, widow of L. Rothenberg; 8. Emma Jane, who became the wife of Frederick Fisher, a carpenter. Benjamin Harley was the son of Rudolph Harley, the latter named being a grandson of Rudolph Harley, who was of German descent, and on account of religious persecution in Germany settled in Pennsylvania in 1728.

Harrison Harley received his education in the public schools of his native county, and having decided in early youth that his calling should be agriculture, he remained on the home farm and assisted his father in the care and management of the estate. Since then he has led the life of an independent farmer in the home of his childhood, and the industry and skill with which he has applied himself to the cultivation of the paternal acres has earned for him a high rank among the agriculturists of the county. His political principles and opinions are those of a staunch Democrat. He is a member of the Baptist church.

Mr. Harley married, October 30, 1860, Susan Hollowbush, a daughter of the Rev. Peter Hollowbush, a minister of the German Baptist church. Their children are: 1. Edwin, born January 29, 1862, now deceased; he was justice of the peace for two terms, and for eight years prior to his death was employed in the United States Custom House in Philadelphia. He married Emily Nagle Lavan, and four children were the issue of this union; 2. Lewis R., born August 16, 1864, acquired his education in the Pottstown high school and the West Chester Normal School, after which he became teacher of history in the Boys' High School of Philadelphia, a position which he still holds. He married Ravilla Yernell of Delaware county, and they have three children, all of whom reside at home; 3. Mary Cora, born July 12, 1870, resides on the homestead; 4. Frederick, born March 19, 1874, is now engaged in the management and labors of the home farm, relieving his father of many burdensome details. He married Ella May Bickle, and they are the parents of one child.

CHARLES H. ASH. The earliest ancestor of the Ash or Esch family, as the name was originally spelled, was Daniel Heinrich Ash or Esch, who was born in Haschenburg, Germany, April 10, 1717, the son of Frederick Wilhelm and Anna Elizabeth (Empelerin) Esch or Ash, the latter named being a member of the Reformed church. Daniel H. Ash engaged in the same line of business as his father, that of apothecary, and in 1741 he emigrated to the United States, settling in Pennsylvania; he brought his certificates of apprenticeship with him, and they are now in the possession of Franklin P. Ash, of West Chester, Pennsylvania. Daniel H. and his wife, Elizabeth Ash, were the parents of two children, Joseph B., born March 7, 1744, and John, born March 7, 1747. Before the birth of the second son, Mr. Ash is supposed to have sailed for Germany for the ostensible purpose of looking after his estate there. He intended to take his son, Joseph B., with him, but was prevailed upon by his wife to leave him at home. The vessel in which he sailed is supposed to have been lost, as it never reached its destination and nothing was ever heard from it. Elizabeth Ash, widow of Daniel H. Ash, died about the year 1807.

Joseph B. Ash, eldest son of Daniel H. and Elizabeth Ash, was born March 7, 1744, and was united in marriage April 17, 1769, to Rachel Whitaker, a daughter of John and Dinah Whitaker, and a sister of Phineas Whitaker. Mrs. Ash was a member of the West Caln Friends Meeting. In the 12 mo., following their marriage they received a certificate of removal to Concord Monthly Meeting, and in the 9 mo., 1774, received a certificate back to Bradford Monthly Meeting. They were the parents of thirteen children, namely: John, William, Mary, Elizabeth, Rachel, Peter, Phineas, Joseph, Susan, Julia, Sarah, David and Daniel Ash.

Peter Ash, the third son of Joseph and Rachel Ash, married, October 12, 1809, Elizabeth Thomas, and four sons and two daughters were the issue of this union: 1. David Thomas, born March 1, 1812, never married, and was accidentally shot on December 23, 1858, while performing as an actor at Memphis, Tennessee, by Julius Brutus Booth, father of J. Wilkes Booth; the citizens of the city of Memphis have erected a monument to his memory. 2. Henrietta, born October 3, 1814, became the wife of the Rev. George Bancroft, a Methodist minister, and her death occurred September 7, 1846; their children were: David, Anna Elizabeth and Henrietta Bancroft. 3. Joseph Webb, born December 23, 1817, and married, October 21, 1844, Sarah Doan, a granddaughter, on the paternal side, of Israel and Lea Doan, and on the maternal side, of Thomas and Sarah Hayes. Their children were: Thomas A., Adaline, Mary Ann, Franklin, Charles H. and Emma E. Ash. Joseph Webb Ash died February 20, 1886, survived by his widow, who resides with her son, Charles H. Ash, at Coatesville, Pennsylvania. Peter Ash, the father of these children, died January 16, 1825.

Charles H. Ash, the third son of Joseph and Sarah Ash, was born in West Brandywine township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, August 2, 1856. At the early age of fifteen, he began his business career by learning the trade of carpenter. On October 10, 1882, he removed to Coatesville, Pennsylvania, and continued to work at his trade until the year 1890, when he established a business on his own account as a contractor and builder. He gave his personal attention to all the details of the work, and many of the handsome residences and blocks of houses erected in Coatesville bear witness to his skill and thoroughness. He has recently completed a beautiful residence, situated at 353 East Main street, Coatesville, in which he and his family now reside. Mr. Ash is a thorough business man, prompt and reliable in the discharge of his contracts and duties, and his name in commercial circles is synonymous with upright and honorable dealing.

On September 13, 1882, Mr. Ash married Adda E. Lewis, daughter of Evans and Sallie (Powell) Lewis, of West Caln township, and granddaughter, on the paternal side, of David and Lea Lewis, of West Bradford, and on the maternal side, of Jacob and Amy (Hughes) Lightfoot, the former named being a son of Thomas Lightfoot, a native of Cambridge, England, but who came from Ireland to this country in the year 1717. Mr. and Mrs. Ash are the parents of one daughter, Elva L. Ash, born October 29, 1883.

JOSIAH W. PYLE, a member of the well known firm of Rakestraw & Pyle, who are conducting an extensive trade in the nursery business at East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a man of good business qualifications, and during the many years that he has been actively and prominently identified with this line of industry has won and retained an enviable reputation among his associates in commercial circles. He is a representative of the old and honored Pyle family of Chester county, the ancestors of whom were among the pioneer settlers of this section of the state. His grandparents were John and Amy (Pennock) Pyle, and his parents were James T. and Hannah H. (Way) Pyle.

James T. Pyle (father) was born in Marlborough, Chester county, Pennsylvania, December 19, 1816. He was a man of strong convictions, clear judgment and unimpeachable character, and in all the relations of life fulfilled his duties in a faithful and conscientious manner. On March 14, 1839, Mr. Pyle married Hannah H. Way, who was born September 20, 1820, a daughter of Jacob and Mary (Jackson) Way, and the issue of this union was six children—Josiah W., mentioned at length hereinafter; Amy, born in Kennett township, March 4, 1846, became the wife of Thomas Whitson, an attorney of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and they are the parents of three children—Hannah, Alice, and Jennie Whitson; Clara, born in Kennett township, March 20, 1848; J. Howard, born in Lancaster county, August 3, 1855, married Sallie E. Gordon, daughter of Franklin and Mary A. (Truman) Gordon, and they are the parents of two children; James Ellsworth, born in Lancaster county, July 17, 1861; and Homer Way, born in Lancaster county, January 29, 1864.

J. W. Taylor

Josiah W. Pyle was born at the Anvil, Chester county, Pennsylvania, March 14, 1842, and his educational advantages were obtained in the common schools of that neighborhood and Lancaster county. His first business experience was gained as a teacher, in which capacity he served for two years, and he then entered into business as agent with Lukens Pierce in the nursery business, which connection continued until 1866. During that year he located in East Marlborough township, Chester county, and established his present business, which is conducted under the style of Rakestraw & Pyle, and since that date the trade has steadily increased both in volume and importance. They are now one of the most extensive dealers in nursery stock in the locality, their greenhouses comprising fifteen thousand feet of glass. In religion Mr. Pyle adheres to the doctrines of the Society of Friends, and in politics he firmly supports the principles of Republicanism. For several years he served as a director on the school board of East Marlborough township.

On December 27, 1866, Mr. Pyle married Lydia Elma Rakestraw, who was born in Bart, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, January 19, 1841, a daughter of William L. and Sarah (Sugar) Rakestraw, of East Marlborough, Chester county. Their children were: 1. Willard R., born November 24, 1868, married Maria James, and they are the parents of one child. 2. Mary, born June 2, 1870, died October 21, 1894. 3. Alice W., born September 1, 1871, died November 2, 1894. 4. Lindley, born April 20, 1879, unmarried, and is now engaged as a teacher in Washington University, St. Louis, Missouri, as instructor in physics. He was a graduate of the class of 1901 at the University of Maryland. Willard R. is an instructor in physics at the High School at One Hundred and Sixty-sixth street, New York City, and a graduate of the University of Maryland, class of 1892.

ISAIAH KNAUER. After an honorable and active business career, Mr. Knauer was enabled to retire from his labors and during his lifetime was regarded as one of the most highly respected citizens of Phoenixville, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He was a descendant of John Knauer, who accompanied by his brother came from Switzerland and settled in Knauertown, Chester county, where they followed the occupations of miller and farmer. They owned a large tract of land between St. Mary's and Pughdown, were among the prosperous and influential men of that day, and amassed a large amount of money by the sale of quantities of flour for the use of the soldiers of the Revolutionary war.

Samuel Knauer, father of Isaiah Knauer, was a son of John Knauer, the pioneer ancestor, and his boyhood and early youth was spent in acquiring an education in the public schools of the neighborhood. Subsequently he learned the trade of miller, and this occupation he followed for many years in the township of Warwick, Chester county, where he met with marked success and built up an excellent trade. In his political affiliations Mr. Knauer was an old line Whig. He was united in marriage to Elizabeth Monshawer, and they were the parents of several children.

Isaiah Knauer, son of Samuel and Elizabeth Knauer, was born in Warwick township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, September 8, 1824, and received the limited educational advantages afforded by the schools of that day. From the time that he laid aside his school books until he attained the age of twenty-two years, he assisted with the work upon the farm and in the grist mill owned by his father, after which he worked as a carpenter for two years in his native township. He then removed to Valley Forge and the following two years were spent in the wood shops of the Threshing Machine Works of Thomas Vanderslice; he was then engaged in the same shop making the patterns for all iron castings. After serving in this capacity for two years he entered into partnership with Mr. Vanderslice, this connection continuing for two years, and at the expiration of this period of time he purchased his partner's interest and conducted the business on his own account for eighteen years. His business was extensive and lucrative, requiring the services of from twelve to fifteen employes, and in addition to the regular work of the shop he introduced the manufacture of other forms of machinery, such as horse rakes, mowing machines and feed cutters. Mr. Knauer admitted Peter R. Edwards into partnership, and after continuing this connection for one year he disposed of the entire business to him.

From 1865 to 1870 Mr. Knauer was engaged in the manufacture of molasses, in addition to his other enterprise, and after his discontinuance of this line of industry he engaged in the manufacture of paper for roofing and later in making envelopes. Subsequently he rented the mill to the American Wood Paper Company and was employed by them as their general manager for several years, after which he sold the business to M. C. Pennypacker and then retired from the active pursuits of business. He led a quiet life at his home near Phoenixville, in Schuylkill township, enjoying the ease and luxury which should always follow years of ceaseless activity. Mr. Knauer was a Republican in politics, but his time was too much engrossed with business enterprises to admit of his accepting any public office.

Mr. Knauer was united in marriage to Sarah Ann Peck, and one child was born to them, Mary E., who became the wife of Leonard F. Grover, and her death occurred in 1902. Mrs. Knauer died in the year 1850, and on November 15, 1852, Mr. Knauer married for his second wife Mary Sower, a daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Pasey) Sower, granddaughter of Daniel Sower and great-granddaughter of Christopher Sower, who was a Dunkard in religion, in which church both Mr. and Mrs. Knauer held membership. The following named children were born to Isaiah and Mary (Sower) Knauer: George, Margaret, Ella, Ida, Samuel and Harvey, all of whom died in early life. Mr. Knauer died October 22, 1903.

CALEB R. HALLOWELL, a prosperous and respected farmer of Schuylkill township, Chester county, is a son of William and Jane (Walker) Hallowell, and was born September 7, 1830, in Lower Merion township, his father having rented a farm where Haverford station now stands. This farm at that time could have been bought for about $100 an acre, but since 1836, when the family removed from it to one in Plymouth township, it has become worth many millions of dollars. Mr. Hallowell's mother, Jane (Walker) Hallowell, was a native of Tredyffrin township, and was descended from the first of the name of Walker who emigrated to America, having been one of the number who came over with William Penn. Mrs. Hallowell died in 1872, at the age of seventy-nine.

Caleb R. Hallowell, in 1866, purchased his father's farm in Plymouth township, and after devoting himself for thirty years to its cultivation, bought the William C. Dyer farm in Schuylkill township, to which he removed, in 1896. This estate, which consists of seventy-two acres, is one of the finest in the township, having attached to it a dairy of from fifteen to twenty cows. The milk here produced, which is of a very superior quality, is disposed of in the Phoenixville market. Mr. Hallowell is an active member of the Patrons of Husbandry. His politics are those of the Republican party, and he held, at one time, the office of auditor of the town. He and his family are members of the Society of Friends.

Mr. Hallowell married, May 3, 1853, Hettie, born December 5, 1833, in Plymouth township, daughter of Joseph and Hannah (Davis) Yerkes, the former a son of Harman Yekes, of Harmanville, three miles below Norristown, and the latter a daughter of John Davis, of Plymouth Valley. On the occasion of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hallowell, the bridal party consisted of six couples, who drove in one-seated carriages from Plymouth Meeting to Philadelphia, where at the Hotel Montgomery, the mayor of the city united the contracting parties according to Friends' ceremony. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hallowell: 1. Eugene Y., who married Josephine E. Martin, and their children are: Rachel M., and Alan Wood Hallowell; 2. Laura, who is the wife of John Martin, of Conshohocken, and their children are: Ella L., Esther H., Virginia D., Arthur S. and Martha Y. Martin; 3. Anna Y.; 4. Lizzie C., who became the wife of Joseph R. Taggart, and they are the parents of the following named children: Hettie H., Mabel and Anna H. Taggart. Mr. and Mrs. Hallowell recently celebrated at their home the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, their four children, ten grandchildren, and also a few relatives and friends being present on the occasion. Of those who attended the wedding fifty years ago, there are but three survivors, one sister and three cousins of Mrs. Hallowell. Of these, three are widows and one is unmarried. It was not only from the comparatively small number assembled at their home that Mr. and Mrs. Hallowell received congratulations, but their many friends, as well as those of their children, all joined so to speak in celebrating the golden wedding of this venerable couple, and in tendering to them their sincere felicitations and best wishes, rejoicing with them in looking back upon the happiness of this half century of married life, and uniting in the wish that it may be the lot of these dear and honored friends to celebrate in the years to come not a few anniversaries of their wedding day.

JOHN M. DRENNEN, whose name is familiar to the residents of Lower Oxford township, Chester county, as that of an experienced and skilled farmer and worthy citizen, belongs to a family which has been for at least three generations represented not only in the county, but also in the township. There was born and educated William Drennen, and there he passed his life in the invigorating labors and tranquil enjoyments of a farmer. He married Mary Boyd, of the same township, and they became the parents of a numerous family.

Ebenezer J. Drennen, son of William and Mary (Boyd) Drennen, was born in 1823, on the homestead, in Lower Oxford township, where he received his primary education in the public schools, afterward attending the Hopewell Academy. On finishing his education, he learned the blacksmith's trade, and later became a farmer. He had the honor of being elected by his townsmen to various minor offices. His early political affiliations were with the Republican party, but later he changed his allegiance to the Democratic party. He was a member of the Union League. His church connections were with the Presbyterian denomination. He married Martha, daughter of Thomas and Helen Merchant, of Philadelphia, and the following children were born to them: William T., who married Ada Parker, and has two children; Mary, who died young; Eugenia G.; John M., mentioned at length hereinafter; and Jane M., unmarried. The death of Mr. Drennen occurred in 1879, at the comparatively early age of fifty-six.

John M. Drennen, son of Ebenezer J. and Helen (Merchant) Drennen, was born in 1852, in Lower Oxford township, and was educated in the public schools of his birthplace. His first and early choice of an occupation was farming, and to that he has adhered ever since. He is now the owner of a fine farm of one hundred and twenty-five acres, attached to which is a dairy of twenty-five head of cows. His land is cultivated in a skillful and scientific manner, and the products of his dairy have a deservedly high reputation. Mr. Drennen takes a keen interest in local affairs, and possesses in a high degree the esteem and confidence of his neighbors, who have chosen him at different times to fill the offices of auditor and school director. Politically he is a Democrat. He and his family are members of the Presbyterian church.

Mr. Drennen married, in 1885, Lavinia, daughter of James and Margaret (McIntyre) Lindsey, the former a farmer of Lower Oxford township. Mr. and Mrs. Drennen are the parents of two daughters: Maud and Ethel Drennen.

JAMES HARVEY REBURN, a well known farmer residing in Lower Oxford township, and a highly esteemed citizen of Chester county, who has served in the capacity of supervisor for several years in Lower Oxford, was born in East Nottingham township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, October 20, 1843, a descendant of a family who has been actively connected with the various interests of Chester county since the early days of its history.

James Reburn, grandfather of James H. Reburn, was a son of Alexander Reburn and his birth occurred January 17, 1789. In early life he learned the trade of shoemaker, which he followed at Mt. Vernon, Lower Oxford township, and this proved a profitable means of livelihood for a number of years. Subsequently he purchased a farm in the same township, and the remainder of his active life was devoted to the cultivation and improvement of the same. He was an upright, conscientious man, held membership in the Presbyterian church, and his political allegiance was given to the Democratic party. Mr. Reburn married Mary McClurg, who was born February 5, 1791, and among the children born to them was a son, John Alexander Reburn.

John Alexander Reburn, father of James H. Reburn, was a native of Lower Oxford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, the date of his birth being March 8, 1814. After completing his education at the district school, he served an apprenticeship at the trade of carpenter and in due course of time became an expert and skillful mechanic. He purchased a farm in East Nottingham township, but later disposed of this property and located in Wilmington, Delaware, where he followed his trade for a period of seven years. He then removed to Willimankee, Wisconsin, and in that vicinity he pursued his trade for over seven years. This brought him up to the period of the war of the Rebellion, in which he enlisted his services and served between three and four years, under the command of General William S. Rosecrans. After his honorable discharge from the service of the United States government, Mr. Reburn returned to New London, Pennsylvania, but after a short residence in that locality he located in Cecil county, Delaware, where he resided up to the time of his death in 1897. He was a member of the Presbyterian church, and his political affiliations were with the Democratic party.

On May 17, 1839, John A. Reburn married Mary Wiley, daughter of George Wiley, and their children were: George W., a resident of California; Mary Elizabeth, wife of Samuel Erwin, and they reside in Upper Oxford township, Chester county; James Harvey, mentioned at length hereinafter; Caroline, wife of J. A. Fox, and they reside in Cecil county, Maryland; and John M., a resident of Lynchburg, Virginia.

James H. Reburn, second son of John A. and Mary Reburn, was reared in East Nottingham township and his educational advantages were obtained in its public schools. He began his business career by farming in New London township, later pursued the same vocation in East Nottingham township, and in 1888 purchased the farm in Lower Oxford township on which he now resides. He has conducted his operation on an extensive scale and by industry, thrift and keeping a careful supervision over all the details, he has been enabled to provide his family with all the necessaries and some of the comforts of life. Since attaining his majority he has cast his vote with the Democratic party, and being held in high esteem by his fellow citizens he was selected to fill the office of supervisor of Lower Oxford township, his administration being noted for fidelity and efficiency.

On February 15, 1866, Mr. Reburn married

Casandra Fox, born February 16, 1845, a daughter of Charles and Margaret Fox, of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. Their children are: 1. Walter Harvey, born December 2, 1866, is a coach and carriage maker by trade and employed at Nottingham, Pennsylvania; he married Laura Gerrick, and they are the parents of four children—Mabel, Preston, Elma and Caroline Reburn. 2. Theodore Kennedy, born February 14, 1870, married May Brown, and three children have been the issue of this union—Webster, Oscar and Harold Reburn; they reside on the home farm. 3. Elma Viola, born March 28, 1872, now the wife of Samuel Ross Pollock, a carpenter by trade; they reside in Nottingham, Pennsylvania, and are the parents of three children—James Harvey, Casandra and Raymond Pollock. 4. Norman Taylor, born August 5, 1885, resides with his parents on the home farm. Mr. Reburn and his family are active members of the Presbyterian church at Nottingham, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

JOSEPH PYLE. Robert, Nicholas and Ralph Pyle were among the earliest settlers in Chester county, under William Penn, though it is probable that Ralph did not arrive as soon as the others. The first two were Friends, but the last was a member of the Episcopal church and active in its support. On the first page of the oldest deed-book in Chester county we find a power of attorney from Robert Pyle, senior, of Stanton Barnard, in the county of Wilts, England, to Robert Pyle, Junior, and Nicholas Pyle, of Pennsylvania, authorizing them to collect money due on a bond from George Chandler's estate. This document was dated August 29, 1688, but the important point is the inference that the colonists were sons of the other. A letter, written by James Logan, secretary of the province, in 1709, mentions Robert and Nicholas as having served in the Assembly, and adds: "And now I have mentioned those brothers, Pray tell Ralph that I admire I have not heard from him."

Nicholas married Abigail Bushell in 1688 and settled at Concordville. Ralph also settled in Concord township, and an Elinor Pyle, buried at St. John's church in 1726, aged sixty-three years, was probably his first wife. He was elected to the Assembly in 1720, and died about 1741.

Robert Pyle, of Horton, in the parish of Bishop Cannings, in the county of Wilts, Malster, and Ann Stovey, daughter of William Stovey, of Hilperton, in the same county, were married on the sixteenth of the ninth month, 1681, in a meeting of Friends. Upon their arrival in Pennsylvania they settled in Bethel, where he purchased one hundred and fifty acres of land by deed of May 2, 1683. He was one of the trustees for Chichester Meeting and one of the most active and influential members of Concord Monthly Meeting. He was elected to the Assembly in the years 1688, 1689, 1690, 1692, 1695, 1699, 1700, 1701, 1705. Ann Pyle died in 1724 and Robert married Susanna Turner, a widow, in 1725. His death occurred in 1730. He had eight children:

1. Sarah, b. 11 mo., 27, 1682; d. 12 mo., 16, 1706; m. John Vernon.

2. Robert, b. 7 mo., 17, 1684; d. 1717; m. Elizabeth Swaffer, 1709.

3. William, b. 11 mo., 26, 1685; d. 1734; m. Olive Bennett, 1707.

4. John, b. 6 mo., 8, 1687; d. 1752; see forward.

5. Mary, b. 11 mo., 13, 1688; m. Thomas Moore, 1713.

6. Jacob, b. 1 mo., 5, 1691; d. 1717; m. Alice Bowater, 1713.

7. Joseph, b. 11 mo., 5, 1692; d. 1754; see forward.

8. Daniel, b. 5 mo., 29, 1694; d. 1736; m. Mary Chamberlin, 1717, and Mary Pennell, 1727.

William Stovey, the father-in-law of Robert Pyle, suffered much persecution on account of embracing Quaker principles. It is related by Besse that in 1677 he "had twenty-two Sheep taken from his on Pretence of Tithe, at the Suit of James Garth, Priest of Hilperton." In 1679 he was sent to prison for refusing to pay tithes and remained there more than a year. Again, in 1683 he had forty-three sheep taken from him for preaching at a meeting at Devizes.

John Pyle (4) was married in 1710, to Lydia Thomas, daughter of Peter and Sarah (Stedman) Thomas. After her death he married, 7 mo., 20, 1716, at Concord Meeting, Susannah Chamberlin, daughter of Robert and Mary Chamberlin, of Concord. He was a farmer in Thornbury township and had two children by his first wife and seven by the last, viz.:

9. Sarah, m. Henry Phillips.

10. Moses, d. 1 mo., 1784; see forward.

11. Jacob, b. about 1717; m. Jane Sharpless, 8 mo., 22, 1740.

12. William, m. about 1741, Mary Booth.

13. Ebenezer, d. 1752, unmarried.

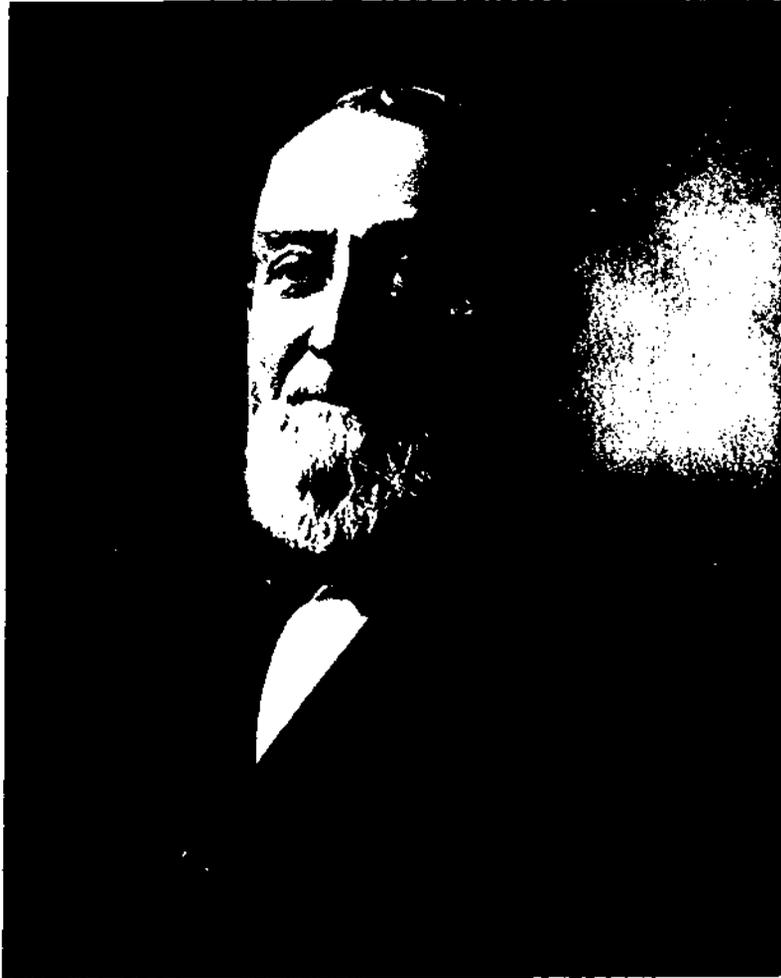

14. Stephen, m. Feb. 3, 1751, Elizabeth Ash.

15. Israel.

16. Mary, m. Benjamin Trego, Sept. 29, 1753.

17. Susanna, m. Thomas Fryer.

Moses Pyle (10) was married 2 mo., 29, 1736, at Birmingham Meeting, to Mary Darlington, daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth Darlington, of Birmingham. They settled in Newlin township, where Mary died about 1739, leaving two children, Lydia and Abraham. Moses was married again, 10 mo., 9, 1741, at Londongrove Meeting, to Mary Cook, born 8 mo., 4, 1719; daughter of John and Eleanor (Lansdale) Cook, of Londongrove. He subsequently purchased land in East Marlborough and resided there till 1762, when he removed to New Castle county, Delaware, where he became the owner of a farm and mills which he sold in 1772. About 1779 he settled in Little Britain, Lancaster county, and there died. By his last wife he had children, Hannah, Mary, Phebe, Ruth and Amos.

Amos Pyle, last named, was married 1 mo., 10, 1793, at Little Britain Meeting, to Ruth Stubbs, born 11 mo., 3, 1766; daughter of Daniel and Ruth (Gilpin) Stubbs, of Little Britain. Amos and Ruth Pyle had the following children born in Little Britain; Sarah, 12 mo., 20, 1794; Daniel, 9 mo., 10, 1796; John, 8 mo., 2, 1798; Phebe, 3 mo., 24, 1801; Joseph, 8 mo., 18, 1803; Amos, 2 mo., 27, 1806. In 1807 the family removed to Harford county, Maryland, but subsequently returned to Lancaster county.

Amos Pyle, Jr., of Colerain, Lancaster county, and Anna Michener, of Londongrove, Chester county, born 1 mo., 28, 1808; daughter of Joseph and Rebecca (Good) Michener, were married 3 mo., 22, 1832, at West Grove Meeting. They settled in Upper Oxford township, where he died in 1848, and his widow, 7 mo., 12, 1859. They had five children: Michener, b. 1 mo., 12, 1833; d. 10 mo., 16, 1833. Francis M., b. 10 mo., 3, 1834. Joseph, b. 11 mo., 15, 1836; see below. Orpha C., b. 2 mo., 24, 1839. Rebecca A., born in September, 1841.

Joseph Pyle, son of Amos and Anna, received his education in the common schools of the neighborhood, after which he spent some time in New York and in New Jersey. Returning home he engaged in storekeeping, and at the end of a year removed to what is now the village of West Grove, then merely a railroad station named for the old Friends' Meeting nearby.

He built the first house and also the first store block; brought the first car load of lumber to the village of West Grove and his friends predicted he would swamp himself in his efforts to dispose of it, but ere long he had to ship in more lumber, which proved his farsightedness and keen judgment in business transactions. He was the first to introduce the manufacture of brick in West Grove, and is the owner of the West Grove Water Works, being instrumental in the installation of the system. He is the secretary and treasurer of the Kent & Bissell Cattle Company, which have large holdings of cattle and lands in Wyoming. He is a director and president of the West Grove Improvement Company, also a director of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Chester county, and the White Clay Creek Power Company. He has donated both of land and money to several industries in West Grove, also to bringing same to this borough, and not for personal gain alone but for the good of the community. He was appointed the first postmaster of West Grove by President Lincoln, and held the office for twenty-two years, and also served in the capacity of burgess. He is a member of the Society of Friends, and a Republican in politics.

Mr. Pyle married 5 mo., 23, 1861, at her father's house, Mira M. Conard, born 11 mo., 8, 1837, daughter of Milton and Rachel S. Conard, of the vicinity of West Grove. They had four children: 1. Charles S., born 5 mo., 12, 1862, is vice-president of the National Bank at Rising Sun, Maryland, having filled the office of cashier of that institution for about eight years; he married Ella A. Gregg, and they are the parents of two children. 2. Anna R., became the wife of Luman Beitler, of West Grove, and one child has been born to them. 3. Milton C., cashier of the National Bank of West Grove since 1901, having formerly filled the office of paying teller of the same institution for thirteen years; in 1900 he located in Perkasio and organized the First National Bank of Perkasio, filled the office of cashier for one year and was then appointed to his present position. He is the president of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Chester county and is an elder and trustee in the West Grove Presbyterian church. He married for his first wife Ella R. Heston, and for his second wife Helen Calvert. 4. Wilbur, deceased. Joseph Pyle, the father of these children, is loved and respected by the whole community and is called the "Father of West Grove."

TRUMAN COATES, M. D., a physician of Oxford, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is descended from a line of men and women who bore an important part in the early history of the state. The Coates family seems to have possessed in marked degree those qualities of courage and of steadfastness that distinguished the Society of Friends. It is to these worthy ancestors that Dr. Coates owes the spirit that has enabled him to live his life and come to professional success under a physical disability that would render most men a helpless burden.

His earliest American ancestor, Moses Coates, was born in Ireland, of an English family that had crossed the channel to escape religious persecution. He married Susanna Weldon, in Cashel Meeting of Friends, Cashel, county Tipperary, province of Munster, 3 mo., 1, 1715. About two years later Moses Coates presented a certificate to Haverford (Pennsylvania) Monthly Meeting, from Carlow, Ireland, attesting his birth and marriage. In 1731 he purchased five hundred and forty acres of land on the site of North Phoenixville, Charlestown township, Chester county, and settled there. He appears to have been a man of unusual capacity and more than average education and was a surgeon by profession. He figures as an influential personage in the annals of Chester county, and the village of Coatesville was named for his grandson, Moses Coates, who was the second child of Samuel Coates, the second child of Moses Coates. A farmer all his life, he was also successful as a man of business, and his sons became owners and operators of the iron works to which the early growth of Phoenixville was due. Moses Coates, second son of Samuel and grandson of the emigrant Moses Coates, was credited with inventive genius, and among the appliances contrived by him are said to have been an apple paring machine, a self-setting saw, and a horse rake. Among the children of Moses and Susanna Coates were: Thomas, Samuel, Moses, Jr., Elizabeth, who became the wife of John Mendenhall; William, who died young; Jonathan, Aaron and Benjamin Coates.

Thomas, eldest child of Moses and Susanna (Weldon) Coates, was born 12 mo., 22, 1716, and married Sarah Miller, 3 mo., 21, 1741; Sarah Miller was the daughter of Henry and Sarah (Deeble) Miller, who came from Bradnich, Devonshire, England, in 1702. Sarah (Deeble) Miller was a daughter of George and Dorothy Deeble of Alcombe, parish of Dunster, county of Somerset, England, where they were married in the public meeting at Mynehead, in the county of Somerset, and came to America, settling in the province of Pennsylvania, in what is now Upper Providence township, Delaware county. Samuel, fourth child and third son of Thomas and Sarah (Miller) Coates, was born 9 mo., 13, 1749, and married Abigail Thatcher. Warrick, first child of Samuel and Abigail (Thatcher) Coates, was born 1 mo., 29, 1780, and married Eleanor Pusey at London Grove Friends' Meeting, Chester county, Pennsylvania, 4 mo., 6, 1803. Warrick, Jr., fifth child and fourth son of Warrick and Eleanor (Pusey) Coates, was born 4 mo., 2, 1811, and married Ruthanna Cook, at Penn Hill Friends' Meeting, by Friends' ceremony.

Warrick Coates, Jr., was born to a farmer's life in Londonderry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He received an education usual to the time and circumstances, and afterward cultivated his farm in Upper Oxford township, to whence he had removed upon his marriage, 3 mo., 24, 1842, until 1877, when he retired, passing the remainder of his life in Russellville, where he died 3 mo., 15, 1897, and his wife Ruthanna died 5 mo., 15, 1899.

He was a member of the Society of Friends, and a Republican. His wife was Ruthanna Cook, a daughter of William and Susanna (Cutler) Cook. She was descended on the paternal side from Peter Cook, and through her mother was in the line of Benjamin and Sarah (Dunn) Cutler. Warrick Coates, Jr., died 3 mo., 15, 1897, and his wife died 5 mo., 15, 1899.

Truman Coates, third child and second son of Warwick, Jr., and Ruthanna (Cook) Coates, was born 1 mo., 21, 1852. He was an active boy on his father's farm, where many sheep were raised. He early showed a fondness for those animals, and when he was only nine years old began the care of the flock. After attending the common schools in his neighborhood, he went to the Chestnut Hill Academy, then to Millersville State Normal School, at Millersville, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. He continued working on the farm during his vacations until he was seventeen years old, when he had measles. It was in the spring that the disease came upon him, and after his recovery he took cold working in ploughed ground. Paralysis set in, and slowly he lost the use of the lower half of his body. He was forced to the use of a wheel chair, upon which he passed his days as a medical student. In it, too, he was married, and he is still confined to it in the practice of his profession. In 1887 he entered the medical department of the University of Wooster, Cleveland, Ohio, from which institution he was graduated July 26, 1888, and he has been practicing medicine ever since. In 1892 he entered the Polyclinic Hospital and College for Graduates in Medicine at Philadelphia. Again in 1895 he took general clinical instruction as well as special clinical instruction in the diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. Since the spring of 1896 his practice has been chiefly along the line of these specialties. He is now, and has been for the past ten years one of the censors of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia. He is a member of Friends' Meeting in the borough of Oxford, and he has worked out its principles of simplicity and non-resistance into a practical philosophy of life. He was born a Republican, but is too independent a thinker to be bound by party ties. In religion, medicine or politics he is a seeker for light, and takes reason as his guide.

He married Sarah Boone Thomas, of Salem, Ohio, 10 mo., 26, 1882. She was a graduate of the Salem High School, and had received private instruction in the languages. She was a daughter of Jacob and Rebecca John (Lee) Thomas, who came of a line of farmers in Berks and Chester counties, Pennsylvania. Among her more remote ancestors, Mrs. Coates counts Daniel Boone, Abraham Lincoln and General Robert E. Lee.

STEPHEN COATES, an enterprising and successful agriculturist, has been prominently and actively identified with the growth and prosperity of Lower Oxford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, his birthplace, for more than a quarter of a century and is a useful and public-spirited citizen. He was born in 1848. His parents were Hartt G. and Eliza (Darlington) Coates, and his grandfather on the paternal side was Warrick Coates, a native of Londonderry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, who conducted farming interests on the old homestead where he was born, reared, lived and died.

Hartt G. Coates (father) was born in Londonderry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1808. He obtained the educational advantages afforded by the common schools of that day, and during his early manhood assisted with the work on the home farm. He then learned the trade of paper making, becoming a skillful and expert mechanic, but later in life he devoted his time to farming. He was united in marriage to Eliza Darlington, daughter of George and Lydia Darlington, the former named having been one of the representative farmers of Chester county. The following named children were born to them: Lydia, deceased; Warrick, died in early life; Edith, wife of A. D. Keech, and they are the parents of three children; George, who married Philena Reynolds; Granville, unmarried; Howard, who married Alice M. Sutton; they are the parents of five children; and Stephen Coates.

Stephen Coates attended the Fairville Academy which is located in the village of Fairville, Pennsbury township, Chester county, and after completing the regular course of instruction in that institution he turned his attention to milling and later to farming. He is now the owner of a farm of one hundred and nine acres located in East Nottingham township, which is devoted to general farming and dairying; his land is well cultivated and therefore productive and his harvests yield him a goodly return for the amount of labor he has bestowed upon his estate. He is an honored member of the Society of Friends, taking an active and prominent part in their meetings. His political affiliations are Republican.

In 1876 Mr. Coates married Lydia Pugh, daughter of Amos and Mary A. Pugh, the family being among the prominent residents of East Nottingham, Chester county. Their children are: Amy P., Edna D., Granville H. and George D. Coates, all of whom reside at home with their parents.

GRANVILLE COATES, an intelligent and prosperous farmer, residing in the township of Lower Oxford, Chester county, Pennsylvania, which was the scene of his birth, July 3, 1843, is a descendant of a family whose association with the varied interests of Chester county dates back to the early days of its settlement.

Hartt G. Coates, father of Granville Coates, was born in Londonderry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1808. The common schools of the community afforded him a good English education, and for a number of years subsequent to the completion of his studies he assisted with the management of the home farm. He then spent an apprenticeship at the trade of paper maker, and became thoroughly familiar with this branch of industry in all its details. He possessed a large amount of energy and enterprise, and by exercising these excellent characteristics he achieved financial success in his business undertakings. The following named children were born to Mr. Coates and his wife, Eliza (Darlington) Coates, daughter of George and Lydia Darlington, old and respected residents of Chester county—Lydia, deceased; Warrick, died in early childhood; Edith, wife of A. D. Keech and mother of three children; George, who married Philena Reynolds; Granville, mentioned at length in the following paragraph; Howard, who married Alice M. Sutton, and five children have been the issue of this union; and Stephen, who married Lydia A. Pugh, daughter of Amos and Mary Ann Pugh, and their children are—Amy P., Edna D., Granville H. and George D. Coates.

Granville Coates, third son born to Hartt G. and Eliza Coates, was reared in Lower Oxford township and his educational advantages were obtained in the common schools of the vicinity, at the Hopewell Academy and Millersville State Normal School. In 1864, shortly after attaining his majority, he engaged in the milling business in his native township and for a period of forty years conducted the mill on the homestead property in Lower Oxford township. He also devoted considerable attention to the manufacture of molasses from sorghum grown in the vicinity. He has always remained on the old homestead, which is a fine old estate consisting of two hundred and ninety acres of well cultivated and productive land, where he has been successful in his farm operations and is now a representative of that class of men known as independent farmers. He holds membership in the Society of Friends, and is a Republican in politics. Mr. Coates is unmarried.

ROBERT FUTHEY, a member of the firm of Futhey & Swisher, who have been successfully engaged in mercantile pursuits for the past thirty-two years in the borough of Atglen, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a descendant of a Scotch ancestry. The family was prominent and influential, Alexander and Henry Futhey being chosen to serve as members of the old Scottish Parliament in the reign of Charles II, while others of them occupied various offices of trust and responsibility. In the seventeenth century they resided near Arbroath, in the county of Forbar, on the eastern coast of Scotland, where they were extensive land owners.

Robert Futhey emigrated from Scotland to the north of Ireland in the latter part of the seventeenth century, and settled in Belfast. Among his children was a son named Robert Futhey, who became the progenitor of the American branch of the family, and settled with his family in the southern part of Chester county, Pennsylvania, between the years 1725 and 1730. He died shortly after his arrival in this country, leaving surviving him the following named children: Robert, Samuel, Margery and Henry Futhey. In 1770 Robert, the eldest son, removed to the Cumberland Valley and many of his descendants reside in that vicinity at the present time; Henry removed to the western part of North Carolina, in the neighborhood of Charlotte, and Samuel resided for a number of years in Londonderry township, but in 1763 he purchased a farm of over two hundred acres in West Fallowfield, now Highland township. He was an earnest supporter of the Whig party during the Revolutionary period, and having the reputation of being a splendid judge of horses he was employed by the Supreme Executive Council to purchase horses for the use of the Continental army. In January, 1750, Mr. Futhey married Ruth Steele, daughter of Samuel Steele, of New London township. His death occurred January 27, 1790, and two children survived him, namely: Ann, born November 2, 1750, and Samuel, born September 1, 1753. A son, Robert, served in the army of the Revolution, and was a participant in the terrible battle of Three Rivers, in Canada, in 1776; he died soon after from the exposure to which he was subjected.

Samuel Futhey, grandfather of Robert Futhey, was actively engaged in the Revolutionary war, serving during five campaigns, and in 1794 he was appointed adjutant of a regiment of cavalry that marched to aid the general government in quelling what is known as the "Whisky Insurrection" in western Pennsylvania. He was subsequently chosen to fill the office of brigade inspector, serving for seven years, and during this time he acquired the title of Major Futhey. In 1782 he was united in marriage to Margaret McPherson, who died two years later, and in 1788 he married Martha Smith. Their children were: Robert, Jane, Sarah, Samuel and John S. Futhey. Major Futhey died February 22, 1812, and his remains were interred in the cemetery at New London.

Robert Futhey, father of Robert Futhey, was born January 21, 1789, and his entire life was spent on a portion of the old homestead farm in West Fallowfield township, where he devoted his attention to the cultivation and improvement of the ground. He was one of the prominent citizens of the community, and his advice and counsel were often called into requisition in the settlement of disputes, which without his aid would have ended in litigation. He served as a private during the war of 1812, and was a member of the Legislature of Pennsylvania during the years 1841 and 1842. Mr. Futhey married Margaret Parkinson, a native of Carlisle, Pennsylvania, and six children were born to them: J. Smith, James L., Martha, David, Elizabeth and Robert Futhey. Mr. Futhey died July 29, 1870.

Robert Futhey, youngest son of Robert and Margaret Futhey, was born on the old homestead farm in Highland township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, November 13, 1833. He received a practical education in the common schools of his native township and also in the township of West Fallowfield, and subsequently he assumed the management of the farm which he continued to operate until after the war broke out. Being imbued with a patriotic spirit, he enlisted in the First Pennsylvania Regiment, Company A, under command of Captain H. M. McIntyre, of West Chester. He participated in several important engagements, amongst them being the battle of Bull Run, in which he was severely injured by the bursting of a shell which necessitated his confinement in a hospital for a short period of time. After his release from the hospital he was transferred to the Seventy-fifth Pennsylvania Reserves, commanded by Colonel Tally and during this campaign he was active in skirmish work most of the time. After peace was declared Mr. Futhey took up his residence at Atglen, Chester county, and engaged in mercantile business which he has conducted ever since. From 1868 to 1871 he was the sole proprietor of the store, but in the latter named year he disposed of a half interest in the business to Mr. W. D. Swisher, who has maintained his connection up to the present time (1903); the business in conducted under the firm name of Futhey & Swisher, and they now enjoy a large and profitable trade. Mr. Futhey has been a director of the Parkesburg National Bank for years, and is a stockholder in the Atglen National Bank, established and opened for business December 17, 1903. He is one of the best known business men in this section of Chester county. Politically Mr. Futhey is a staunch Republican, and has served his township in the capacity of school director for ten years, and auditor of the borough council for several years. He is an active member of the Masonic fraternity, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1868 Mr. Futhey married Annie H. Houston, of Penningtonville, Pennsylvania. Their children are: Martha, who has been engaged as a teacher for a period of fourteen years; her first appointment was so satisfactory that she was called to the Friends' school on Arch street, Philadelphia, and from there to her present engagement in the Glenn Mills School, in Delaware county, Pennsylvania, which institution is maintained by the government; Sarah and Roberta Futey, the latter named being a successful teacher of music. Mr. Futey and his family are active and consistent members of the Presbyterian church at Atglen, in which he serves as elder.

JOHN H. DUNN. War always brings forth many latent qualities of the individual and often furnishes inspiration for deeds which would never be thought of in the piping times of peace. Men catch the enthusiasm of the hour and rush into the thickest of the fray, daring and doing brave acts. One of the many instances of this fact which occurred in Chester county during the great Civil war was shown in the case of the present worthy citizen, John H. Dunn. He was only about sixteen years old when war's alarms sounded, and without his father's consent he enlisted as a drummer-boy. His father searched the ranks for him and took him out, but in 1863 he was again at the front, in the Eleventh Pennsylvania, with which he participated in several engagements, served in the Goldsboro and Kingston campaigns in North Carolina for five months and was discharged with honor in 1865.

His father, James Dunn, was born in Caln township, Chester county, and was descended from a family of very old settlers in the county. He was a Methodist in religion, and believed in the principles of the Democratic party. He married Caroline Maitland Beggs, the widow of William Beggs, and they became the parents of three children: Phoebe, who married George Young, of New York; Nellie, who is the wife of William Carpenter, and they are the parents of two children; and John H. Dunn.

John Henry Dunn, the only son, was born and reared in this county, and received his education in the Downingtown public schools. After his experience in the army was terminated by the cessation of hostilities, he returned to this state, and his first work was in Philadelphia, where he was engaged as a conductor on a street car road, but he soon gave that up to take up stationary engineering. He continued in this line for a number of years, and in 1898 was appointed to the office of postmaster of Parkesburg, and so creditably did he perform the duties of the position that at the expiration of his term he was again chosen for the place, and that is his present occupation.

Mr. Dunn was married to Miss Carrie Humphrey, daughter of James Humphrey of Downingtown. Charles L., the first son of this union, married Belle Watterson, who is the mother of two children; Harry B. is unmarried; Minnie F. is deceased; Laura E. married William H. Gebart and has one child, a barber by trade, who resides in Piedmont, West Virginia; Carl A. is single; and John H., Jr., who died June 5, 1903, in his twenty-first year. As one would already have inferred, perhaps, Mr. Dunn is a zealous Republican, and besides his present official position has served five years as justice of the peace and also as school director for fifteen years. He is very prominent in the fraternal organizations, being a member of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the Knights of Pythias, the Red Men, Sons of America, and is past commander of the Grand Army of the Republic. He has traveled a great deal and is an eager man of affairs; he lives in Parkesburg and his residence is one of the fine homes of that town.

JOSEPH T. BOOTH, until recently successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits in the township of Londonderry, Chester county, Pennsylvania, Mr. Booth attained to a prominent position in industrial circles through his own well directed efforts. He was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, July 8, 1834, the son of Milton and Susanna (Wiley) Booth, and grandson of Joseph and Mary Booth.

Joseph Booth (grandfather) was actively associated with the various interests of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, in which vicinity his marriage occurred; here they reared and educated a family of seven children, namely: 1. Milton, mentioned at length hereinafter. 2. Ebenezer, who had one child born to him by his marriage with Miss Hinckson, and two children, Milton R. and Joseph P. Booth, were the issue of his second marriage. 3. Charles, who married Mary Hull Harford, and their child, Mary Jane, is now the wife of Pennock Harvey. 4. Thomas, a distinguished temperance lecturer, was united in marriage to Mary Mershon, and one son was born to them, George Booth. 5. Maria, who became the wife of Samuel Reece, after his decease became the wife of Robert Janney, and they were the parents of three children, Charles, Mary, and Eva Janney. 6. Phebe, wife of William Brosius; they reared a large family of children. 7. Jonathan, who married Adeline Ottey, and their children are: Rachel and Charles Handford Booth.

Milton Booth (father), eldest son of Joseph and Mary Booth, was a prominent citizen of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. His energy and business ability were so pronounced as to insure a creditable success in any line of industry. Mr. Booth was twice married, his first wife having been Susanna Wiley, who was born November 6, 1808, a daughter of William and Lydia Wiley, and after her decease he was united in marriage to Hannah Clinger. The following named children were born of his marriage to Susanna Wiley: Mary, born April 17, 1830; Lydia, born February 18, 1832; Joseph T., born July 8, 1834; Annie Eliza, born in 1836; Phebe; Martha; and Joshua, who married Laura Mercer.

Joseph T. Booth, eldest son of Milton and Susanna Booth, acquired an excellent education in the local schools of Londonderry township and at Unionville Academy, West Marlborough township. Upon the completion of his studies he assumed the management of his father's farm and after the death of the latter he purchased the property, which consisted of one hundred and twenty-six acres of productive land. He has ever manifested a lively interest in all that conserves the progress and prosperity of the township, in which he has served in the capacity of school director for a number of years. In his religious views he is an adherent of the faith of his forefathers, being a birthright member of the Society of Friends.

On May 19, 1864, Mr. Booth married Sarah W. Chandler, who was born October 26, 1836, in the state of Delaware, but was reared and educated in East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania; she is a daughter of George and Mary (Harvey) Chandler. Three children were the issue of this marriage, namely: 1. Mary H., born November 3, 1866, died December 29, 1867. 2. Mary R., born January 16, 1869, became the wife of J. Hibbard Yarnall, March 16, 1892, and their children are: Joseph M., born January 4, 1893; Anna S. B., born November 11, 1896; Augustus J., born October 31, 1895, and Paul R. Yarnall, born August 8, 1901. 3. Anna S., born January 30, 1871, died March 23, 1895; she was the wife of William P. Wollaston, and mother of two children—Sarah, born May 3, 1891, and Thomas B., born July 22, 1893, died February 21, 1895.

Joseph T. Booth died September 6, 1903, and was interred at Friends' cemetery, Doe Run, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

The following is an authentic record of the births, marriages and deaths in the Booth family:

Births: Milton Booth, 2 mo., 24, 1803. Susanna Booth, 11 mo., 6, 1608. Mary Booth, daughter of Milton and Susanna Booth, 4 mo., 17, 1830. Lydia Booth, 2 mo., 18, 1832. Joseph T. Booth, 7 mo., 8, 1834. Annie E. Booth, 6 mo., 15, 1836. Martha J. Booth, 6 mo., 11, 1839. Joshua W. Booth, 4 mo., 13, 1841. Phebe Booth, 8 mo., 17, 1844.

Marriages: Milton Booth and Susanna Wiley, 2 mo., 19, 1829. Joseph T. Booth and Sarah W. Chandler, 5 mo., 19, 1864. Joshua W. Booth and Laura Mercer, 5 mo., 11, 1880.

William Penn Wollaston and Anna S.

Booth, daughter of Joseph T. and Sarah C. Booth, 6 mo., 5, 1890. J. Hibbard Yarnall and Mary R. Booth, daughter of Joseph T. and Sarah C. Booth, 3 mo., 16, 1892. Milton Booth (second marriage) and Hannah Clinger, 2 mo., 26, 1863.

Deaths: Mary Booth, mother of Milton Booth, 5 mo., 28, 1827. Joseph Booth, father of Milton Booth, 3 mo., 7, 1843. Mary Booth, daughter of Milton and Susanna Booth, 12 mo., 11, 1834. Joseph T. Booth, 9 mo., 6, 1903.

SAMUEL P. STONEBACK, for more than a quarter of a century actively engaged in various business pursuits of Chester county, Pennsylvania, and a well known and respected citizen of West Nantmeal township, was born in Warwick township, May 25, 1841.

Samuel P. Stoneback attended the common schools of Berks county, to which vicinity his parents removed when he was an infant, and completed his studies at the age of fifteen years. His first employment was on a farm in Berks county; in 1855 he was employed by David Hanpcher to drive a cart in the Warwick mines, and after serving in this capacity for one year he was employed by James Wynn, of Berks county. In the spring of 1857 he was engaged to cultivate the farm of John Kinney, of Carnarvon township, Berks county; in 1858 he was employed on the farm of Henry Hammer, who resided on the Isaac Christman farm, on Tomell Hill, in the vicinity of Phoenixville, and after remaining there for one year he applied himself to mastering the trades of plastering and shoemaking. The following three years he was employed at the trade of plasterer with Levi Hoffman, also devoting considerable attention to the trade of shoemaker, with Jacob Hoffman, Levi Hoffman's brother, after which he was engaged as a plasterer for one season by George Sponagle. He then established a shoemaking business on his own account at Harmonyville, Chester county, but after conducting this undertaking successfully for one year he disposed of it and returned to Berks county, and resumed his occupation of plastering.

On July 8, 1863, he enlisted under the emergency call for troops, served six weeks in the Fifty-third Pennsylvania Regiment, and was honorably discharged from the service of the United States, being mustered out in Reading, Pennsylvania, August 18, 1863. Upon his return home he again returned to his trade, but after a short period of time was engaged to tend the cupola in Isaac Fagey's foundry, at Pottstown, which position he filled for about three and a half years. He then located in Birdsboro, and invested one thousand dollars in the establishment of a foundry, but at the expiration of three years, finding that he only realized eight per cent. out of the thousand dollars invested in the stock he disposed of the business. The following summer he was engaged in hauling wood for the Hopewell Furnace in Berks county, and for Dr. Charles P. Chlinger. He was awarded a contract for delivering stone to the Wilmington & Northern Railroad, from William Boyer, contractor, and this occupation continued for fifteen months. He then rented the Reuben Bidler farm, in Birdsboro, which he conducted for two years, and in the spring of 1878 he changed his place of residence to Chester county, and has remained a resident of that section of the state ever since. He resided on the farm of Isaac Brunner for a period of seventeen years, and during this time he performed a large amount of contract work for William M. Potts, a wealthy and influential citizen of Chester county. In 1887-88 he built a macadamized road and a bridge over the Brandywine, one hundred feet long, with three arches, fifty feet space for water, all built out of stone and cement. In 1895 he settled on a farm in West Nantmeal township, which was formerly the property of Squire Dampman. The farm contains fifty acres of rich and arable land devoted to general farming products, and his dairy, which averages ten head of well selected stock, is one of the finest in the county. In addition to his agricultural pursuits, he has been extensively engaged in contract work during his residence in West Nantmeal township, and is now engaged in superintending the erection of two bridges, one at Lewis's Mill, and one at Marshall's Creamery, Chester county.

He has been an active member and official of the Methodist Episcopal church for thirty-five years, having held the offices of steward, trustee, class leader and Sunday school superintendent, and for a quarter of a century has held membership in the Good Will church. Politically Mr. Stoneback is a Republican, and has always taken an active interest in the leading questions of the day and the welfare of the party. He was formerly a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Order of the Brothers and Sisters of Lady Simpson, and was appointed in the latter organization a past guardian for a term of three months, and afterwards received all honors pertaining to said office, representing the order at Lebanon as the past guardian of the grand lodge.

On November 17, 1861, Mr. Stoneback married Lizzie Bellman, daughter of John Bellman, who was engaged as a farmer and carpenter in Berks county, where he reared a family of seven children. Five children were the issue of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Stoneback: 1. Sylvester E., born January 26, 1863, married Lizzie Buckwalter, daughter of Lewis Buckwalter, of Lancaster county, and they are the parents of four children, one of whom is now deceased; he is a farmer in East Nantmeal township and is the owner of considerable property in West Nantmeal township. 2. Albert F., born January 14, 1865, married Mattie Warner, daughter of Jonas Warner, and six children have been the issue of this union, two of whom are now deceased; he is a prominent agriculturist of West Nantmeal township. 3. William T., born July 3, 1869, married Margaret Snyder, daughter of Isaac Snyder, and their family consists of two boys; he is engaged in farming in West Nantmeal township. 4. Elizabeth E., born October 8, 1871, became the wife of William McCalister, superintendent of the Knickerbocker Ice Company, and stationed at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; they are the parents of two children: Chester, deceased; and Bessie McCalister. 5. Samuel Luvanas, born January 27, 1879, unmarried, is a blacksmith by trade and resides at Barneston; he served in the Spanish-American war in the capacity of farrier. About seventeen years ago Mr. Stoneback adopted Anna M. Stoudt, who resides with him at the present time (1903), and during all those years has acted the part of an obedient and dutiful daughter; she received an excellent education in the common schools of West Nantmeal township, and on October 5, 1903, she attained the age of twenty-one years. About three years ago Mr. Stoneback also assumed the care of George H. Hopp, who is now in his twelfth year. Mrs. Stoneback died on February 18, 1901. She was not only an influential woman in society in general, greatly respected and beloved by all with whom she came in contact, but was from early life until her death an active member and constant worker in the Sabbath school and the various societies connected with the Methodist Episcopal church.

GEORGE W. EACHUS, an enterprising farmer of Chester county, is descended from a family of German origin which has been resident in the county for two hundred years. The first ancestor to appear on the records is Robert Eachus, who on December 5, 1704, purchased two hundred acres of land from Richard Thomas. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Hugh and Elizabeth (Brinton) Harry, of Birmingham. Of their eight children, John, the eldest, married Hannah, daughter of Isaac and Catharine (David) Haines, of Goshen. Robert Eachus died in 1727, leaving his lands to his two oldest sons, John and William. His widow married John Gleave, of Springfield, and died at Marlborough, March 8, 1758, being buried at Kennett. John Eachus died January 19, 1779.

Phinehas Eachus, son of John and Hannah (Haines) Eachus, was at one time a large landholder, owning much of the present site of West Chester, where he was from 1762 to 1768 the proprietor of the first inn, which was called the Turk's Head Tavern. He was also the owner of the original homestead. Becoming surety for friends he lost his property, the land passing into the possession of Isaac Matlack, and the inn being purchased by John Hoopes. Phinehas Eachus was a fine classical scholar, and after losing his property established a school which gave promise of being a great success. He married Sarah, daughter of William and Margaret Trego, of Goshen township, and they were the parents of several children. Phinehas Eachus died suddenly in consequence of disease contracted from one of his pupils. His wife was an overseer of Goshen Meeting, the family being then, as since, members of the Society of Friends.

Virgil Eachus, son of Phinehas and Sarah (Trego) Eachus, was born about 1763, in Chester county, and removed early in life to Middletown township, Delaware county, where he lived for a number of years, and then moved to Baltimore county, Maryland, where for a short time he was engaged in farming. On his return he settled in Haverford township, Delaware county, where he passed the remainder of his life, his occupation being that of a farmer. In politics he was an old line Whig. He married, in 1791, Bathsheba Webb, by whom he had nine children. After the death of his wife he married, in 1808, Mary Starr, and by his second marriage had six children. Virgil Eachus died in 1838, leaving behind him the memory of a man of spotless integrity of character.

Homer Eachus, eldest son of Virgil and Bathsheba (Webb) Eachus, was born July 15, 1792, in Middletown township, Delaware county. He was the first to engage in mercantile life at Providence, and later removed to Howellville, Delaware county, where he built a store which he conducted for some time. In 1821 he engaged in farming, an occupation which he followed for the greater part of his active life. About 1855 he retired from business and removed to Philadelphia, where he made his home for the remainder of his life. In politics he was a Democrat always, but during the Civil war gave unqualified support to President Lincoln and the cause of the Federal government. He took an active part in the affairs of the Society of Friends. He married, in 1814, Lydia M., daughter of Robert Green, a native of Delaware county, and the first superintendent of Westtown Boarding School. Their family consisted of thirteen children. Mr. Eachus died in 1869, in Philadelphia, at the age of seventy-seven.

Homer Eachus, son of Homer and Lydia M. (Green) Eachus, was born November 23, 1821, in Edgmont township, Delaware county, and received his education in the public schools of his native place, and at Josiah Hoopes' Academy, in West Chester. After leaving school he engaged in the produce business in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he remained three years. Upon his return to Delaware county he became a farmer, and, in 1876, purchased a farm in Westtown township, Chester county, which he cultivated until 1885, when he relinquished the management of the estate to his sons. Politically he was a "National" Democrat, and was once nominated for county commissioner of Delaware county, but on account of the large Republican majority was defeated at the polls. He was a man much respected and trusted by his neighbors, and for twenty-one years served as president of the school board of his township. For a number of years he was connected with the Farmers' Insurance Company of Chester County. He married, October 7, 1848, Lydia, daughter of Anthony and Hannah (Williamson) Baker, of Edgmont township, and they were the parents of twelve children, eight of whom reached maturity. Mr. Eachus died in Westtown township, July 27, 1893.

William L. Eachus, son of Homer and Lydia (Baker) Eachus, was born August 14, 1849, in Edgmont, and began farming on the estate of his grandfather, Anthony Baker, in that township. He removed in 1878 to his father's farm in Westtown, and in the spring of 1882 returned to Edgmont, where he bought the farm of Edward S. Yarnall, which he sold the following year, and returned to his father's farm. In 1887 he bought a farm in the same township, which he continued to cultivate until the autumn of 1898, when he sold it, purchased the milk route of Mrs. Joseph R. Manley, and removed to Philadelphia.

Mr. Eachus married Matilda E. Lodge, born January 16, 1852, in Upper Providence, daughter of John and Caroline W. (Green) Lodge, of Radnor. Their children are: George W., mentioned at length hereinafter; Walter Baker, who was born January 21, 1874, in Willistown, married Elizabeth W. Manley, and resides in Philadelphia; John Marion, who was born April 9, 1878, in Westtown; Homer Byron, who was born December 14, 1879, in Westtown, where he died February 27, 1880; Juanita, who was born July 3, 1882, in Edgmont; and Florence Leona, who was born September 13, 1884, in Westtown.

George W. Eachus, son of William L. and Matilda E. (Lodge) Eachus, was born July 23, 1871, in Westtown township, Chester county, on the James estate, and was educated in the Union public school of Westtown. He has always devoted himself to agricultural pursuits, and is now managing the farm of his grandfather, Homer Eachus, on which he engages in general farming. He is a member of Westmont Lodge, No. 495, Knights of Pythias, Tanguy, and of Tamenende Tribe, No. 192, Independent Order of Red Men, also of Tanguy. In politics he is affiliated with the Democratic party. He is not a member of any church but in religious matters follows the traditions of his ancestors, the later generations of whom were Hicksite Friends.

Mr. Eachus married, October 30, 1895, Margaret Rachel Bail, born April 2, 1870, daughter of William and Anna J. (Green) Bail, of Claymont, Delaware. Mr. and Mrs. Eachus have three children: Mildred, born April 6, 1897; William Lewis, born March 25, 1899; and George Baker, born October 27, 1902.

DAVID BUCK, superintendent of the Coatesville Gas Works, is a native of Phoenixville, Chester county. He was born October 13, 1870, son of David and Angeline (Hallman) Buck. His grandparents, John and Mary Buck, were born in Bellinidary, Ireland. John Buck died at the age of forty-five years, from injuries received by falling from a wagon. His widow came to the United States in 1841, and settled in Buffalo, New York, whence she removed to Phoenixville, Pennsylvania, where she died at the advanced age of ninety-three years. She was the mother of eleven children—John, Benjamin, Isabella, Robert, Thomas, Mary, William, Adam, Jennie, George and David—all of whom, excepting David, Robert and Isabella, left her as they came to self-supporting age. So far as known none of the children are now living.

David Buck, youngest son of John and Mary Buck, was born in Bellinidary, Ireland, in 1840. He came to the United States in September, 1859, and located in Buffalo, New York, where he secured work as a puddler in the Buffalo Rolling Mills. In 1861 he removed to Phoenixville, Pennsylvania, and entered the employ of the Phoenixville Iron Company, first in the capacity of water tender, and later as engineer. In 1870 he went into the Bridge Shops; in 1883 he was appointed assistant foreman, and in 1892 he was advanced to the position of general foreman, being placed in charge of the pattern house and supervising the making of all patterns, and he served in this responsible place until his death. He married Angeline Hallman, who was born in Phoenixville in 1829, and married at the age of thirty-eight years. Both were exemplary members of the Presbyterian church. They were the parents of five children, Mary, Noah, David, Annie and Robert, the last named of whom died at the age of two years.

David Buck, third child and first son of David and Angeline (Hallman) Buck, attended the schools of his native village until he was twelve years old, and at that early age, despite the objections of his parents, set out to earn his own livelihood. Entering the Phoenixville Rolling Mills, he labored there until he was sixteen years of age, when he went to the Bridge Shops, where he was employed for two years. At the age of eighteen he began to learn the trade of a machinist, and when he came of age, three years later, he was a finished workman. At the age of twenty-two he engaged in the machine business on his own account, establishing his rooms at the corner of Hall and Bridge streets, in Phoenixville. He conducted this enterprise with success until October 12, 1896, when he accepted the position of superintendent of the Phoenix Gas and Fuel Company. October 1, 1899, the operating corporation sold the plant to F. H. Shelton, who was succeeded at a later day by the Consolidated Schuylkill Gas Company, which furnished illumination for Spring City and Rogersford, to which was now added Phoenixville. Mr. Buck was retained in his position as superintendent until October 1, 1901, when the company acquired the electric and railroad plants, and he was appointed operating superintendent. August 1, 1903, he was transferred to Coatesville, appointed to the superintendency of the Coatesville Gas Works, which position he now occupies. In all these various relations with important industries, Mr. Buck has displayed managerial powers of a high order, and his mechanical skill and knowledge have served him and the interests committed to him most advantageously. He is a man of sterling integrity, and commands the respect and confidence of all with whom he is brought in connection.

Mr. Buck is a member of St. John's Reformed church, Phoenixville, in which he was an elder and the treasurer from April 1, 1899, until August 1, 1903, when he resigned on account of changing his location. His political affiliations are with the Republican party, but he has never aspired to public position. He is a member of the Masonic order, and has attained to the chivalric degrees, affiliated with Jerusalem Commandery, No. 15, Knights Templar. He is also a member of the Royal Arcanum and the Junior Order of American Mechanics.

Mr. Buck was married, at Phoenixville, October 12, 1898, to Miss Eleanor Merrill Moyer, a daughter of George W. and Elizabeth M. Moyer. She is a native of Phoenixville, and received her education in the village schools.

HENRY H. JACKSON. Among the citizens of East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, who are interested in its agricultural interests to a large extent, may be mentioned the name of Henry H. Jackson, who is a descendant of Nicholas Jackson, who was a resident of Kilbank, in Seathwaite, Lancashire, England. He had a son, Thomas Jackson, born in that county, but removed from thence to Ireland, where he was united in marriage to Ann Man, daughter of Francis and Judith Man, and came to America in 1713.

Jonathan Jackson, ninth child born to Thomas and Ann Jackson, and great-grandfather of Henry H. Jackson, married Mary Hayes, daughter of Henry Hayes, and six children were born to them. Thomas Jackson, second child of Jonathan and Mary Jackson, and grandfather of Henry H. Jackson, married for his first wife Sarah Taggart, but there was no issue of this union. He subsequently married Mary Hayes, daughter of Samuel Hayes, and the following named children were born to them: Obed, born March 26, 1788, married Lydia Nichols; Thomas, born July 29, 1789, married Mary Harry; Levi, born December 3, 1790, married Miss Pearl; Jonathan, born July 25, 1792, married Ann Nichols; Caleb, born November 23, 1793, died young; Joshua, born November 23, 1795, married Sarah Cook; Hayes, born July 25, 1797, married Elizabeth Keepers; Dinah, born March 21, 1799, became the wife of Lewis Baker; Nathaniel, born December 27, 1800; Mary, born November 23, 1802; Sarah, born March 1, 1804; Ruth, born March 5, 1805, became the wife of Dr. Sheldon, and Job H., born February 27, 1810, married Ann Conard.

Obed Jackson, father of Henry H. Jackson, and eldest son of Thomas and Mary Jackson, was born March 26, 1788, obtained his education in the common schools, and subsequently devoted his attention to farming in East Marlborough township, being the owner of an extensive tract of land. He was twice married, his first wife having been Lydia Nichols, to whom were born five children, namely: Daniel, deceased; Dinah, deceased; Mary, deceased; Henry H., and Lydia, born in 1834. Mr. Jackson married for the second wife Sarah Cook, and their children are: Obed G., and George C., who married Lydia Emma Monks, and they are the parents of five children, four of whom are living at the present time (1903): Edgar T., Mary Belle, George W., Anna Lillian and Anna Bertha, deceased.

Henry H. Jackson, second son of Obed and Lydia Jackson, was born on the old homestead in East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, November 11, 1831. His early life was spent in attendance at the district school and assisting his father with the numerous and arduous duties incident to life upon a farm. Upon reaching man's estate he decided to devote his energies to the occupation of farming, and up to the present time he has successfully followed that line of industry. He is one of the progressive and popular business men of the township, and deservedly takes high rank as a public-spirited and useful citizen.

On March 14, 1867, Mr. Jackson married Anna M. Monks, who was born in Newlin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, April 10, 1844, a daughter of Thomas and Mary A. (Donahoo) Monks, and she was reared and educated in the local schools of her native township. One child has been born of this marriage, Florence Lydia, whose birth occurred on August 2, 1884.

GEORGE WILSON, for many years a successful agriculturist of Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he achieved prominence by his own original and independent business methods, is a son of James Wilson, who was born in Ireland in 1823, was a resident of Riverside, Londonderry, Ireland, from whence he came to this country after attaining young manhood. James Wilson was a highly respected citizen of Chester county, and was considered a good adviser on all points in the section where he resided. He owned and resided for many years where Mr. Theodore Rogers now lives, also owned and resided for thirty-five years on a one-hundred-and-ninety-five-acre farm, and was a resident of Easton, Pennsylvania, for a number of years, where he acquired considerable property. In his political affiliations he was a staunch supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and served as justice of the peace of East Fallowfield township for twelve years. He was an active member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Sarah Ann Wilson, and nine children were born to them, three of whom died in infancy—the surviving members of the family were—Robert, Joseph; James, George, Joel and Annie Wilson. At the time of his death his estate was valued at $30,000. He was survived by his widow and three children.

George Wilson, son of James and Sarah Ann Wilson, received a good common school education in Chester county, Pennsylvania, and after completing his studies engaged in farming in his native county. Being a man of thrift and energy, he soon accumulated sufficient capital to enable him to purchase several farms in the adjoining townships, which are now being operated under his personal supervision. For several years past Mr. Wilson has practically lived a retired life, part of the time in Philadelphia and part in Coatesville, enjoying the fruits of his many years of labor. He has always been prompt in the discharge of his duty, and never wearied in his efforts for the good of his fellowmen and the prosperity of his community and township. He is a Democrat in politics, and has served his township in the capacity of tax collector.

Edw. Brinton

Mr. Wilson married Hannah Ann Hutchinson, a native of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, who is now deceased.

BRINTON. William Brinton, of Nether Gournall, in the parish of Sedgley, Staffordshire, England, was among the early colonists in Chester county. He was born about 1630, and when a young man became a convert to the doctrines of the Society of Friends and accomplished his marriage amongst them, in 1659, to Ann Bagley, who was born in 1635. After her death in 1699, he wrote thus: "As to the family she came of, they were not of the meanest rank as to worldly account; her father's name was Edward Bagley; he was accounted a very honest man and loving man; he died about fifty years ago. Her mother became an honest Friend and so continued till the day of her death. She remained a widow all the days of her life after the death of her husband, which was above thirty years. * * * This is the 40th year since we were married," &c.

In the spring of 1684, William Brinton, with his wife and son William, embarked for Pennsylvania, leaving, it is said, three daughters (Ann, Elizabeth and Esther) in England. Upon his arrival in the Delaware he boldly pushed backward from the river into the unbroken forest and erected a temporary shelter in which he passed the succeeding winter, during which they must have suffered greatly for food had not the Indians supplied the family with game. The next year he made a clearing, built a log cabin and planted a pear tree before his door, which survived until 1852. On the 1st day of 1st mo., 1686, he purchased fifty acres of land in Concord township, and on 9 month, 23, 1688, obtained a patent for four hundred and fifty acres in Birmingham, which had been surveyed to him August 5, 1685. On the same date he received another patent for four hundred acres on the Brandywine in Birmingham, which he conveyed to his sons-in-law, John Willis and Hugh Harris, in 1695. He was a member of Concord Monthly Meeting and of the particular meeting then held at private houses in that township. At the Quarterly Meeting, 9 mo., 3, 1690, "Chichester monthly meeting being called, it being moved to this meeting that Concord first-days meeting be every fourth first-day at William Brinton's in Birmingham, beginning the 23d of this month, also the fourth-day following if the said meeting think fitt; this to continue till further order."

William Brinton's will is dated 6 mo., 20, 1699, and proven December 1, 1700, showing that he did not long survive his wife. They had four children:

1. Ann, married 4 mo. (June) 18, 1684, at a meeting at Stourbridge, to John Bennett, son of John Bennett, of Overly, in the county of Worcester. They came to Pennsylvania, perhaps the next year, and settled in Birmingham.

2. Esther, married John Willis, born in London, January 6, 1668, son of Henry and Mary (Peace) Willis, settlers on Long Island. They settled in Thornbury township.

3. Elizabeth, married in 1686, Hugh Harry, and settled in Birmingham.

4. William Brinton was married 10 mo., 9, 1690, at a meeting held in Birmingham, to Jane (or Jean) Thatcher, born 10 mo., 17, 1670, died 12 mo., 17, 1755, daughter of Richard and Jane Thatcher, of Birmingham. He succeeded his father at the homestead and was elected to the Provincial Assembly in 1714 and 1721. He was buried 8 mo., 17, 1751, aged eighty-five years. Children:

5. Joseph, b. 11 mo., 30, 1692; buried 10 mo., 18, 1751; m. Mary Peirce, 10 mo., 6, 1711, and Mary Elgar, 2 mo., 14, 1748.

6. William, b. 6 mo., 25, 1694; buried 3 mo., 1761; m. Hannah Buller, Azuba Townsend and Cecily Chamberlain.

7. Edward, b. 12 mo., 12, 1704; d. 3 mo., 17, 1779. See forward.

8. Mary, b. 2 mo., 1, 1708; d. 12 mo., 13, 1774; m. Daniel Corbit.

9. Ann, b. 2 mo., 19, 1710; m. Samuel Bettle.

10. John, b. 5 mo., 4, 1715; d. 3 mo., 1748; m. Hannah Vernon.

Edward Brinton (7) was married 4 mo., 17, 1724, at Concord Meeting, to Hannah Peirce, born 2 mo., 21, 1696; daughter of George and Ann (Gainer) Peirce, of Thornbury. He received from his father two hundred and twenty-seven acres of the homestead tract, upon which he built a stone house with steep roof, small windows and leaden sashes. He was commissioned a justice of the peace and of the court of common pleas on May 25, 1752, and was appointed an overseer of Birmingham Meeting, 3 mo., 1, 1738, but released 8 mo., 8, 1739. At the time of the battle of Brandywine, September 11, 1777, while the Americans were retreating, a number of British officers stopped at the house of Squire Brinton, set out the dining table and drank ten or a dozen bottles of wine in a very short space of time, after which some of them passed into another part of the house where the old gentleman was sitting. One of these officers said to him, "Well, old gentleman, what do you think of these times?" The Squire replied that he did not approve of all the measures of the Americans, but that he thought the acts of the British government has been cruel and oppressive. To this the officer replied: "Indeed, old gentleman, I think so too, and had it not been for your declaration of independence I never would have drawn my sword in America." Edwards children were these:

11. Isaac, died young or unmarried.
12. Jane, married John Webster, 5 mo., 29, 1755.
13. George, b. about 1730; d. 5 mo., 31, 1792. See forward.

14. Stephen, died young or unmarried.
15. Hannah, m. Thomas Darlington, 4 mo., 25, 1754; d. 10 mo., 12, 1811.
16. Amos, died young or unmarried.

George Brinton (13) was married Nov. 27, 1753, at the old Swedes church, Wilmington, to Esther Matlack, born 6 mo., 23, 1733; died 1 mo., 18, 1809, daughter of Joseph and Rebecca (Haines) Matlack, of Goshen. He and his sons inherited from his father over five hundred acres of land in Birmingham, but the mansion house, near Dilworthtown, passed to the Darlings. George and Esther had seven children:

17. Amos, b. 12 mo., 22, 1754; d. 11 mo., 28, 1823. See forward.
18. William, b. 6 mo., 11, 1756; d. 8 mo., 12, 1832; m. Deborah Darlington.
19. Edward, b. 5 mo., 9, 1758; d. 8 mo., 7, 1807; m. Letitia Dilworth.
20. Hannah, b. 1760, d. 1762.
21. Joseph, b. 7 mo., 1762; d. 7 mo., 24, 1804; m. Lydia Jones.

22. Jane, b. 7 mo., 10, 1764; m. John Thatcher.

23. Hannah, b. 5 mo., 1766; d. 2 mo., 20, 1785, unmarried.

Amos Brinton (17) was married 8 mo., 29, 1778, at Chester, to Sarah Darlington, born 1 mo., 1, 1752; died 6 mo., 16, 1822; daughter of John and Esther (Dicks) Darlington, of East Bradford. He inherited from his grandfather Brinton 20 acres of land on the Brandywine, upon which was a "water corn mill" and a sawmill. This is known as Brinton's Mill, close by "Brinton's Island" and "Brinton's Bridge," in Birmingham. He had six children:

24. Edward, b. 11 mo., 4, 1780; d. 5 mo., 16, 1849. See forward.
25. Hannah, b. 10 mo., 9, 1782; d. 5 mo., 3, 1874, unmarried.

26. John, b. 12 mo., 3, 1784; d. 7 mo., 12, 1839; m. Sarah Matlack.

27. Jesse, b. 8 mo., 23, 1786; d. 1 mo., 19, 1787.

28. Anna, b. 12 mo., 3, 1787; d. 9 mo., 5, 1807; m. George Mercer.

29. Ethan, b. 3 mo., 27, 1790; d. 9 mo., 13, 1854; m. Susan Farra.

Edward Brinton (24) was married 4 mo., 4, 1811, to Susanna Bond, born 6 mo., 29, 1791, died 12 mo., 15, 1826, daughter of John and Sarah (Elliott) Bond, of Hartford county, Maryland. As a young man he went to Maryland and engaged in the milling business at Joppa Mills. After marriage he was for a time at Jerusalem Mills, Hartford county, but upon the death of his mother he returned to Chester county and took the homestead and mills at Brinton's Island, and resided in the stone house built by his father and now connected with the mill property. He subsequently built a better stone dwelling further from the bridge. Issue:

30. Emeline, b. 10 mo., 9, 1812; d. 4 mo., 1, 1865; m. Abram Huey.

31. John Bond, b. 12 mo., 2, 1814; d. 9 mo., 5, 1853; m. Susan D. Speakman.

32. Sarah Anna, b. 5 mo., 12, 1817; d. 8 mo., 26, 1887; m. Job Darlington.

33. Jesse Kersey, b. 10 mo., 11, 1819; d. 2 mo., 10, 1864, unmarried.

34. Thomas Ellwood, b. 4 mo., 9, 1822; d. 10 mo., 8, 1823.

35. Emmor, b. 12 mo., 15, 1825; d. 3 mo., 19, 1865.

Emmor Brinton, last named, was born in Birmingham, Chester county; married 6 mo., 8, 1853, at Birmingham Meeting, to Deborah Garrett, born in Willistown, 1 mo., 10, 1832, died in West Chester, 1 mo., 16, 1903, daughter of David and Anna (Taylor) Garrett, of Birmingham. In the division of his father's property he took the farm and continued thereon till his death. His widow and children removed to West Chester in 1877. Issue:

36. Howard, born 5 mo., 17, 1854; died in West Chester, 4 mo., 14, 1888, unmarried. He learned the trade of a machinist and worked at Roach's Ship Yard, in Chester, Pennsylvania, afterward making several voyages across the Atlantic on the steamship "Indiana."

37. Edward, born in Birmingham, Chester county, 9 mo., 12, 1855; married in Philadelphia, 10 mo., 24, 1882, Ruthanna H. Brown, born in Goshen, Lancaster county, 8 mo., 22, 1859; daughter of Jeremiah and Margaretta (Haines) Brown, of that place. Edward remained on the old homestead in Birmingham until 1877, when he removed to East Bradford and engaged in the manufacture of butter in East Bradford, and in 1882 erected a creamery in West Chester, which he operated successfully until 1885, when he disposed of this and engaged in the sale of agricultural machinery, etc.; and later formed the partnership of Brinton & Worth, carrying a large stock of farmers' supplies and having a branch in Downingtown. He was for some time a member of the borough council. Issue: Howard Haines, born in West Chester, 7 mo., 24, 1884; now a student at Haverford College; George Johnson, born 11 mo., 27, 1886; Edward Garrett, born 6 mo., 26, 1889; Marguerite, born 7 mo., 7, 1896.

38. Anna G., born 10 mo., 30, 1857; died in West Chester, 11 mo., 21, 1881, unmarried.

39. Walter, born 7 mo., 10, 1859; married at Frankford Meeting, Philadelphia, 4 mo., 16, 1891, Elizabeth W. Smedley, born 12 mo., 15, 1856, daughter of William W. and Mary Ann (Webster) Smedley, of that place. He was graduated from Haverford College in 1881, and engaged in the business of surveying at Frankford the same year; went to California in 1887 and returned in 1888; was appointed a member of the Board of Surveyors of Philadelphia, 3 mo., 29, 1892, and surveyor and regulator for the Fifth Survey District, which position he still holds. Issue: Walter Carroll, born 1 mo., 2, 1894; Mary Smedley, born 4 mo., 4, 1896; Elizabeth, born 6 mo., 20, 1900.

40. Ralph Lee, born 8 mo., 30, 1862; died in West Chester, 6 mo., 3, 1890, married 1 mo., 20, 1887, at West Chester Meeting, Caroline B. Hoopes, born 7 mo., 11, 1864; daughter of E. Malin and Phebe (Davis) Hoopes, of West Chester. He learned the trade of a machinist at the Sellers Works in Philadelphia, and was afterward engaged with the Otis Elevator Company of that city. For about two years he was superintendent of the electric light plant in the borough of West Chester, where his widow resides. Issue: Anna Hoopes, born 1 mo., 22, 1888.

William Brinton (18) married Deborah Darlington, born 5 mo., 1, 1761, died 11 mo., 22, 1840, daughter of John and Esther (Dicks) Darlington, of East Bradford. They were disowned by Concord Monthly Meeting, 10 mo., 4, 1780, having accomplished their marriage by a priest (or minister), but she was reinstated 6 mo., 6, 1798. By the will of his grandfather, Edward Brinton, he inherited one hundred and seventy-five acres of land in Birmingham, next south of that devised to his brother Amos, and also adjoining the Abraham Darlington tract. At a public sale, 11 mo., 1, 1799, he purchased the Darlington homestead of two hundred acres, at £15 per acre. He had nine children:

41. Jane, b. 10 mo., 20, 1780; m. 5 mo., 28, 1801, to Benjamin Hoopes.

42. Esther, b. 9 mo., 21, 1782; m. 10 mo., 11, 1802, to Isaac Peirce.

43. Rebecca, b. 8 mo., 12, 1784; d. 11 mo., 9, 1836; m. William Levis.

44. Joseph, b. 7 mo., 22, 1786; d. 9 mo., 30, 1865. See forward.

45. William, b. 11 mo., 11, 1788; d. unmarried, 1857.

46. Elizabeth, b. 5 mo., 11, 1791; d. 5 mo., 31, 1846; m. Alban Harvey.

47. George, b. 10 mo., 7, 1793; died unmarried.

48. Sarah, b. 3 mo., 4, 1796; d. 8 mo., 21, 1874; m. John S. Jefferis.

49. Deborah, b. 11 mo., 13, 1798; d. 6 mo., 1, 1876; m. William Burnett.

Joseph Brinton (44), was married 12 mo., 3, 1812, to Jane Crosley, daughter of Robert and Ann (Harvey) Crosley, of Christiana hundred, Delaware. Second wife, Susan Hackett, born 3 mo., 17, 1797, died 12 mo., 19, 1881, daughter of Andrew and Mary Ann (Brady) Hackett, of Birmingham. During the life of his first wife he resided on the Darlington homestead in Birmingham, but he and his last wife died at Dilworthtown and were buried at Birmingham Meeting. By both wives he had sixteen children:

50. Lavina, b. 1813, m. John Cobourn.

51. Charlotte, b. 9 mo., 22, 1815, m. Abraham Darlington.

52. Melinda, b. 1 mo., 25, 1818; m. Isaac Peirce.

53. Edmund, m. Sarah Yearsley.

54. Franklin, m. 1848, Rebecca J. Larkin.

55. Debbie Ann, died unmarried.

(By second wife):

56. Emmor, b. 5 mo., 8, 1831; m. 5 mo., 23, 1871, Mary Beirne.

57. T. Ellwood, b. 8 mo., 11, 1832; d. 7 mo., 29, 1883; m. Rachel Williams.

58. William S., m. Elizabeth Jane Spalding, Res. St. Louis.

59. Henry L., b. 8 mo., 5, 1836. See forward.

60. Alfred, b. 9 mo., 30, 1837; m. 1875, Attilia Oehmsted, and lives at Jerseyville, Illinois.

61. David R. Porter, b. 1 mo., 16, 1839; d. 2 mo., 26, 1885; m. Mary Kirk.

62. Anna Mary, b. 7 mo., 16, 1840; d. 8 mo., 17, 1851.

64. Elizabeth J., b. 2 mo., 29, 1843; m. 4 mo., 28, 1886, Charles C. Cox, and they live at San Diego, Cal.

65. Joseph, b. 6 mo., 12, 1846; d. 3 mo., 14, 1847.

Henry L. Brinton (59), born in Birmingham, was married first to Sarah F. Fisher, born in Uwehlan township, 3 mo., 17, 1836; died at Oxford, 8 mo., 6, 1890; second marriage at Philadelphia, to Elizabeth Haines Lincoln, born at Oak Hill, Lancaster county, 6 mo., 10, 1840, widow of Abel T. Lincoln and daughter of Nathan and Lydia (Peirce) Haines. He learned the printing business and removed from West Chester to Oxford in 1861; established the Oxford Press in 1866, and admitted his two sons into partnership therein in 1892. He served in the Civil war in 1863, was a school director eighteen years, and is a member of the Presbyterian church. His children, all by his first wife, are Douglas Emerson, married to Hettie Hickman; William Gunkle, married to Mary Elder, and Anna, wife of Thomas Finley Grier; all living in Oxford.

WILLIAM P. THATCHER. The Thatcher family of East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, of which William P. Thatcher is a representative member, claims for their ancestors some of the earliest settlers of Chester county.

The progenitor of the American branch of the family was Richard Thatcher, and his son, Jonathan Thatcher, was next in line. Among his children was a son, Richard Thatcher, who subsequently married and reared a family, among whom was a son named William Thatcher, who took up his residence in either North or South Carolina, in consequence of the report that quantities of gold were being discovered in that section of the United States. While a resident of that state his son, William Thatcher, was born in 1770, and he subsequently married Betsey Garrett, and the following named children were born to them: 1. Charity, born June 18, 1801, became the wife of John Sharpless, and four children were born to them: Hannah, who married Isaac Woodward; Sarah, who married Thomas Bailey; Elizabeth, who married Chessie B. Worth, and William Penn, who died in childhood; the mother of these children died March 7, 1831. 2. Sarah, born October 2, 1803, died April 10, 1866, was the wife of Smith Sharpless, and mother of the following named children: William, who married first Alice Shimer, second Sarah Shimer, and for his third wife chose Emma Dix; Elma, wife of Samuel Trimble, and Joseph, who married Mary Stevens. 3. Garrett, born July 24, 1811, died June 9, 1894; he married Hannah Pyle, and their children are: Emma, wife of George Painter, and Howard, who married Lily Brown. 4. Betsy, born June 27, 1814, died in May, 1875; she was the wife of James Painter and mother of William T., who married Hannah Hayes; Hannah, wife of Ephraim Ridgway; Mary, wife of William Jones; Mitchel, who married Louisa Painter, and Anna Painter. 5. William, born September 14, 1817, went to Decatur, Illinois, in the early 'sixties, bought lands and died there on May 24, 1867; he was united in marriage to Sarah Matson, and their children are: Charles P. and Mary, wife of Dr. Randal. 6. Richard, born September 19, 1819, died February 13, 1892; he married Rebecca Casson, and five children were born to them, two of whom died in infancy and the names of the others are: Edward, now deceased; Albert G., an extensive cotton manufacturer at Piedmont, Alabama, who married Mary Hibbard; and Richard Henry, who married Florence Morse. 7. Benjamin, mentioned at length in the following paragraph.

Benjamin Thatcher, father of William P. Thatcher, was born April 5, 1823, and was actively connected with the industrial, political and social interests of Concord township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. He married Adriana Hoopes, and the following named children were born to them: Sarah H., born February 13, 1850, now the wife of Nathan H. Pierce, and mother of one child, Edith Pierce; William P., born May 18, 1852; Anna, born March 30, 1854; Hilburn, born December 7, 1858, and Mary W. Thatcher, born October 7, 1861. The father of these children died February 17, 1895, after having spent a long, useful and honorable life.

William P. Thatcher, eldest son of Benjamin and Adriana Thatcher, was born in Delaware county, Pennsylvania, May 18, 1852, acquired his preliminary education at the local schools and this was supplemented by a thorough course of study at the Unionville Academy. Being inured to the duties that are inseparably connected with farm life, he chose to make that occupation his life work upon attaining young manhood, and up to the present time (1903) has met with gratifying success in this particular line of industry. He has always manifested a keen interest in all that conserves the progress and prosperity of the community, and his record is well worthy of emulation.

HILBORN D. THATCHER, a leading farmer of East Marlborough township, belongs to one of the oldest families now represented in Chester county. He is descended from Richard Thatcher (1), from Jonathan Thatcher (2), who was the father of Richard (3), and the grandfather of William (4), who went to either North or South Carolina, in consequence of a rumor that gold had been discovered in that region. He married Sarah Dickinson.

William Thatcher (5), son of William (4) and Sarah Dickinson, married Betsey Garrett, and was the father of the following children: 1. Charity, who was born June 18, 1801, married John Sharpless, and had four children: Hannah, who married Isaac Woodward; Sarah, who became the wife of Thomas Bailey; Elizabeth, who married Chessie B. Worth; and William Penn, who died young. Mrs. Sharpless died March 7, 1831. 2. Sarah, who was born February 10, 1803, married Smith Sharpless, and was the mother of the following children: William, who married, first, Alice Shimer, second, Sarah Shimer, third Emma Dix and is now deceased; Elma, who married Samuel Trimble; and Joseph, who married Mary Stevens. The death of Mrs. Sharpless took place April 10, 1866. 3. Garrett, who was born July 24, 1811, married Hannah Pyle, and had a daughter and a son. Emma, who became the wife of George Painter; and Howard, who married Lily Brown. Mr. Thatcher died June 9, 1894. 4. Betsey, who was born June 27, 1814, married James Painter, and was the mother of the following children: William T., who married Hannah Hayes; Hannah, who married Ephraim Ridgway; Mary, who was the wife of William Jones; Mitchel, who married Louisa H. Painter and Anna. The death of Mrs. Painter occurred in May, 1875. 5. William, who was born September 14, 1817, married Sarah Matson, and had two children: Charles P.; and Mary, who married Dr. Randal. Mr. Thatcher's death took place May 24, 1867. 6. Richard, who was born September 19, 1819, married Rebecca Casson, and was the father of five children: Edward, who is now deceased; Albert G., who married Mary Hibbard; Richard Henry, who married Florence Morse; and two who died in infancy. Mr. Thatcher passed away February 13, 1892. 7. Benjamin, mentioned at length hereinafter.

Benjamin Thatcher (5), youngest child of William (4) and Betsey (Garrett) Thatcher, was born April 5, 1823, married Adriana Hoopes, and was the father of the following children: Sarah H., who was born February 13, 1850, married Nathan Pierce, and has one child, Edith; William P., born April 18, 1852; Anna, born March 30, 1854; Hilborn D., mentioned at length hereinafter; and Mary W., born October 7, 1861. Mr. Thatcher, the father of this family, died February 11, 1895.

Hilborn D. Thatcher (6), son of Benjamin (5) and Adriana (Hoopes) Thatcher, was born December 7, 1858, in Concord township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. His boyhood and youth were passed in East Marlborough township, Chester county, where he received his education in the local schools and at Unionville Academy. He has devoted himself, with gratifying results, to agricultural pursuits, and in religious matters follows the tradition of his family, being a regular attendant at Friends' Meeting.

Mr. Thatcher married Anna Pritchett, and, after her death, Emma P. Trimble. By his second marriage he is the father of one child; B. Russell, born December 22, 1890.

JACOB WAY HARVEY, known as one of the leading educators of Chester county, is descended from an old Pennsylvania family. William Harvey, born 2 mo., 9, 1717, married Ann Evitt and their children were: Judith, who married Francis Lamborn; William, born 6 mo., 3, 1744, married Susanna Pusey, and after her death, Mary Chandler; Amos, mentioned hereinafter; Peter, born 10 mo., 20, 1750, married Jane Waller, and died 9 mo., 13, 1824; and Caleb, born 1746, died young.

Amos Harvey, son of William and Ann (Evitt) Harvey, was born 4 mo., 7, 1749, and married Hannah Pusey. They were the parents of the following children: Joshua, mentioned hereinafter; Ellis, born 7 mo., 1, 1771, died 1772; Eli, born 12 mo., 29, 1772, married Mary Painter, and after her death, Rachel Hollingsworth, and died 1 mo., 10, 1846; William, born 1 mo., 2, 1775, married Sarah Marshall, and died 8 mo., 26, 1850; Mary, born 12 mo., 9, 1779, married Stephen Webb, and died 4 mo., 17, 1839; Ann, born 3 mo., 31, 1783, married Jesse Sharpless; Phoebe, born 6 mo., 17, 1787, married Evan Philips; Lydia, born 11 mo., 19, 1793, married Joel Jones; and Hannah, born 11 mo., 29, married John Phillips. Amos Harvey, the father of this family, died 4 mo., 15, 1825.

Joshua Harvey, son of Amos and Hannah (Pusey) Harvey, was born 11 mo., 26, 1769, and married Susanna House. The following children were born to them: 1. Pusey, mentioned hereinafter. 2. Ellis, who married Abigail Phipps, and had two children: Elijah, who died young; and Elisha. 3. Sarah T., married George Pearson. 4. Townsend, married and had one child, Annie T., and is now deceased. 5. Joshua, married Lavinia Smith, and is the father of three children: Henry Clay, Eugene and Charles.

Pusey Harvey, son of Joshua and Susanna (House) Harvey, was born near Hamorton, Chester county, and married Phoebe Way, who was born in 1796. The following are their children: 1. John, born 1819, died 1823. 2. Hannah, born 1821, married Jesse Sharpless, and had two sons; Harvey, and Townsend. 3. Amos, born 1822, married Sarah Williamson, and was the father of one child. 4. Lea P., born 1823, married Hannah Sharpless, and had one child, Edwin H. 5. Jacob, mentioned at length hereinafter. 6. Susanna, born 1829, married William Week. 7. Mary, born 1831, died 1865. 8. Sarah, born 1833, married Stephen Lamborn, and was the mother of three children.

Jacob Way Harvey, son of Pusey and Phoebe (Way) Harvey, was born 10 mo., 1, 1826, on the old homestead, in Pennsbury township, near Fairville, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and began his business life as a bricklayer. This trade he followed for several summers, and having received a good elementary education, taught school during the winters. His spare moments were given to study, and in these brief intervals, he applied himself to philosophy, history, botany, and astronomy. As a result of his manner of disposing of the little time at his command, as well as of his persistent industry, he was able at the age of nineteen to enter Unionville Academy, then presided over by Jonathan Gause, the preceptor to whose valued instructions so many of his pupils have acknowledged their indebtedness. In 1851 Mr. Harvey engaged in the building business in Philadelphia, and in four years erected over one hundred houses. In 1855 he accepted the principalship of the Kennett Square High School, and in 1857 became principal of Fairville Institute. After filling this position with marked success for ten years, he purchased the Unionville Academy, which he has since presided over in a manner which fully demonstrates his ability in his chosen profession.

Mr. Harvey married Margaret J., born 8 mo., 26, 1826, daughter of John and Ann (Williamson) Nields, and they have two children: Pusey, born 10 mo., 1, 1851; and Harry, born 5 mo., 22, 1855, married, 2 mo., 28, 1884, Harriet Gregg, born 1860. The following children have been born to them: Laura B., born 12 mo., 30, 1885; Margaret, born 5 mo., 11, 1889; Lewis, born 4 mo., 10, 1891; and Lydia, born 11 mo., 30, 1897. Mr. Jacob Way Harvey is regarded by all who know him with the respect due to a veteran educator of distinguished ability, and a citizen of unimpeachable integrity.

NATHAN H. PEIRCE, a prosperous agriculturist of East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a representative of a family, some branches of which spell the name Pierce, and others Peirce, which is thought to be the orthography of the early generations succeeding the immigrant ancestor, who was George Peirce, or Pearce, as the name appears to have been written by him, who was a native of the parish of Winscom, in the county of Somerset, England, where on the 1st day of the 12th month, commonly called February, 1679, he married Ann Gainer, a native of Thornbury, in the county of Gloucester, England. George Peirce, accompanied by his wife and three small children, arrived at the city of Philadelphia prior to September 4, 1684, and later in the same year became the owner of a tract of four hundred and ninety acres of land in what is now Thornbury township. He was one of a company of men who erected the first mill in the neighborhood, known as "The Concord Mill;" he represented Chester county in the Provincial Assembly in 1706, and his death occurred in East Marlborough, whither he had removed two years previously, about the year 1734.

George Peirce, grandfather of Nathan H. Peirce, and a descendant of the above mentioned George and Ann Peirce, married Jane Young, and to them were born the following named children: Lydia, who was the wife of Samuel Wickersham; Rebecca, who was united in marriage to Job Hayes; Rachel; Jane, who became the wife of Jonathan Marshall; Isaac, who married Sarah Dowdall; George, who married Mary Marshall; John, died in early life; Joshua, father of Nathan H. Peirce, and David, who died in childhood.

Joshua Peirce, father of Nathan H. Peirce, was born January 12, 1812, and received a good education in the common schools of Chester county, Pennsylvania. He was prominently identified with the various interests of his native township, and as a man and a citizen was highly regarded by all who had the honor of his acquaintance. On October 10, 1839, he married Elizabeth Wickersham, who was born December 7, 1819. Their children were: 1. Rebecca Jane, born July 11, 1840, wife of John M. Windle, and mother of five children, namely: Ella, born October 14, 1871; Mary, born July 21, 1873; Roland, born August 2, 1875, married Anna Thompson; Peirce, born January 1, 1878, and Norman Windle, born September 22, 1880. 2. Thomas W., born July 22, 1841, married December 25, 1871, Sarah D. Allen, and their children were: Bertha May, born in May, 1873, died in the fall of 1877; Allen Joshua, born May 30, 1876; Viola, born December 8, 1878, and Elizabeth Peirce, born December 30, 1883. 3. John Milton, born April 14, 1845, and died October 14, 1891; he was united in marriage to Helen M. Trimble, and their children were: Howard, Clarence and Edward, all of whom died in childhood. 4. Nathan H., born August 31, 1847. 5. Laura G., born October 10, 1850, became the wife of Joseph G. D. Baldwin, and their children are: Morris N., born January 27, 1883, and Phoebe Baldwin, born July 29, 1886. Joshua Peirce, father of these children, died January 5, 1883, aged seventy-one years.

Nathan H. Peirce, youngest son of Joshua and Elizabeth Peirce, was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, August 31, 1847, acquired a good common school education, and upon the completion of his studies devoted his time and attention to the occupation of farming. He has continued at this pursuit up to the present time (1903), making a specialty of dairy farming, and his operations being conducted on an extensive scale, he derives a goodly income from his broad and well cultivated acres.

On February 12, 1891, was solemnized the marriage of Nathan H. Peirce and Sarah H. Thatcher, who was born in Concord township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, January 13, 1850, educated at Unionville Academy and at West Chester, a daughter of Benjamin and Adriana (Hoopes) Thatcher. They have one daughter, Edith Peirce, born June 27, 1894. The family ranks among the best in Chester county, where they are widely and favorably known, Mr. Peirce being ever anxious to advance the general welfare of his town and county.

MORDECAI THOMAS. The family of which Mordecai Thomas, now deceased, was a member is of Welsh origin, and ranks among the oldest and best known in the commonwealth. His paternal great-grandfather, Jacob Thomas, was born in Wales in 1712, followed the occupation of farmer, married and reared a family, among whom was Mordecai Thomas, grandfather of Mordecai Thomas, born July 21, 1767. In early life he learned the trade of cabinet maker, and combined that occupation with farming in Willistown township, Chester county, where he resided the greater part of his life. By his industrious and persevering habits he was able to accumulate a large amount of property, and was considered one of the influential and prominent citizens of the community. He was a strict member of the Society of Friends, to the support of which organization he contributed liberally. He was united in marriage to Lydia Hoopes, and the following named children were born to them: Isaac, Ezra, Emmor, George, Jesse, Hoopes, Mary A., Eliza, and Mordecai—all of whom are now deceased. The father of these children died in Willistown township, May 7, 1837.

Ezra Thomas, father of Mordecai Thomas, was born in Willistown township, May 17, 1799. He obtained his education in the common schools and later he adopted agriculture as his life vocation, being continuously engaged in the cultivation of the soil up to the time of his death. He owned and operated two extensive farms and was looked upon as one of the leading and progressive farmers of his day. In his political affiliations, he was first a Whig and later a Republican, and served his township in the capacity of school director for a period of six years. He was reared in the Quaker faith and adhered to that religion all his life. On May 12, 1831, Mr. Thomas married Susan Massey, daughter of James Massey, who was born in England, but came to the United States when he had attained young manhood. Mr. Massey settled in Chester county, Pennsylvania, and resided most of his life near White Horse, where he was engaged in farming interests. He was the father of four children: James, William, Susan and a child who died in infancy. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, namely: Mordecai; Anna Mary, now deceased, was the wife of Franklin Leonard, who resided near White Horse; Lydia, deceased. Mr. Thomas died October 18, 1871, aged seventy-two years. His wife died February 23, 1849, in the forty-eighth year of her age.

Mordecai Thomas was born May 15, 1832, in Willistown township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. His education was acquired in a school at West Chester conducted by Joshua Hoopes, and later he was a pupil under the preceptorship of Daniel Foulke, at Gwynedd. He subsequently adopted the calling which his ancestors had followed for several generations before him, that of farming, and was the owner of a well cultivated and productive farm of one hundred and nine acres. He possessed the attributes of character that lead to success—energy, perseverance and good business judgment, and for a number of years he enjoyed the fruits of his many years of toil, leading a quiet and retired life with his family at their comfortable home near White Horse, Chester county. He took an active, intelligent and commendable interest in all the enterprises calculated to promote the general welfare of the community, was a staunch Republican in his politics and filled the office of school director for two terms.

On November 7, 1871, Mordecai Thomas was united in marriage to Ida Garrett, daughter of Davis and Elizabeth (Wilson) Garrett, of Willistown. Their children are: Lizzie W., Ezra and Harvey M. Mr. Thomas died July 29, 1900, aged sixty-nine years. Davis Garrett, the father of Ida (Garrett) Thomas, was the son of Davis and Phebe (Thatcher) Garrett, members of the Society of Friends. His paternal grandfather, Davis Garrett, was a son of Amos and Rachel (Davis) Garrett, Amos being the son of Isaac and Elizabeth (Thatcher) Garrett, of English origin. Davis Garrett was born in Willistown, November 14, 1810. He taught school in his younger days and after his father's death took the home place, following farming. In politics a Republican, was well read, a good botanist and was interested in the Delaware County Institute of Science, his wife being awarded at their fourth annual exhibition in 1849, a handsome book for a beautiful display of flowers. Both of them were fond of nature study and took a great interest in the current events of the times. After his wife's death, which occurred on January 12, 1877, aged sixty-three years, he spent a number of winters in Florida on the gulf coast, the mild climate there being a great benefit to him. He was united in marriage to Elizabeth Wilson, December 21, 1837, to whom were born four children: Henry, Francis, deceased, Ida and Linda, deceased. Elizabeth (Wilson) Garrett was a daughter of Samuel and Beulah (Thatcher) Wilson, members of the Society of Friends. Beulah was a daughter of Joseph and Abigail Thatcher, Joseph being the son of William and Sarah Thatcher, and their son, Richard Thatcher 2d, was the son of Richard Thatcher, 1st, who with his wife and children came from England soon after the visit of William Penn, having left his home in Buffington, Berkshire county, England, on account of religious persecution. Davis Garrett died February 4, 1902, aged ninety-two years.

LEVI LEWIS. The Lewis family of Radnor township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, have for several generations been extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits, and are well and favorably known for their industry, probity and high respectability. The earliest ancestor of whom there is any authentic information was William Lewis, a native of Glenmorganshire, Wales, who settled in what is now known as Haverford township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, prior to 1700. He married and among the children born to him was a son, Nathan Lewis, whose son Levi Lewis (1st) had one son, Jesse Lewis. Jesse Lewis married Hannah Davis, a daughter of Dr. John Davis, of Chester county, Pennsylvania, and there was born of this union a son, Levi Lewis.

Levi Lewis (2d), (grandfather) acquired a large tract of land in Radnor township and here he spent his active years cultivating an excellent and productive farm. He was united in marriage to Lydia T. Evans, a daughter of William and Ann (Hibberd) Evans, of Chester county, Pennsylvania, and their son, Tryon Lewis, (father) was born on the Lewis homestead in Radnor township, the fourth generation of only sons, April 6, 1839, and was there reared and educated. He followed in the footsteps of his father, took up farming for his life work, was more than ordinarily successful in this undertaking and was regarded among his neighbors as a worthy and estimable citizen. He married Margaretta V. Smith, who was born April 14, 1843, a daughter of Dr. Alfred and Mary (Van Horn) Smith, of Yardley, Bucks county, Pennsylvania. Their children were: 1. Levi, whose name introduces this review; 2. Alfred S., who is engaged in the clothing business in Philadelphia, and is a member of the firm of the National Clothing Company; 3. Lydia T., the only daughter for five generations. The mother, Margaretta (Smith) Lewis, died October 7, 1902. She was a most estimable lady whose life displayed the old-time virtues, and who was beloved and esteemed by all who knew her.

Levi Lewis (3d), eldest son of Tryon and Margaretta (Smith) Lewis, was born at the parental homestead on August 9, 1870. He acquired his preliminary educational training in the public schools of Radnor township and finished his education in the Friends' School at Newtown, Delaware county. Having learned the routine of farming during his early manhood, he has continued in the same occupation to the present time, conducting his operations on a large farm adjoining the parental homestead. He is justly regarded as an enterprising young man by those who know him best. Socially and in civil affairs he has always taken an active part in such enterprises as had for their object the welfare of his neighborhood. He is a member of Wayne Lodge, No. 581, Free and Accepted Masons; of Montgomery Chapter, No. 262, Royal Arch Masons; of St. Alban's Commandery, Knights Templar, and the Ancient Arabic Order of the Mystic Shrine. Politically Mr. Lewis is an advocate of the principles of Democracy.

On February 27, 1901, Mr. Lewis married Miss Henrietta Beistle, a daughter of David and Mary E. (Reddig) Beistle, the former named being a son of De Walt Beistle, who was a successful farmer of Cumberland county, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Lewis is a graduate of the George School of Bucks county, Pennsylvania, and for some years was engaged in teaching.

ISAAC B. WORTH, a highly respected and progressive citizen of East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he is engaged in agricultural pursuits, making a specialty of the feeding of cattle, was born on the old homestead in that township, March 16, 1828.

John Worth, grandfather of Isaac B. Worth, was actively associated with the farming interests of Chester county, Pennsylvania, in which locality his ancestors resided for many years. He was united in marriage to Elizabeth Travillia, and the following named children were born to them: Thomas, Ebenezer, John, George, Emnor, Elizabeth, and Benjamin Worth, who married Miss Taylor.

Emnor Worth, father of Isaac B. Worth, was born about the year 1798, in Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he was recognized as one of the enterprising and prosperous farmers of the community. He married Rebecca Trivalla, and twelve children were born to them, namely: Mary Ann; Jonathan, who married Louisa Walton, and their children are: Howard, John, Wilmer and Francis Worth; Jacob, who married Sarah Jane Moore, and they are the parents of Henry, Franklin, who married Miss Werntz, and Anna, wife of Milton J. Hiddleston; Hannah; Sarah; Emnor; Isaac, subject of this sketch; Elizabeth; Paschall; Thomas; Charles and Rebecca Worth.

Isaac B. Worth, fourth son of Emnor and Rebecca Worth, attended the common schools of

Isaac B. Worth

East Marlborough township, and his leisure time was devoted to the acquirement of a thorough knowledge of farm life. This he put to a practical test, in 1850, when he purchased his father's farm, a portion of which he has cultivated to a high state of perfection through the use of the most modern machinery, and the remainder is devoted to the feeding of cattle, which he makes a specialty of, and from which source he derives a goodly income. Mr. Worth has always taken an active interest in all that pertains to the welfare of the township, as a citizen he has been public-spirited and useful, and commands the esteem and confidence of all who have the honor of his acquaintance.

Mr. Worth was united in marriage January 27, 1859, to Anna Pennypacker, who was born June 12, 1836, a daughter of Mathias and Mary Pennypacker. Their children are: 1. Mary P., born October 11, 1863, now the wife of Edward R. Chambers, and mother of the following named children: Frederick H., born March 19, 1886; Isaac W., born April 19, 1891, and Helen L., born December 27, 1894. 2. Thomas P., born November 6, 1867, married Ella R. Worrall, February 20, 1889. Mr. Worth and his wife are earnest and loyal members of the Presbyterian church of East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

ROBERT B. DANIELS, a leading and public-spirited citizen of Modena, Chester county, traces his descent from Archibald McDaniels, who was a native of the north of Ireland, and of Scotch-Irish extraction. He emigrated to the United States and settled in Pennsylvania, making his home in Chester county. He purchased in East Fallowfield township forty acres of land which he developed into a farm, now in the possession of Mr. Frank Rubicon. On this farm Mr. McDaniels spent the remainder of his life. He married Ann Anderson, and their children were: Joseph, who married, first, Fannie Albright and second, Margaret Bailey; Robert, mentioned at length hereinafter; James, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Samuel, who married and died in West Chester; John, who married Jane Lilley, was the father of four children, and died in Perry county; Mary J., who died unmarried.

Robert McDaniels, father of Robert B. Daniels, second child and second son of Archibald and Ann (Anderson) McDaniels, was born on the homestead, and trained in his youth to the labors of the farm. On reaching manhood he settled in East Fallowfield township, where he devoted himself to agricultural pursuits. He married Catherine, daughter of Samuel Lilley, and widow of Daniel Elliott. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McDaniels: John, who died at twelve years of age; Robert B., mentioned at length hereinafter; Cynthia, who became the wife of James Kerns, whose children are: Annie C., Mary B., Nettie, and Martha. Robert McDaniels, Sr., a man respected and esteemed by all who knew him, died in 1842.

Robert B. Daniels, second child and second son of Robert and Catherine Lilley (Elliott) McDaniels, was born October 20, 1840, in East Fallowfield township, and was reared upon the home farm. His early education was obtained in the public schools, and was supplemented by attendance at the State Normal School at Millersville. At the age of nineteen he became a teacher, and passed some time as preceptor in several of the district schools in different townships of Chester county. He also taught for three years in the public schools of Coatesville. In 1869-70 he settled at Modena, where he engaged in mercantile business, being for nearly thirty years the proprietor of an extensive general store. His success was such that, in 1898, he found himself in circumstances which justified him in retiring from active business life.

In the sphere of public affairs Mr. Daniels' career has been active and honorable. March 24, 1873, he was appointed postmaster at Modena, which office he held for a period of twenty-four years. The townsmen have shown their appreciation of his character and abilities by electing him to the offices of school board treasurer and auditor. Politically he is a Republican, and is recognized throughout the county as the leading spirit of the Independent wing of the party. In 1899 he was nominated on the Independent and Fusion tickets for the office of prothonotary for Chester county. Mr. Daniels, since 1868, has been prominently identified with the I. O. O. F. He is an active and consistent member of the Coatesville Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Daniels married, in 1868, Martha J., daughter of Martin C. Walker, of East Fallowfield township. Mr. and Mrs. Daniels are the parents of one daughter: Mary E., who is the wife of John A. Scott, of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania.

THEODORE F. ROGERS, since 1899 successfully engaged in farming and dairying on a one hundred and eighty-five acre farm in East Fallowfield township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a son of Albert Rogers, and his birth occurred at Goshenville, Chester county.

During his early childhood his parents removed to East Fallowfield township, and in this neighborhood he was reared and acquired a practical education in its common schools. He assisted his father with the labor on the old homestead until he attained the age of eighteen years, and the following eight years of his career were spent in the employ of the Laurel Iron Works. He then became an employe of the Chester Rolling Mill, in which capacity he served faithfully and efficiently for three years, and at the expiration of this period of time he entered the employ of the Baltimore Central Railroad and served as brakeman and conductor for three years. He then changed his place of residence to Berks county, and his first employment in that section of the state was in the Rolling Mill, where he remained for three years, after which he returned to Chester county and located at Mortonville. He at once engaged in mercantile pursuits, being the owner of the store property and the adjoining double storehouse; this occupation he followed for a number of years and the financial success which crowned his efforts was due to his indomitable energy, shrewd common sense and executive ability. In due course of time he became one of the prominent business men of the town, took an active interest in township affairs, was appointed its first postmaster and served in this position for fourteen consecutive years. In 1883, while a resident of the town of Mortonville, he purchased a farm consisting of one hundred and eighty-five acres of productive land in East Fallowfield township, located upon it in the year 1899, and since that date has conducted extensive farming and dairying operations which have proved exceedingly remunerative. He operates a dairy of about thirty head of cattle, always making a point of having young stock. Mr. Rogers is an Independent in politics, casting his vote for the candidates who in his opinion is best qualified for the office. He is a member of Downingtown Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons; Mortonville Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. He carries the respect of the community in which he resides.

On November 17, 1879, Mr. Rogers married Mary E. Rowe, a daughter of William Rowe, a resident of East Fallowfield township, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

CHARLES TORRICELLAS, who was a manufacturer for some time in Philadelphia and at Secane, Delaware county, was born about 1837, on board a vessel which was cruising in Italian waters, and may thus claim to be a citizen of two countries. His father, Guy Torricellas, was a nobleman, and a general in the Spanish army. He was killed in battle. Charles Torricellas was taken by his uncle Anhel to Cuba, where he received his education, and at the age of eighteen inherited a large sum of money. The first use which he made of his fortune was to open a tobacco warehouse, but after some time he was advised by the captain of a boat to invest his money in the slave trade, which was then regarded as an honorable occupation.

The effect of this counsel was to divert the current of his life into a new channel, and after abandoning the tobacco business, in company with the captain who was his advisor, he set sail for Africa in quest of a cargo of slaves for transportation to China. In this enterprise they were successful, and on the return voyage had reached the point of San Domingo, when they were attacked by the English, who captured the vessel, took possession of the slaves, and placed the crew in the stocks, among them young Torricellas. Meantime the captain of the slave ship, who was known as a treacherous man of the vilest character, in the course of conversation with the English captain, offered the latter a cigar containing a narcotic. This gift the English captain accepted, and inhaling its fumes passed into dreamland. The captain then took the keys from the pockets of the English officer, and unlocked the stocks in which their feet were encased. Little time was lost by the men in plunging overboard to swim to a neighboring island, distant about three miles. In this attempt, the greater part of the crew perished, and only four reached the land, and among them young Torricellas. After remaining there several weeks, they boarded a vessel laden with fruit, and were landed in Philadelphia.

Mr. Torricellas, upon his arrival in Philadelphia, being unacquainted with the English language and without friends or ready money, made the acquaintance of an Italian fruit dealer who provided him with temporary shelter. Realizing the necessity of obtaining employment to obtain the means of shelter and food he accompanied a farmer to Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, where he remained for some time, and then came to Chester county, where he continued to work on a farm. Here he was taken ill, and was attended by the well known physician, Dr. Jacob Rickabaugh, who after becoming acquainted with the young emigrant, took sufficient interest in his patient to learn that he was a competent cigar-maker, and aided him in securing work and stock for the manufacture of cigars; the Doctor also becoming a bondsman for young Torricellas in securing a license from the government. Dr. Rickabaugh proved himself a worthy friend and benefactor in many ways. Before long Mr. Torricellas established a factory in Chester county, where great quantities of cigars were produced, and where for some years he conducted a profitable business. In 1883 he came to Secane, Delaware county, and here he purchased the farm where the family now reside, and also began manufacturing cigars. He prospered in the latter business, and in 1890 he began manufacturing at Chester, where he built up an extensive and lucrative business. Industrious in his business concerns, he gained the esteem and confidence of the community for his excellence of personal character and enterprising public spirit.

Mr. Torricellas was married, June 18, 1870, to Sarah Pennypacker Kugler, a daughter of David and Annie (Bloom) Kugler, the former a native of Chester, Pennsylvania, and the latter from Hethersfield, Devonshire, England. Of this marriage were born the following children: 1. Arthur A., born 12 mo., 14, 1871; he married Lillian Howard, daughter of Addis and Annie (Kugler) Howard. 2. Joseph, born 8 mo., 17, 1873, died 10 mo., 17, 1889. 3. Louis, born 10 mo., 11, 1874, died 6 mo., 19, 1884. 4. Guy, who was named for his grandfather, born 3 mo., 7, 1876; he married Mary McGugan and their children were: Bessie, May, Guy, Jr., and Arthur. 5. Addis Howard, born 3 mo., 10, 1878. 6. John Mark, born 2 mo., 26, 1885.

David Kugler, father of Mrs. Torricellas, was a son of John and Mary (Getty) Kugler, the latter being a daughter of the late General John Getty, a veteran of the war of 1812. John Kugler, grandfather of Mrs. Torricellas, was a son of John Kugler, of Revolutionary fame, who served in the patriot army, and was commissioned captain. He was a native of Germany, and was the founder of the family of his name in this country. His wife, Mary Kugler, was of a Quaker family. Captain John Kugler settled at what is now known as Centerville, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and was well acquainted with the ancestors of the Beaver family, from whom General Beaver, the governor of Pennsylvania, is descended. Captain Kugler was the father of eight children, four sons and four daughters, all of whom attained years of maturity, married and reared families. His daughter Sarah, married a Mr. Pennypacker, who was the grandfather of Samuel Pennypacker, present governor of Pennsylvania. Another of Captain Kugler's daughters married a Mr. Quay, who was the grandfather of Senator Quay, of Pennsylvania. Another daughter of Captain Kugler married Joseph Anderson, of Chester county. The fourth daughter of Captain Kugler married a Mr. Kunkle, of whom Dr. John Kunkle, of Newtown Square, Delaware county, is a descendant.

David Kugler, father of Mrs. Torricellas, was born in 1806, at the old Kugler homestead at Centerville, Chester county, Pennsylvania. His early education was obtained in the schools of Centerville, and he next entered the Preston high school, where he successfully passed a competitive examination, after which he entered West Point Military Academy and was graduated from that institution. He served with the First Dragoons, United States Army, on the Mexican frontier for seven years. After this long period of arduous service he returned home and took up his abode near Valley Forge, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he purchased a tract of land upon which later was located a valuable lead mine, and here Mrs. Torricellas and her brother Joseph were born.

Lieutenant David Kugler married Annie Bloom, and to them were born the following children: 1. Charles, who married Annie Durham, daughter of Captain John Durham, of Perry county, Pennsylvania. 2. John, who married Charlotte Carter, daughter of John Carter, of Chester county, Pennsylvania. 3. Joseph Anderson, who married Acha Kohler, of York county, Pennsylvania. 4. Sarah Pennypacker (Mrs. Torricellas). 5. Hannah Elizabeth, who married Roger Shunk, of Chester county, Pennsylvania. 6. Clara Anna, who married Addis Howard, of Chester county, Pennsylvania. Each of the three sons, Charles, John and Joseph Kugler, served valiantly during the rebellion, and were honorably discharged at the close of the war.

AARON B. STOREY, a well known citizen of New London township, and a representative of one of the pioneer families of Chester county, Pennsylvania, who have figured prominently in the industrial life of the commonwealth, was born on the old homestead, which is of quaint and old-fashioned architecture, situated in the township of New London, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1844. Robert Storey, great-grandfather of Aaron B. Storey, lived in Chester county, and Cecil county, Maryland, was the home of George Storey, grandfather of Aaron B. Storey, who was born in London Grove township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He chose the occupation of farming for his life work, farming or hauling as far as Pittsburg, and by dint of perseverance and hard labor succeeded in realizing a goodly income from his estate. In later life he removed to New London township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and in this vicinity a number of children were born to him, who were reared to lives of usefulness and honesty.

George Storey, Jr., father of Aaron B. Storey, was born in New London township, Chester county, in 1808. He was educated in the common schools, and after completing his studies he engaged in farming on the old homestead, this occupation being his sole pursuit during his active career. He was a strong advocate of the principles of Republicanism, and was elected by his fellow citizens to fill many local offices. Mr. Storey married Marietta Brogan, who was born in Londonderry township, in 1816, a daughter of the late Aaron Brogan, who was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits in the same township. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Storey, namely: James, who married Mary Wilson, and they are the parents of four children; Henry, deceased; Clara, died in infancy, and Aaron B. Storey. The father of these children died at his home in New London township, in 1872, survived by his widow, who is living at the present time (1903).

The early years of Aaron B. Storey's life were spent in attendance at the common schools of the neighborhood, where he acquired a practical education, and assisting with the duties of the farm, where he obtained a thorough knowledge of the methods employed in the planting and cultivation of the soil. Since attaining young manhood he has put this knowledge to a practical test, conducting his operations on the home farm, which consists of one hundred acres of rich and arable soil devoted to general farming products. His produce, being of a superior quality, finds a ready market and thus insures him a profitable source of income. In his political sentiments he followed in the footsteps of his forefathers, is a strong Republican, and among other local offices he has filled has been that of supervisor and school director. He is loyally devoted to the best interests of the township, and manifested this by his faithful performance of every duty entrusted to his care.

In 1870 Mr. Storey was united in marriage to Letitia Dickey, a daughter of the Hon. Jesse C. Dickey, a descendant of a Scotch-Irish ancestry, who was born in New Castle, Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, February 27, 1808. Mr. Dickey was a well educated man, a share in the New London Library contributing largely to the storing of his mind with valuable knowledge. As early as 1832, Mr. Dickey became noted for his strong anti-slavery principles, and in 1837, William Burleigh delivered an eloquent address on that subject in the residence of Mr. Dickey. In 1842 Mr. Dickey received the nomination, on the Whig ticket, for the legislature and was elected for three successive years, and he was also a member of the state senate. At the breaking out of the rebellion, Mr. Dickey, as a member of the State Central Committee, labored zealously for the election of Governor Curtin and President Lincoln; he joined the Cassius M. Clay battalion for the defense of the city of Washington, and after its disbandment he was connected with the quartermaster's department. He also acted as paymaster in the United States army, continuing in this service until June, 1866, with headquarters at St. Louis and New Orleans. During this period he traveled by land and water 33,188 miles, disbursing more than four millions of dollars. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Storey: Mary B.; Bessie, deceased; Margaret, wife of Pennell Thompson; George B.; James; Jesse; Jean F.; Olive; Elinore and Letitia Storey. All the members of the family, with the exception of Margaret, are unmarried. Mr. Storey and his family are members of the Presbyterian church.

THOMAS RAKESTRAW, a man of indomitable energy and thorough business experience, whose capabilities have been fully tested during his many years' connection with the nursery business, which was established in the township of East Marlborough, in 1866, by his uncle, William L. Rakestraw and Josiah W. Pyle, a son-in-law of W. L. Rakestraw, was born near Steelville, Chester county, Pennsylvania, January 11, 1850, a son of Abraham and Lydia B. Rakestraw.

The earliest ancestors of whom there is any record were Thomas and Sarah Rakestraw, and their son Abraham, who was born November 4, 1744, married Mary Morris, and the following named children were born to them: Sarah, born December 23, 1770, married Thomas Martin; Anthony, born February 17, 1772; Thomas, born July 13, 1773; Hannah, born January 14, 1780, became the wife of Samuel Gatchel; Mary, born July 17, 1785, was united in marriage to Thomas Reeves, and Esther Rakestraw, born July 25, 1790, married Joshua Linton.

Thomas Rakestraw, second son of Abraham and Mary Rakestraw, was born July 13, 1773, and by his marriage to Mary Lippincott, they became the parents of ten children, namely: Abraham, born March 24, 1799; Eliza, born April 18, 1801; Ann, born July 11, 1803; an infant, born November 27, 1805; Abigail, born December 11, 1806; Mary, born April 29, 1809; Thomas, born August 19, 1811; William, born November 6, 1813; an infant, born December 8, 1815, and an infant, born April 9, 1817.

Abraham Rakestraw, eldest son of Thomas and Mary Rakestraw, was born March 24, 1799, and after attaining young manhood was united in marriage June 12, 1834, to Lydia Bushong, who was born September 4, 1809. Their children were: Sarah, born March 9, 1835, married September 26, 1858, Hiram H. Bower; Mary, born September 29, 1836, became the wife of Emmor S. Jones, March 15, 1855; Caroline, born September 25, 1838, was united in marriage to John I. Carter, December 15, 1854; Eliza, born December 6, 1840, married January 26, 1865, Theodore Whitson; Esther, born July 29, 1843, became the wife of Dr. J. W. Houston, April 30, 1868; Henry, born October 7, 1845, married February 10, 1870, Jennie Hobson, and Thomas Rakestraw, born January 11, 1850.

Thomas Rakestraw, youngest son of Abraham and Lydia Rakestraw, enjoyed the educational advantages afforded by the district schools of Chester county, and since 1880, his entire time and attention has been devoted to the successful management of the nursery business, which was formerly under the personal supervision of Mr. Josiah Pyle, who established that industry in East Marlborough in the year 1866, with his father-in-law, William L. Rakestraw. Mr. Rakestraw's success in life is due to his persistent energy, untiring industry and close application to every little detail connected with the business which he has chosen as his life work.

On October 3, 1876, Mr. Rakestraw married Josephine C. McFarland, who was born May 24, 1846, on the old family homestead near Kennett Square in East Marlborough township, a daughter of Joseph and Eliza (Kennedy) McFarland, the former named being born in 1804, and the latter February 14, 1808. Their children are: Philip W. and Arthur G., twins, born February 25, 1878; Genevieve K., born January 22, 1881, and Robert M., born October 29, 1887.

JOSEPH BRENHOLTZ PHIPPS, a leading farmer and public-spirited citizen of Uwchlan township, Chester county, is a son of Thomas D. Phipps, who was born in 1830, on the farm adjoining the one which his son now occupies. His early life was spent chiefly in Chicago, where he followed the carpenter's trade. At the age of twenty-two he returned to Pennsylvania, where he entered upon the life of a farmer in Uwchlan township, in his native county. He settled on the farm which is now the home of his son, and there passed the remainder of his life, devoting himself to agricultural pursuits. He possessed in a high degree the confidence of his neighbors, and was elected to various township offices, among them that of school director. He married Phoebe, daughter of John and Margaret Loomis, of St. Mary's. The former was a farmer and carpenter, and the latter a daughter of a native of Chester county, where he engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. Phipps were the parents of the following children: Joseph Brenholtz, mentioned at length hereinafter; Mary, who is the wife of Charles Streamer, pastor of the Lutheran church, at Lionville, and has one daughter, Phoebe; and Thomas J., who has for about six years held the position of engineer at the lead mines connected with the asphalt works, and is a member of Mount Pickering Lodge, F. and A. M., No. 446. Mr. Phipps, the father of this family, died in 1890, at the age of sixty years, leaving behind him a name which had long been respected in Chester county, his father, Jonathan Phipps, having also been a native of that, the most ancient county of Pennsylvania.

Joseph B. Phipps, son of Thomas D. and Phoebe (Loomis) Phipps, was born January 22, 1871, on the farm which is now his home, and received his preparatory education at the deservedly famous school presided over by Captain Abram Fetters, afterward attending the State Normal School at West Chester. Choosing, in accordance with the traditions of his race, to devote himself to agricultural pursuits, he has for a number of years led the life of a skillful, enterprising, prudent and consequently successful farmer, and has at the same time entered with zeal into the work of advancing the best interests of the township. So convinced are his neighbors of his ability and readiness to serve them, that they have at different times elected him to the offices of auditor and school director. His political affiliations, like those of his ancestors, are Democratic. He is a member of Mount Pickering Lodge, No. 446, F. and A. M., and also of Pilgrim Lodge, No. 455, I. O. O. F. He and his family belong to the Lutheran church.

Mr. Phipps married Elizabeth, daughter of Israel and Mary (Kurtz) Fry, the former a grain and flour merchant of Reading, Pennsylvania, and the latter a native of Berks county. Mr. and Mrs. Phipps are the parents of one son, Harris L. Phipps.

SAMUEL RENNARD, a leading and respected citizen of Tredyffrin township, Chester county, is descended from a family of long standing in Pennsylvania. His paternal grandfather, Shedar Rennard, was a carpenter by trade, and a man well known and much respected in the community in which he resided. In connection with him, we find recorded mention of his half-brother, Frederick Sheiter.

Shedar Rennard (grandfather) was the father of a son, Samuel, who was born in Chester county, and in his early life followed the occupation of a tailor, but later chose to devote himself to agricultural pursuits. In order to do this, he took up his abode on the homestead in Montgomery county, where he passed the remainder of his life as a farmer. He married Sarah, daughter of Samuel P. Hampton, a native of Chester county. Mr. and Mrs. Rennard were the parents of the following children: Rachel, who married William Glasbie, of Chester county; Mary, who became the wife of Robert Kirkner, a miller of Tredyffrin township; Sarah, who married Hezekiah Davis, a plumber and gas-fitter of Pottstown; William, who is now deceased; Emma, who married Charles Marguan, proprietor of a hotel in East Malvern; Samuel, mentioned at length hereinafter; Samaria, who became the wife of Eli Mann, who is employed as a baggage master on the Pennsylvania Railroad, and resides in Philadelphia; Benjamin, who is a carpenter and contractor near Williamstown Junction, New Jersey; Carolina, who is now deceased.

Samuel Rennard, son of Samuel and Sarah (Hampton) Rennard, was born August 29, 1849, in Tredyffrin township, where he has thus far passed his life in the faithful discharge of all the duties of a good citizen and a kind neighbor. His public-spirited qualities are fully appreciated by his townsmen, who place great confidence in his sagacity and good judgment, and have testified to the trust which they repose in him by twice electing him to the office of supervisor, a position in which he is now serving his second term. Politically he is a Democrat, and his church affiliations are with the Methodist denomination. He is ever ready to lend his aid to all works of benevolence and helpfulness.

Mr. Rennard married Susanna, daughter of Charles and Elizabeth Rambo, the former a farmer of Tredyffrin township. Mr. and Mrs. Rennard are the parents of the following children: Winfield, who resides at home, and is distinguished for his scholastic attainments; Benjamin, who is an electrician in the service of a firm in the city of Philadelphia; Marris, who is a telegraph operator for the Pennsylvania Company in Philadelphia; George, who is now deceased; Ella, who resides in Philadelphia, where she follows the occupation of a dressmaker; Joseph, who is an engineer in the service of the Cedar Hollow Lime Company; Walter, who is employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company as fireman of the road; Blanche, who resides at home; William, who is also living at home and attending school; Sarah; Myrtle; and Jennie. It is safe to predict that this large family of sons and daughters will in their various callings, continue in the future to sustain and augment the honorable reputation of the family from which they have sprung, and will fulfill the hopes which their promise has thus far inspired in all who know them.

SAMUEL G. MOORE. The earliest ancestors of the Moore family of whom there is any authentic record was John Moore, who emigrated to Ireland from the vicinity of Glasgow, Scotland, in 1612. His son, James Moore, was the father of Andrew Moore, who was born in 1680, came to this country in 1723, and settled on a tract of land situated on both sides of Octoraro creek, now partly in Sadsbury, Chester county, and partly in Sadsbury, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. He married Margaret Miller, daughter of Guyon and Margaret (Henderson) Miller, and among the children born to them was a son, Andrew Moore, who married Rachel Holiday, and their son, John Moore, was the great-grandfather of Samuel G. Moore.

John Moore (great-grandfather) was born 10 mo., 3, 1742; he was a miller by trade and resided at Octorara Mills near the present town of Atglen, Pennsylvania. He was united in marriage 5 mo., 1, 1765, to Sarah Downing, daughter of William Downing, of Bart, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. Their children were: Thomas, born 11 mo., 22, 1766; Margaret, born 11 mo., 28, 1768; William, born 9 mo., 20, 1770; Samuel, born 12 mo., 21, 1772, and John, born 1 mo., 24, 1774. The mother of these children died 2 mo., 8, 1774, and her remains were interred at Sadsbury. Mr. Moore was then united in marriage, 4 mo., 2, 1777, to Mary Mercer, widow of Caleb Mercer, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Pierce. John Moore, father of these children, died 6 mo., 28, 1821.

William Moore (grandfather) was born 9 mo., 20, 1770, the second son of John and Sarah (Downing) Moore. After attaining young manhood he pursued the occupation of farmer, conducting his operations in the vicinity of Downingtown until 1803, when he removed to Sadsbury, Chester county, where he followed the same line of industry up to the time of his death. Mr. Moore married, 9 mo., 4, 1821, at London Grove Meeting House, Rachel Pyle, daughter of James and Hannah (Neal) Pyle, of Marlborough, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Their children were: 1. James P., born 1 mo., 10, 1801; 2. Samuel, born 11 mo., 7, 1802; 3. Annie, born 4 mo., 22, 1805; 4. Hannah P., born 7 mo., 24, 1811; 5. Henry, born 10 mo., 31, 1814, still living in December, 1903. William Moore, father of these children, died at his home in Sadsbury, Chester county, 6 mo., 15, 1836, and his wife, Rachel (Pyle) Moore, born 11 mo., 14, 1778, died 4 mo., 15, 1853.

Samuel Moore (father) was born 11 mo., 7, 1802, the second son of William and Rachel (Pyle) Moore. He took a deep interest in all that pertained to the advancement and welfare of Sadsbury township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where he resided for the greater part of his life. He married Lydia Moore, and the following named children were the issue of this union: Enoch P., born 3 mo., 21, 1831; Alice E., born 10 mo., 29, 1829; Samuel G., born 4 mo., 5, 1839; Lydia A., born 9 mo., 12, 1841; Caroline, born 10 mo., 15, 1827, died 11 mo., 15, 1829.

Samuel G. Moore, second son of Samuel and Lydia (Moore) Moore, was born 4 mo., 5, 1839, in Sadsbury township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he acquired an excellent education in the local schools and at Parkesburg Academy. In the spring of 1859 Mr. Moore located in East Marlborough, Chester county, and engaged in agricultural pursuits. He erected, after plans drawn by himself, the handsome residence in which he now resides with his wife, in 1883, on the site of the old house. This mansion he calls "Dunleigh Castle," to commemorate the residence on this spot of Lord Dunleigh and family, who occupied an old house there in 1815, and for ten succeeding years. Lord Dunleigh's estates in Ireland had become so encumbered that in order to save them he decided to leave them in the care of a trusted steward for a period of eight or ten years and seek some country where he and his family could reside at the lowest possible figure. After considerable family discussion they chose America as being the place best calculated to carry out their plans of rigid economy, settling in East Marlborough township, where they resided until word came from Ireland that the estates were once more free from all encumbrances, and upon receipt of that joyful news, they returned to their native land. While a resident of East Marlborough township Lord Dunleigh assumed the name of Henry Donnelly, and with his family adopted the religion of his neighbors. He became a prominent member of the Society of Friends, and often eloquently addressed their meetings. Bayard Taylor, the gifted author and writer, has written a short story making this fact the subject of the narrative. It is entitled "The Strange Friend," and was published in the Atlantic Monthly of January, 1867.

Samuel G. Moore
Anna C. Moore

In the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 12 mo., 21, 1876, Samuel G. Moore married Lydia E. Patterson, who was born 12 mo., 16, 1842, and died 4 mo., 26, 1880, a daughter of Johnson Patterson. Mr. Moore was then united in marriage, 12 mo., 28, 1882, to Anna E. Miller, who was born 9 mo., 22, 1856, a daughter of James K. and Adeline (Evans) Miller. Mr. Moore, by his energy and perseverance, acquired a handsome competence which he is now enjoying. He and his wife live quietly in their handsome home in East Marlborough township, surrounded by many friends, who respect them for their sterling worth and honor them for their many good deeds.

WILLIAM EMERSON TODD, veteran of the Civil war, and an enterprising farmer of Wallace township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a son of the late Robert Todd, a life long resident of Chester county. He is of Scotch descent, his paternal grandparents having come from Scotland, but who left no record of the earlier generations of the family.

Mr. Todd was born in Chester county, September 14, 1844. He attended the public schools until he was seventeen, when he began work on a farm. He did not stay long on the farm, however; it was during those troublous times just preceding the outbreak of the Civil war, and with the opening of the hostilities he was drawn into the conflict. He enlisted as a volunteer December 10, 1861, and served the entire four years or more, taking his discharge only with the establishment of peace. He was in active service throughout the struggle and was ever a brave and ready soldier. He was in some of the most stirring campaigns and vividly recalls the scenes of his martial life. He was with the forces before Petersburg for forty-two days during the siege of that Confederate stronghold, the capitulation of which signalized the fall of Richmond. He, however, returned to a life of peaceful industry and went back to the farm, to which he has given his life work with profit and satisfaction.

In March, 1868, Mr. Todd married Sarah Brower and now has a family of four children. He is the owner of a good sized farm situated in Wallace township, Chester county, he having purchased this property from Samuel B. Dauman several years ago.

HARRY E. BAKER, who is successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits in Londonderry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a representative of an old and prominent Pennsylvania family, the founders of which were three brothers, Aaron, Anthony and Samuel Baker, who came from Yorkshire, England, early in the eighteenth century, Aaron Baker taking up his residence in Chester county, Pennsylvania.

Aaron Baker, son of Joseph and Martha (Woodward) Baker, was born December 2, 1701, and was united in marriage September 23, 1727, to Mary Edwards; shortly after their marriage they settled in West Marlborough, but the latter years of his life were spent in London Grove township, where his death occurred about the year 1783. Their children were: Mary, Martha, Esther, Aaron, Samuel, John and Joshua Baker.

Samuel Baker, second son of Aaron and Mary (Edwards) Baker, married and reared a family of children, namely: Joseph, Joshua, Ruth, Mary, Hannah, Martha and Esther Baker.

Joseph Baker, eldest son of Samuel Baker, married and became the father of four sons, who were named Samuel, George, Richard, Hannah the only daughter, and Elijah Baker.

Elijah Baker, youngest son of Joseph Baker and grandfather of Harry E. Baker, was born in 1804, and by his marriage to Sarah A. Clayton, the following named children were born: 1. Isaac, born in 1832, was united in marriage to Jane Moulten, and their children were: Chauncy, deceased; Leslie, who married Amy Hershner, and had four children: Bryant D., Edward Everett, Wendell Holmes and Orrison. Howard, died in childhood; Mary; Sarah; Stella and Clayton Baker. 2. Mahlan, died in childhood. 3. Wilson, born in 1836, father of Harry E. Baker.

4. Hannah, born in October, 1837. 5. Mahton, born in 1840, married Alice Underwood and their children were: Eva, Carrie, Avarilla, Viola, Oscar, Ada Baker and four who died in childhood. 6. Annie M., born in 1849.

Wilson Baker, third son of Elijah and Sarah A. Baker, and father of Harry E. Baker, was born in Londonderry township, Chester county, July 31, 1836. He received a common school education, and later in life became one of the prominent and useful citizens of the community. He married Mary B. Pyle, and the following named children were born to them: 1. Ida F., born March 17, 1862, wife of Josephus N. Cox and mother of two children, S. Beatrice, born March 9, 1890, and Olive, born December 2, 1896. 2. Gertrude H., born November 25, 1863. 3. John P., born June 20, 1866, married Florence K. Hutton. 4. Harry E., born April 19, 1869. 5. Mary W., born August 6, 1871, now deceased.

Wilson Baker married for his second wife, Mary Barogt, by whom he had the following children: 1. Paul W., born December 14, 1876, married Viola Carr. 2. Blanche M., born January 30, 1879, wife of Charles Carson. 3. Nellie V., single. Wilson Baker, died April 25, 1890, his first wife died August 8, 1871.

Harry E. Baker, second son of Wilson and Mary B. Baker, was born in Londonderry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, April 19, 1869. He acquired his education in the common schools of the neighborhood, and being born and reared on a farm he naturally turned his attention to that occupation upon the completion of his studies. He has an accurate and thorough knowledge of the best methods of carrying on this industry, and the products of his brother's farm, upon which he is now employed, are always of such excellence as to find a ready sale in the nearby markets. In his political adherency Mr. Baker is a strong supporter of the Democratic party and its principles.

Mr. Baker was united in marriage to Sarah E. Hutton, and their children are: Roland E., born July 9, 1897, and Frances A., born May 30, 1902.

EDWARD FRANCIS PEARSON. About the close of the Revolutionary war Thomas Pearson, the grandfather of him whose name introduces this review, came to America and after arriving in the new world he married a Miss Calhoun. They had a son, R. C. Marsh Pearson, who married Rebecca Crossley, and they became the parents of five children. Of this family Edward Francis Pearson married Dorinda F. Griffith, of Aston township, Delaware county, a daughter of H. P. and Elizabeth (France) Griffith. They are now the parents of five children:

Edward Meade, born September 7, 1875; Mary Elizabeth, born August 6, 1877; Dora, born October 29, 1879; Elizabeth, born March 26, 1881; and Jennie, born April 25, 1884.

Educated in the public schools, Edward F. Pearson afterward was employed in the textile manufacturing business for a number of years. He was appointed assistant superintendent of the Lincoln Institute, Soldiers' Orphans' School at Philadelphia. He thus served until appointed superintendent of the institution, holding the two positions together for about seven years. At the end of that time Mr. Pearson resigned and turned his attention to the grocery business, which he followed until 1891, meeting with creditable success in that undertaking. On selling out he secured the position of inspector of customs at Philadelphia, and in that capacity he has since served, covering a period of eleven years, having been retained in office through Democratic administrations, although he is an earnest Republican in his political faith and adherence. In religious belief he is a member of St. John's Episcopal church of Lansdowne, has acted as school director, auditor of township, and member of the borough council, of which body he is president.

ELISHA G. CLOUD, a leading farmer and influential citizen of East Marlborough township, Chester county, is a representative of one of those old families which have been resident in the county since the early colonial period. William Cloud married Mary (probably Pierce), and they had among other children two sons Jesse, mentioned hereinafter; and Joshua, who married Ruth Jackson and had children.

Jesse Cloud, son of William and Mary (probably Pierce) Cloud, married Mary Allen. Their children were: Jane, born 6 mo., 29, 1770, who married Mr. Baldwin; Mary, born 10 mo., 18, 1772, died young; William A., and Ann (twins) born 6 mo., 23, 1776, the former is mentioned hereinafter, and the latter died young; James, born 2 mo., 21, 1778, married Margery Mason; Jeremiah, born 1 mo., 2, 1781; Phoebe, born 10 mo., 1, 1784, married Mr. McFarland; Hannah, born 1 mo., 4, 1786, married Mr. Ashton; Orpha, born 5 mo., 20, 1789, married Mr. Williamson and they had children—1. Lydia A., who married Eli Pyle, and they became the parents of John and Henry H. Pyle, late of West Chester; 2. William Pyle, of Ohio; and Mary Ann, born 8 mo., 21, 1793, married Mr. Pierson.

William A. Cloud, son of Jesse and Mary (Allen) Cloud, was born 6 mo., 23, 1776. He first married Letitia Michener, and for his second wife, Hannah Wickersham, who was born 10 mo., 23, 1779. They were the parents of the following:

children: Elizabeth, born 9 mo., 7, 1809, died 9 mo., 3, 1860; Jesse, born 3 mo., 17, 1811, died 2 mo., 23, 1887; James, born 12 mo., 14, 1812, died 7 mo., 20, 1902; Mary, born 7 mo., 21, 1814, died 10 mo., 2, 1879; Rachel, born 9 mo., 1, 1816, died 7 mo., 21, 1887; Pusey, mentioned hereinafter; Enoch, born 3 mo., 3, 1821, died 4 mo., 16, 1903; and Hannah, born 6 mo., 4, 1822, died 5 mo., 31, 1898. William A. Cloud, the father of the family, died 11 mo., 2, 1851, and his widow passed away 4 mo., 19, 1865.

Pusey Cloud, son of William A. and Hannah (Wickersham) Cloud, was born 6 mo., 26, 1818, on the old homestead in East Marlborough township, Chester county, married Hannah Gatchel, and their children were: 1. Elisha G., mentioned at length hereinafter; 2. Abbie K. (1), born 3 mo., 25, 1845, died young; 3. George Martin, born 9 mo., 24, 1847, married Rachel Ann Pyle, and has three children: Mary R., born 2 mo., 9, 1882; Pusey, born 6 mo., 26, 1886; and Samuel P., born 10 mo., 6, 1888; 4. Abbie K. (2), born 2 mo., 24, 1849; 5. William P., born 8 mo., 29, 1851, married Carrie Wickersham, born 11 mo., 6, 1857, and has the following children: Hanna M., born 12 mo., 24, 1882; Elsie K., born 5 mo., 26, 1885; and Emma W., born 7 mo., 21, 1889; 6. Jesse, born 6 mo., 8, 1854; 7. Pusey Allen, born 12 mo., 3, 1859, married Tillie Bailey, and is the father of a son, Jesse, born 8 mo., 27, 1886, and a daughter, Betsey, born 7 mo., 31, 1888; 8. Elizabeth, born 3 mo., 28, 1861, died 8 mo., 30, 1863; 9. Charles B., born 9 mo., 9, 1862, married Emma Moyer; 10. Sarah E., born 1 mo., 4, 1865; 11. Wendell P., born 1 mo., 25, 1867, married Anna E. Wickersham. Mr. Cloud, the father of these eleven children, died 10 mo., 14, 1867.

Elisha G. Cloud, son of Pusey and Hannah (Gatchel) Cloud, was born 3 mo., 5, 1844, on the old homestead in East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and received his education at the Unionville Academy and the Freeland Institute. At the latter school he enjoyed the benefit of the instruction of the well known Professor Fetterolf, now president of Girard College. Shortly after Mr. Cloud completed his education, by the death of his father, he succeeded to the homestead, where he has since resided, devoting himself with intelligent and assiduous zeal to his duties as a farmer, in which he makes a specialty of cattle-feeding. Although a youth at the time of the Civil war he can show a military record, having served six months in the army. Notwithstanding the fact that the care of his estate absorbs the greater part of his time, he has attention to bestow on other interests, and is now one of the directors of the West Chester Dime Savings Bank. In politics he is an Independent Republican, and is deservedly popular with his party, having been elected in the autumn of 1894 to the office of prothonotary. He entered upon the discharge of his duties the first Monday in the first month of the following year, and held the office for three years. He is a birthright member of the Society of Friends, adhering to the religious belief of his ancestors.

Mr. Cloud married Florence, born 9 mo., 28, 1860, daughter of Andrew and Hannah (Piersol) Buchanan, of Honeybrook township, Chester county. Mr. and Mrs. Cloud are the parents of two sons: William B., born 1 mo., 4, 1890; and David E., born 6 mo., 30, 1892.

HARRY W. CHALFANT, a representative of one of the old and honored families of Chester county, Pennsylvania, who have in their possession the original deed, granted by William Penn, the founder of the state of Pennsylvania, for six hundred and forty acres of land in Chester county, this document being of considerable value as a heirloom in this day, is a son of William and Sarah W. Chalfant, his birth occurring January 29, 1855.

The pioneer ancestor of the family was John Chalfant, who settled, in 1699, on a tract of land consisting of two hundred and fifty acres in Rockland Manor, obtaining the warrant for the same October 22, 1701. He died in August, 1725, and his surviving sons were, John and Robert Chalfant.

John Chalfant, Jr., married and reared a family of children, among whom were three sons, John, Solomon and Robert, the latter named being united in marriage to Ann Bentley, daughter of John and Mary Bentley, of Newlin, Pennsylvania. Their children were: John, Mary, Jane, Ann, Robert and Elizabeth Chalfant. John Chalfant, Jr., died about the year 1730.

Henry Chalfant, son of John Chalfant, was actively associated with the business interests of West Marlborough township, Chester county, and was united in marriage August 15, 1740, to Elizabeth Jackson, a daughter of Thomas and Ann Jackson, the ceremony being performed at Londongrove Meeting. Their children were: Jonathan, Thomas, Henry, Ann, Elizabeth, Jacob, Mary, Abner and Caleb Chalfant.

David Chalfant, son of Thomas and Phoebe (Hayes) Chalfant, the former named being in turn a son of Henry and Elizabeth Chalfant, was born in 1760, and subsequently became one of the active and influential citizens of Pennsbury township, Pennsylvania. On October 30, 1783, occurred his marriage to Frances Dowdall Goodwin, a daughter of John and Mary Goodwin, residents of Marlborough. They were the parents of one son, Goodwin Chalfant. David Chalfant died in October, 1832, in the seventy-third year of his age; he was survived by his wife, whose death occurred July 4, 1840, aged eighty-five years.

Goodwin Chalfant, only son of David and Frances Chalfant, was born September 8, 1788, and almost all the active years of his life were passed in the township of East Marlborough, Chester county. By his marriage to Hannah Windle, celebrated October 14, 1812, the following named children were born: 1. David W., married Mary Ann Anderson, and their children are: Mary D. and David C. Chalfant; 2. William, father of Harry W. Chalfant; 3. Sidney, wife of Edwin James, a resident of East Bradford; they are the parents of one child, Edwin S. James; 4. Jane, wife of Joseph Dowdall, and their children are: Joseph, William, Hannah and Lillian Dowdall; 5. Lydia, wife of Thomas Seal, a prominent citizen of Unionville.

William Chalfant, second son of Goodwin and Hannah Chalfant, was born December 8, 1814, received a common school education, and his business career was devoted to agricultural and commercial pursuits. In early life he entered a store, later owned and conducted a store at Red Lion for five years, and he then purchased the farm in East Marlborough township where he resided until 1885, when he moved to Kennett Square, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was one of the founders of the West Chester National Bank, and served on its board of directorate until his death. He was a successful business man, settled many estates, and was kind to those in need. On April 26, 1854, he married Sarah W. Marshall, born May 5, 1830, a daughter of John W. and Edna (Webb) Marshall, and granddaughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Marshall. Their children are: Harry W., born January 29, 1855; Jane D., born March 29, 1856; William, Jr., born January 29, 1858; John M., born December 4, 1859; Edwin J., born June 11, 1867, and Thomas M. Chalfant, born June 11, 1874. William Chalfant (father) died March 27, 1903.

Harry W. Chalfant, eldest son of William and Sarah W. Chalfant, acquired a liberal education at the local schools, West Chester State Normal School, and Phillips Exeter Academy. Since attaining young manhood he has successfully conducted farming operations on a large tract of land, which was purchased by his father in 1846, and the mansion thereon was erected in 1823. Mr. Chalfant is thoroughly familiar with every detail and feature of this important industry, being considered one of the most progressive and enterprising agriculturists of the community.

On October 28, 1885, Mr. Chalfant married Mary C. Woodward, who was born November 1, 1856, a daughter of George W., and Hannah Woodward, the former named being born November 28, 1828, the son of Thomas and Mary (Worth) Woodward, and his marriage to Hannah Chambers was solemnized March 13, 1856. Mr. and Mrs. Chalfant are the parents of one child, Sara W. Chalfant, born July 7, 1888.

MISS THAMZIN GRAY, respected and esteemed for many excellent traits of character which she possesses, is a resident of East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where she owns and operates an extensive farm; also one in Newlin township. She makes a specialty of dairy farming, which occupation has proved both pleasant and profitable. She spent twenty years of her early life in teaching in the public schools of Chester county.

Miss Gray was born on the old homestead in East Bradford township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, January 7, 1839, a descendant of Enoch and Mary Gray, whose son, Anthony Gray, born April 26, 1769, married Mary Beale, and the following named children were born to them: 1. John, born July 2, 1791, married Hannah Worthington; 2. Elizabeth, born August 22, 1793, became the wife of Jacob Zebly, and her death occurred on September 13, 1818; 3. Susanna, born April 27, 1795, died March 8, 1834; 4. Enoch, born September 16, 1796; 5. Rachel, born February 20, 1799, became the wife of William Conard; 6. Ziba, born June 30, 1801; 7. Joseph B., born December 18, 1803, married Margaret Conard; 8. Sarah, born February 2, 1807; 9. Hiram, born April 7, 1809, married Miss Scott; 10. Lydia, born March 24, 1813, died September 5, 1838.

John Gray, the eldest son of Anthony and Mary (Beale) Gray, by his marriage to Hannah Worthington, became the father of three children, namely: 1. Isaac Pusey, born October 18, 1838, served two terms as governor of Indiana, and subsequently was appointed minister plenipotentiary to Mexico by President Cleveland during his term of administration, his death occurring from pneumonia during his incumbency of this office. 2. Joseph Beale. 3. Malinda Gray.

Ziba Gray, third son of Anthony and Mary (Beale) Gray, and father of Thamzin Gray, was born June 30, 1801, in Chester county, Pennsylvania. His entire life was spent in that vicinity, many years of it being devoted to agricultural pursuits. He was united in marriage to Thamzin (Buller) Cloud, widow of William Cloud, and her birth occurred on April 20, 1800. Their children were: 1. Joseph Beale, born August 27, 1828, married Rebecca Clark, and his death occurred January 23, 1875; 2. John Hiram, born April 22, 1830, died June 27, 1902, mentioned at length hereinafter; 3. Malinda, born December 15, 1831, became the wife of Phinias Lewis Address, and their children were: John G., Frederick and Lydia Emily Address; 4. Baldwin, born October 21, 1833, married Mary Celina Gause, and their children are Josephine Thamzin and Maud Mary Gray; 5. Bedford, born September 12, 1835, married Annie Connell, and their surviving children are: Eva Louisa, Mary and William Gray; 6. Baker, born April 4, 1837, died November 13, 1899, he married Rebecca Passmore and their children are: Lee W., Charlotte Thamzin, Ziba W., Elizabeth and Joseph Beale Gray; 7. Thamzin, whose name heads this sketch, born January 7, 1839; 8. Mary, born November 9, 1840; 9. Louisa, born September 24, 1843, became the wife of Isaac J. Connor, and their child, Eva Gray Connor, became the wife of John M. James, and they are the parents of the following named children: Edwin, Ethel and Grace Louisa James. Ziba Gray, father of these children, died July 11, 1850, and his wife, Thamzin (Cloud) Gray, passed away on November 18, 1868.

Abm H. Brown

John H. Gray, second son of Ziba and Thamzin Gray, was twenty years of age when his father was claimed by death and he then assumed the responsibility of rearing and educating the orphan family, and in the performance of this work he was always rewarded by the whispers of an approving conscience and the undying love and gratitude of the recipients of his care, who are now nearing life's sunset. On August 25, 1861, he enlisted from Chester county, Pennsylvania, and was mustered into the United States service at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. He served three years as first lieutenant of Company F, Fortyninth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Sweeny and Colonel W. O. Irwin. The regiment was assigned to the Third Brigade, First Division, Sixth Corps, Army of the Potomac, and Colonel Gray shared the fortunes of the regiment in the following battles: Williamsburg, May 5, 1862; Garnett's Hill, June 27, 1862; Golding's Farm, June 28, 1862; Savage Station, June 29, 1862; White Oak Swamp, June 29, 1862; Malvern Hill, June 30, 1862; Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862; Mud March, January, 1863; Chancellorsville, May 1-4, 1863; Gettysburg, July 1-3, 1863; Rappahannock Station, November 7, 1863; Mine Run, December, 1863; Wilderness, May 5-7, 1864; Spottsylvania, May 8, 1864; Cold Harbor, June 1-12, 1864; Reams Station, June 29, 1864; Petersburg, July 11-30, 1864; Winchester, September 19, 1864; Hatcher's Run, December 27, 1864; fall of Petersburg, April 2, 1865; Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865; and the surrender of General Lee at Appomattox, April 9, 1865. He was taken sick on September 15, 1862, with typhoid fever, and was confined in the hospital for a period of about nine weeks, and he was also wounded on the forehead by a piece of shell at Malvern Hill. He was promoted to the rank of captain March 1, 1862, re-enlisted as a veteran on August 12, 1864, and served as quartermaster in the same regiment. He was highly commended for his distinguished bravery in action, and at the close of the war was honorably discharged on September 25, 1865, at Hall's Hill, Virginia. He was a close and intimate friend of General Latta, who early recognized his ability as an officer, and he was at times on duty as brigade, division and corps quartermaster. He was appointed by President Lincoln as captain and assistant quartermaster of volunteers, but refused the honor, preferring his regimental rank. He was an honored member of General McCall Post, No. 31, Grand Army of the Republic, West Chester, Pennsylvania; of Kennett Lodge, No. 475, Free and Accepted Masons; Eastern Star Lodge; and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His death occurred June 27, 1902.

DAVID R. WALTON, a prominent and influential resident of West Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a representative of an old and honored English family, several members of which were appointed to serve in high official positions under the Kings of England. One branch of the family, consisting of four brothers, Nathaniel, Daniel, Thomas and William Walton, came to Pennsylvania in 1635, landing at New Castle, and subsequently settling in a section of Philadelphia county which they named Byberry, that being the name of their birthplace in Gloucestershire, England. They were related to Robert Walton, a prominent citizen of Virginia, and father of George Walton, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. In 1635 these brothers were honored by a visit from William Penn, the celebrated English Quaker and philanthropist, and founder of the colony of Pennsylvania.

Joshua Walton, great-grandfather of David R. Walton, was a son of the above mentioned Daniel Walton, his other children being Samuel and Daniel Walton. Joshua resided for many years in Byberry, Philadelphia county, from whence he removed to New Garden township, Chester county. He was probably married twice, the following named children being among the issue of his first marriage: Thomas, Joshua, Jr., Isaac and Nathan Walton.

Isaac Walton, grandfather of David R. Walton, was born December 17, 1770, and was united in marriage to Isabel Starr, who was born March 3, 1775. Their children were: 1. Reuben, born March 21, 1797, married Miss Thompson and they are the parents of one child, Gilpin Walton; 2. David, father of David R. Walton, born May 17, 1788; 3. Sarah, born March 31, 1803, became the wife of George Meredith; 4. William, who married Sarah Humes; their children are: Chalkley, Joel and Gilpin; 5. Elizabeth, and 6. Isaac Jr., born April 14, 1807, married Martha Humes, and their children were: Emeline, born September 23, 1837, wife of David Swayne; Edwin, born May 1, 1840, married for his first wife, Miss Altemus, and for his second wife Phoebe M. Pusey, and their child, Mary Emma, was born September 30, 1869; his third wife was Miss Swayne, and his fourth wife was Hannah R. Bahle, widow of Mr. Bahle, and daughter of John and Isabel Christy. John Henry, born March 7, 1842, and Marietta, born February 1, 1845, became the wife of Mr. Hayes, and their child, Martha Hayes, married Walter Cheney; after the decease of her first husband, Marietta Hayes was united in marriage to Henry Hayes, and their children were: Gertrude, wife of Sharpless Baker, Anna, Emma, and Henry J. Hayes.

David Walton, father of David R. Walton, was born May 17, 1798, was reared on a farm and obtained the advantages afforded by the district schools. At the age of sixteen years he entered the dry goods store of Townsend Sharpless, in Philadelphia, where he served in the capacity of clerk for three years. After the expiration of this period of time he returned to Londongrove, and the following fourteen years was successfully engaged in mercantile pursuits. He then turned his attention to farming, following that occupation until 1853, when he retired from the active duties of a business career. He served as the postmaster at Londongrove township for forty years, was a member of the school board for thirteen years, and was repeatedly called upon to act as administrator, executor and guardian. Mr. Walton passed several winters in Florida, at the head-waters of St. John's River, and just previous to the fall of Fort Sumter, he was traveling in the southern states and witnessed the preparations of the south for the coming rebellion. Mr. Walton married Elizabeth Pusey, daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth Pusey, and their children were: Jesse P., deceased, born in 1825, married Margaretta, daughter of Joseph S. Walton; Bennett S.; who married three sisters, Rebecca, Elizabeth and Tacy Bailey; Elizabeth, wife of Robert L. Pyle, a prominent and successful merchant of Chester county; David R. and Franklin Cardell, who died in infancy. The mother of these children died August 4, 1853.

David R. Walton, son of David and Elizabeth Walton, was born in London Grove village, West Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, August 29, 1843. He attended the common schools of the vicinity, where he acquired a practical education, and his business career has been devoted to mercantile life. The first four years he was a clerk in Philadelphia for Sharpless Bros., then engaged in the dry goods business for three years on his own account in Philadelphia, after which he went to Texas and for three years was one of the engineering corps on the Texas Pacific and International and Great Northern Railroads, and since 1875 has been associated with R. L. Pyle at London Grove, Pennsylvania. He has been clerk of London Grove Monthly Meeting, Society of Friends, for the past ten years.

On January 15, 1886, Mr. Walton married Anna C. Shull, who was born September 9, 1847, a daughter of Edwin and Rachel (Chapman) Shull, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. They are the parents of one child, Roger P. Walton, born May 30, 1887.

CALEB E. CHAMBERS. Among the prominent and successful agriculturists of London Grove township, who have achieved financial success through their own energy and perseverance, is Charles W. Chambers, whose ancestors were among the pioneer settlers of Chester county, Pennsylvania, their history being closely interwoven with its industrial activities and prosperity. He was born on the old Chambers homestead in London Grove township, March 24, 1843, a son of Caleb E. Chambers, whose birthplace was the same as that of his son.

Charles W. Chambers acquired his preliminary education at Kennett Square public school and this was supplemented by a thorough course of instruction at the Millersville (Pennsylvania) State Normal School. Upon the completion of his studies he returned to the old farm and assisted his father for several years with the labor and management of the same, thereby gaining a thorough knowledge of agricultural pursuits. He then located in what is now known as Whitford, West Whiteland township, Chester county, resided there for twenty-three years and during this long period of time was actively engaged in the cattle business. This industry proving a profitable means of livelihood, he continued to pursue it in the towns of Downingtown, Honeybrook and Lenape in succession, being a resident of those localities until the year 1899. He then returned to London Grove township and four years later purchased a seventy-five acre farm which was formerly the property of Hannah Michener, whereon he has since conducted an extensive and general farming business. That this enterprise has proved successful and remunerative is entirely due to the excellent preparation acquired on his father's farm in early life, and also to his own careful management and progressive business methods. Mr. Chambers is a Republican in politics, and has creditably filled the office of school director in West Whiteland township for a number of years.

Mr. Chambers married, at Thorndale, Chester county, February 11, 1867, Mary P. Smedley, who was born August 3, 1843, a daughter of Ezra and Esther Ann (Pratt) Smedley. Ezra Smedley was born April 21, 1812, married at Willistown Meeting, November 3, 1842, Esther Ann Pratt, who was born at White Horse, Willistown, July 12, 1819, a daughter of Joseph H. and Mary (Lewis) Pratt, of Willistown. Mr. Smedley died at Honeybrook, Chester county, December 24, 1893, and his remains were interred at Goshen Meeting. The following named children were born to Charles W. Chambers and his wife, Mary P. Chambers: 1. Maurice L., born 2 mo., 21, 1868, married Alice E. Lloyd, and to them were born the following named children: Lloyd, born 10 mo., 22, 1899; Charles, born 7 mo., 5, 1901, died in 1902; and Mildred, born 12 mo., 5, 1902. 2. Ezra S., born 1 mo., 12, 1870, died 7 mo., 3, 1886, and was buried at Friends' Cemetery at West Chester. 3. Eugene M., born 4 mo., 28, 1872, married, in 1898, Sarah Snowden Rumford. 4. Caleb E., born 9 mo., 24, 1878, was educated in private and public schools at Newtown, Bucks county, graduated from them in 1899; and in the fall of that year he entered Swarthmore College, where he spent one year. He then engaged in farming the Caroline Hoopes farm, which contains one hundred and twenty-five acres, and he also operates a dairy of some twenty-four head of cows. Mr. Chambers and his family are members of the Society of Friends, and are active and regular attendants at their meetings.

DAVID E. CHAMBERS, a leading farmer and public-spirited citizen of Unionville, Chester county, is a representative of a family which has for at least a century and a half been known and respected in the county, and has labored to promote the welfare of its citizens.

David Chambers, son of John and Rebecca Chambers, was born 10 mo., 5, 1777, and married Hannah, born 12 mo., 11, 1783, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Dickinson. The following children were born to them: 1. Joseph D., born 8 mo., 27, 1804, married Emma M. Seal, and had three children: Thomas Seal, who married Albina Hayes, and whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work; Martha; and Hannah, deceased. 2. Elizabeth, born 12 mo., 4, 1805, married Enoch Swayne, and had the following children: Hannah C., born 9 mo., 18, 1828, married Reuben H. Stubbs; Deborah, born 8 mo., 19, 1830, married Eli Thompson; David C., married Emeline Walton; Jacob, born 9 mo., 10, 1834, married Elizabeth Stubbs; Elmira, born 5 mo., 2, 1837, married John Hadley; William H., born 6 mo., 9, 1840, married Elizabeth Dillon; Ann Elizabeth, born 8 mo., 3, 1843, married William Eaches, and died 1895; and Edwin J., born 3 mo., 8, 1847, married Ruth Pennock. 3. Rebecca and Mary (twins), born 1 mo., 27, 1808. 4. Caleb, born 11 mo., 16, 1810, married Susan Buffington, and had, among other children, the following: Marshall, married Phoebe Whitson; Charles, married Mary Smedley; David B., married Elizabeth Myers; Edwin married Susan Whitson; Howard, married Olivia Fisher and after his death she married Robert L. Hayes; and Wilmer, married Miss Lear. 5. Sarah, died in infancy. 6. William R., mentioned at length hereinafter. 7. John G., born 11 mo., 11, 1817, married Rachael B. Pennock, and had among other children, the following: Joseph, deceased; Pusey; Henry, killed while serving in the army during the Civil war; Mary, who married Mr. Ober; and Clara who married Mr. Hagle; Elizabeth, married Mr. Kennedy; Frank, married Miss Brosius; and Barclay. 8. David P., born 12 mo., 17, 1820, married, first, Emma Barnard, and, second, Lydia Ann Hurford. By the latter he was the father of the following children: David J., married Anna Lippincott; Emma, married Howard Pusey; Elizabeth, deceased; Morris, married Sarah Clarke. Mrs. Chambers, the mother of these eight children, died 7 mo., 8, 1846, and her husband expired 3 mo., 27, 1862.

William R. Chambers, son of David and Hannah (Dickinson) Chambers, was born 9 mo., 27, 1813. He was a man who enjoyed in a high degree the esteem and confidence of his neighbors, and for fifty years held the office of justice of the peace. He was one of the directors of the National Bank of Kennett Square. He married Mary Cloud, born 7 mo., 2, 1814, and the following children were born to them: 1. Hannah, born 6 mo., 1, 1837, married George W. Woodward, and had two children: Mary, who married Harry W. Chalfant; and Hannah, who married Franklin J. Leonard. Mrs. Woodward died 2 mo., 27, 1867. 2. David E., mentioned at length hereinafter. 3. Willamary, born 2 mo., 20, 1850, married 12 mo., 1870, John H. Marshall, and had one child; Mary A., who married Joseph J. Hughes. Mrs. Chambers, the mother of the family, died 10 mo., 2, 1879.

David E. Chambers, son of William R. and Mary (Cloud) Chambers, was born 3 mo., 7, 1839, at Marshalltown, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and has made agricultural pursuits the business of his life. He takes an active interest in public affairs, and has several times been honored by his townsmen with positions of trust, having served six years as county commissioner, and also held other local offices.

Mr. Chambers married Sallie A., born 7 mo., 23, 1841, daughter of Franklin Bernard Baker, and their children are: 1. William R., Jr., born 12 mo., 8, 1862, married Irma Larkin, and has two children: Norman D., born 11 mo., 1891; and Horace, born 7 mo., 1897. 2. Frank B., born 10 mo., 27, 1864, married Mary Smith, and they are the parents of two children: Robert S., born 5 mo., 1893; and David E., Jr., born 11 mo., 27, 1898. 3. Annie Mary, born 5 mo., 5, 1867, married Charles Chalfant, and is the mother of two children: Helen B., born 11 mo., 15, 1892; and C. Walter, born 7 mo., 12, 1895. 4. Hannah C., born 5 mo., 9, 1876.

MALIN G. BROSIUS, a leading farmer and prominent citizen of London Grove township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a son of Mahlin Brosius, who was born in 1798, on the old homestead, in Londonderry township, educated in the common schools, and at an early age engaged in business as a potter in Upper Oxford. He married Mary, daughter of Daniel and Esther (Hawley) Kent, of Valley township, and the following children were born to them: 1. Clarkson, who married Rachel Hamilton, by whom he had three children, and, after her death, Mary A. Brinton, by whom he was also the father of three children, one of whom is deceased; 2. Daniel, who died unmarried, while serving in the army during the Mexican war; 3. Edwin, who married Mary Marshall, and has three children; 4. Esther A., who became the wife of Lewis Newcomer, and has three children; 5. J. Comly, who married Margaret Walton, and is the father of four children; 6. Joseph, who married Mary Jackson, and has three children; 7. Mary J., who married George Baker, and is the mother of six children; 9. Malin G., mentioned hereinafter; 8. Lucretia M., who became the wife of Benjamin P. Kirk, and has two children; Anna E., who died young; and Anna E. who also died in childhood. Mr. Brosius, the father of the family, died in Upper Oxford, in 1862.

Malin G. Brosius, son of Mahlin and Mary (Kent) Brosius, was born April 20, 1838, in Upper Oxford township, Chester county, and received his education at the Millersville State Normal School. After teaching for two years in Lancaster county, he returned to the homestead, where for nine years he had charge of the conduct of the farm. He then moved to West Marlborough township, where for twenty-five years he cultivated the "old Pusey farm." In 1899 he moved to his present home, formerly known as the "George Sharp farm," which consists of eighty acres, and is managed according to the latest and most improved methods. Mr. Brosius has important interests apart from his cares as a farmer, having held office of surveyor for thirty years with the Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and belonging to the board of directors of the Avondale Bank. He was president of the Doe Run Farmers' Club of Chester county for seventeen years and also belonged to the Grange and the Good Templars for many years. His political principles are those advocated and maintained by the Republican party. He was auditor of West Marlborough township for seventeen years, and the present auditor of London Grove. He and his family attend Friends' Meeting.

Mr. Brosius married, in 1865, Anna M., born in May, 1839, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Barnard) Pusey, the former a farmer of West Marlborough township. Mr. and Mrs. Brosius are the parents of the following children: 1. Elizabeth, born June 5, 1867, died 1879; 2. Charles C., born 1870, married Emma Ramsey, and has had three children, Sarah P., Malin, and Marriott, deceased; 3. Emma L., born November 23, 1872, married Thomas J. Passmore; 4. Howard, born December 14, 1875, married Alice Brinton, and has two children, William B. and Willis P.; 5. Willis P., born 1880, died 1902; 6. Edwin P., born 1884.

EVAN T. PENNOCK, deceased, a descendant in the third generation from Christopher Pennock, the pioneer ancestor of the family, and for many years an enterprising and influential citizen of West Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, was born on the ancestral estate located in that township, in 1825. The family was founded in America by Christopher Pennock, who, with his wife, Mary (Collett) Pennock, a daughter of George Collett, of Clonmell, county of Tipperary, Ireland, settled in the state of Pennsylvania about the year 1685. He was an officer in the service of King William of Orange, and was an active participant at the battle of the Boyne, 1690. His death occurred in the city of Philadelphia in 1701.

Abraham Pennock (grandfather) was reared, received a common school education, and spent the active years of his long and useful life in the cultivation of the soil in Chester county, Pennsylvania. He was an upright, conscientious man, possessed generous and humane feelings, and was foremost in promoting measures for the public good. He was united in marriage to Sarah Bennett, and they reared to manhood and womanhood a large family of children.

James Pennock (father), son of Abraham Pennock, was born in West Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and during the early years of his life obtained a good English education in the common schools of the neighborhood. After laying aside his school books he engaged in farming, which occupation he successfully followed up to the year of his death. He was an honorable business man, and by his straightforward course in life won the confidence and friendship of a large circle of friends, both in business and private life. For many years he was a leading member of the Society of Friends, and a staunch Republican in his political sentiment. He married Amy Thomas, a native of West Marlborough township, and four children were the issue of this marriage—Evan T., further mention of whom will be made in the following paragraph; Abraham, who married Sarah Passmore, and three children have been born to them, one living; Levis, who married Anna Hadley, and they are the parents of four children; and Jane, wife of Benjamin H. Swayne.

The educational advantages enjoyed by Evan T. Pennock were obtained at the common schools located in the neighborhood of his birthplace, and at the private school conducted by Jonathan Gause, one of the best educators of that day. His tastes and inclinations led him to adopt the vocation of his forefathers, that of farming, and being a man of great energy and industry he was enabled during the latter years of his life to retire from active pursuits. He also devoted considerable attention to various enterprises which had for their object the material growth and prosperity of the community, among which was the West Chester First National Bank and the Dime Savings Bank at West Chester, and he was a director for twenty-five years in the first named, and for ten years in that last mentioned. He was a consistent and zealous member of the Society of Friends.

Mr. Pennock was united in marriage to Margaret Hayes, daughter of Levi Hayes, a representative farmer of East Marlborough township, Chester county; her death occurred in 1853. In 1872 Mr. Pennock chose for his second wife Rebecca R. (Waters) Hoopes, widow of Henry Hoopes, a prominent resident of Chester county, and a daughter of William B. Waters, a prosperous agriculturist of the same county. Two children were born of this union—Linda, unmarried; and Marion, who died in infancy.

Evan T. Pennock died at his home in West Marlborough in 1899. His widow resides at West Grove in a beautiful home surrounded by all the comforts and luxuries of life. She is a regular attendant at the services of the Friends' meeting, and her life is devoted to ameliorating the condition of the needy and suffering. She is an active member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and State Superintendent of the Schools Savings Bank of that organization. She is also vice-president of the Chester county Hospital, president of the London Grove Branch of the Children's Aid Society, and treasurer of the Needlework Guild.

WILLIAM A. H. ALLEN, whose professional life as an engineer has taken him into almost every part of the world, has been, since 1891, a resident of Swarthmore, the beautiful suburb of Philadelphia.

Mr. Allen was born in New York city, September 1, 1842, and is a son of William C. and Eliza Ann (Seabury) Allen. Early in his life his parents removed to Philadelphia, where his boyhood was spent. He attended the public schools of the city, where he acquired an excellent English education. He was trained in the best technical schools of this country, and his professional education was finished in scientific schools of Germany. He was for several years in government service, where his work has covered many lines of activity, conducted in many lands. Two terms were spent in Washington in the navy department, in the Bureau of Steam Engineering, where he was engaged in designing the complex machinery for the superb vessels of the new navy. He was afterward appointed to different naval stations, and as a civil engineer he was sent into the western plains of the United States. He has served in Egypt, China, Japan, and South American countries, among other foreign fields. In 1891, wishing to retire, he retired from the government service and bought his present fine home in Swarthmore, where he resides with his sister. He has gathered a rich fund of experience, and a wide knowledge of life from his many-sided activities and extensive travel. He is one of the most useful citizens of Swarthmore, for the habit of a life-time is not easily to be thrown off, and matters of public concern must now replace professional interests.

MARK HUGHES, a successful agriculturist and dairyman of West Grove, Chester county, Pennsylvania, was born February 15, 1844, in the township where is now his home. There also was born his father, Samuel Hughes, in 1809.

Samuel Hughes was educated in the common schools, and he followed farming as his calling throughout his life. He was successful in his undertakings, and he was also known as a most worthy man and one who exerted a salutary, albeit quiet influence, in the neighborhood. In 1833 he married Mary Ann Harvey, daughter of Samuel Harvey, a farmer of the same neighborhood, and the children born of this marriage were as follows: Lydia C., who married Alfred Connor; Esther, who died; Hannah, who married Edward Savery, and to whom were born four children; Rebecca, who married Charles Taylor, and to whom were born five children; Samuel, who died young; and Mark Hughes.

Mark Hughes, the third eldest child of the family last named, obtained an excellent English education in the well equipped Westtown Boarding School. He was reared upon the home farm, and in 1867 he became associated with Dinger &

Canard, as a partner, and then the firm was known as Dinger, Canard & Co. Later the concern was merged into a stock company under the name of The Dinger & Canard Co., of which latter he was a stockholder, filling the position of general manager. His association lasted until 1880, when he withdrew from the concern.

Since 1880 he has taken a deep interest in high grade cattle, especially the Guernsey breed, and he in company with Mr. Samuel Kent imported Guernsey cattle for several years, Mr. Hughes' farm being the headquarters, shipping to all points from here, reaching California as well as the northwest. He is a member of the Dairy Union and of the Guernsey Breeders' Association, and his political associations are with the Republican party.

Mr. Hughes was married August 26, 1874, to Miss Priscilla Hoopes, a daughter of Caleb and Mary Hoopes, of Toughkenamon, Chester county. Her parents died, respectively, in 1900 and 1892. She was educated in the Westtown schools. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Mark Hughes were: 1. Mary, who became the wife of Dr. W. B. Ewing, and to them was born one child; 2. Lydia C., and 3. Alice Hughes. Mr. Hughes and family are members of the Orthodox Friends.

J. MILLER SHOPE, son of Melchoir and Mary (Colgan) Shope, was born at the old homestead in London Grove township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1844. He is a veteran of the Civil war and during that terrible struggle served his country with credit and distinction. At the present time (1903) he is serving in the capacity of postmaster at New London, Chester county, having been appointed to fill that responsible position in 1896.

Melchoir Shope, father of J. Miller Shope, was born in Switzerland, and was reared in that country until he attained the age of eight years, when his parents started to the United States and died at sea, as did also two of their children. Melchoir Shope and two sisters landed in Pennsylvania and Melchoir settled in London Grove township. He attended the common schools of the neighborhood, where he obtained a good English education which qualified him for the active duties of life. He then devoted his entire time and attention to farming and followed this occupation throughout his active business career. His political affiliations were Democratic, and from the time of his majority up to the date of his death he always evinced a keen interest in the welfare of his county. He married Mary Colgan, a native of Caln township, Chester county, and the issue of this union was five children—1. William, died in infancy; 2. Mark, died in infancy; 3. John, married Celia Wisner, and they are the parents of three children: 4. J. Miller Shope; 5. George D., who died in early life. Melchoir Shope, father of these children, died in 1873; his wife passed away in middle life.

J. Miller Shope, fourth son of Melchoir and Mary Shope, received his preliminary education at the common schools of London Grove township and later pursued the regular course of instruction at Unionville Academy at the time when it was under the efficient principalship of Milton Durnall. This academy was established in 1834 by the liberality of citizens in the vicinity, who donated the land and erected the building, and for many years it was one of the best known and most successful private schools in the county. Before he completed his term in this institution the Civil war broke out, and being of a patriotic turn of mind and wishing to defend the flag of his country, he ran away from the academy and enlisted in the Third Pennsylvania Artillery, which was organized in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and commanded by Joseph E. Roberts. The regiment was first ordered to perform detail work at Fortress Monroe, and subsequently they participated in several engagements, Mr. Shope being on detached service. He formed one of the guard that was placed over Jefferson Davis, after the fall of Richmond, in 1865, when he was endeavoring to escape. Jefferson Davis was imprisoned in Fortress Monroe for two years, released on bail in 1867, and finally set at liberty by the general amnesty of December 25, 1868. Mr. Shope was honorably discharged from the United States government on November 9, 1865.

Mr. Shope then returned to his old home in London Grove township, and his first business experience was gained in farming and later in the cattle trade, which he successfully conducted for several years. He then assumed the management of a hotel at New London, Chester county, and being a man of genial disposition, sound judgment and business ability, this enterprise proved a decided success and was under his efficient control for many years. In 1896 he received the appointment of postmaster at New London, Chester county, and his administration of affairs has been so trustworthy and capable that he has retained the position up to the present time (1903). He is an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic, General George A. McCall Post, No. 31, of West Chester, Pennsylvania. Mr. Shope is unmarried.

HARRY IEHLE GARRETT, a highly respected citizen of Strickersville, London Britain township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a lineal descendant of Christopher Garrett, who was born July 29, 1725, and died March 3, 1803.

Harry J. Garrett

Christopher Garrett married, May 17, 1752, Mary May, and their children were Jane, Samuel, Elizabeth, Sarah, Hannah and Thomas.

Thomas, youngest child and one of the two sons in the family last named, was born September 8, 1772, and married, December 20, 1795, Rebecca Loyd. Their son Evan was born January 24, 1790. His instruction was restricted to that afforded by the poorly equipped neighborhood schools of that day, but he was ambitious and studious, and he acquired a generous fund of knowledge and became widely useful and influential in his community. He was the first postmaster at Strickersville, and he occupied at various times nearly all the township offices. His political affiliations were with the Democratic party. He was a farmer by occupation, but he possessed excellent mechanical powers, and he also became a competent organ manufacturer, carrying on his trade in the village where was his home. He married Sarah Humphrey, and their children were Rebecca, James, Benjamin, Amanda, Clinton, Adalaide, Amaline and Anson.

Clinton Humphrey, fifth child and third son of Evan and Rebecca (Loyd) Garrett, was born in Strickersville, June 20, 1832. He began his education in the district schools, and pursued what was equivalent to an academical course at Kennett Square. He was a farmer by occupation, and occupied so high a place in the regard of the people that he was elected to nearly all the township offices at one time or other. He was a member of the Presbyterian church in Newark, Delaware, and a Democrat in politics. He married, December 16, 1858, Hannah Jane Wilkinson, who was born August 29, 1837, and died June 23, 1878. Her husband survived her, dying September 19, 1888, from injuries received in a railroad accident on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at Newark, Delaware. Their children were: 1. Harry I., to be written of hereinafter; 2. Anna, born January 2, 1861, died January 10, 1863; 3. Evan Humphrey, born September 5, 1862, died March 10, 1892; 4. Ella R., born March 15, 1865, died December 18, 1866; 5. Leon Clinton, born January 15, 1869, who married Mary Rebecca Smith, and who reside in Germantown, Philadelphia; 6. Lizzie, born May 3, 1871, died May 5, 1871.

Harry Iehle Garrett, eldest child of Clinton Humphrey and Hannah Jane (Wilkinson) Garrett, was born on the farm upon which he now resides, in London Britain township, September 18, 1859. He began his education in the public schools of Strickersville, and pursued his advanced studies in Newark (Delaware) Academy, which he left with ample preparation for the duties of life, in all of which he has acquitted himself most creditably. Devoting himself principally to the cultivation of the homestead farm, which he maintains in a high state of cultivation, he also bears a full part in community affairs, and lends his effort to every enterprise conducive to the public benefit. He has at various times been elected to all the principal township offices, and he is a member of several benevolent and fraternal orders—Kennett Square Lodge, No. 475, Free and Accepted Masons, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, at Strickersville, and Newark (Delaware) Lodge of Red Men. In politics he is a Democrat.

Mr. Garrett was married, December 29, 1886, to Miss Elizabeth K. Montgomery, a daughter of Robert and Sarah A. Montgomery, of Cecil county, Maryland, where she was born August 20, 1865. The children of this marriage are: Clinton Humphrey, born February 12, 1890, and Robert Anson, born September 20, 1891.

THOMAS SEAL CHAMBERS, a well known citizen of Unionville, Chester county, is descended from one of those families of Friends which have for so long a period been an important element in the growth and prosperity of the county and the state.

David Chambers, son of John and Rebecca Chambers, was born 10 mo., 5, 1777, married Hannah, born 12 mo., 11, 1783, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Dickinson. The following children were born to them: 1. Joseph D., mentioned at length hereinafter, 2. Elizabeth, born 12 mo., 4, 1805, married Enoch Swayne, and had the following children: Hannah C., born 9 mo., 18, 1828, married Reuben H. Stubbs; Deborah, born 8 mo., 19, 1830, married Eli Thompson; David C., who married Emeline Walton; Jacob, born 9 mo., 10, 1834, married Elizabeth Stubbs; Elmira, born 5 mo., 2, 1837, married John Hadley; William H., born 6 mo., 9, 1840, married Elizabeth Dillon; Ann Elizabeth, born 8 mo., 3, 1843, married William Eachus, and died 1895; and Edwin J., born 3 mo., 8, 1847, married Ruth Pennock. 3. Rebecca and Mary (twins), born 1 mo., 27, 1808. 4. Caleb, born 11 mo., 16, 1810, married Susan Buffington, and had, among other children, the following: Marshall, married Phoebe Whitson; Charles, married Mary Smedley; David B., married Elizabeth Myers; Edwin, married Susan Whitson; Howard, married Olive Fisher; and Wilner, married Miss Lear. 5. Sarah, died in infancy. 6. William R., born 9 mo., 27, 1813, married Mary Cloud, and was the father of the following children: Hannah, born 6 mo., 1, 1837, married George W. Woodward; David E., a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work; Willamary, born 2 mo., 20, 1850, married John H. Marshall. 7. John G., born 11 mo., 11, 1817, married Rebecca B. Pennock, and had, among other children, the following: Joseph, deceased; Pusey; Henry, killed while serving in the army during the Civil war; Mary, married Mr. Ober; Clara, married Mr. Hagle; Elizabeth, married Mr. Kennedy; Frank, married Miss Brosius; and Barclay. 8. David P., born 12 mo., 17, 1820, married, first, Emma Barnard, and second, Lydia Ann Hurford. By the latter he was the father of the following children: David J., married Anna Lippincott, deceased; Emma, married Howard Pusey; Elizabeth, deceased; Morris, married Sarah Clarke. Mrs. Chambers, the mother of these eight children, died 7 mo., 8, 1846, and her husband expired 3 mo., 27, 1862.

Joseph D. Chambers, son of David and Hannah (Dickinson) Chambers, was born 8 mo., 27, 1804, on the old homestead, in London Grove township, Chester county, and married Emma M. Seal, by whom he was the father of three children: Thomas Seal, mentioned at length hereafter; Martha F., spinster; and Hannah D., deceased. The death of Mr. Chambers occurred 2 mo., 5, 1886.

Thomas Seal Chambers, son of Joseph D. and Emma M. (Seal) Chambers, was born 4 mo., 10, 1838, in Unionville, East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and in being now a resident of his birthplace enjoys a blessing not vouchsafed to all men who have passed middle life. He began a business career as clerk in a store conducted by Smith & Seal, general merchants, uncles of his, and in 1868 with I. Milton Smith succeeded them in business under the firm name of Chambers & Smith, which continued until 1892, when the firm name changed to T. S. & W. R. Chambers, and continues as such. In August, 1896, he became a member of the board of directors of the National Bank of Chester County. He is a Republican and a member of the Society of Friends.

He married Albina, daughter of Jacob and Caroline Hayes. The former is now deceased, while the latter, who was born in 1810, is still living. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Chambers: 1. Emma S., born 2 mo., 18, 1873, married Allen K. White, who with his father and two brothers, manages the "Marlborough House," Atlantic City, New Jersey. Mr. and Mrs. White have three children: Caroline H., John J. and Mary. 2. Caroline, born 8 mo., 3, 1874, married, in 1902, George W. Turner, of Norfolk, Virginia. 3. Alfred H., born 11 mo., 13, 1877, is connected with the Maryland Steel Works, at Sparrow Point, Maryland.

LOUISA P. SPAULDING, wife of Albert J. Spaulding, resides on a farm of one hundred and fifty acres in East Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, which she inherited from Gideon Swayne, a first cousin of her mother, who in turn inherited it from his three sisters, Louisa P., Hannah and Elizabeth Swayne, daughters of Nathan Swayne, a son of Samuel Swayne, who inherited the property from his brother, John Swayne, whose will was probated either in the year 1754 or 1756. The residence of Mrs. Spaulding was erected about the middle of the eighteenth century, remodeled in 1797, and additional improvements were made to it in 1860.

Louisa P. Spaulding was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, September 18, 1847, and her education was acquired in the Lebanon Normal School. She is a daughter of Samuel B. and Lydia Ann (Wood) Smith, the latter named being a daughter of Lydia (Swayne) Wood, and her birth occurred on the old homestead near Ercildoum, Chester county, Pennsylvania, December 17, 1815. Louisa P. Spaulding was united in marriage to Albert J. Spaulding, who was born January 10, 1837, the son of Josiah and Susan (Brown) Spaulding. Since the large estate, already mentioned, was bequeathed to her Mrs. Spaulding has successfully conducted operations upon the same, making a specialty of dairy farming, there being always a constant demand for these products, especially when they are of a superior quality and grade.

Mrs. Spaulding is a descendant, on the maternal side, of Francis Swayne, a member of one of the earliest Quaker families that settled Chester county, and in an old deed he is styled practitioner of medicine. He was the son of William Swayne, of Ockingham, Liberty of Wilts, Berkshire, England, who died in 1693, leaving surviving him two sons and a daughter, Francis, Judith and William Swayne. Francis Swayne married Elizabeth Milton, in England, for many years resided in Bienfield, but several years previous to his emigration to the United States removed to East Hampstead Park. Their children were: William, Francis, Edward, Elizabeth, Jane and Sarah Swayne. Francis Swayne, accompanied by his wife and five children, about the year 1710, landed at New Castle, on the Delaware, where they were met and welcomed by their eldest son, William, who had preceded them. They purchased and settled on a tract of land in East Marlborough township, Chester county, containing four hundred and twenty-five acres of uncultivated ground; the deed of conveyance bears the date of September 12, 1711. He was a prominent and active member of the Society of Friends and, in 1713, went on an extended religious visit to the states of Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

William Swayne, eldest son of Francis and Elizabeth Swayne, was born in the parish of Bienfield, England, March 30, 1689, and upon attaining his eighteenth year sailed from Bristol on the ship "Saulsbury," which arrived at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, November 15, 1708. He married September 29, 1720, Elizabeth Dell, a daughter of Thomas and Mary Dell, of Ridley, now Delaware county. Their children were: William, Francis, John, Thomas, Mary, Elizabeth, Samuel, Joseph and Ann Swayne. William Swayne, father of these children, died in 1735, at the age of forty-seven years; his widow passed away in 1743.

Samuel Swayne, seventh child and fifth son of William and Elizabeth Swayne, was born February 13, 1730, married August 16, 1756, Hannah Hayes, who was born March 1, 1736, a daughter of William and Jane Hayes, residents of East Marlborough. Samuel Swayne died September 25, 1808, his wife having passed away November 13, 1799. The line of descent is traced to Mrs. Spaulding through a daughter of Samuel and Hannah (Hayes) Swayne, Lydia, (Swayne) Wood, who was the mother of Lydia Ann Wood, who in turn was the mother of Mrs. Louisa P. Spaulding.

WILLIAM MORGAN McFARLAND, of West Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, is a representative of an ancient Scottish family, the American branch of which is lineally descended from the Earls of Lennox, whose seat, centuries ago, was Dumbarton, the capital of Dumbartonshire, which in those days bore the name of Lennox.

John McFarland (1), born in 1672, was a resident of Liscabble parish, county Tyrone, Ireland, whither it is probable, either he or his ancestors had gone in consequence of political troubles in their native land. He married Catherine Hamilton, by whom he was the father of the following children: 1. Dougal, mentioned at length hereinafter. 2. John, born in 1715, married Martha Armour of Signahaid, parish of Ardshaw. Their children, all of whom married and left descendants, were as follows: Patrick, whose six sons and five daughters, all married; John, two of whose four sons and each of whose three daughters married; William, who lived in the town land of Scarden, near Garten, and one of whose three sons and five of whose six daughters married; Armour, whose only son married, as did two of his four daughters; and Andrew, three of whose daughters married, his three sons remaining bachelors. 3. Margaret, born about 1718, married John Campbell, of Plumbridge, Ireland. 4. Ellen, born about 1720, married McCould of Drumore. John McFarland, father of the family, died May 1, 1742.

Dougal McFarland (2), son of John (1) and Catherine (Hamilton) McFarland, was born about 1712. He married Miss Foster, and their children were: 1. Dougal, Jr., born about 1734. 2. James, born about 1736, married, about 1780, Ann Armour, born in 1763, and was the father of the following children; John, who was born in Ireland, died there in 1856, and had three children: John, Henry and Isabella; Margaret, who was born August 1, 1782, married, about 1800, Laidenck Dumford, and in 1820 emigrated to America with her mother, sister Catherine, and three children; Betty, who was born about 1785; Catherine, who was born in Ireland, married Mr. Clingand, and her son now lives in Greensburg, Pennsylvania; James, who was born in 1797, emigrated to America in 1819, settled near Greensburg, Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, and was the father of three children; Samuel, J. Russell, and Martha A. 3. John, mentioned at length hereinafter. 4. William, born about 1740, emigrated to America about 1760. 5. Margaret, born about 1743. 6. Catherine, born about 1746.

John McFarland (3), son of Dougal McFarland (2), was born in 1738, in Ireland, and about 1760 emigrated with his brother William to America, settling in Kennett township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He married, in 1765, Sarah, born in 1745 or 1746, daughter of John Heald of Kennett. Their children were: Elizabeth, born October 1, 1766, died October 16, 1834; William, mentioned at length hereinafter; George, born March 1, 1772, died May 9, 1845; Enoch, born July 17, 1777, died February 19, 1831; Isaac Yearsley, born in 1778, died April 8, 1833; Phoebe, born in 1779, died September 18, 1820. Mrs. McFarland, the mother of this family, died October 9, 1822.

William McFarland (4), son of John (3) and Sarah (Heald) McFarland, was born about 1768, and married Elizabeth Pusey. The following children were born to them: Mary, born December 12, 1794; Thomas, born February 8, 1796; William, born January 11, 1798; Jesse, mentioned at length hereinafter. The death of Mr. McFarland occurred April 3, 1837.

Jesse McFarland (5), son of William (4) and Elizabeth (Pusey) McFarland, was born April 17, 1800. He married, March 25, 1824, Ann Carter, and they were the parents of the following children: William, mentioned at length hereinafter; Mary Ann, born February 3, 1827, married December 21, 1843, Baker Leonard, and died May 28, 1852; Morris C., born March 15, 1833, married, December 16, 1864, Mary H. Woodward, and died in January, 1899; Elizabeth G., born December 5, 1836, now deceased; Sarah Jane, born April 12, 1838, married January 28, 1873, and died in November, 1895.

William McFarland (6), son of Jesse (5) and Ann (Carter) McFarland, was born December 19, 1824, and married, November 19, 1846, Elizabeth E., Grover, of Edgemont, Delaware county, Pennsylvania. They were the parents of one child, William Morgan, mentioned at length hereinafter. Mr. McFarland died July 7, 1880.

William Morgan McFarland (7), son of William (6) and Elizabeth E. (Grover) McFarland, was born September 18, 1847, on the old homestead in West Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where his boyhood was passed. His early education was obtained in the local schools of his birthplace, and he afterward became a student at Princeton University. He is a Mason of high standing, having taken the thirty-second degree. The family, for several generations, have been members of the Society of Friends. Mr. McFarland has the original deed for the property comprising his home place, as well as the property upon which the village of Upland is built, given by the colonial government, covering a large tract of land.

Mr. McFarland married Elizabeth H. Plumley, who was born October 27, 1853, and they had one child, Laura E., who died young. The McFarland family, apart from its ancient European origin, ranks among the 'old residents of Chester county, where it has been represented for more than a century and a half. Mrs. McFarland is descended from a family which came originally from Bucks county, Pennsylvania, where the name of Plumley was from an early period a familiar one to the inhabitants of that region. Robert and Jane Ann (Palmer) Plumley were residents of New Garden township, Chester county, and their son, Charles, born January 5, 1823, married Mary Ann Kent. They lived in West Marlborough township, and were the parents of a daughter, Elizabeth H., mentioned above as the wife of William Morgan McFarland.

WOLLASTON. Thomas Wollaston, of New Castle on the Delaware, is mentioned as one of the executors of the will of Ralph Hutchinson, dated February 16, 1679-80. In the old records the name is sometimes written "Ollason." The family do not appear to have been Friends at first, but in 1710 William Wollaston and Charity Sharpley accomplished their marriage at Newark Meeting, in Brandywine Hundred. Richard, Thomas and Jeremiah Wollaston are also mentioned about this time and were probably sons or grandsons of Thomas Wollaston, first named above. Thomas married Elinor Kinsey in 1713.

Jeremiah Wollaston, "of the County of New Castle on Delaware River in North America, yeoman," and Catharine Robinson, of the same county, were married 9 mo., 21, 1716, at Newark Meeting. She appears to have been the daughter of George and Catharine Robinson, and granddaughter of Valentine Hollingsworth. The children of Jeremiah and Catharine Wollaston were seven in number.

1. Joseph, born 6 mo., 27, 1717; married Deborah Kirk, 10 mo., 2, 1742.

2. Ann, born 1 mo., 12, 1719; married John Kirk, 3 mo., 7, 1744.

3. George, born 10 mo., 23, 1720; perhaps died young or unmarried.

4. Lydia, born 12 mo., 27, 1723; probably died unmarried.

5. James, born 11 mo., 26, 1724; married Mary Chambers, 11 mo., 16, 1752.

6. Thomas, born 1 mo., 8, 1728; see below.

7. Catharine, born 3 mo., 24, 1730; married William Evans, 9 mo., 19, 1751.

James Wollaston (5), of Mill Creek Hundred, son of Jeremiah, was married 11 mo., 16, 1752, at New Garden Meeting, to Mary Chambers, born 11 mo., 27, 1732; died 10 mo., 22, 1820; daughter of William and Elizabeth (Miller) Chambers, of White Clay Creek. She was married again, 6 mo., 3, 1762, at Wilmington Meeting, to Robert Johnson, of Mill Creek.

Thomas Wollaston (6), son of Jeremiah Wollaston, of Mill Creek Hundred, was married 5 mo., 17, 1758, at Londongrove Meeting, to Hannah Johnson, born 2 mo., 9, 1738; daughter of Joshua and Sarah (Miller) Johnson, of Londongrove. They continued to reside in Mill Creek Hundred and were members of Wilmington Monthly Meeting of Friends.

James Wollaston, of Mill Creek, son of Thomas and Hannah, was married 5 mo., 7, 1794, at London Grove Meeting, to Sarah Pennock, born 9 mo., 20, 1774; died 3 mo., 8, 1829; daughter of Jesse and Hannah (Baldwin) Pennock. He became a storekeeper in London Grove township and later a farmer in East Marlborough. He had eight children: Hannah P., born 2 mo., 18, 1795; died 3 mo., 28, 1825; Joseph Pennock, born 10 mo., 9, 1796; Sarah, born 10 mo., 26, 1798; died 3 mo., 24, 1839; Jesse, born 2 mo., 5, 1801; died 9 mo., 5, 1863; Edwin, born 5 mo., 1, 1803; died 1 mo., 30, 1849; Mary Ann, born 9 mo., 21, 1805; married Isaac H. Baily; James Pennock, born 11 mo., 21, 1808; George, born 6 mo., 21, 1817.

Edwin Wollaston, son of James and Sarah, married Mary Ann Taylor, born 12 mo., 24, 1811; daughter of Maris and Ann (Baily) Taylor, of West Marlborough. They resided in East Marlborough and had six children:

8. Hannah P., born 8 mo., 25, 1833; married Enos Wickersham and had three children, Caroline, married to William Cloud; Elsie, married to William McNeil; and Edward, married to Lizzie Woodward.

9. Charles Henry, born 8 mo., 19, 1835; married Victoria Harry; see below.

10. Caroline P., born 12 mo., 27, 1837; died young.

11. B. Franklin, born 4 mo., 15, 1840; married Anna Rachel Jackson and had Cyrus, Warren and Byron Wollaston.

12. Emma T., born 1 mo., 11, 1843; died 8 mo., 16, 1869, unmarried.

13. Maris T., born 4 mo., 1, 1845; married Georgiana Palmer, 1870, and resided at Unionville, where he died 6 mo., 30, 1884, leaving children: Frederick P., born 9 mo., 28, 1871; Caroline M., born 10 mo., 31, 1874; Laura P., born 6 mo., 28, 1879; Mary A., born 6 mo., 28, 1882.

Charles H. Wollaston (9) married Victoria Harry and resides in East Marlborough, near Unionville. They have four children:

14. Edwin, born 6 mo., 19, 1861; married Belle Parker, and has son Charles.

15. Sarah, born 3 mo., 28, 1863; married Slater Morgan.

16. S. Harry, born 10 mo., 15, 1864; married 2 mo., 25, 1891, Anna R. Clark, born at Exton, Chester county, 7 mo., 29, 1869; daughter of John C. and Harriet (Reynard) Clark. He is a farmer in East Marlborough and in religion a Friend.

17. Annie V., born 8 mo., 26, 1867; married Oliver C. Blackburn.

WILSON LYSLE, son of James and Hannah (Evans) Lysle, was born in Franklin township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, February 10, 1834. For many years Mr. Lysle was the sole proprietor of the Franklin Paper Mills, one of the leading industries in the southern end of the county.

The progenitor of the American branch of the Lysle family was James Lysle, grandfather of Wilson Lysle, who was a native of the north of Ireland and came to this country prior to the Revolutionary war. During that struggle for independence he served as a private in the Continental army, and after the completion of hostilities he secured employment as a school teacher in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, in which capacity he served for many years. He was united in marriage to Jane Wilson, of Oxford, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and four sons and four daughters were born to them: Robert, George, James, William, Mary, Nancy, Sarah, and Elizabeth Lysle. The death of Mr. Lysle occurred in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, whither he removed with his family late in life.

James Lysle, father of Wilson Lysle, was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, in 1808.

He was the son of James, the pioneer ancestor, and Jane (Wilson) Lysle. James Lysle, Jr., was reared on a farm and his education was obtained in the schools of the neighborhood. In early life he was apprenticed to the carpenter trade, but subsequently he learned the trade of paper making when that commodity was made by hand. In 1825 he walked from Westmoreland county to Oxford, Chester county, where his brother, Robert Lysle, had settled in 1822 and built a one vat mill which he rented to William and James Lysle, and they operated this plant in connection with other mills until 1847. In that year James Lysle purchased the Franklin Paper Mills which he conducted for a number of years. James Lysle, Jr., was married, in 1831, to Hannah Evans, a daughter of Hugh Evans, of Bucks county, Pennsylvania. They were the parents of the following named children: Mary Jane, Wilson, James E., D. Willis, George, deceased, India, and two children who died in infancy. James Lysle, Jr., was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which organization he took an active and deep interest. His death occurred December 30, 1876; he was survived by his wife, who passed away December 29, 1889.

Wilson Lysle, eldest son of James and Hannah Lysle, acquired the education that was obtainable in the common and private schools of his day; in early life he became associated with his father in the paper mill and later was admitted as a partner in the business, which was conducted under the firm name of James Lysle & Son. This connection continued from 1855 to 1865, when James Lysle (father) withdrew his interests from the firm, and for one year D. Willis Lysle, a brother of Wilson Lysle, was a member of the firm, since that date Wilson Lysle has conducted the business on his own account. He invented a process of making filtering paper which proved a decided success, and since then he has made a specialty of that branch of manufacture. In 1902 the old mill which stood for seventy-seven years was destroyed by fire, but Mr. Lysle immediately built a new structure on the site of the old one, which he equipped with the most modern and improved machinery and appliances for the manufacture of all kinds of paper. Mr. Lysle was fully conversant with every detail and feature of his important industry, and ranked as a substantial and useful citizen of the community. In politics he was an Independent Republican, and served his township in the capacity of school director. He was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Knights of Pythias.

On February 2, 1865, Mr. Lysle married Annie Roney, of Gradyville, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, and their children are: Lillian E., Hannah Effie, Mary R. and Elsie.

After a short illness from paralysis accompanied by apoplectic symptoms, Wilson Lysle died, on Friday, October 16, 1903, aged sixty-nine years, lamented by a devoted family and mourned by the community at large.

ISRAEL R. BERRY, a well known and influential citizen of West Caln township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he has gained prominence as a representative agriculturist and has acquired financial success in his undertakings, is a native of that section of the state, having been born on the Lewis Henson farm, October 18, 1862.

Henry Berry, grandfather of Israel R. Berry, was a native of Ireland, but the greater part of his early life was spent in England. He served in the British army and after his term of enlistment expired, he came to the United States and from thenceforth was a true and loyal citizen of this country. His wife, Mary (Doan) Berry, bore him two sons, Israel and Milton Berry. Israel Berry was born July 21, 1824, married Ruth Ann Stanley and they were the parents of thirteen children, three of whom died in their youth—the surviving members of the family were—Elizabeth, Milton, Franklin, Henry, Wesley, Ella, Emarean, Nathan, Grier, and Florence Berry. Milton Berry, who was born November 12, 1825, is mentioned at length hereinafter. Henry Berry died July 24, 1849; he was survived by his widow, Mary Berry, who passed away April 19, 1883.

Milton Berry, father of Israel R. Berry, was born on the farm owned and operated by his father in Chester county, Pennsylvania, the date of his birth being November 12, 1825. In early manhood he learned the trade of carpentering and for twenty consecutive years he followed it as a means of livelihood. He then purchased a farm adjoining his father's property which contained forty-seven acres, which was placed under a high state of cultivation and devoted to general farming purposes. Mr. Berry is a Republican in politics and has served the township as constable, assessor and tax collector for nine years. As a school director he served two terms; served one term as supervisor; and five years as justice of the peace.

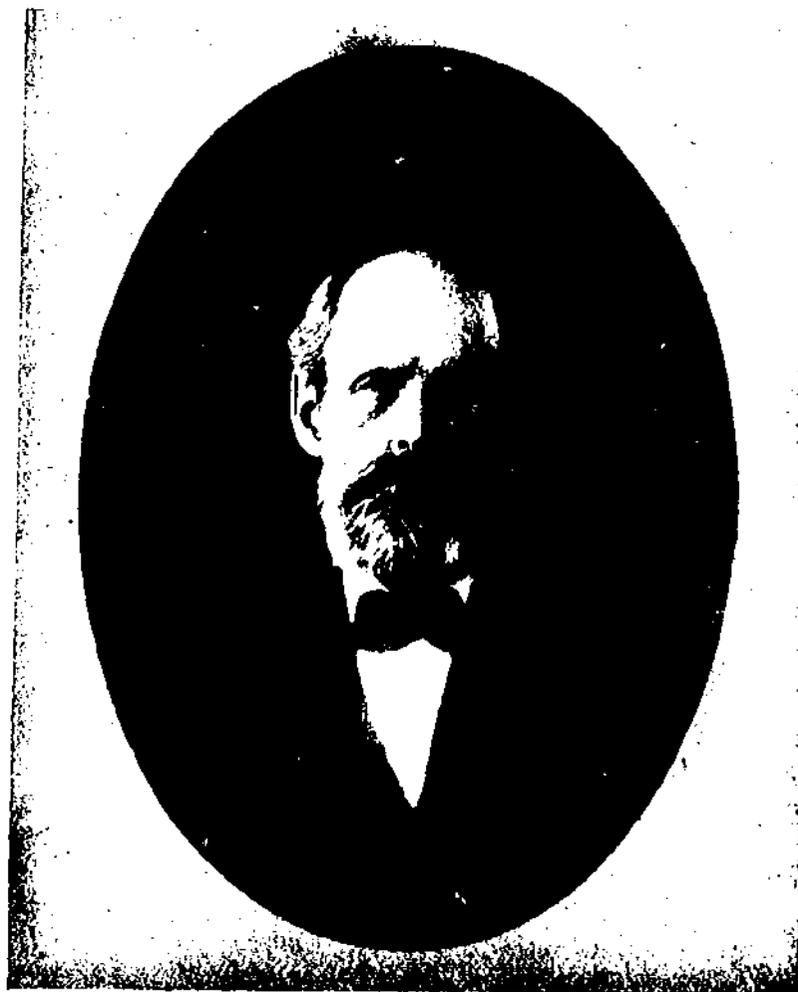

In Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, December 25, 1852, Mr. Berry married Susanna Regester, who was born in Goshen township, Chester county, March 26, 1826, daughter of William and Susannah (Talley) Regester. William Regester was born March 3, 1792, married, October 22, 1818, by John Graves, Esq., of West Chester, to Susanna Talley, born about 1798 and died in Guthrieville, East Brandywine township, Chester county, February 6, 1886, in her eighty-eighth year. Mr. Regester was killed by an explosion in Abner Shaw's quarry about forty years earlier. Of their family of fourteen children, ten survived their mother. Mr. and Mrs. Berry are the parents of six children—1. Emma Louisa, born July 27, 1854, married, at Coatesville, March 23, 1892, to Amos Atkins, son of Philip W. and Harriet (Fisher) Atkins. 2. Anna Mary, born March 31, 1856, became the wife of James B. Thompson, and they are the parents of the following named children—Mary M., Gertrude, Bell, James, William, Elizabeth, Lottie, Susanna and George H., the two latter named being twins. 3. Ida Virginia, born April 24, 1858, became the wife of Howard L. Woodward and the issue of this marriage was one child, Roy Milton Woodward. 4. William Henry, born September 30, 1859, married Lottie Wallace, and two children have been born to them—Vera and Max Berry. 5. Israel R., born October 18, 1862, mentioned at length hereinafter. 6. Elizabeth J., born February 23, 1871, became the wife of John Stapleton and their family consists of two children—Alma and Charles M. Stapleton.

Israel R. Berry, second son and fifth child of Milton and Susanna Berry, received a good English education in the public schools of his native township of West Caln. Four years of his early life were spent in the capacity of brakeman and fireman on the Pennsylvania Railroad. His tastes and inclinations led him to select farming as a vocation and, in April, 1894, he took possession of the homestead farm which he purchased of his father and on which he continues to reside at the present time (1903). Mr. Berry subsequently purchased the Willaner property of ninety-seven acres, adjoining the property purchased from his father known as the homestead place. He now has a farm of high cultivation, consisting of one hundred and forty-four acres. He has been president of the school board of West Caln township for three years. Politically Mr. Berry is a strict and earnest adherent of the principles of the Republican party.

On November 2, 1893, occurred the marriage of Israel R. Berry and Sarah Elizabeth Hartman, who was born in Charlestown township, Pennsylvania, July 4, 1863, daughter of Joseph P. and Sarah (Phillips) Hartman of Pikeland, and granddaughter of Moses and Margaret Hartman. Their children were Malinda Margaret, born June 7, 1896, died September 15, 1896; and Horace Acker, born January 30, 1901, died September 25, 1901.

HENRY CLAY TAYLOR, of West Marlborough township, is a prominent figure among the enterprising farmers of Chester county. He is a representative of one of the old Pennsylvania families. Maris Taylor, born in 1779, was the father of Elisha Bailey Taylor, who was born in February, 1807, and married Mary Ann Clark. They were the parents of the following children: Maris C., born February 15, 1834; Elmira L., born August 31, 1835, married Ellis Ridgway; Annie E., born September 18, 1837, married Samuel Evans; Charles E., born December 9, 1839; E. Francis, born May 25, 1843, died in infancy; Henry Clay, mentioned at length hereinafter; and Hayes C., born October 15, 1847, died young.

Milton Berry

Israel R. Berry

Henry Clay Taylor, son of Elisha Bailey and Mary Ann (Clark) Taylor, was born May 4, 1846, on the old homestead, in West Marlborough township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and received, before entering upon the active duties of life, the inestimable advantage of a thorough education. His attendance at the local schools of his birthplace was supplemented by courses of study at West Chester, Concordville, and the Columbia Classical Institute. He has devoted himself to agricultural pursuits, in which he has exercised with gratifying results, both scientific knowledge and practical ability. He makes a specialty of dairying and in this branch of his vocation has met with marked success. He takes an active interest in local affairs, particularly in the advancement of the cause of education in his township, and is now serving as school director. In matters of religion he adheres to the faith of his ancestors, being a regular attendant at Friends' Meeting.

Mr. Taylor married Sallie J., daughter of Jonathan and Mary (Price) Johnson of Chester county, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Taylor was educated in the local schools of York and Chester counties, and at Unionville, West Marlborough township. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are the parents of the following children: 1. Mary Ann, who was born October 28, 1874, married Paul H. Turner, and has two children; Margaret, who died in infancy, and Sarah L., born December 23, 1900. 2. Elisha B., who was born August 26, 1876. 3. C. Norman, who was born October 2, 1878. 4. Bessie J., who was born June 17, 1880, married Caleb Fred, and has two children, Harold and an infant son, born November 21, 1903. 5. Freddie C., who was born October 21, 1882, and died January 29, 1883. 6. Hannah M., who was born October 23, 1884. 7. Lulu P., who was born February 18, 1886. 8. Maud D., who was born July 5, 1889.

JOHN S. MILLER, a well known and prosperous farmer of West Nantmeal township, where he is conducting extensive operations on the homestead estate which was formerly the property of his wife's father and grandfather, is a worthy representative of a family who were among the pioneer settlers of this section of the state. He was born in Wallace township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, September 16, 1867, a son of John C. and Elizabeth (Shaffer) Miller.

John C. Miller, father of John S. Miller, was born June 14, 1829, on the farm now owned and operated by his son, John S. Miller, in West Nantmeal township, Chester county. He was reared on the old homestead, educated in the common schools of the neighborhood, and his business career has been devoted to farming, which pursuit he has followed during most of his life, also carpentering, which he conducted in the township. He was for many years an active, intelligent and successful man of affairs, and performed all the duties of life in a highly creditable and commendable manner.

John C. Miller was united in marriage to Elizabeth Shaffer, whose birthplace was in the neighborhood of what is now known as Isabella Furnace, near Loags Corner, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Eight children were the issue of this union, seven of whom are living at the present time (1903): 1. Richard, died at the age of nineteen years, having just completed his education. 2. William, a miller by trade, which occupation he followed up to 1899, and since that date he has conducted a store in Glen Moore, Chester county; he married Clara Yocum, daughter of Isaac and Hannah (Kerns) Yocum; Mr. Yocum was a farmer of Wallace township, and a descendant of a family whose history dates back to the early days of Chester county. 3. Mary, wife of Pascal Ingraham, who is engaged in farming in the vicinity of Downingtown, East Brandywine township; they are the parents of three living children—Clara, Pascal, and Howard Ingraham. 4. Annie, wife of Nimrod Loomis, a section boss with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and their children are: Lizzie, May, Maggie, Elmer, Eva, and Laura Loomis. 5. Charles, engaged in farming in the vicinity of Frazer, Chester county; he married Emma Care, daughter of Thomas and Maggie Care, the former named being a farmer of Warwick township; they are the parents of three children—Harry, Anne and Norman Miller. 6. Maggie, wife of John Reed, who is engaged at his trade of painter in Uwchlau and Upper Uwchlau townships. 7. Kate, wife of Clark Pyle, a carpenter by trade, and now serving as foreman at Coatesville, Pennsylvania; their children are: Howard, Maggie, Mary, and John Pyle. 8. John S. Miller.

The educational advantages enjoyed by John S. Miller, son of John C. and Elizabeth Miller, were obtained at the Goodwill school of West Nantmeal township, Chester county. He then served a three years' apprenticeship at the carpentering trade with J. H. Lammey, and being industrious and painstaking he thoroughly mastered the details of the business and became an expert mechanic. This line of trade did not suit the tastes and inclinations of Mr. Miller, so after completing his apprenticeship he turned his attention to farming which he has followed up to the present time (1903). He is now the owner of a farm consisting of one hundred and sixty acres of well cultivated and improved land, formerly the old homestead whereon the parents and grandparents of both he and his wife resided, which is devoted to the cultivation of a general line of farm products. Mr. Miller is a Democrat in politics, and has always taken an active interest in all questions that affect the welfare and improvement of the township.

Mr. Miller married Sarah Loomis, daughter of Jacob and Hannah (Slider) Loomis, and several children were born to them, two of whom are living at the present time—Jacob L., and Mary Miller. The church affiliations of the family are Methodist.

Jacob Loomis, father of Mrs. Miller, was a farmer by occupation and followed this pursuit in the township of West Nantmeal and Warwick, and during his residence in the latter named township he also turned his attention to mining. He married Hannah Slider and they were the parents of three daughters: Sarah, wife of John S. Miller; Elizabeth, wife of Edward Shingle, a farmer in West Nantmeal township, and their children are: Clara, Florence, John, and Bessie Shingle; Mary, wife of Elmer Layton, who is a railroad man and engaged in repair work; they are the parents of three sons—George, Luther, and Clarence Layton. The mother of these children died March 11, 1880, and Mr. Loomis then married Elizabeth Richards, daughter of David and Sarah Richards, and they are the parents of one son, Oliver Loomis, who is now learning the draughting business at Coatesville, Pennsylvania.

SAMUEL SINCLAIR, who has been actively associated with the agricultural interests of Kennett township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, for almost half a century, was born in that community, February 9, 1839, the son of William and Elizabeth (Plankinton) Sinclair. His mother was a daughter of Peter and Sarah (Pierson) Plankinton, of Kennett township.

The first progenitor of the Sinclair family of whom we have any authentic information, was Samuel Sinclair, who was one of three brothers who were engaged in the iron manufacturing trade in Western Pennsylvania. Samuel Sinclair married Mary Berry, who was a native of the eastern shore of Maryland, and took up his abode on a large tract of land in what is now Kennett township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, and here he took up farming. He was a progressive and enterprising man, and was active in the affairs of the neighborhood. He served for many years as justice of the peace, and his home became popularly known for its many social gatherings and the generous hospitality there dispensed. By his union in marriage to Mary Berry, he had born to him the following named children: Samuel, Benjamin B., Thomas, William, who was the father of the subject of the sketch, and Ann and Mary. The mother of this family, Mary (Berry) Sinclair, died in 1842.

William, fourth child and son of Samuel and Mary (Berry) Sinclair, was born at the family homestead in Kennett township, 6 mo., 12, 1808. He was educated in the schools of the neighborhood, and reared to manhood under the parental roof. He assisted in the cultivation of the homestead farm, his father, Samuel Sinclair, having died while the son was yet in his youth. William Sinclair married Elizabeth Plankinton, and took up his abode on the homestead farm. The children by this marriage were: Samuel; and Wilmina, who was born June 10, 1841, and died in infancy. The father of these children died, and his widow married Thomas Marshall, to whom she bore the following children: Sarah; Mrs. Ezra Sill; Charles, who married Mary Sharpless; and Estalina (Mrs. Samuel Jackson). The mother of these children died February 9, 1876.

Samuel, eldest son of William and Elizabeth (Plankinton) Sinclair, acquired his early education in the district school and at the celebrated school which was under the personal supervision of Jonathan Gause, and this was supplemented by a thorough course of study in a school at Freeland, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. After his graduation from the latter named institution, in 1860, he returned to the old homestead, and has since devoted his entire attention to the cultivation and improvement of his beautiful estate, which consists of two hundred and fifty acres of choice land, devoted to general farming, and an attractive, commodious residence which is the center of sincere and gracious hospitality. Politically Mr. Sinclair is in accord with the Republican party and the principles advocated by it, and was chosen by his fellow townsmen to serve in the capacity of justice of the peace, being the incumbent of that office for several years. Mr. Sinclair is of a retiring disposition and devoted to his home interests, but at the same time he is always ready to advocate all measures which tend toward the elevation and improvement of the community in which he has resided during his entire life. With his family, who are members, he attends the Presbyterian church.

Mr. Sinclair was married, December 16, 1862, to Mary Emma Miller, daughter of Jesse and

Louisa (Ferree) Miller, and to this marriage were born children as follows:

1. Horace W., born May 31, 1864; he married Frances Graff, and his children are Lucy Carr, Ethelwyn, Horace and Frank Graff.

2. Cora Louisa, born January 19, 1868; she is one of twins, and her twin brother died in infancy. Cora Louisa became the wife of Dr. Robert Walter Starr, and to them were born two children—Robert Walter, Jr., and Marie Louise Starr.

3. Jesse Miller, born November 16, 1869; he is employed in a clerical capacity in the office of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in Philadelphia.

4. William Thomas, born June 13, 1879; he is a successful cattle dealer in Kennett township.

5. Norman Plankinton, born August 19, 1880; he is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, and is at present practicing dentistry at Kennett Square.

6. Samuel, Jr., born February 20, 1882, at present a student at Swarthmore College, Delaware county, Pennsylvania.

The mother of this family, Emma (Miller) Sinclair, died February 4, 1898. She was a most gracious and hospitable lady, and was highly respected and esteemed by all who knew her.

MARY A. WARD, who resides in Ridley Park, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, is a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Berry) Ward. Her great-grandparents, William and Elizabeth Ward, as far as can be ascertained were born in the years 1746 and 1748 respectively, and they were the parents of the following named children: William, Elizabeth, John, Abraham and Isaac Ward. Her grandfather, Abraham Ward, was born January 2, 1782, and his wife, Ann Bond, who was born in 1785, bore him the following named children: William, Joseph, Elizabeth, Ann, who died in her eighteenth year, Mary, Ann and Abram Ward. Abraham Ward, the father of these children, died on May 22, 1835, and his wife passed away in December, 1861. Her father, Joseph Ward, was born March 14, 1808. He was married on November 12, 1829, in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, by his pastor, the Rev. Frederick Plumer, to Elizabeth Berry, born December 30, 1811, a daughter of Richard and Mary (Armstrong) Berry. Richard Berry died July 4, 1829, and his wife died October 18, 1862, in the eightieth year of her age. Mr. and Mrs. Ward were the parents of three children, all of whom were born in Ridley township: Abram, born August 15, 1832; Mary Ann, born October 16, 1834; and Joseph Henry, born March 11, 1844. Joseph Ward, the father of these children, died January 8, 1879, and his wife passed away on March 9, 1891.

Miss Ward is well known in the vicinity in which she resides, is capable, energetic and of sound judgment. At present she makes her home with her cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Berry Stewart, who were united in marriage on December 24, 1866, and the issue of this union was the following named children: Ima L., born November 6, 1867; Abram Ward, born May 10, 1871, died in 1872; George Alva, born September 25, 1874; Harry Raymond, born August 4, 1878; Eleanora L., born January 1, 1881, died February 2, 1903; James S., born November 20, 1884; Horace and Lester, twins, born in 1886, and died the same year; and Reba B. Stewart, born November 14, 1887. Richard Berry Stewart is a son of Isaac and Rebecca (Berry) Stewart, and his wife, who bore the maiden name of Martha A. Ward, was a daughter of Abram and Mary J. Ward, and a sister of William M. Ward, of Media, Pennsylvania.

Isaac and Rebecca (Berry) Stewart, the latter named having been a sister of Elizabeth Berry, who became the wife of Joseph Ward, were married on the same day and by the same minister as her sister. The two couples with their groomsmen and bridesmaids drove to the city of Philadelphia in four buggies, and returned for their wedding supper to the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Smith, the latter named a sister of the brides, at the old stone mansion on the Chester pike in Ridley Park, now owned by Mr. Harry Worrell. Mrs. Rebecca Stewart died in 1878.

MRS. MARY WARD, the widow of Abram Ward, was born in Ridley township, Delaware county, in 1839, her parents being George and Eliza (Rudolph) Trainor. Her early education was obtained in Ridley Park and later she became a student in the Chester Academy. She remained under the parental roof until she became the wife of Abram Ward, the marriage taking place in 1857. He was born in Chichester, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, in 1832, and was a son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Berry) Ward. They traveled life's journey together for about thirty-eight years, and, in 1895, Mr. Ward was called to the home beyond.

Harry B. Ward, their eldest child, was born in Ridley township, Delaware county, August 23, 1859, and was educated in Leipersville and in Gilbert's Academy in Chester, Pennsylvania. In March, 1881, when twenty-one years of age, he entered into partnership with his father in the coal and lumber business and has since dealt in those commodities at Norwood, Pennsylvania, where he has secured a paying business, a liberal patronage being accorded him. He was married in 1883 to Miss Anna Rutherford, a daughter of Hamilton Rutherford, of Prospect Park, and they have four children: Abram R., born September 25, 1884, and educated in the Friends' Central School of Philadelphia; Ethel, who was born September 29, 1886, and pursued her education in the public schools of Ridley Park; Mary T., who was born December 13, 1890, and is a student in the Ridley Park schools; and Harry B., who was born November 22, 1892, and is also attending school in Ridley Park.

William T. Ward, the second child of Mrs. Mary Ward, was born in Ridley township, Delaware county, November 22, 1861, obtained his early education in the public schools and completed his course in Chester Academy.

Elizabeth W., the third child of Mrs. Ward, was born in the year 1865, and is the wife of Benjamin F. Measey, by whom she has two daughters: Mary T. and Elizabeth. The family is one of prominence in the community, both in the lineal and collateral branches, for through a long period the Wards have been influential citizens, carrying on business affairs, contributing to the prosperity of the community, upholding a high standard of social worth, and doing all in their power to promote substantial progress and improvement.

HENRY CLAY PENNYPACKER, one of the representative citizens of Schuylkill township, near Phoenixville, Pennsylvania, born in Phoenixville, June 20, 1847, is a member of the not a Pennypacker family which originated in Holland, where its representatives may yet be found, and about 1650 was transplanted to Germany, where the original name Pannebakker (tile-maker) was Germanized to Pfannebecker. In 1699 Heinrich Pfannebecker, born in Germany in 1674, came to Germantown, a suburb of Philadelphia, had the distinction of being the first German surveyor in the state, later removed to Skippack, where he became a large land owner, and here his death occurred in the year 1754. Several of his grandsons crossed the Schuylkill into Chester county, and their descendants are numerous in that section of the state.

Matthias Pennypacker, great-grandfather of Henry C. Pennypacker, was born October 14, 1742, and his business career was devoted to farming and milling. He conducted an extensive trade, his products being taken to the markets of Philadelphia partly by boats, which he operated on the Schuylkill river, and partly by wagons which he kept constantly employed. While the Patriot army was at Valley Forge a number of officers were quartered at his residence, and in 1777 the British committed a great amount of destruction at his mill, where grists were ground for the Continentals. In 1784 he was one of the commissioners appointed by the Assembly to provide for the navigation of the Schuylkill river, and nine years later, when yellow fever was epidemic in the city of Philadelphia, he contributed two hundred and forty dollars for the relief of the poor. He was a fine linguist, speaking fluently the German, English and Dutch languages, and was the first preacher in the old church at Phoenixville and a bishop in the Mennonite church. He was united in marriage to Mary Custer, a native of Montgomery county, and six children were born to them. After the death of his wife in 1798 he married Mary, widow of Christian Marys, and one daughter was the issue of this marriage. Mr. Pennypacker died in Schuylkill township, Chester county, February 8, 1808, aged sixty-six years.

Matthias Pennypacker, grandfather of Henry C. Pennypacker, was born on the old homestead, August 15, 1786, and his education was acquired in the subscription schools of the neighborhood. He was a farmer and miller by occupation, and in addition to these industries operated a sawmill and dealt in lumber for a number of years. In politics he was an old line Whig, served three terms as a member of the state assembly, being elected in 1826 and again the following year; in 1831 was the chairman of the organization which made the first move toward the construction of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad; and in 1837 was a member of the constitutional convention. In 1807 he married Sarah Anderson, a daughter of Hon. Isaac Anderson, of Schuylkill township, and they reared a family of five children, four sons and a daughter. The death of Mr. Pennypacker occurred at his home on Pickering Creek, April 4, 1852, aged sixty-six years.

Dr. Isaac A. Pennypacker, father of Henry C. Pennypacker, was born in Schuylkill township, July 9, 1812, and after completing a common school education read medicine with his maternal uncle, Dr. Isaac Anderson, and Professor William E. Horner. Later he attended the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he was graduated March 26, 1835. The following year he commenced the active practice of his profession at Phoenixville, continuing until 1854, when he was appointed Professor of Practice of Medicine in the Philadelphia College of Medicine. He was the incorporator of Phoenixville, and served in the capacity of first burgess for the town during the years 1849, 1851 and 1853. A portion of his leisure time was spent in giving lectures upon various literary and scientific subjects; also in securing information for a history of Schuylkill township and Phoenixville. On May 9, 1839, occurred the marriage of Dr. Pennypacker and Anna Maria Whitaker, eldest daughter of Joseph Whitaker, then a resident of Henry C. Pennyfather.

Phoenixville. Dr. Pennypacker died February 13, 1856, and his remains were interred in the Mennonist Society's burying ground in Phoenixville, and were afterward removed to Morris cemetery.

Henry C. Pennypacker, third son of Dr. Isaac A. and Anna Maria Pennypacker, attended the public schools of Phoenixville and Montgomery county, and in early life learned the printing trade. He pursued this occupation for several years in the city of Philadelphia, and in 1892 accepted a position in the office of the prothonotary of Philadelphia, which he has acceptably and creditably filled up to the present time (1903). In May, 1900, Mr. Pennypacker came into possession of one hundred and five acres of the old Moore Hall property, which originally consisted of one thousand acres, but was sold off by succeeding owners until only this portion remained; to this he added one hundred and thirteen acres, and now his farm consists of two hundred and eighteen acres of well cultivated and productive land.

On April 17, 1883, Mr. Pennypacker married Clara Kames, of Philadelphia, and one child is the issue of this marriage, Joseph R. Whitaker Pennypacker, born November 10, 1887.

LEWIS IRWIN HIPPLE, of Wallace township, represents a family known in Chester county for many years. It is a large family, and has furnished much useful citizenship to the commonwealth. Its industry has contributed to local agricultural development, and in time of need its sons have stood the test of military service.

George Hipple, grandfather of Lewis Irwin, was born about 1788. He owned a farm in Chester county, but was a carpenter as well as farmer, whose work as a builder was in demand in his community. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and spent some adventurous years in Texas and Mexico. He died in his eighty-fourth year, and is buried in the cemetery of the Pikeland Reformed church. He was married twice, the first wife being Phoebe Ludwick, and the second Ruth Stevens; the latter had no children. Nine children were born to George and Phoebe (Ludwick) Hipple. 1. Lewis, was born about 1812, and died at forty-three in Kansas, where he was buried. 2. Susanna, born about 1815, died in 1896 unmarried, and was buried in St. Matthew's cemetery. 3. Sarah Ann, born about 1818, married Thomas Lumis, and died in February, 1900. 4. Elizabeth, who became the wife of William Ludwig, who died about the age of seventy-four years. 5. Jacob, born June 27, 1822, will be spoken of at more length. 6. Peter, born September 18, 1824, died February 2, 1872, was a carpenter by trade, and married Hannah Boyd. She was a descendant of the Hon. Linn Boyd, who for eighteen years represented in Congress what is known as the Gibraltar district of Kentucky, and was three times speaker of the house. The second wife of the Hon. Linn Boyd was Mrs. Anna Diskson, nee Rhey, of Ebensburg, Cambria county. To Peter and Hannah (Boyd) Hipple, who were married March 8, 1849, four children were born, as follows: George R., born February 21, 1850, now living in Philadelphia; Ida B., born December 30, 1854, died December 4, 1858; Ira B., born December 7, 1859; died March 28, 1861; Alfa Ellen, born April 12, 1863, died March 20, 1888. 7. William was born about 1828, served in the Civil war, and died at the age of fifty-three. 8. John was born about 1830, and is still living in West Vincent township. 9. Henry James was born about 1833, and was accidentally killed in 1876 by the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Jacob, fifth child and second son of George and Phoebe (Ludwick) Hipple, was born in Chester county, June 27, 1822. He was a farmer and a man of consideration in his native town. He married Elizabeth Margaret, daughter of Jacob and Julia Ann (Strickland) Phillips, who was born in Chester county, September 11, 1830. She died May 12, 1862, and her husband died October 16, 1899. He is buried in the cemetery of St. Matthews Reformed church. Three children were born of the marriage of Jacob and Elizabeth Margaret (Phillips) Hipple. They were, Lewis Irwin, already mentioned, Julia Bertha, born April 29, 1852, and Fanny L., who was born February 1, 1862, and died July 4, 1892. Jacob Phillips, father of the wife of Jacob Hipple, served in the war of 1812. He was born about 1793, and died in 1832. His wife, Julia Ann Strickland, born July 9, 1800, died June 22, 1873, and is buried in St. Andrew's churchyard. The children of this couple were: Elizabeth Margaret, already mentioned; Sarah, who married J. P. Hartman; George S., who died about 1901; Levi B., who died in infancy; Cerena N., born September 1, 1827, and died May 10, 1894. Julia Ann (Strickland) Phillips married as her second husband David Phipps, and one child, Mary K., was born. This daughter married Thomas Retew, and is now living in West Brandywine, Chester county. The children of Thomas and Mary K. (Phipps) Retew are as follows: Dr. David Phipps, now living in Coatesville; John Barton, a lawyer of Philadelphia; Granville L., who lives in West Chester; Bessie, a teacher, who lives with her parents.

Lewis Irwin, oldest child of Jacob and Elizabeth Margaret (Phillips) Hipple, was born in Chester county, February 19, 1859. He was educated in the public schools of the county, and turned to farming as his vocation. Industry and intelligent methods have brought not only financial return, but the satisfaction that comes of doing good work. Mr. Hipple is unmarried, his sister and a widowed aunt constituting his household.

JOEL SPENCER, a well known business man of Aston township, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, traces his ancestry back to Samuel Spencer, the founder of the line in Pennsylvania, and a contemporary of William Penn. Samuel Spencer came from Upper Dublin, Ireland, and located in what is now Montgomery county, where he died in 1705. He had a son William, who also spent his life in Montgomery county, and was the father of Jacob, whose son Samuel was born 2 mo., 2, 1751. Samuel Spencer moved from Horsham, Montgomery county, to New London, Chester county, in 1783, where he lived as a farmer during the remainder of his life. He married Mary Fitzwater, who was born 10 mo., 6, 1751. He died in New London township, 3 mo., 31, 1834, and his wife died 6 mo., 14, 1844, at the age of ninety-four. Among the children of this couple, the second son of the family, was Jonathan, born at Horsham, Montgomery county, 2 mo., 20, 1778. He married Lydia Michener, 12 mo., 15, 1814, and bought a large tract of land in Franklin township, Chester county, a portion of which is now in the hands of his descendants. Jonathan and Lydia (Michener) Spencer, had six children, namely: Samuel, whose line is here traced; Rachel, who married James Michener; Alice, who married Harvey Stackhouse; Jesse, who married Margaret Chalfant; Davis, who married Sarah Boiles; and Phœbe, who became the wife of John Boiles. Jonathan Spencer died on the homestead in Franklin township, 12 mo., 29, 1841.

Samuel, eldest child of Jonathan and Lydia (Michener) Spencer, was born on his father's estate in Franklin township, 8 mo., 4, 1816. He attended the district schools of the neighborhood, and his natural bent held him all his life to the environments in which he grew up. He was an energetic and successful farmer, and a just and conscientious man. His generous and optimistic nature won the respect and liking of all, and his death, which occurred 5 mo., 22, 1890, was recognized as a distinct loss to the community. He married Phœbe Pennock, born 4 mo., 8, 1814, a daughter of Nathaniel and Ruth (Woodrow) Pennock. The children of Samuel and Phœbe (Pennock) Spencer are as follows: 1. Pennock, whose first wife, Sue Woolaston, died without children, and whose second wife, Susan Way, became the mother of one son, DeLeon; after the death of Susan Way, Mr. Spencer married Mary Barker; 2. Ruth Anne; 3. Lydia Ann; and Joel. The mother of this family, Phœbe (Pennock) Spencer, died 1 mo., 4, 1882.

Joel, youngest child of Samuel and Phœbe (Pennock) Spencer, was born on the family homestead in Franklin township, 3 mo., 30, 1848, and received his elementary instruction in the neighborhood schools. Afterward he attended the Swayne Academy, at Kennett Square, and then took up farming on the home place, where he remained until 1890. At that time he removed to Delaware county, and engaged in mercantile business, having now two establishments—one at Lemmi, and the other at the city of Chester. The immediate success of this enterprise has been due to sagacity and good judgment, and to the able co-operation of his wife. In politics he is a Republican, and in all questions of a public character he is to be found on the side of progress and good citizenship.

Mr. Spencer has been twice married. He married Anna Headley, daughter of James and Huldah J. Headley, 2 mo., 25, 1880, and a son, Aaron P., was born 2 mo., 9, 1881. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Spencer married Mary Jane, a daughter of Isaac and Sarah B. (Pierce) Nichols. Isaac Nichols was a tanner by trade, who became a farmer, and his wife was a daughter of John Pierce, an old resident and landholder of South Concord. Mary J. Nichols was born in Concord, and was married 3 mo., 4, 1885. She received a thorough education in the public schools, and in the Orange Green Seminary, Kennett Square, and has proved herself possessed of unusual business ability. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Spencer—Samuel Colton, 4 mo., 15, 1886, and Isaac Brinton, 5 mo., 19, 1889.

ALBAN LEWIS TREGO, of Wallace township, Chester county, is a descendant of an old family whose history for several generations is a part of that of Pennsylvania. His paternal grandfather, Vincent Trego, donated the land upon which St. Mark's church stands, and his remains rest in its burying ground, beside those of his wife, Lydia Lewis, who long survived him, he having died at the age of fifty-three years. The maternal grandparents of Alban L. Trego were Peter Stauffer and Susan Hartz, also of old and well known families.

Lewis Trego, son of Vincent and Lydia (Lewis) Trego was born about 1800, in Lancaster county, but at an early age removed to Honeybrook township, Chester county. During the Civil war he served honorably with Company C, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, and participated in the campaign in Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina.

He was a farmer, and a man of excellent standing in the community, occupying various offices, among them those of constable and tax collector for the county. He died October 1, 1881, in West Nantmeal township, and was buried at St. Mark's. His wife Elizabeth, daughter of Peter Stauffer, was born in Lancaster county, September 20, 1820. Their children were: George W., born February 22, 1840, who lives in Iowa; Vincent, born January 2, 1844, who lives in Reading, Pennsylvania; Alban L., mentioned hereinafter; Peter, who died aged about fourteen; Mary Elizabeth, who died in infancy; Susau, who became the wife of Wesley Fox, of Chester county; Lydia, who died in infancy; Minnie, who also died in infancy; Agnes, who became the wife of Harlan Syphard, living in Chester county; Alice, who died in infancy; Mark E., who lives in Glenmore.

Alban Lewis Trego, third child of Lewis and Elizabeth (Stauffer) Trego, was born in West Nantmeal township, Chester county, October 18, 1848. He was educated in the local schools, and learned the trade of a molder. He afterwards took up work as a farm laborer, and followed that occupation until the death of his father, when he located on the Butler farm near Loag's Corner, where he made his home for twenty-one years, having in the meantime married. In the spring of 1903 he purchased and removed to his present property, known as the Samuel Walker farm, and which he maintains in a high state of cultivation, with excellent improvements. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, a Republican in politics, and a member of the fraternity of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Trego was married, in 1884, to Leah Florence, daughter of Lewis and Sarah (McCurdy) Buckwalter, of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. Her father was a mason by trade, but, having acquired an excellent education he became a school teacher, and taught most acceptably for a period of twenty-one years in Lancaster county, and also in Berks county. For five years afterward he was an agent for the Wilson and other sewing machines. He then took up farming on a twenty-one-acre tract. His wife died October 11, 1898, in advanced years, and was buried at Morgantown, Berks county, and Mr. Buckwalter is now making his home with his son-in-law, Mr. Trego. They were the parents of eight children: 1. Annie C., born January 8, 1857, and died in 1889, from pneumonia, and is buried in Glenmore cemetery; she became the wife of Leonard Cullins, and to them were born two children; 2. Elizabeth E., born September 19, 1859, who married Sylvester, son of S. P. Stoneback, and their children were: Sarah Mary, born February 15, 1880; William Theodore, born January 30, 1882; Florence and Laura (twins).

born March 4, 1887, and Laura dying at the age of two and one-half years; 3. Leah Florence, who became the wife of Alban L. Trego; 4. Joseph F., born April 12, 1864, who is a machinist and resides at Birdsborough; he married Rehana, daughter of David Hank of Jefferson county, who was a veteran of the Civil war, and of this marriage was born Sarah May, March 24, 1887; 5. Mary Ruberta, born July 21, 1865, who in 1882 married Eli Dilworth, an iron worker in Coatesville, who is a son of Taylor Dilworth; 6. Hannah Frances, born December 5, 1867, died February 3, 1868; 7. Maggie B., born June 13, 1870, who married Mark E., son of Lewis Trego, of Chester county, and who was a Civil war soldier; he is now deceased.

HORACE WILLIAM FISHER, son of Benjamin G. and Hannah Maria (Mitchell) Fisher, was born in West Nantmeal township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, June 8, 1872, and is now one of the substantial agriculturists of that neighborhood, having devoted the greater part of his active career to that pursuit.

Evan R. Fisher, grandfather of Horace W. Fisher, was a prominent and public-spirited citizen of Chester county, and he exerted a powerful influence for good in the community. He was united in marriage to Mary Robinson, now deceased, and the issue of this union was nine children among whom were Benjamin G., mentioned at length in the following paragraph; Joseph, a resident of Chester county; Evan, also a resident of the same county; Sarah, wife of Frank Grove; May A., wife of Edwin Hanly.

Benjamin G. Fisher, father of Horace W. Fisher, was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, November 1, 1837, received a good common school education, and on reaching man's estate he chose the occupation of farming. He is a man of character and determination, and his entire career has been noted for industry, energy and thrift. He married Hannah Maria Mitchell, who was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, January 22, 1840, a daughter of the late John and Linley (Murphy) Mitchell. Mrs. Fisher is living at the present time (1903). Their children are: 1. Louisa, born in Chester county, August 1, 1861, now the wife of James McDowell, a farmer of Chester county; 2. Thomas, born in Chester county, July 16, 1865; his occupation is plumbing and he resides in Chester county; 3. Sallie, born in Chester county, December 8, 1867, now the wife of Edgar Ostrander, and they reside in Philadelphia; 4. Benjamin L., born in Chester county, December 18, 1869; he is a farmer, and unmarried; 5. Charles Evan, born in Chester county, April 22, 1870, resides in Chester county where he is engaged in agricultural pursuits; he is unmarried; 6. Horace William, born in Chester county, June 8, 1872; George L., born in Chester county, July 11, 1874, and married, April 15, 1903, Minnie Paup; he is engaged in farming pursuits in Chester county; 8. Howard, born in Chester county, January 22, 1883; he is a farmer by occupation and in addition to this occupation is engaged as a draughtsman in Baldwin's Locomotive Works, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Horace W. Fisher, fourth son born to Benjamin G. and Hannah Maria Fisher, from early boyhood up to sixteen years of age was a student at the common schools of Wallace township, and from that age until he attained his majority was engaged in the occupation of farming. He then located in the city of Philadelphia where he learned the trade of a machinist, but after being employed in that capacity for five years he returned to Chester county and began extensive operations on the farm whereon he now resides. From time to time he has added improvements to his property, and now it ranks among the best cultivated and most productive farms in the township. Mr. Fisher is a consistent member of the Presbyterian church of Wallace township, and his political affiliations are with the Republican party to which he gives an earnest and loyal support.

Mr. Fisher married, July 26, 1898, Katie Fisher, who was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, December 29, 1875, a daughter of Evan and Jane (Dickerson) Fisher, both natives of Chester county. Their children are: Laura Miriam, born in Philadelphia, January 22, 1900, Helen, born in Philadelphia, October 10, 1900; and Edna, born in Chester county, June 27, 1902. Evan and Jane (Dickerson) Fisher, parents of Mrs. Fisher, had the following named children born to them—Atley, born in Chester county, November 29, 1865, is now a prosperous carpenter in his native county; May E., born March 1, 1866; William E., born in Chester county, January 3, 1873; Katie, wife of Horace W. Fisher; Harvey, died in infancy; Estella, born in Chester county, March 10, 1886.

JOSEPH TALBOT McCORD, who for many years occupied a prominent place among the leading citizens of Chester county, was a man who added to the advantages he derived from noble and illustrious lineage the solid abilities and sterling worth of character which shed lasting and more brilliant lustre on the splendor of high descent. On the maternal side he belonged to the historic house of Talbot, being descended from Edward Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury, who lies among the famous dead in Westminster Abbey, being interred in the chapel of St. Edmund. Through his mother Mr. McCord was also related to the bearer of a name which stands by itself in our national annals—George Washington—to whom he was allied through the family of the patriot's venerated mother, Mary Ball.

Joseph Talbot McCord, son of Benjamin and Mary (Talbot) McCord, was born in 1810, near the place now called Elverson, then Springfield, Chester county, over the line in Berks county. His mother was a daughter of Joseph and Ruth (Davis) Talbot, the latter a native of Chester county. During the Revolutionary war, Joseph Talbot served in the Continental army, as one of the aides-de-camp of his great kinsman, the commander-in-chief. His grandson and namesake was the second of eleven children, and his earliest years were cast amid the stirring events of the war of 1812. It is possible that in later life he was able dimly to recall the excitement caused by the news of the victory of New Orleans. His life for nearly half a century was as happily uneventful as is the existence of almost every prosperous and honorable citizen. Then came, not unheralded but still unexpected, the great upheaval of the Civil war. In 1861, notwithstanding the fact that he was then more than fifty years old, Mr. McCord enlisted in the Union army with the rank of first lieutenant. At Charles City crossroads he was wounded and taken prisoner, and after his release was honorably discharged as unable to serve longer. His conduct in civil life was influenced by the same patriotic devotion which marked his career as a soldier. He was a member of St. Mary's Protestant Episcopal church at St. Mary's, while his wife was a member of St. Peter's Episcopal church at Phoenixville.

Mr. McCord married Mary, daughter of John and Mary (Beekley) Keim, the former being descended from a family of German origin. Mr. and Mrs. McCord were the parents of two children: Peel Bentley, who was born October 8, 1845, and died August 18, 1865; and Almira K., who was born near Warwick, in North Chester county, and on May 5, 1873, became the wife of Lemuel C. A. McGowan, who was born in Urbana, Ohio, and was the son of John Bruner McGowan, and the grandson of Alexander McGowan, who, in his youth, emigrated from Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. McGowan were the parents of a son; Joseph Bentley, who was born November 27, 1874, on May 9, 1901, married Norma R., daughter of William and Harriet Howell, and they are the parents of one son, Joseph Howell McGowan, born February 10, 1903. Mrs. McGowan is a member of St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal church at Phoenixville, to which church Mrs. McCord also belonged. Mr. McGowan died June 4, 1887.

The death of Mr. McCord, which occurred on November 27, 1893, removed from the community in which he resided an honored and familiar figure. He was sincerely lamented by all classes of society as a man of his character and abilities deserved to be, and all felt that as neighbor, citizen and friend, he had occupied a place in the hearts of his townsmen which it would be difficult, if not impossible to fill. Mrs. McCord died September 26, 1889.

JOHN FRANKLIN SYPHERD, a man of sound judgment, wonderful energy and good business ability, a large part of whose career was spent in the capacity of instructor in various townships in Chester county, is a native of West Nantmeal township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, the date of his birth being June 19, 1840. He is a son of Samuel and Rebecca (Frescoln) Sypherd and grandson of John and Elizabeth (Wolfe) Sypherd.

John Sypherd (grandfather) was a native of Berks county, Pennsylvania, and in this vicinity he was reared to manhood and acquired an excellent education. Later he removed to Chester county, where he resided up to the time of his death, which occurred in the eighty-seventh year of his age. His wife, Elizabeth (Wolfe) Sypherd, was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, and her death occurred in Chester county at the advanced age of ninety-three years. Their children were: Henry, Jacob, Samuel, Abraham, John, Catherine, Elizabeth, Susan and Jane Sypherd.

Samuel Sypherd (father) was born June 9, 1810, in West Nantmeal township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he was reared and educated. He followed the occupation of farming and his active and useful life extended over half a century. He married Rebecca Frescoln, who was born in the year 1810, a daughter of George and Margaret Frescoln, the latter named being the parents of six children—Margaret, Sarah, Mary, Rebecca, George and John Frescoln. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sypherd—1. Leonard F., born August 10, 1831, now a prosperous resident of West Nantmeal township, Chester county; 2. Margaret J., born March 15, 1833, died July 26, 1891; she was unmarried; 3. William H., born February 1, 1836, and is now a resident of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; 4. Charles Wesley, born May 4, 1838, a citizen of Downingtown, Pennsylvania; 5. John Franklin, born June 19, 1840, mentioned at length in the following paragraph; 6. Elizabeth, born in 1842, became the wife of William J. Henderson, and her death occurred March 17, 1895; 7. Mary, died in infancy; 8. Samuel, died in infancy; 9. George, also died in infancy. Samuel Sypherd, father of these children, died at his home in Chester county, Pennsylvania, June 9, 1893; he survived his wife for a number of years, as she passed away in November, 1880.

John F. Sypherd, fourth son of Samuel and Rebecca Sypherd, grew to manhood in his native township and received an excellent English education in the public schools. His first business experience was gained as a teacher in the schools of Wallace, West Nantmeal, Warwick and Upper Uwchlan townships, the duties of which position he faithfully and conscientiously performed for eighteen consecutive years. In 1876 he located on his present farm which is situated in Wallace township, this being formerly the property of his father-in-law, Daniel Benner, who resided there for many years and who inherited it from his ancestors, who for several generations were the owners of this estate. During the progress of the Civil war, Mr. Sypherd was engaged for several months as a member of the home guard. He is an active and consistent member of the Good Will Methodist church in West Nantmeal township, a member of the Order of Golden Eagles, and for a number of years was an active member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a Republican in politics, and has always given a loyal support to the candidates and measures advocated by that party.

Mr. Sypherd was united in marriage to Catherine Lilly, who was born September 23, 1835, and died November 1, 1874; she was a daughter of Walter and Rachel Lilly of Chester county, Pennsylvania. Three children were the issue of this union—Francis Eugene, born July 27, 1870, died August 18, 1870; Alva Rebecca, born July 24, 1871, now the wife of William J. Marshall, and they reside in Chester county, Pennsylvania; Walter Simpson, born July 18, 1873, died April 27, 1878. On December 21, 1876, Mr. Sypherd married for his second wife Martha Lewis Benner, who was born on the farm where she now resides in Wallace township, Chester county, May 9, 1849, daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth (Griffith) Benner. They are the parents of one child, Morris Griffith, born February 27, 1888, in the same room and the same house in which his mother was born; he resides with his parents.

Jacob Benner, paternal grandfather of Mrs. Sypherd, was married three times. By the first marriage there were four children—Jonathan, David, Mary and Jacob Benner. The second marriage was to Eloner Neil, and they were the parents of three children—Daniel, Nathan and Levi Benner. The third marriage was to Mary McLane, and the following named children were born of this union—Jehu, Elihu, Ezekial, Margaret, Ellen, Jane and John Benner. Daniel Benner, father of Mrs. Sypherd, was born December 28, 1803, a son of Jacob and Eloner (Neil) Benner. He married Elizabeth Griffith, who was born March 8, 1807, a daughter of Abel and Sarah Griffith, and three daughters were the issue of this marriage—Martha Lewis, wife of John F. Sypherd; the other two children died in infancy. Daniel Benner died September 1, 1875 and his remains were interred in Glenmore church yard. His widow, Elizabeth (Griffith) Benner, passed away June 28, 1883.

Benjamin Griffith, maternal great-grandfather of Mrs. Sypherd, came from Bucks county, Pennsylvania, and settled in Honeybrook township, Chester county, in its early settlement. Her great-grandmother, Martha (Lewis) Griffith, was also a native of Bucks county, and they were the parents of the following named children: Abel, Amos, Nathan, Abner, Benjamin, who became a physician, Elizabeth, who died at an early age; all of the boys with the exception of Benjamin became farmers, and all left families at their decease. Large numbers of the descendants from these families are now respected and honorable citizens of Chester county. Abel Griffith, grandfather of Mrs. Sypherd, married Sarah Miller of Honeybrook township, and their children were: Benjamin, Elizabeth, mother of Mrs. Sypherd, Bethsheba, Morris, Nathan, who died in infancy. Abel Griffith married for his second wife Elizabeth Armstrong, and there were born to this union seven children: Martha and John, twins, Mary, Sarah, Jane, Miller and Calvin J. Griffith.

JAMES POLK KURTZ, a prominent resident and agriculturist of Wallace township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, was born May 25, 1844, near the village of Glenmore, Chester county, and was one of three children born to Samuel and Elizabeth (Graham) Kurtz; the other children of these parents were—Edwin G., and Mary, now the wife of Jonathan Millard, a prosperous farmer residing in Chester county.

James P. Kurtz pursued his studies in the public schools adjacent to his home, and being studious and attentive he acquired a thorough knowledge of the fundamental principles of education, this being an essential requisite in the life work of every successful business man or woman. After laying aside his school books he engaged in the milling business, and this branch of industry in addition to agricultural pursuits has engrossed his entire time and attention from that early date to the present time. In 1873 he purchased the farm upon which he now resides, this property being located in Wallace township, cultivated and improved it until now it ranks among the most productive in that section of the county, and the products of his broad acres find a ready sale in the nearby markets. His success in farming is due largely to the fact that he worked intelligently and adopted modern methods when they were of actual service to him. He has fulfilled all the duties of life, both of a private and public nature, in an honorable and exemplary manner that has won for him the respect of the entire community.

On December 23, 1869, Mr. Kurtz married Mary A. Townsend, daughter of John and Margaret Townsend, of Uwchlan township, and the issue of this union was three children—Edwin G., born April 21, 1871, deceased; Margaret Helen, born October 8, 1872, resides at home with her father; Samuel, born June 10, 1875, is a resident of York, Pennsylvania, and employed as mail clerk by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Kurtz contracted a marriage with Mary Graham, who was born November 17, 1839, a daughter of William and Rachel Graham, and her death occurred March 11, 1897, aged fifty-seven years. They were the parents of one son, William G., born October 11, 1882, who resides on the old homestead.

MRS. GEORGE B. GUY, whose maiden name was Harriet Marion Sypherd, was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, June 11, 1843, educated in the public schools of her native county and was united in marriage, November 9, 1865, to George B. Guy, a native of Page county, Virginia.

John Sypherd, paternal grandfather of Mrs. Guy, was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, where he resided up to the time of his death, which occurred when he had attained the advanced age of about eighty-six years. His wife, Elizabeth (Wolfe) Sypherd, was also a native of Berks county, Pennsylvania, and died at the extreme old age of ninety-three years. They were the parents of nine children, all of whom are now deceased—Henry, father of Mrs. Guy; Abraham; John; Samuel; Jacob; Jane, who was the wife of William Houck, deceased; Catherine, who was the wife of James Willson, deceased; Susan, who was the wife of Victor Buchanan, deceased; and Elizabeth, who was the wife of Samuel Lewis, deceased.

Mr. Detwiler, maternal grandfather of Mrs. Guy, was a prominent resident of Chester county, Pennsylvania, and died when his daughter, Elizabeth Detwiler, mother of Mrs. Guy, was about four years of age. His wife, Magdelene (Brunner) Detwiler, bore him the following named children, all of whom are now deceased—Christian, and Elizabeth, who is the wife of Henry Sypherd. Mrs. Detwiler had a son by a former marriage; his name was John McGowan, now deceased.

Henry Sypherd, father of Mrs. Guy, was a representative agriculturist of Chester county, Pennsylvania, in which section of the state the greater part of his active and useful life was spent. He was united in marriage to Frances Detwiler, born about the year 1801, and ten children were the issue of this union—Abraham, born in 1822, died August 19, 1882; John, born April 2, 1827, died July 23, 1873; J. Owen, was a member of the Wilmington Methodist Conference up to the time of his death, which occurred September 4, 1902, aged sixty-eight years; Harry, a resident of California; he is now about seventy-two years of age; James, a resident of Reading, Pennsylvania, aged sixty-six years; Samuel, a resident of Camden, New Jersey, aged about sixty-three years; Susan, wife of William Reeves, and they reside at Malvern, Pennsylvania; Elizabeth, deceased; Leah, deceased, was the wife of Isaac Davis; and Harriet Marion, wife of George B. Guy. Mrs. Guy is a member of the Glenmore Methodist church, and has resided for the past thirty-five years on a farm in Wallace township, Chester county, Pennsylvania. Mr. Sypherd died August 19, 1879, aged eighty-four years; his wife passed away January 19, 1869. Their remains were first interred in Berks county, but later were reinterred at Glenmore burying ground in Chester county, Pennsylvania.

AARON KEITER, who for nearly half a century was numbered among the leading farmers, not only of East Coventry township, but also of Chester county, would seem, judging by his name, to be descended from German ancestors. His grandfather was John Keiter, who married Susannah Wiand, and their children were: Amos, who is living at Spring City, and has reached the remarkable age of ninety-four years; John, who is deceased; Jacob, mentioned at length hereinafter; Mary, who married George Deery; and Elizabeth, who became the wife of John Roger. Both these daughters, as well as their husbands, are now deceased. The father and mother, both of whom lived to old age, are buried in Bethel church cemetery.

Jacob Keiter, son of John and Susannah (Wiand) Keiter, was born about 1813, and followed agricultural pursuits until the latter years of his life, when he engaged in the furniture business in Spring City. He married Mary, daughter of John Ash, of Chester county, whose other children were: Dever, who married Charles Sholkop; Abbie Gayle, who became the wife of Philip Simon; Samuel, who is now deceased; Lizzie, who married Charles Lindaur; and William, who married Mary Hazzard. Mr. and Mrs. Keiter were the parents of the following children: Angeline, who married Isaiah Roberts; John, who is a contracting carpenter in Spring City; Aaron, mentioned at length hereinafter; Mary, who is the wife of William Weikel; and Jacob, who is employed in the postoffice in Kansas City, Missouri. Mrs. Keiter, the mother of the family, died when about sixty-five years old, and the death of her husband occurred about 1881, in Spring City. Both are interred in Bethel church cemetery, side by side with the former generation.

Aaron Keiter, son of Jacob and Mary (Ash) Keiter, was born February 24, 1837, in East Vincent township, and received his education in the public schools of the county. When about eighteen years of age he taught school for two terms, and then engaged in farming, which he made the business of his life. In this calling he was extremely successful, and for many years had attached to his farm a greenhouse, which he conducted in a thoroughly skillful and scientific manner, and with highly profitable results. He resided on the same farm from 1865 to the time of his decease. Mr. Keiter's entire life, with the exception of the time when he was engaged in teaching, was passed as a farmer in his native Chester county, where, in consequence of the industry and energy which he displayed in following his chosen calling, and the strictly honorable manner in which all his business transactions were conducted, he reaped not pecuniary profit only, but also a high reputation both as an agriculturist and a citizen.

Mr. Keiter married, October 17, 1858, Hannah, born June 24, 1834, daughter of Isaac Rosen, and the following children have been born to them: 1. William H., who was born July 22, 1859, is a farmer in Chester county, and married Flora, daughter of Perry Mock. They have no children. 2. Lizzie, who was born December 24, 1860, died October 26, 1887, and is buried in Bethel church cemetery. 3. Charles Henry, who was born February 23, 1865, is a farmer in Chester county, and married Emma, daughter of William Brownback. They have five children. 4. Frederick I., who was born February 7, 1871, lives on the home farm, and married Bella, daughter of George Green. 5. Bertha, who was born in March, 1872, and is the wife of Ralph Steinnuck, who lives at Parker's Ford, and is a telegraph operator for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. 6. John Martin, who died in infancy. Aaron Keiter and his wife both died during the year 1903.

DAVID WASHINGTON JONES, who was for many years a valued citizen of South Coventry township, Chester county, was a son of Jesse Jones, a native of the county, who married Rachel, daughter of Elias Hall, by whom he was the father of the following children: Harry L., who died many years ago, and is buried in Edgemore cemetery, Delaware county; Elizabeth, who resides in Pottstown; David Washington, mentioned at length hereinafter; Dillie, who is engaged in business as a milliner in Spring City; Annie, who was the wife of William K. Mosteller of West Vincent; Emma, deceased, was the wife of Isaac Smith; Amanda, who died when young; Lucretia, who was the wife of William March, died in August, 1903, and is buried in Mount Zion church, Chester county; and Calvin, who was born in 1848, and resides in Delaware county. Mrs. Jones, the mother of these children, died in 1854, and is buried in St. Matthew's cemetery. Mr. Jones subsequently married Elizabeth Maxon, and their children were: Laura, who is the wife of Irwin Rosseter, who resides near Phoenixville; Esther, who married Charles Widecomb, of Phoenixville; and Albert Lee, who lives in Pittsburg, and is a traveling salesman. The death of Mr. Jones, the father of the family, occurred in 1874, when he was about seventy years of age. He is buried in St. Matthew's cemetery.

David Washington Jones, son of Jesse and Rachel (Hall) Jones, was born August 14, 1836, in Chester county, where with the exception of a brief interval his entire life was passed. This interruption to the continuity of his residence in his birthplace was caused by his ready response to the appeal of the government to its citizens in the first trying days of the Civil war. In 1861 Mr. Jones enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth Regiment, commanded by Colonel Houghton, and served faithfully as a soldier for two years, being honorably discharged in 1863. Owing to a diversity of gifts rarely met with, Mr. Jones was enabled to engage in teaching and also to follow agricultural pursuits. In both these callings his success was marked, his ability as an educator being no less distinctive than his skill as a farmer.

Mr. Jones married, May 4, 1865, Caddie Swinehart, and the following children were born to them: Mary Emma, who was born April 23, 1868, in Chester; Harry Clifford, who was born July 16, 1872, in Chester county; married, in 1891, Mary Helen, daughter of William and Anna Mayer, and has three children, as follows: David Harvey, Jessie Paul and William Vernon; and Minnie May, who was born November 15, 1874, on the place which is now her home, attended the public schools of the county, also a graduate of West Chester Normal School, and later became a teacher in Monocacy district school, Warwick township.

Mr. Jones closed his useful and honorable career on March 8, 1900; his death, while an irreparable loss to his family, was sincerely mourned by his many friends, and regretted by the whole community, where he had so long been regarded with the respect which his character and abilities alike inspired. He was interred in St. Peter's cemetery.

Mrs. Jones, who survives her husband, belongs to one of the branches of the well known Swinehart family. Isaac Swinehart married Mary Lahr, and their children, who were born in Chester county, are as follows: Louis, who was born April 25, 1834, and is a farmer; Caddie, who was born July 16, 1836, and became the wife of David Washington Jones, as mentioned above; Jennie Alice, daughter of Louis Swinehart, married William Potts, of Chester county; and Clyde, a son of Louis Swinehart, is a farmer, and also resides in Chester county. Mrs. Mary (Lahr) Swinehart died at the age of sixty-five, and is buried in St. Peter's cemetery.

JOHN OLIVER HOUCK, a successful farmer and public-spirited citizen of Warwick township, Chester county, is a grandson of Jacob and Anna Houck, both of whom have been many years deceased, and whose son, Jacob, was born December 29, 1809, in Chester county. He was a farmer and carrier, and married Mary, who was born July 14, 1813, daughter of John and Barbara Stoneback, both of whom died many years ago.

The children of Jacob and Mary (Stoneback) Houck, all of whom were born in Chester county, were as follows: Hiram, who was born February 11, 1835, is a farmer, and married Catherine Knauer; Jacob, who was born August 27, 1836, and is a farmer and saddler; Catherine, who was born August 8, 1838, and married John Johnson; Sarah, who was born January 18, 1840, and became the wife of Levi Anole; Anna, who was born November 21, 1842, and died March 4, 1890; Mary, who was born March 29, 1845, and died in 1857; Hannah, who was born April 10, 1847, and married Cyrus Murray, who died August 1, 1898; Caroline, who was born April 7, 1849, and is the wife of John Murray, a farmer of Chester county; Susan, who was born April 21, 1851, and married Lewis Murray, a puddler in Pottstown; Emma, who was born July 4, 1853, and became the wife of Thomas Knauer, a Chester county farmer; Josiah, who was born July 29, 1855, and died in 1872; and John Oliver, mentioned at length hereinafter. Mrs. Houck, the mother of this large family, died January 15, 1880, and her husband passed away May 3, 1881.

John Oliver Houck, son of Jacob and Mary (Stoneback) Houck, was born December 30, 1858, in Chester county, and was educated at the well known "Pine Swamp School," in Warwick township. His occupation has always been that of a farmer, and in this calling he has met with the just reward of the ability, diligence and enterprise with which he has prosecuted it. He has always taken an active interest in local affairs, and has been ever ready to aid to the utmost of his power any project, which in his judgment seemed likely to advance the welfare of the community. His townsmen have repeatedly testified to the unlimited confidence which they repose in him by electing him to offices of trust, the duties of which he has discharged in such a manner as fully to justify their choice. In 1888 he was elected county tax collector, and served a term of five years in that capacity; in 1897 he was chosen supervisor of Warwick township for one year; and in 1898 was re-elected.

Mr. Houck married, August 17, 1881, Mary, daughter of James and Mahala Anderson, and they are the parents of the following children: Rosa, who was born March 11, 1882, and is the wife of Harry McElroy; Mabel Estella, who was born January 30, 1884; Ivan Sylvester, who was born December 25, 1885; Jacob, born May 17, 1888; Clarence Nowell, who was born November 19, 1890, and died April 29, 1892; and William Aaron, who was born September 11, 1896. All these children were born in Chester county, that ancient county which was the birthplace of their ancestors, and where the family to which they belong has ever ranked among the most respected in the community.

RICHARD F. DAWSON, a leading agriculturist of Valley Forge, Chester county, belongs to an English family of Irish origin. His grandfather, General Richard J. Dawson, of the English army, received as a reward for military services a large grant of land in Canada. This property, which was situated where the city of Ottawa now stands, consisted of five thousand acres for General Dawson himself and five hundred for each of his five sons. Thither he moved with his family, and many of his descendants are now prominent residents of the city.

Richard F. Dawson, one of the five sons of General Richard J. Dawson, was born in England, and in his childhood was taken by his parents to Canada. At the age of fifteen he went to Philadelphia, where he was employed in the Wilcox Paper Mills. After remaining there for a short period of time he moved to Chester county, and engaged in farming in West Brandywine, where several years of his life were spent. He then went to West Chester, formed a partnership with Enos Smedley, and for some ten or twelve years conducted a general contracting business. They performed most if not all of the corporation work, and they were the contractors of some eight or ten miles of the Chester Valley Railroad. In the spring of 1853, they removed to Easttown, near the Leopard, where they were located for seven years, operating a large farm and also engaged in contracting work, such as the Philadelphia and Newtown Square Plank Road, and the jail and court house at Baltimore, Maryland. In 1860 the firm dissolved, and Mr. Dawson continued the business of general contracting in Devon and Berwyn, Chester county, until 1883, when he was succeeded by his son, J. H. Dawson, who is still conducting the business. His latter years were spent in retirement at Berwyn; he was an ardent Republican, but would not accept public office. He married Susannah, daughter of Alban and Orphy (Fryer) Hook. The former was a Revolutionary soldier and participated at the battle of Brandywine, and the father of Mrs. Hook also participated in that battle, as well as in that of Germantown. Mr. and Mrs. Dawson were the parents of the following named children: Hannah, wife of William Kreeps, of West Philadelphia; Sarah A., wife of D. G. Hoyer, of Newark, New Jersey; Edith, who died in 1903, was a trained nurse; James H., a contractor of Devon; Richard F., mentioned hereinafter; Edward, a resident of Paoli, and serving in the capacity of manager for Charles Galloway; William P., a resident of Bellevue, Delaware, and engaged as manager for Joseph J. Keene; Susannah J., unmarried, who resides in Berwyn, Pennsylvania. Richard F. Dawson, the father of these children, died at his home in Berwyn in 1898, survived by his widow and eight children, the former named passing away in the year 1900.

Richard F. Dawson, son of Richard F. and Susannah (Hook) Dawson, was born December 11, 1853, in Easttown township, Chester county, and received his education in the public schools of the township and at Chestnut Hill. He was for five years in business as general manager and contractor, being connected with Bawmont Brothers of Devon, and during this period was engaged in road-building. Farming, however, has been the business of his life, and such is his reputation as an agriculturist that he has been constantly employed as the manager of large farms, his services in this capacity being greatly in demand. In 1895 he became manager of the farm of E. J. Mathews. This estate, which is one of the finest in the county, was purchased in 1903 by Attorney General Knox, and is situated in Tredyffrin township, on Valley Creek, about one mile directly south of Valley Forge, and during the Revolutionary period was owned by Mr. Beaver. Standing on the farm are two houses which were the headquarters, respectively, of General Lafayette and General Knox. Mr. Dawson is a member of the Masonic fraternity, being affiliated with Phoenix Lodge No. 75, Phoenix Chapter No. 198, Jerusalem Commandery No. 15, Palestine Council No. 8. He is also connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Improved Order of Red Men, and the Knights of Golden Eagle, in all of which he has taken high degrees. He is a member of the Order of American Mechanics. He is an ardent Republican, and takes an active part in politics.

Mr. Dawson married, September 26, 1876, Sarah Knight, who died in 1889. He was again married July 27, 1892, his second wife being Mary, daughter of William Gregory, a native of Cornwall, England, who emigrated to Canada, and is now a resident of Philadelphia. Mr. and Mrs. Dawson are the parents of the following children: Sarah N., Richard S., Mary K. and William Gregory Dawson.

FRANKLIN LUTHER TALBOT, a leading farmer and prominent citizen of Warwick township, Chester county, belongs to a family which has been for at least a century and a quarter resident in the county, and the members of which, in the different generations, have always been counted as useful and valued citizens of the community in which they resided.

Benjamin Talbot was born in England, presumably about the middle of the eighteenth century, and in early manhood crossed the sea in quest of a home in Pennsylvania. On reaching his destination he decided to take up his abode in Chester county, where he passed the remainder of his life. He married Anna Gilkey, who was also born in England, and their children were: William G., who was born in Chester county; Caleb Berry, mentioned at length hereinafter; Anna May, who married Benjamin Rogers; Ruth Ann, who became the wife of Jacob Bruner; Elizabeth, who married Benjamin Hughes; and two other daughters, one of whom died when quite young, and the other became the wife of Robert Retew.

Caleb Berry Talbot, son of Benjamin and Anna (Gilkey) Talbot, was born November 19, 1790, in Chester county, where he led the happy, uneventful life of a prosperous and upright citizen. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Jones, and the following children were born to them: John Jones, who is now deceased; Reese Happersett, who resides in Hot Springs, Arkansas; Elizabeth, who became the wife of Jesse Leighton, and died July 2, 1903; and Benjamin, who served in the army during the Civil war, and died at Lookout Mountain, on Missionary Ridge. After the death of his wife Mr. Talbot married Elizabeth Buchanan, who was born March 16, 1816. By this marriage the following children were born: David Smith, who was born November 19, 1842, and became an attorney-at-law in West Chester. James Bentley, who was a farmer, enlisted in the army during the Civil war, and died in the service, about 1863. Jacob Bruner, who is now deceased. Caleb Morgan, who is a farmer, and lives on the homestead, in Chester county. Levi Scott, who is engaged in business in Reading, Pennsylvania. Franklin Luther, mentioned at length hereinafter. Charles Wesley, who is an attorney at the West Chester bar. Joseph Wilber, who is a farmer, and is also engaged in the commission business in West Nantmeal township. Nathan Warren, who is an attorney in Philadelphia. Ashton Buchanan, who is a physician in New York city. Anna Mary, who is the wife of William H. Swope, who resides in Philadelphia, and is employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The death of Mr. Talbot, the father of this large family, occurred September 16, 1870, when he had nearly completed his eightieth year. He is buried in St. Mark's cemetery. His wife passed away April 26, 1886, at the age of seventy.

Franklin Luther Talbot, son of Caleb Berry and Elizabeth (Buchanan) Talbot, was born January 16, 1852, in Honeybrook township, Chester county, and received his education in the public schools of the county. After completing his course of study, he was for a time engaged in teaching, but in 1881 settled on the farm which is now his home, and has since devoted himself to agricultural pursuits, in which his scientific knowledge and practical ability have insured satisfactory results. As a citizen Mr. Talbot is earnest, enterprising and sagacious, possessing the highest esteem and fullest confidence of his townsmen, by whom he was elected school director, a position which he held for several years, and by whom he was, in 1900, chosen to fill the office of census enumerator. In the sphere of politics he is identified, both in principle and practice, with the Republican party, whose doctrines and measures are endorsed by his voice and vote. He and his family are members of the Protestant Episcopal church.

Mr. Talbot married, in 1880, Anna May Painter, and they are the parents of the following children: Mary Florence, born October 24, 1880; Bessie Alice, born February 8, 1882; Narcissus, born October 4, 1883; Ella Rebecca, born December 2, 1885; Clara Louisa, born March 19, 1888; Anna Alwilda, born January 6, 1890; Nathan Warren, born August 30, 1891, and now deceased; Samuel Knauer Painter, born June 19, 1893; and Ashton Buchanan, born November 8, 1895.

Mrs. Talbot, who belongs to one of the branches of the well-known Painter family, is a daughter of Frederick Painter, who was born October 26, 1810, and married Elizabeth, born in 1822, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Munshower) Knauer, the former of whom died October 14, 1856, when about seventy years old, his wife having passed away at the comparatively early age of fifty-five. Mrs. Painter, the mother of Mrs. Talbot, died March 16, 1872, and is buried in St. Mary's cemetery. The death of Mr. Painter occurred October 13, 1889.

JOHN LAHR, a thriving farmer and respected citizen of Warwick township, Chester county, is a grandson of Nicholas Lahr, who was born in Germany, whence he emigrated, presumably about the beginning of the nineteenth century, to Pennsylvania, and settled in Chester county.

Samuel Lahr, a grandson of Nicholas Lahr, was born in 1810, and was all his life engaged in agricultural pursuits, his well-directed efforts meeting with such success that he was able to become the owner of the farm which is now the property and residence of his son. This estate he purchased from David Potts, and it has remained to the present day in the possession of his descendants. In addition to the high repute which he enjoyed as a farmer, Mr. Lahr was greatly relied on as a citizen, being esteemed a man of sound judgment, and trusted by all for his strict integrity. No better evidence of this can be cited than is furnished by the fact that for about twenty-four years he held the office of school director. He married Sarah, daughter of Jacob Felman, and they were the parents of three sons: Joseph; John, mentioned at length hereinafter; and Louis. The death of Mr. Lahr, which was lamented by all who knew him as that of a valued citizen and truly good man, took place when he was about six years beyond the traditional three-score-and-ten. He was buried in St. Peter's cemetery, where his brother Joseph is also interred. His other brother, John, and all the other deceased members of the family, are buried in Brownback cemetery. Mrs. Lahr, who is still living, at the age of seventy-four, resides with her unmarried son, Louis.

John Lahr, son of Samuel and Sarah (Felman) Lahr, was born November 1, 1848, on the homestead, where his entire life has been passed. He received his education in the public schools of the county, and then engaged in agricultural labors on the home farm. For many years he has devoted himself with skill and energy to the cultivation of his paternal acres, and the flourishing condition in which they are maintained speaks volumes for his ability as a farmer. Notwithstanding Mr. Lahr's close attention to the duties of his calling, he does not allow them to absorb the whole of his time, but reserves a due portion for the discharge of his obligations as a citizen.

He is a steadfast supporter of the doctrines and principles advocated and upheld by the Democratic party. His church connections are with the Methodist denomination.

Mr. Lahr married H. Etta, daughter of Joseph Widner, and three daughters were born to them, all of whom are living: Flora B., Bertha E. and Rosa Pearl. They were also the parents of one son, named Arthur, whose death when he was but two months old was a severe affliction to his father and mother, being the only break which has occurred in the circle of this happy and united family. Mrs. Lahr, like her husband, belongs to a well-known and highly respected family of the historic county of Chester, the most ancient, and in some respects the most interesting county in the state of Pennsylvania.

WILLIAM RICHARDS, a successful farmer and public-spirited citizen of Warwick township, Chester county, is a grandson of Frederick Richards, no details of whose life have reached us, but who is known to have died at about the age of four score. His son, Samuel, who was a farmer, married Rebecca, daughter of Jacob Mock. Mrs. Richards, at the time of her death, was about seventy-two years old, and her husband survived to the age of eighty-five. Both are buried in St. Mary's cemetery.

William Richards, son of Samuel and Rebecca (Mock) Richards, was born March 11, 1832, in Chester county, and received his education in the public schools. For half a century he has been an industrious and thriving farmer. At the age of twenty-six he settled on a farm near St. Mary's and for the last forty-five years has resided on his present farm. For several years he has been treasurer of the Warwick Creamery. The high regard in which Mr. Richards is held by his townsmen, and the reputation which he enjoys for sound judgment and executive ability is best indicated by the frequency with which he has been placed, by the votes of his neighbors, in positions of honor and trust. He served for several years as treasurer and collector of the county, and for four years held the office of constable. He takes an active interest in the cause of education, which he manifested in a practical manner by consenting to serve for fifteen years as a member of the board of directors of the public schools. In the sphere of politics he is identified with the Republican party, supporting, with his vote and influence, the men and measures advocated by that organization. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Richards married Faithful, daughter of Tobias Knauer, and the following children were born to them: Joseph, John, Mary and another daughter, who died in infancy. After the death of his wife Mr. Richards married Luzetta, daughter of Levi Hoffecker. By this marriage Mr. Richards is the father of the following children: Llewellyn, Oliver, Jonathan, Zachariah T., Mary, who is the wife of Richard Roberts, of St. Mary's; and a daughter who died in infancy.

JOSEPH MILNS, a thriving farmer and worthy citizen of Warwick township, Chester county, belongs to a family which has been represented in the county for three quarters of a century, his grandfather, who was a native of Yorkshire, England, having emigrated to the United States about 1828. A number of years before leaving his native land he married Hannah Crook, who was also born in England. Their children were: John, mentioned at length hereinafter; and Maria, who married John Jackson, of Berks county. The death of Mr. Milns occurred in 1860, and that of his wife in 1887. Both lived to old age, and are buried in Harmony church cemetery, in Berks county. Their daughter, mentioned above, is interred in the same place, where are also the graves of other deceased members of the family.

John Milns, son of Joseph and Hannah (Crook) Milns, was born February 15, 1817, in Huntersville, Yorkshire, England, and when eleven years of age came with his parents to America. They made their home at once in Chester county, and here Mr. Milns has resided throughout his long life. He has devoted himself to farming, in connection with which for many years he followed the trade of a blacksmith. He married Harriet Wells, who was born December 25, 1810, in Chester county. She had a brother, John, who died in this county at an early age, and a sister, Mary Ann, wife of Robert Rancel, who died about twenty years ago at Springfield, now Elveston, Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Milns were the parents of the following children: 1. George, who is now deceased; 2. Barnson, who is about fifty-nine years old, and resides at Parker's Ford, Pennsylvania; Joseph, mentioned at length hereinafter; and Hannah, who became the wife of C. Kurtz Sigman, both she and her husband being now deceased. Mrs. Milns, the mother of the family, died October 18, 1902, at the advanced age of ninety-two and is buried in Harmony church cemetery in Berks county. Mr. Milns is still vigorous and active at eighty-seven years of age.

Joseph Milns, son of John and Harriett (Wells) Milns, was born February 13, 1847, in Chester county, where he received his education in the public schools. On completing his course of study, he settled on the home farm, which had been purchased by his father in 1856. Here he has continued to reside, devoting himself to the cultivation of the land with a capability, zeal and industry which have insured for him a gratifying measure of success. Although a thorough and assiduous farmer, he is no less a vigilant and faithful citizen, neglecting none of the duties developing upon him in that capacity, and attentive to all questions relating to the administration of township affairs. Politically he is a Republican. His church connections are with the Methodist denomination.

Mr. Milns married, in 1875, Eliza, born October 16, 1855, daughter of Montgomery and Maria Painter, of Chester county. Mr. and Mrs. Milns are the parents of two children: Benjamin Franklin, who was born January 13, 1876, and is a clerk at League Island Navy Yard, in Philadelphia; and Annie, who was born May 15, 1879, is now the wife of Jesse H. Liggett, to whom she was married June 30, 1901. They have been residing with her father since their marriage, and are the parents of one daughter, Irma, born in October, 1901.

EDWIN BRIDGET JOHN, a substantial, upright and honorable citizen of North Coventry township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he enjoys the esteem of his neighbors and the respect and confidence of all who have business dealings with him, was born in Uwchlan township, Chester county, June 1, 1835, the son of Levi E. John, who was also a native of Uwchlan township, Chester county, and a grandson of Robert John, one of the pioneer settlers in that section of the state.

The educational advantages enjoyed by Edwin B. John were obtained in the public schools of Uwchlan township, and after completing his studies he learned the trade of blacksmith, and this occupation in connection with agricultural pursuits engrossed his entire time and attention for the greater part of his active career; at the present time (1903) he is engaged exclusively in farming and this line of industry yields him a handsome income. During the Civil war Mr. John enlisted as a private in Company H, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Pennsylvania Regiment, under the command of Colonel Halley, and participated in the battle of Chancellorsville, as well as many other noted battles. He was discharged from the service of the United States at the close of hostilities, and still preserves his discharge papers as a relic of those stirring times in the country's history. Mr. John is a Republican in politics, has held minor county offices and has also served as school director for eleven years. He is a member and consistent representative of the faith of the Brethren's (Dunkard) church, which religious sect is noted for its strict piety and unwavering integrity.

Mr. John was united in marriage to Mary Ann Landis, who was born December 15, 1842, and to this union there have been born six children, as follows: 1. William L., single, a painter by trade. 2. Ella, wife of Louis I. Keen, a farmer residing in North Coventry township, Chester county; they are the parents of five children, all of whom are living at the present time. 3. Amanda, wife of Ira C. Holsopple, a minister of the Gospel; they have no children. 4. Harvey E., married Lillie Major, and one child has been born to them. 5. Norman R., married Emma Miller, and two children have been the issue of this marriage. 6. Frank M., unmarried, resides at Fredericktown, where he is engaged as chief clerk in an extensive iron company.

Levi E. John, father of Edwin B. John, was born in Uwchlan township, Chester county, Pennsylvania, was a brick mason by trade, and by his marriage to Eliza Ann Retrue, the following named children were born: Robert H., unmarried, a bricklayer by trade; Anna M., wife of William Maris, a confectioner, and they are the parents of six living children; Henrietta K., wife of George Roberts, a prosperous agriculturist; Harriet, widow of Harry Willauer, who was engaged in agricultural pursuits; they were the parents of six children; Emma L., widow of Thomas Brown, who was engaged as a druggist, and the issue of this marriage was one child.

Daniel Landis, father of Mrs. John, was a farmer and weaver by trade, married Elizabeth Jones, and they reared a family of six children, as follows: William H., a carpenter by trade, married Rosana Kupp, and two children have been born to them; Aaron, was a wheelwright by trade, enlisted in the Civil war, never returned home and nothing has been heard from him since; Allen, was a clerk in a mercantile establishment in Pottstown, Pennsylvania, enlisted in the Civil war and died in the service of his country; he was unmarried; Daniel W., deceased, was a merchant, married Clara Savage, a native of Chester county, and two children were born of this marriage. At the time of his death, Daniel W. Landis was the owner of valuable property, which he bequeathed to his family.

CHARLES HENRY SNYDER, the proprietor of the Warwick Creamery, is a man of excellent business ability and qualifications, has been identified in a large measure with the material prosperity of the township of Warwick, Chester county, Pennsylvania, for a number of years and during that period of time has never missed a single opportunity of advancing its interests, either industrial, political or social.

Henry Snyder, grandfather of Charles H.

Snyder, was born in the year 1796, was reared, educated and spent his entire life in Chester county, Pennsylvania, where his death occurred in 1874 at the age of seventy-eight years. He was one of a family of six sons, all of whom are now deceased—Michael, Daniel, Christian, Joseph, Isaac and Henry Snyder. His wife, Margaret (Sparr) Snyder, was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1805, and died in 1892. She was a daughter of Frederick and Kate Sparr, who were the parents of six children—John; Peter; George; Elizabeth, who married Morris Griffith; Mary, who married John Hyner; and Margaret Sparr, who married Henry Snyder. The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Snyder: Levi Franklin, father of Charles H. Snyder; Frederick, deceased; Catherine, widow of James Trego; Henry, deceased; Mary Ann, widow of Hiram Kennedy; Margaret Jane, wife of Vincent Trego, and they reside at Reading, Pennsylvania; Mirah Elizabeth, who died in infancy.

Levi Franklin Snyder, father of Charles H. Snyder, was born January 14, 1840, in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, but removed to Chester county when he had attained the age of eight years and was educated in the common schools of that vicinity. On September 23, 1861, at the outbreak of the Civil war, he enlisted his services as a member of the Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania Regiment and was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division, First Corps. On February 8, 1862, he participated in the battle at Fort Pulaski; on June 16, 1862, was engaged at Secessionville, and also participated in many other engagements, including Drury's Bluff, May 12, 1864, and Petersburg, Virginia, April 15 to 30, 1864; he was also at Wilmington, North Carolina, and Raleigh, North Carolina. On February 29, 1864, he re-enlisted and was promoted to the rank of wagonmaster, serving in that capacity until his honorable discharge from the United States government at the close of hostilities at Weldon, North Carolina, August 28, 1865. He is a member of Hancock Post, No. 222, Grand Army of the Republic of Downingtown, Pennsylvania. Mr. Snyder is a farmer by occupation.

Levi F. Snyder (father) was united in marriage to Sarah Jane Essic, born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, June 26, 1848, a daughter of John and Lydia (Harley) Essic. Their children are: Horace E., born November 20, 1867, a resident of Glenmoor, Pennsylvania; Charles H., born December 6, 1873; and Anna M., born March 3, 1870, wife of Philip Kurtz, a citizen of Downingtown, Pennsylvania. John Essic, father of Mrs. Levi F. Snyder, was born October 3, 1818, and died March 14, 1876. His wife, Lydia (Harley) Essic, was born June 1, 1820, and is living at the present time (1903). Their children were: Elizabeth, born December 22, 1842, died September 3, 1863, and Sarah Jane, wife of Levi F. Snyder. Lydia (Harley) Essic was the daughter of Abraham and Catherine Harley, and they were the parents of seven children—Lydia, widow of John Essic; Eliza, widow of William Gray; she resides in Pottstown, Pennsylvania; Sarah, widow of Daniel Harley; Katherine, widow of Cyrus Murray; Hannah, widow of John Fletcher; Rachel, who was the wife of John Burk; and Jacob, who married Sarah Riggs, and now resides in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Charles H. Snyder, second son of Levi F. and Sarah Jane Snyder, was reared in Chester county, Pennsylvania, and his educational advantages were obtained in the common schools of that section of the state. He assisted with the work on his father's farm for a number of years, and subsequently became the owner of the Warwick Creamery, which industry he is successfully conducting at the present time (1903).

On September 19, 1895, Mr. Snyder married May Slider, who was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, June 19, 1873, a daughter of John D. and Rebecca (Trego) Slider. The issue of this union was one child, Levi B. Snyder, born August 24, 1896, in Chester county, Pennsylvania. John D. Slider, father of Mrs. Charles H. Snyder, was a native of Chester county, the date of his birth being May 4, 1845; he was a farmer by occupation. His wife, Rebecca (Trego) Slider, was born in Chester county, August 9, 1849, and died June 23, 1897. She was a daughter of William B., born in Chester county, May 8, 1816, and Lydia (Essic) Trego, who was born in Chester county, June 9, 1819.

JAMES IRWIN ESSICK, who has for many years held the position of a recognized leader among the farmers of Warwick township, Chester county, is descended on the paternal side from German ancestry. His great-grandfather, Rudolph Essick, was a native of the Fatherland, whence he emigrated, at what period is not precisely known, to Pennsylvania, and made his home in Chester county.

John Essick, son of Rudolph and Amy (Lockart) Essick, was born in the early part of the eighteenth century, and was all his life numbered among the farmers of his native county. In 1829 he settled on the homestead, which has since remained in the possession of his descendants. He married Annie, daughter of Amy Lockart, proprietor of the Indian King Hotel, which was situated near Whiteland Station. This ancestress, whose name is indicative of Scottish descent, possessed not a little of the daring and intrepid spirit manifested by the heroic wives and daughters of the Covenanters, and by the fearless and devoted women who gladly risked life and fortune in the cause of the exiled Stewarts. This was proved by an adventure which she met with in her youth, and in which her conduct was such as might have been expected from one whose ancestors were of the same nation which produced Flora Macdonald. The country was infested by a band of highwaymen, whose lawless deeds filled the inhabitants with terror, and rendered traveling, especially solitary traveling, dangerous in the extreme. These desperadoes were known as the Hare brothers, and an encounter with them was dreaded above all other perils by those whose duty required them to venture on unfrequented roads. Annie Lockart was one day returning on horseback from the neighboring market, when she was accosted at the roadside by a man who was evidently a robber. Struck by her calm and self-possessed demeanor, the ruffian asked her if she were not afraid. To which she replied: "No, I fear no one but the Hare brothers." Thereupon the highwaymen informed her that he was one of those whom she dreaded. Even this declaration, it would seem, failed to elicit the signs of terror which it was expected to produce, and with a hasty farewell the desperado fled to the woods, apparently ashamed to offer violence to one whose courage was so invincible. Annie Lockart lived many years after her marriage to John Essick, and died in 1853, her husband having passed away in 1851.

John Lockart Essick, son of John and Annie (Lockart) Essick, was born November 18, 1808, in Chester county, and like his father was a life-long farmer. He held a position of some prominence in the community, and for many years served as sergeant-at-arms in the Pennsylvania state senate. He married Phoebe Lane Irwin, who was born about 1810, daughter of James and Priscilla Irwin. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Essick: Thomas I., James Irwin, mentioned at length hereinafter, John Hunter, Phoebe Lane and Milton. All these children, with the exception of James Irwin, are now deceased. Mrs. Essick died October 27, 1847, and Mr. Essick afterward married Margaret McFarland, by whom he was the father of two children: William Summerfield, and Addison May, who is now deceased. The death of Mr. Essick took place October 27, 1861, that day being, by a singular coincidence, the fourteenth anniversary of the death of his first wife.

James Irwin Essick, son of John Lockart and Phoebe (Irwin) Essick, was born July 6, 1838, in Warwick township, Chester county, and received his education in the public schools of the county. His chief instructor was the well known Professor J. E. Phillips, who at one time held the office of treasurer of the county. Since leaving school Mr. Essick has been constantly engaged in agricultural labors, in which he has met with gratifying success. The farm on which he now resides has been his home for the last ten years, and he is here reaping the fruits of indelible exertions and ripe experience. His political principles and opinions are those of an earnest Republican, the doctrines and measures promulgated and upheld by that party always finding in him a staunch advocate and supporter. In religious matters he is identified with the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Essick married Mary L. T., daughter of John Jones, of East Nantmeal, Chester county. Mr. and Mrs. Essick are the parents of one son: Newton J., who resides in Wilmington, Delaware, and is employed by the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company.

SAMUEL PUSEY NICKLE, M. D., of Clifton Heights, Pennsylvania, was born in Port Deposit, Cecil county, Maryland, September 30, 1865, and he is the son of William Wesley and Eliza (Pennock) Nickle. William Wesley Nickle is a son of William and Mary (Harris) Nickle, while Eliza (Pennock) Nickle is the daughter of Solomon and Elizabeth (Evans) Pennock.

William and Eliza Nickle had a family of four children, as follows: Joanna, who died at the age of twelve years; Clara, who married Albert Boardman Earle (a full account of the Earle family is given in the sketch of A. B. Earle, elsewhere in this work); Pennock, who died at the age of two years, and Samuel Pusey, the subject of this sketch, who married Estella Mershon, of Philadelphia, a daughter of George B. and Sarah (Millis) Mershon. Dr. and Mrs. Nickle have no family.

In early life Dr. Nickle attended the public schools, after which he continued his studies at the West Nottingham Academy, and finished his preparatory work for college. After leaving the academy, he read medicine with Dr. Bromwell, of Port Deposit, and in 1884 entered the University of Pennsylvania. In 1887 he was graduated from that institution and the same year located in Primos, where he began the practice of his profession, remaining in that locality until 1893, when he removed to Clifton Heights, and in partnership with Dr. S. P. Bartleson, conducted a large practice. However, after some time, he returned to Primos, where he remained six months, and then again located at Clifton Heights, and has made that town his home ever since. He was for some time president of the Clifton Heights Board of Health, resigning in 1900. In politics he is an independent Republican, and is also a member of state and county medical societies.

ALBERT BOARDMAN EARLE, of Primos, Pennsylvania, a leader in the insurance business, comes of English ancestry, his paternal grandparents, John H. and Agnes (Cooper) Earle, having been natives of England. After their marriage they came to this country, and made their home with an uncle, proprietor of Earle's art gallery, in Philadelphia. John H. Earle established himself as a merchant tailor, becoming in a short time one of the leaders in the business. He and his wife were the parents of ten children, of whom John, the third, was educated as a steel engraver, being afterward employed by the American Bank Note Company, and for about fifty years one of their experts. He married Rebecca E., daughter of Archibald and Rebecca (Monteith) Nichols. Their family consisted of three children: Albert Boardman, mentioned at length hereinafter; Howard I.; and Adelaide Louise, both of whom are single.
